Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, expressed his pleasure at being present and at having an opportunity of taking part in the farewell to the boys of the 39th Battalion. He knew a number of them personally, and he was sure that they would all be a credit to the city and the regiment which sent them out. In conclusion, Mr. Matthews reminded the soldiers that it was pluck and determination in all that they were set to do that would win.

CHAPLAIN OF THE REGIMENT.

Hon. Major Davidson, chaplain of the 57th Regiment, made a stirring speech. On beginning he paid a high tribute to Capt. Spencer, who was, he said, not only a clergyman and a soldier, but an all-round good fellow. Major Davidson wished to leave with the boys of the 39th three messages: Canada, the Empire, the Kingdom. They were to remember that they were going forth as representativs of Canada; and they were never to let any one, friend or enemy, forget that fact. Many had not been born in Canada, but all had lived here for a greater or less time, and they were all Canadians, sent out by the Canadian Government, maintained and trained by Canada, and they were never to forget that. As to the Empire it was not necessary to point out what it meant to be citizens of that wonderful Empire on which the sun never sets. And then they were to remember the Kingdom; the Kingdom of God, of Heaven and of earth, and to conduct themselves always as Christians and gentleman, and to fight as Christians and gentlemen, despite what tactics the enemy might use.

Rev. Chas. Smith, of Belleville, assured the Peterborough boys of a hearty welcome to Belleville. If he had been speaking from a text he would have chosen, "I go to prepare a place for you." They would find that they would be well treated in the city from which he came.

CAPTAIN SPENCER.

Captain Spencer, who has been in command of the local detachment since organisation began, was given an enthusiastic reception from the men of the 39th when he was called upon to speak. He referred to the pleasure which he had experienced in his work here, and expressed his hearty appreciation of the warm welcome he had been accorded during his residence in Peterborough. His relationship with Lieuts. Cameron and Eastwood and with Lieut.-Col. Walker and Major Cameron, A.M.C., had been of the most pleasant nature. To the clergymen of the city who had shown their interest in the 39th by extending invitations to attend divine service, he wished to express his sincere thanks, and on behalf of the men of the detachment he also wished to thank most heartily the ladies of the Women's War Fund Committee for their great kindness in arranging the farewell banquet. As to the members of the detachment, Capt. Spencer thought the city had every reason to be proud of the men they were sending out. Officers who had seen other units were loud in their praises of the 57th men, with whom there had not been the slightest trouble.

The most enjoyable banquet was then brought to a close with three cheers for the ladies and for Capt. Spencer and Lieut. Cameron.

TRIGGER

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Gun Club will be held on Friday evening next, March 26, at the Empress Hotel at 8 o'clock. All the members are requested to attend.

Around the Theatres

THE EMPIRE FEATURES.

The Famous Player features running at the Empire are put on at certain hours every afternoon and evening and patrons are reminded of this fact. In the afternoon the House opens at 2.30 o'clock, showing a comedy or war film, and the feature begins about 2.45 and again at 3.45 o'clock. On Saturday, the opening hour is 1 o'clock with the feature shown three times during the afternoon. In the evening the Empire opens at 7.30, and at 7.45 the main film begins and again at 9 o'clock. These figures are for four and five reel features. Occasionally a six-film picture is received, but the average runs four or five films. Owing to the fact that the opening films may not be all of uniform length it is difficult to follow the schedule exactly to the minute, but the above statement will enable patrons to page their attendance in order that they may arrive before the feature picture begins.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The Italian Government has ordered that all works of art in Venice be removed to places of security.

Mrs. Sarah Ellen Richards Smith, 65-year-old wife of President Joseph Smith, of the Mormon Church, died in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Big Guns for Russia.

SEATTLE, Wash., March 24.—Eighteen big-range guns of American make, consigned to the Russian army by way of Vladivostok, are at Vancouver awaiting shipment, according to advices received here yesterday. At Seattle, Tacoma and Vancouver, 234 traction automobiles, also for the Russian army, are awaiting ships.

PACKAGES OF MONEY STOLEN AT LINDSAY

$3,000 Arriving by Express, Consigned to the Home Bank, Disappeared

LINDSAY, March 24—The sum of $3,000, the property of the Home Bank of Canada, was stolen after its arrival yesterday by express from Toronto, and Connie Beare, a local driver for the Canadian Express Company, is being sought as a suspect. Beare has not been seen about town since before 5 o'clock, yesterday, about the time of the discovery of the theft, and it is believed that he left on the five o'clock train for the south. Messages have been sent by the Chief of Police to Toronto, Peterborough, Port Hope and Whitby in the hope of intercepting him.

The money came from the Home Bank in Toronto in two express parcels, one of $2,500 and the other of $500.

Beare has been in the habit of making his call at the station when the train arrives at twelve and then going home for dinner before delivering his parcels and making collections. As a rule he does not reach the office until three or four o'clock and consequently his absence yesterday caused no suspicion. About four o'clock the local manager of the Home Bank, Mr. Peter Kennedy, 'phoned up the Express Office to enquire about the money. Enquiries were made at the station and it was learned that the train express man had delivered the parcels to Beare. Search for the young man then began. When enquiries were made at his home, his mother said the boy was probably around town some place, but his sister said he had changed his clothing after dinner, and said he was going to Haliburton. According to information gathered by Chief of Police Short, Beare was last seen shortly before five o'clock, going towards the C.P.R. station.

Connie Beare, who is 21 years of age, has always lived in Lindsay and his father is a volunteer for military service. Yesterday was pay day for the local troops and it is understood that the money was intended for that purpose. Up to a late hour last night the Chief had received no reply to his messages calling for the arrest of Beare.

Borax, slightly moistened and left on the fabric for several hours, will remove chocolate stains from white dresses and table linen.

OBITUARY

MR. JAMES RUSSELL.

Mr. James Russell passed away in the Nicholls Hospital yesterday evening. The late Mr. Russell had reached the age of 86 years. He was born in Scotland and removed with his parents to this country when five years of age, settling on a farm in Northumberland County in the vicinity of Cobourg. Fifty-eight years ago he was married to Miss Jessie Dawson, after which he went to reside in the village of Baltimore which is about five miles north of Cobourg. He was a miller by trade and owned an oatmeal mill at Baltimore until thirty-three years ago when he removed to Peterborough.

Besides his wife he is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Waddell, Sheridan street, city, and one son, Mr. Charles Russell, Ashville, North Carolina.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon att 2:30 o'clock from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Waddell, 418 Sheridan street, to Little Lake cemetery for interment, and will be private.

Couldn't Get Title Want Money Back

Lakefield Men Purchased Lethbridge Lots But No Deed Was Forthcoming

A writ was issued yesterday by Mr. O. A. Langley, solicitor, on behalf of S. J. Wallace and S. Hunter, who live in Lakefield, against Cecil C. Cragg and W. Bertram Mitford, of Lethbridge, Alberta, for the return of $882.00 paid for four lots in Lethbridge. Judge Huycke, on Mr. Langley's application, made an order allowing service of the writs on the defendants in Alberta.

It appears that the defendants did not own the lots they sold, and could not get title to them, so the plaintiffs claim their money back upon failure of consideration.

The defendant, Cecil C. Cragg, is a doctor in Lethbridge and W. Bertram Mitford is a real estate dealer. The lots were sold to plaintiffs at Lakefield by a Mr. H. H. Cragg, a brother of Dr. Cecil C. Cragg. It is reported that a number of other gentlemen in Lakefield also paid their money and couldn't get their lots, but afterwards accepted some other land in place of it. Messrs. Wallace and Hunter refused to do this, and have brought suit.

Dr. Cragg, one of the defendants, is a brother of Rev. J. Cragg, formerly pastor of Mark Street Methodist Church. Another brother was pastor in Lakefield for a period of three years.

The Hon. E. McCraney, M.P., amendment to the Criminal Code, which is now before the House of Commons, would cover this case.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO PATRIOTIC FUND

A War in Which Much Needless Expense and Trouble Can Be Averted

It is suggested for the benefit of contributors to the Peterborough Patriotic Fund who have neglected to make their payments promptly that they save needless expense and trouble for the committee by dropping into the Dominion Bank or Bank of Commerce with the amounts. In most cases it has been carelessness or neglect that caused the non-payment of some of the contribution and this reminder is to save the expense of sending out letters and collectors to look after these amounts.

WELL IN OTONABEE ETC.

Mrs. Dickson, who was the next witness called, testified that Edward's agreement was to get a supply of water or no pay would be expected. She remembered having authorized the plaintiff to drill the well a few feet further. Witness did not authorise Edwards to cease drilling. When time for settlement arrived, plaintiff agreed to take $100, admitting that the well was unsatisfactory.

To Mr. Gordon witness said that she expected a pump to be installed as a matter of course. She did look with favour upon the admission of the plaintiff to continue the well upon the terms of "no water no pay."

The case is being continued this afternoon.

AN APOLOGY

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I ask permission through the columns of your very valuable paper to publicly apologise to Mr. Stephen Harrison for the manner and way I treated him, and also the hard things I said about him, as Mr. and Mrs. Harrison were always good friends to me, and treated me in a way becoming one of their profession. Hoping they will accept this acknowledgment, as I take all the blame upon myself. And thanking you for space for the above.—I remain, yours truly,

MAJOR GAULT SUCCEEDS.

He Hurries to France to Take Place of Col. Farquhar.

LONDON, March 24.—Major Hamilton Gault is returning to the front next week to take command of the regiment in place of Col. Farquhar, who was killed on Sunday night. The Princess Patricia Regiment, which for three months has been in heavy fighting in France, including several bayonet charges, again won distinction on the day following the fight and famous British victory at Neuve Chapelle. On that day the regiment was forced to relinquish a trench owing to a fierce German counter-attack, when the enemy tried desperately to recover lost ground in a great general advance. But the Canadian regiment a few hours later recaptured their lost position by plucky fighting, and succeeded in driving the Prussians from two of their own trenches which they had been holding for months.

Casualty Lists.

Princess Patricias — Dangerously ill, Pte. Richard G. Johnson. Dangerously wounded, Pte. John Gray.

Seventh Battalion—Wounded, Pte. T. Barker, Lieut. E. O. Martin.

Tenth Battalion — Seriously wounded, Pte. A. W. Robinson, Company Sergt.-Major D. Stuart.

Lieut. Martin, of Victoria, mentioned as wounded in the Princess Pats' casualties, went out with the reinforcements to the regiment.

An earlier list of the casualties yesterday included:

Princess Patricias — Seriously wounded, Corpl. James Leahy. Wounded, Pte. H. P. Lesueur. Dangerously ill, Pte. Richard G. Johnson.

Fifth Battalion—Wounded, Pte. J Baimbridge.

Thirteenth Battalion — Died of wounds, Pte. J. Fowler.

Tenth Battalion—Seriously wounded, Pte. A. W. Robinson.

MASSACRES IN PERSIA.

NEW YORK, March 24.—The Persian war relief committee with headquarters in this city yesterday received the following cablegram from Tiflis, Russia:

"All villages burned except three. Two Christian quarters of Urumiah plundered and a great many people killed. Women taken captives. Fifteen thousand refugees in the American mission. Great danger.

"The French mission has been destroyed. There are 10,000 refugees in Russia."

The message was signed by Astanoff, a Russian contractor in Tiflis.

Dr. Clark's Son a Hero.

OTTAWA, March 24.—Dr. Michael Clark, M.P., of Red Deer, received through the Militia Department yesterday a letter from the officer commanding the squad of fifty Princess Patricias in their charge upon and capture of German trenches in Belgium, congratulating him upon the "gallant and soldierly conduct" of his son, James A. Clark, who took part in the brilliant action.

Accompanying the message were congratulations also from Maj.-Gen. Hughes. Young Clark came through unscathed.

HAVELOCK COUPLE WERE ARRESTED

While on Their Honeymoon—Bridegroom Had Enlisted

John Freeman, a member of the third contingent, and Violet Parcels, of Havelock, were arrested at Port Hope shortly after being married. It is alleged the girl is under age and did not have her parents' consent to marry.

The couple were sought by the Peterborough police.

MR. FRED SQUIRE IS APPOINTED

Clerk of the 5th Division Court

Mr. Fred L. Squire of Havelock, has been appointed clerk of the 5th division court, Havelock, succeeding Mr. W. A. McMaster, who resigned. It is understood that Mr. McMaster will reside in Tweed.

AN AMPHIBIOUS PRINCE.

BERLIN, March 24. — (Via London.)—Prince Adalbert, third son of the Emperor, has been promoted to captain of the navy and major of the army.

FLEEING FROM CAPITAL.

People of Constantinople Feel That Fate Is Sealed.

PARIS, March 24.—A Havas despatch from Malta says that although the bad weather continues, the indications are that the operations of the allied fleets in the Dardanelles will be resumed soon. Every precaution, the despatch adds, is being taken to avoid all surprises.

The allies are taking advantage of the delay to effect repairs on the Gaulois, Inflexible and other ships which suffered in the last bombardment.

Reports as to the effect of the big gun fire on the forts are contradictory.

A Constanza despatch says that in Constantinople the general impression is that forts and other defences of the Dardanelles have been practically beaten down by the allies and cannot hold out much longer. Everybody who is able is fleeing from the capital. The German and Austrian embassy staffs have already left, and the city is deserted except for the poorer inhabitants and the military guard, the seat of government having been transferred to Asia.

Bismarck Centenary Cancelled.

LONDON, March 24. — Emperor William has decided to cancel the celebrations planned for April 1 to commemorate the centenary of Bismarck's birth, on the ground that present conditions make such a celebration unsuitable, says a despatch to the Exchange Telegraph and Amsterdam.

A Berlin despatch, the correspondent adds, asserts that Emperor William and the members of the German Government will place wreaths on Bismarck's monument in the Tiergarten in Berlin, but that there will be no banquets, speeches or singing.

Seventeen Belgians Executed.

LONDON, March 24.—"Seventeen Belgians, most of whom were young peasants, were shot at daybreak yesterday in the Ghent barracks, after having been found guilty by a German court-martial of espionage in the interest of the allies," says a despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. from Amsterdam.

Prisoner Wanted Drink.

KINGSTON, March 24.—A prisoner named Hewson, aged 72, made an attempt to escape from the penitentiary, but was caught in ten minutes' time. Owing to his age he was unable to run very fast. When taken in charge he said he wanted to get over to the brewery to get a drink.

FRENCH SEND ANOTHER SHIP

PARIS, March 24.—The French battleship Jaureguiberry, which carries among her armament two 12-inch guns and two 10.8-inch guns, was ordered to-day to join the French squadron operating against the Dardanelles. The Jaureguiberry will replace the French battleship Gaulois, which was badly damaged along the water line by shells from the Turkish forts.

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS USE FLAXOAP

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS Flaxoap is a pure linseed oil soap, made to clean surfaces such as floors, furniture, woodwork, windows, mirrors, railings, etc. Owing to the great cleansing properties of linseed oil, Flaxoap has a great advantage over ordinary soaps for cleaning the dirt, grease and smudge from the above mentioned surfaces and a host of others. As a handy soap for the home it has no superior. We are handling Flaxoap in this vicinity and would like to have the opportunity to place a few cans of it on the shelves of every home. No one should be without it. It is a clear, amber jelly, readily dissolved in luke warm water and used like ordinary soap suds. Its strength does not injure the most polished surface or the most tender skin. Let's talk Flaxoap to you.

BRITISH AIRMEN WRECK GERMAN SUBMARINE

Russians Continue to Advance---The Enemy Driven Off

RUSSIANS BURSTING BARRIERS IN CARPATHIANS

Have Begun an Advance Across Passes--Enemy Driven Off Westward After a Series of Seventeen Charges.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PETROGRAD, March 25—In retaliation for the Russian occupation of Nemel, the Germans have applied a torch at Suwalki, the capital of Poland, in the Province of that name according to the War Office to-day.

Russian aviators brought word to Grodno that every Government building in Suwalki has been set afire and that the glare of burning buildings on Tuesday night, could be seen for miles. As a further act of vengeance German warships have bombarded a number of unfortified Russian villages in the Province of Courland on the Baltic. Seven German battleships, accompanied by 28 torpedo boats, appeared along the coast near Polangen and levelled homes of peasant villagers, killing many of the inhabitants.

PETROGRAD, March 25.—Already the Russians have begun to burst the southern barriers, where they have been on the defensive across the Carpathian passes since December, when the Germans launched their great schemes to help the Austrians, and outflank the Russian left from Hungary.

The column which was defeated in the last Austro-German effort from the sources of the San advanced to attempt the relief of Permysl (Przemysl) and was again attacked with tremendous energy. After seventeen charges, the Russians drove the enemy westward, and themselves waded neck-deep through the swift current of the San and the flooded mountain snows. This initiative now extends westwards beyond Dukla Pass. The Russians further east broke the position at the sources of the Stry, near Koziomoka, and held the Germans, killing the last man holding the rocky shelters.

Officers who watched the last moments of Permysl say that when after the charge of the battalion which captured the inner forts great clouds of dusty smoke arose from the explosions with which the Austrians attempted to destroy the remaining defences, they saw a white sheet rigged from the highest factory chimney in the town, and white flags flying from the telegraph poles. They found the fortifications buried under debris, but they can be easily repaired.

The Russian raid on Memel resulted in the capture of a great quantity of ammunition and engineering equipment. The withdrawal was entirely voluntary.

OFFICIAL ACCOUNT OF BATTLE.

"In the Austrian attack on March 19 along the Liuzna-Beplca-Russka front the enemy opened with a hurricane of fire with 12-inch howitzers. Under cover of the fire twenty battalions of Austrian troops attacked our forces at four o'clock in the morning. Our infantry, though outnumbered, opened a careful fire, taking deliberate aim. Supported by reserves the attacking forces of the enemy approached within 200 paces of our trenches, but after suffering enormous losses and having exhausted their reserves, withdrew at nine o'clock. The battlefield was covered with corpses and bodies of wounded. The attack was later renewed by the 39th Honved division of Hungarian troops, who were absolutely intoxicated with the lust of battle.

"In mad fury they threw themselves against our barbed wire entanglements as they drove forward in their assault. In spite of their immense losses the enemy persisted in the attack and our position on the Stashkewka heights changed hands three times. In our fourth counter-attack, delivered at five o'clock in the afternoon, a handful of our troops drove the enemy from the height. The fury of our regiment which had first left their trenches to the enemy was such that in the hand-to-hand fighting which followed absolutely no quarter was given. Our troops pursued the enemy a great distance, using not only their bayonets, but the butt ends of their rifles."

BRITISH AIRMEN DROP BOMBS ON SUBMARINES

Raid on German Works Near Antwerp---Much Damage Occasioned to Several Vessels, Including the Wreck of One Undercraft.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 25.—The Rotterdam correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says:

Three British aviators yesterday made a very daring and successful raid upon Antwerp. Their objective was the German submarine base, on which they dropped several bombs. According to an Antwerp correspondent one submarine was completely destroyed and another seriously damaged.

Two of the aviators returned in safety to the point from which they departed, but the third, Liept. Crossley-Meates, was forced to descend on Dutch territory at Kruiningen, one of the Zeeland Islands. He is now interned in Groningen.

After leaving the British aviation base in France the three aviators flew at great speed along the Belgian coast. On the way they were chased by a German machine, but were travelling too fast for the Taube to overtake them.

AIRCRAFT GUNS BUSY.

Antwerp was reached at 7:30 yesterday morning. As soon as the raiders were sighted fire was opened upon them from every available gun. From all parts of the city anti-craft guns sent shells which burst around the airmen. Hundreds of shots were fired from rifles. The noise was terrific, arousing the whole population of Antwerp. The streets and housetops were crowded with persons who watched the spectacle... Although flying at a great height, the airmen kept an unswerving course for their objective—the shipyards and wharves of Hoboken.

As they approached the dockyards the raiders swooped downward at a very steep angle, then came to a level at a height of only 100 yards immediately over a small dock upon which the new German submarines were lying.

Each aviator dropped several bombs, many of which reached the mark. The submarine which was destroyed was disguised in a most ingenious manner with the deck and superstructure of a small steamboat.

WORK BEHIND HIGH WALL.

Although the Germans had carried out their work behind a high wall the secret had leaked out that submarines already were being constructed there.

After having achieved their object the airmen returned, taking a southwesterly direction to their base. One German machine got into the air in time to give chase, but the effort was futile. The German gunners had no success in the parting shots which they fired.

Committee's Report Was Adopted

Respecting the City's Liability Under Workmen's Compensation Act

The report of the special committee appointed regarding the Workmen's Compensation Act, recommending that $2,000 be placed in the estimated expenditure and levied this year towards providing for the city's liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and that a charge be made upon any permanent work done by the city otherwise than by contract to cover this liability wih respect to such work, was adopted at las night's meeting of the City Council.

On Taxes That Were Not Paid When Due Owing to Death of Taxpayer

At last night's meeting of the City Council the following report was received from the Court of Revision:

That a refund of 22 cents be made to Mrs. Maria Chandley on account of taxes erroneously paid by her.

That a refund of $10.97 be made to the Times Printing Company, being the amount of the percentage on their taxes which were not paid at the time when due because on account of the death of Mr. W. H. Robertson, a heque could not at the time be cashed.

The report was adopted.

EUROPE IS BIDDING LOWER FOR WHEAT

MONTREAL, March 25.—There was some enquiry from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat for May shipment, but as the prices bid were fully four cents per bushel out of line, no sales were made. There was some demand for tramp vessels for full cargoes of grain for May shipment to United Kingdom ports, and 7s 6d per quarter was bid, but the offerings are light. The market for all lines of coarse grains is quiet, and prices show no further change except for corn, which is ⅛c to 1c per bushel lower. The export trade in flour was quiet, and there was no improvement in the demand for domestic account. Mill feed is steady and under a fair demand. Butter continues quiet, and the undertone to the market is easy at the recent decline in prices. Demand for cheese is fair for local consumption. Supplies of eggs are liberal, and the tone of the market is easy, with prices tending towards a lower level.

Steamer Chased By German Aviator

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 25.—For half an hour yesterday, according to the master of the British cargo steamer Teel, which arrived in the Thames yesterday, his craft was the target of a German aeroplane while off the coast of the Netherlands. The aircraft not only dropped bombs and steel arrows, but opened fire with a small machine gun. With the exception of a hole in her deck made by an arrow the Teal suffered no damage.

THE U-12 FOUGHT ON AS SHE WAS SINKING

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, March 24.—The steamship Tuscania, which arrived from Liverpool yesterday, brought an account of the sinking of the German submarine U-12 off the coast of Scotland on March 10 by the destroyer Ariel. Word of the presence of the submarine had been brought the day before to a destroyer flotilla, which was lying in a Scottish port, and it at once set out to catch her.

The Ariel fired one shot at the periscope, as it just appeared above the swell, and scored a clean hit. The periscope was carried away, and this meant that the submarine was helplessly blind if she went beneath the water. The destroyer commander gave the order:

"Full steam ahead! We'll ram her!" and the Ariel went straight for the German craft.

In a few moments the crash came. The U-12 was hit fair and square and sank beneath the surface with a hole in her side. She rose again to the surface, however, and showed fight. She fired at the Ariel, but the commander of the latter trained his forward guns upon her, and two other destroyers, coming up, also joined in the fight. The U-12 was hopelessly outnumbered and after a few minutes her commander hoisted the signal of surrender.

The destroyers at once lowered boats and managed to pick up nine or ten of the submarine's crew, the rest going down with their vessel, which sank for the last time as the boats reached her.

The Ariel in ramming the German craft had a hole knocked in her bow. She was towed into port by her consorts and placed in drydock. Only one of her crew was slightly injured.

"Przemysl" is Gone Now Try "Permysl"

Examiner Special:

PETROGRAD, March 24.—The Russians have conferred one boon on English-speaking people by changing the name of the city of Prnemysl immediately after its surrender. In all official despatches the word will hereafter be shorn of the "rz" combination of letters, which has tried the tongues of so many, as the city is to be known by its ancient Russian name of Permysl.

AN INCREASE IN PIRATE ACTIVITY

Is Predicted by Rear-Admiral the Marquis of Bristol

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 25.—A large increase in the number of German submarines operating in the waters around the British Isles was predicted by Rear-Admiral the Marquis of Bristol in an address at a meeting in London to-day of the Institution of Naval Arebitects, of which he is president. The Lord Admiral advocated the equipping of all merchantmen with armament sufficient to deal with submarines. He said that later international action must be taken for the purpose of defining the latitude which submarines should have in their offensive capacity.

TOO MANY PIGS IN GERMANY

LONDON, March 23.—The London Times says the Prussian Minister of the Interior hall issued a rescript insisting upon the slaughtering of pigs upon a very large scale, and threatening that if voluntary efforts do not have the required result the Government will use compulsion. The rescript says that a census taken on Dec. 2 showed that the stock of cattle in Germany was extraordinarily large, and that the number of pigs was about 25,500,000, a total which only once before had been reached. The agrarians are warned that the slaughtering of 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 pigs is quite insufficient, and that, instead of impending, they must now promote the arrangements for the buying up of pigs by municipalities.

According to the Frankfurter Zeitung, it has been decided that the Government shall seize and regulate the distribution of oil cake and other manufactured fodder. It is said that prices have been forced up by speculators.

Wheat in Chicago Closed With Loss

The Chicago Market Closed Weak —Damage to Wheat is Reported

CHICAGO, March 25.—Lively profit-taking on the part of holders of wheat more than wiped out yesterday an advance due to big export sales and to Kansas and Illinois reports of damage by Hessian fly. The market closed weak, ¾ to 1¼c net lower. Other declines for the day were: Corn, ⅜ to ½c; oats, ¼ to ⅜ to ⅝c; and provisions, 2½ to 5c to 7½c.

In the main, the resilising sales by wheat longs took place during the last hour of the session, and especially the final fifteen minutes. Previous to that time the market had made a sudden bulge after an early down turn. Unresponsiveness at Liverpool in regard to Tuesday's advance in America had much to do with the first weakness here. Then came news of export sales, which in the end aggregated 1,100,000 bushels. Bullish sentiment increased rapidly after the receipt of advices from several points near Wichita, Kan., that fields were being plowed up because of Hessian fly ravages. Illinois reports as to mischief by the insect were in reference to territory around Peoria.

Purchasing on the part of the Dutch Government appeared to form a large share of the export business in wheat. Great Britain, too, was credited with being a buyer, notwithstanding early reports that the British Government had seized the entire supply of wheat in India, and would endeavour to prevent all inflated profits.

A SIMPLE WAY TO REMOVE DANDRUFF

Prevent Falling Hair and End Itching Scalp.

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve, and entirely destroy, every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

If you value your hair, you should get rid of dandruff at once, for nothing destroys the hair so quickly. It not only starves the hair and makes it fall out, but it makes it stringy, straggly, dull, dry, brittle and lifeless, and everybody notices it.

Motor Car Reciprocity

Is Advocated for Ontario—Would Benefit Peterboro'

A request for reciprocity in motor licenses was made to Premier Hearst Tuesday by a large deputation from the Ontario Motor League. Mr. W. W. Digby, president of the O.M.L., said that the league was affiliated with 32 automobile clubs through the provinces. The request was simply that U. S. motor licenses be honoured in Ontario in return for similar privileges from the United States.

Premier Hearst said the request was a large one, and could not be dealt with at the present session. As a matter of fact, it did not require legislation, and he thought it could be gone into at the end of the session.

The deputation was organized by Mr. George H. Gooderham and Mr. Mark Irish, and many prominent men from all parts of the province were members.

The matter was referred to at the last meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council. His Worship Mayor Buller was of the opinion that such an enactment would produce good results in so far as Peterborough is concerned. It would tend to divert some of the American tourist traffic this way, if reciprocity of licenses were allowed. As it is now American tourists entering Ontario are required to pay an additional license fee.

CAME AS A SURPRISE.

It is Surmised That Most of the Money Will Remain in London.

LONDON, March 24.—A Canadian Government loan to be floated here for £5,000,000 at 98 1-2 in 10-year bonds bearing interest at the rate of 4 1-2 per cent., came as a surprise to the stock exchange. The Queensland loan gave way 7-8 premium on the announcement of the new issue and Canada 4 per cent.: 1940-60 also fell 3-8.

FOOD QUESTION.
Settled with Perfect Satisfaction.

It's not an easy matter to satisfy all the members of the family at meal time, as every housewife knows.

A lady writes:

"My husband's health was poor, he had no appetite for anything I could get for him, it seemed.

"He suffered severely with stomach trouble, was hardly able to work, was taking medicine continually, and as soon as he would feel better would go to work again only to give up in a few weeks.

"One day, seeing an advertisement about Grape-Nuts, I got some and he tried it for breakfast the next morning.

"We all thought it was pretty good although we had no idea of using it regularly. But when my husband came home at night he asked for Grape-Nuts.

"It was the same next day and I had to get it right along, because when we would get to the table the question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts' was a regular thing. So I began to buy it by the dozen pkgs.

"My husband's health began to improve right along. I sometimes felt offended when I'd make something I thought he would like for a change, and still hear the same old question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts?'

"He got so well that for the last two years he has hardly lost a day from his work, and we are still using Grape-Nuts."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Frost

"Listen to this, Green," he said.

"'E.M. Am now safe on board a barge moored below Tower Bridge, where no one will think of looking for me. Have good friends but little money, owing to action of police. Trust, little girl, you still believe in my innocence, although things seem against me. There are reasons why I should not be questioned. Shall try to embark before the mast in some outward-bound vessel. Crews will not be scrutinised so sharply as passengers. There are those who will let you know my movements. Fear the police may tamper with your correspondence, but later on when hue and cry has died down will let you know all."

The two detectives looked at each other.

"A barge below Tower Bridge," repeated Green, with something like admiration. "That was a good shot. He might have stayed there till doomsday without our hitting on him, or any one taking any notice of him."

"I don't know," said Foyle. "A newcomer on the river would attract attention. These water-men know each other. There's only one way that I can see in which he would avoid being talked about. He is a watchman."

"You're right, sir," agreed the other emphatically. "This is a matter where Wrington of the Thames Division will be able to help us. Hope we can find him at Wapping. Shall I ring through?"

"There's no hurry for a minute or two," said Foyle. "Let's get the hang of the thing right. There's probably some hundreds of barges below Tower Bridge. It will be as well to keep a close eye on the docks and shipping offices. You see, he asserts his innocence."

"H'm,' 'commented Green, with an intonation that meant much. "He says, too, that there are reasons why he shouldn't be questioned."

"Well, we shall see. There had better be an all-station message about the docks. Send two or three men down to Tilbury to watch outgoing boats there. We shan't need any other men from here. Wrington's staff know the river, and will get on best with them. I don't want to leave here until Blake lets us know more about the woman who left the advertisement. That gives us another possible clue."

It was some time before Wrington, the divisional detective-inspector at the head of the detective staff of the Thames Division, could be found, for like other branches of the C.I.D. he and his men did their work systematically, and usually left their office at nine o'clock, only to return at six. At length, however, he was found at a wharfinger's office, where there had arisen some question of a missing case of condensed milk. Within half an hour he was at Scotland Yard.

A tall man with tired grey eyes, about the corners of which were tiny wrinkles, with a weather-beaten face and grey moustache, he aimed to look something like a riverside tradesman. There was a meekness in his manner and speech that deceived people who did not know his reputation. He spoke five languages fluently, and two more indifferently. Along the banks of the thirty-five-mile stretch of river for which he was responsible he had waged incessant warfare on thieves and receivers for thirty years, till now practically all serious crime had disappeared.

He it was who, a dozen years before, had fought hand to hand with a naked and greased thief armed with a knife, in a swaying boat under Blackfriars Bridge; he, too, solved the mystery of a man found dead in the Thames who had been identified by a woman as her husband—a dare-devil adventurer and unscrupulous blackmailer, who was declared by a doctor and a coroner's jury to have been murdered. Step by step he had traced it all out, from the moment when a seaman on a vessel moored at one of the wharves had taken a fancy to bathe, and being unable to swim had fastened a line round his waist and jumped overboard. He had neglected to make the end on board properly fast and was swept away by the current. The rope had twirled round him, and as the body swelled became fixed. A blow on the head from the propeller of a tug completed a maze of circumstantial evidence which might have served as an excuse to most men for giving up the problem. Yet Wrington had solved it, and the record, which had never seen the light of publicity, was hidden in the archives of the service.

This was the man Foyle had now called in. He stood, with stooping shoulders, nervously twisting his shabby hat, apparently ill at ease. His nervousness dropped from him like a garment, however, when he spoke. Foyle made clear to him the purport of the excursion they were to embark on.

"Very good, sir," he said. "If you think the man you want is on the river, we will find him. I guess, as you say, he's got a job as a watchmen. He's probably had to get somebody to buy a barge, for they don't give these jobs without some kind of reference."

"A reference could easily have been forged. But that doesn't matter. How soon can you get your men together?"

"Three or four will be enough. With Green and yourself and myself we should be able to tackle anything. Have a launch and motor-boat at Westminster Bridge Pier in a couple of hours' time. If you can borrow them off someone, so that they don't look like police craft, so much the better."

"Good. In two hours' time, then."

And Heldon Foyle turned away, dismissing the subject from his mind. Green had gone upstairs to find how Grant of the Finger-print Department had progressed in his scrutiny of the finger-prints on the advertisement. He found his specialist colleague with a big enlargement of the paper on which the advertisement had been written mounted on pasteboard, and propped up in front of him, side by side with an enlargement of the prints found on the dagger.

"Any luck?" asked Green.

"Can't tell yet," he said irritably. "I've only just started. Go away."

"Sorry I spoke, old chap," said the other. "Don't shoot: I'm going."

Grant rested his chin on one elbow and stared sourly at the intruder.

"Great heavens!" he said. "Isn't it enough to have two of my men ill when there are four hundred prints to classify, to have three newspaper reporters and a party of American sociological researchers down on me in one day, without——"

"Mr. Foyle asking for you, sir," said the clerk.

He pulled open the door of the superintendent's room. Foyle had got his hat and coat on.

"Blake's wired that the woman has taken a ticket for Liverpool," he said. "He's gone on the same train. Now that's settled, let's see if we can't hurry Wrington up."

CHAPTER XXXII.

In the corner of the first-class carriage farthest away from the platform the Princess Petrovska sat with her hands on her lap and a rug round her knees, glancing idly from under her long eyelashes at the people thronging the Euston departure platform. Her eyes rested incuriously now and again upon a couple of men who stood in conversation by a pile of luggage some distance away, but within eye-shot of the compartment.

She had some vague recollection of having seen one of the men before, and though she remained apparently languidly interested in the business of the platform, she was racking her brains to think who he was or where she had seen him. It was recently, she was certain. Suddenly she leaned forward, and her smooth brow contracted in a frown. Yes—she was nearly certain. He had an overcoat and a silk hat on now, but when she last saw him he had been a bare-headed, frock-coated clerk in the advertisement office of the Daily Wire. The frown disappeared and she dropped back. But behind the placid face an alert brain was working. Had the man followed her, or was it a mere coincidence? Was he a detective? With an effort of will she stilled the apprehension in her breast. Her confidence reasserted itself. Even if he were a detective, what had she to fear? She had merely delivered a cipher advertisement over the counter. It was unlikely that it would be read by others than the person for whom it was intended. Even if it were, there was nothing in it to incriminate her.

"I don't believe he is a detective at all," she murmured.

All doubts on the subject, however, were set at rest as the express began to glide out of the station. As though taken unawares by its departure, the man hastily shook hands with his friend and sprinted for the train, swinging himself into the woman's compartment with a gasp of relief.

"Phew," he said. "A narrow shave that,' 'and then as if realising the sex of his companion. "I—I beg your pardon. I hope the carriage is not reserved. If so, I will change."

She smiled winningly at him.

"No, don't trouble yourself, I beg. It would be a pity after all the trouble you have taken—to catch the train."

Detective-Inspector Blake was not by any means dull. His immobile features gave no sign that he was half inclined to believe the woman was gibing him. "Now, what the devil does she mean by that?" he said, under his breath. He bowed in acknowledgement of her courtesy, and drawing a paper from his pocket unfolded it.

"And how is the charming Mr. Foyle?" said the Princess, speaking with a soft drawl. "I do hope he is still well."

This time Blake was taken unawares. He dropped the paper as though it were red-hot, and the woman laughed. A moment later he was ashamed of himself. She had trapped him into a tacit admission that he was a detective. A surprised denial of acquaintance with Mr. Foyle might have ended in an apology on her part for a mistake. Well, it was too late now.

Had Heart Trouble
FOR YEARS.
Now Weighs 138 Lbs.

Miss Beatrice Lougheed, Staples, Ont. writes: "I feel it my duty to tell you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I had heart trouble for quite a few years. I doctored for it, and altogether my bill amounted to $400, and still no cure. One day when very sick I was lying on a couch close to where some almanacs were hanging I took one down, and was reading about what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills cured, and thought I would try them. I got six boxes to start with; have only taken three boxes and I never felt so well in my life as I do now. I only weighed 87 pounds when I started to take them, and now I weigh 138 pounds. I hope all poor sufferers will be benefitted by them as I have been."

Wherever there is any weakness of the heart, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will strengthen it and build up a strong healthy system.

WOMAN'S MOST SUCCESSFUL MEDICINE
Known All Over The World —Known Only For The Good It Has Done.

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or received so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In nearly every community you will find women who have been restored to health by this famous medicine. Almost every woman you meet knows of the great good it has been doing among suffering women for the past 30 years.

Fox Creek, N. B.—"I have always had pains in the abdomen and a weakness there and often after meals a soreness in my stomach. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me much good. I am stronger, digestion is better and I can work with ambition. I have encouraged many mothers of families to take it as it is the best remedy in the world. You can publish this in the papers."—Mrs. WILLIAM S. BOURQUE, Fox Creek, N. B.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, many of whom state that it has saved them from surgical operations

Constipation, Indigestion and Horrible Backaches

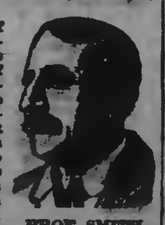
Where there is poison there is pain. This is a provision of Nature to warn you against conditions that are likely to prove serious.



PROF. SMITH.

Constipation of the bowels is undoubtedly the greatest source of disease and suffering. By using one of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills at bed-time as often as is necessary to keep the bowels regular you can cure constipation and the consequent indigestion, and remove the cause of backache, rheumatism and other painful diseases.

"Daily movement of the bowels" is the greatest law of health. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you to form this habit, add to your years, and bring comfort in old age.

Professor A. T. Smith, 1 Mt. Charles street, Montreal, and formerly of Boston, Mass., writes:—"I suffered for many years from bad digestion, constipation and horrible backaches. I have been treated by many doctors, without any results. One day a friend in Boston advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. After using two boxes I noticed great improvement, and after the fourth box I was completely cured. My digestion is good. I never feel any pain in the back. My head is clear, and I feel like a young man. I think Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are one of the best medicines on earth."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Belgian War Romance

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

One quiet evening in the summer of 1913 a pair of young lovers stood on a bridge that crossed the river Lys, in Belgium. They were there for a parting. The young man was to leave for the coast early the next morning and thence for America. Nothing could be more peaceful than the scene about them. A young moon stood in the west. If an occasional breeze stirred the leaves on the trees they were stirred lightly. As for sound, there was only a slight gurgle beneath them as the current passed the abutment of the bridge.

"Miss," said the young man, "cheer up. It will not be long before in America I shall have saved enough money to send for you. That we may have a definite time to be reunited I promise you that one year from today, if not before, you shall receive the passage money to bring you to me."

"And I, Hans, will work and save so that if you do not succeed in gaining enough to send for me I may have enough for the journey."

When the year had passed a great change had come over Belgium. The Germans were pouring into the country from the east, the French from the south. Wilhelmina had received letters from her lover in New York that money would be sent her for her passage, but before it was dispatched the war had stopped the mails.

On the anniversary of their parting, at evening, Wilhelmina went to the bridge on which they had stood a year before. It was now a ruin, more than half of it having been destroyed. Here and there across the fields were flashes, followed by a distant roar of guns, while searchlights sent their columns of light across the sky like the tails of nearby comets.

What should she do? Her home had been that day in the line of fire and was a ruin. Before leaving it she had snatched up her savings, and these she had with her. Standing there in the identical spot where she had stood in quiet with her lover, she resolved to go to him if possible.

There was no way of announcing her coming beforehand. She had neither writing materials nor a way to send a letter. Indeed, it was doubtful if even she could break through the line of war to reach the coast. And if she arrived at a port would she find a vessel? Nevertheless she turned her face toward Holland and set off in the darkness.

Her advantures are a long story by itself. Fortune favoring, she reached Rotterdam in safety and there found that she had the means to buy a steerage ticket on an outgoing steamer to New York.

On the arrival of the vessel the emigrants were landed at Ellis Island, and Wilhelmina among others was brought before the emigration commissioners. There she was asked how she would be provided for in America, and when she said that she had no money she was told that she would be sent back to Holland.

Her modesty, the consciousness that she was coming to marry a man without a special bidding, had caused her to conceal what she expected. Besides, suppose Hans had changed! But the prospect of being sent back to a land running in blood, where even the little home in which she had been born and always lived had been leveled, overcame her reticence, and she told a love story that no pen, however inspired, could put on paper.

There is a committee of Belgians in New York whose purpose it is to look after their incoming fellow countrymen. The head of the committee was found, and he in turn started a hunt for Hans.

Ever since the war had broken out Hans had been anxious about his Wilhelmina. He had not dared to send her his savings for fear they would be lost. Indeed, one of the troubles brought on by the war was the inability to send funds to Europe. He had written her, but without expectation that she would receive his letters. As to receiving letters from her, he had no faith in that either.

Hans was at work one afternoon when a fellow workman came to him and told him that the boss wished to see him in the office. Hans left down his tools and reported as directed. He found beside the boss a man, who asked him:

"Are you Hans Wichtel?"

"I am."

"There is a girl on Ellis Island who came over from Belgium. She says you will marry her."

"Mina?"

"Marry her! Of course I will marry her. Where can I find her?"

Hans wished to go at once to Ellis Island, but suddenly remembering that a man in overalls was not in wedding costume tidied himself up, then set off to join his sweetheart.

If the authorities had any doubt about Wilhelmina's story it was dispelled by the fervent embrace of the lovers. But Uncle Sam's emigrant officials take no man's promise of marriage, and there are no breaches of promise in his large family. A man went with the couple to the city hall in New York, where a license was procured. Then the pair went to the office of the Belgian committee, where the marriage ceremony was performed.

"Mother," said a little boy as he sat down to breakfast, "where is dreamland?"

"I don't know, my son. Why do you ask?"

"'Cause I dreamed last night I had a dandy double-runner there and I want to go and get it."

Here are some of the many features applying exclusively to Dunlop Traction Tread Bicycle tires—the only tire with a built-into tread—the V-shaped top of the tire is made by iron moulds after the tire proper is completed. That means a skid-resisting surface which cannot tear off, as so often happens with ordinary-made bicycle tires.

The only bicycle tire that is practically puncture-proof. Your wheel is getting revolutions on a series of V's which contain no air. Thus the air-containing portion of the tire is kept clear of the ground.

PISTOR RUSSELL'S THEORY UNDER FIRE

Although the topic in Woodmen Hall last evening was a review of the Russelite errors as advocated in their books entitled "Studies in the Scriptures," a good Christian spirit was seen in all that was said. Elder Johnston said he had no desire whatever to deal with anything except the doctrines of Mr. Russel, and the reason was because he was anxious for souls who were everywhere being deceived by those theories, to see the truth for thmselves from God's word.

The first point considered was the claim that the Russelites made concerning Mr. Russel's books. He read a direct quotation from their paper "The Watchtoker," in which they claimed that their books "Scripture Studies" were not merely comments on the Bible, but were practically the Bible itself. He then proceeded to examine the errors of the books themselves. The first point was found in Vol. I., p. 178, 180, in which Mr. Russel says that Christ was only a human being while here upon earth. But Mr. Johnston showed he was not only human but also divine, that Christ was called God in Mat. 1:23, that He was Creator according to Col. 1:14-16; and that therefore He was more than a mere human being. He was God and man, a blending of the two natures; for if He was only a man He could not be the Christ any more than Job who was said to be perfect. Job. 1:1, and Noah Gen. 6:9.

Mr. Johnston then read from Vol. I., p. 179, in par. 3, where Mr. Russel claims that Christ was not born in sinful flesh as we are, but in perfect flesh. This being true Mr. Johnston said that Christ could never be tempted in all points as we are. But the Scriptures show that Christ did take the very same flesh as we have. Heb. 2:15. And in taking sinful flesh, He overcame its tendencies and became perfect through suffering. Heb. 2:10. He then compared Mr. Russel's teaching on this point with the Immaculate Conception theory of Roman Catholicism.

Mr. Johnston then examined what was said by the Russelites in Book II., p. 128, 129, 130, where Mr. Russel denies that Christ's body was raised. It was shown from the experience of Thomas how false that idea is. John 20:24-28. ere Thomas in the upper room put his fingers into the wounds of the body of the resurrected Christ. If the body of Christ were not raised how could Thomas do this?

Another claim of Mr. Russel was that Christ came in 1874. Book II., p. 240. But what saith the Lord in Mat. 24:14. Also Verses 23, 25-27. When Christ comes all the angels of heaven will come and gather the elect. Mr. Johnston enquired if this happened in 1874. The dead will be raised when Christ comes. 1 Thess. 4:16. Every eye shall see Him. Rev. 1:7. The wicked will be smitten when He comes. 2 Thess. 2:8, and Jer. 25:33. The cities will all be broken down when Christ comes. Jer. 4:23-27. But did all this happen in 1874? Absurd! This shows the foolishnes of Mr. Russel.

But the last point considered was found in Vol. I., p. 103, where Mr. Russel claims a future probation for the wicked during the Millenium. But Mr. Johnston showed that this could not be true, for only the righteous would be living during that 1,000 years. Rev. 20:6, and that the rest of the dead would not live until the 1,000 years were finished. Rev. 20:5. But Mr. Russel denies the authenticity of Ver. 5, because it contradicts his theory, and says it isn't found in the Vatican manuscripts. Suppose it isn't found there, shall we leave it out because the Catholics don't have it in the manuscripts at Rome? Nay verily. The Scripture is correct. But to prove still further the folly of a future probation after Christ comes the Bible says in Rev. 22:11, 12, that all who are filthy before He leaves are going to remain so, and when He comes, He comes to bring reward and not salvation. Now is the day of salvation. 2 Cor. 6:2., and not after Christ comes. Mr. Johnston felt sorry he did not have sufficient time to consider all the Russelite errors, and warned people against buying the books. A goodly number were present and expressed great satisfaction with the discourse at the close.

Have You That TICKLING IN THE THROAT SENSATION?

This trouble is most distressing, and caused from a cold which has settled in the throat. How many people have lost a good night's sleep by that nasty, tickling, irritating sensation in the throat? The dry, hard cough keeps you awake, and when you get up in the morning you feel as if you had had no rest at all.

What you want to cure the cold is Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. This valuable preparation is composed of the most soothing and healing expectorant herbs and barks with which is combined the virtues of the world famous Norway pine tree.

Thousands of testimonials prove that what we claim is true. All we ask you is that when you ask for Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup see that you get "Dr. Wood's," and not some no-account substitute.

Mr. Charles S. Chase, Shelburne, N.S., writes: "Coming to Nova Scotia from the State of Maine, I caught a severe cold which persisted for many weeks, and was accompanied by a bad cough and a constant throat irritation. After trying many remedies, a friend handed me part of a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. It helped me so much I bought another bottle which completely cured the cough and allayed the irritation. It is certainly the best cough medicine I have ever tried."

Havelock Men Continue to Enlist

A Total of Eighteen Have Joined the 3rd Expeditionary Force

Cobourg, March 24.—The first of the large company of men who left Cobourg with the first Canadian expeditionary force to give his life for King and country was Privte George Earl, who was killed in action in France on March 2nd. He was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Earl, of this town, and one of the oldest of quite a large family of sons and daughters. There is very deep grief in the home, where the sad news was received by telegram yesterday, and joy also because it was on the field of honour and he was the first to answer the call. He was a young man who had just attained his majority, and well known about town.

Messrs. Mack Foley and William Chambers of Havelock, and Clifford Easton, of Belmont, have responded to the call to the colours by enlisting here with the third contingent. This makes a total of eighteen from Havelock who have joined the third expeditionary force.

A WEAK HEART.

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use flood the system with rich, red, vitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to ensure lasting benefit.

DAILY MARKET REPORT

Saturday's market showed another slump in the price of eggs, due to the fact that the supply was greater than the demand. Some quoted 18 cents, but the majority, 19 cents. Butter remained firm at 35 cents, one lone man asking 36, but his basket continued to remain full, while those of his neighbours slowly emptied. Beef was very scarce while pork was plentiful.

Potatoes sold around 40 cents a bag on Saturday, but during the week they declined to 30 cents.

Fowl was not very plentiful and brought a good price. Only one turkey graced the tables. It weighed 18 lbs., and its owner was asking $3.75.

Only two loads of hay were offered and continued firm at $26.

Grains, Hay.

Wheat per bushel	$1.20
Barley	.70 to .80
Oats	.40 to .45
Peas	$2.15
Flour, cwt.	$4.20
Shorts, ton	$29.00
Bran	$28.00
Baled hay	$20 to $22
Loose hay	$24 to $25
Straw	$13.00

Notes on Wheat.

With the fall of Przemysl the average man of wheat believes that the road to Berlin is open, and that there is a possibility of Russian wheat being moved out.

There was a feeling among speculators that the work is nearing an end. There was a noticeable lack of buying orders while selling was at times fast and furious.

Canada's gift of one million bags of flour to England cost the Trade and Commerce Department $3,005,640.

The Ontario Agricultural College reports that the crop year of 1914 was the driest on record in Ontario.

The frenzied scenes in the wheat pit at Chicago since the allies started pounding the Dardanelles go to show that the aim of the gunners, who directed the fire from those warships, had more to do with the price of wheat than all the farmers in America. Forcing the Dardanelles would likely release a flood of Russian wheat, and America would cease to have control of the wheat situation.

Great Britain in 1913 imported 2,393,353 bushels of wheat flour from Germany, Austria and Turkey; 6,663,300 bushels of barley from the same countries, and 11,273,458 bushels of oats from Germany alone. Great Britain's total import of wheat on the average each year during the past decade has been 216,843,200 bushels, of which Canada supplied less than a fourth.

In 1914 Britain imported Canadian produce in excess of 1913 to the value of $4,262,000, and in excess of 1912, of $23,680,000. These figures surely furnish some idea of the necessity there is for further production. To retain the market, Canada must have the goods. To have the goods she must cultivate the best.

Demand for clover seeds in the larger markets is very brisk. Dealers report that the demand is all for the better grades. The amount of No. 1 seed produced in Canada is practically nothing. As for Alfalfa seed, it is a question if there will be as much used this year as formerly. Last year was the only severe winter for years, and the seed which came through that will probably stand all right in the future. The great trouble had been the large use of southern grown seeds, which could not stand the rigors of the cold winter This year the market is being supplied with northern grown seed.

"What is your name, little boy?" inquired the kindergarten teacher of her new pupil.

"I don't know," said the little boy.

"Well, what does your father call you?"

"I don't know," still bashfully.

"How does your mother call you when the griddle-cakes are done?"

"She doesn't call me," beamed the new pupil, "I'm there."

Household Economy

How to Have the Best Cough Remedy and Save $2 by Making It at Home

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. Two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, stirred for 2 minutes gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

Then get from your druggist 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth), pour into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with sugar syrup. This gives you, at a cost of only 54 cents, 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50—a clear saving of nearly $2. Full directions with Pinex. It keeps perfectly and tastes good.

It takes hold of the usual cough or chest cold at once and conquers it in 24 hours. Splendid for whooping cough, bronchitis and winter coughs.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes the inflamed membranes in the case of a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiacol, and has been used for generations to heal inflamed membranes of the throat and chest.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

COMPARES RUSSIA WITH U. S.

British Writer's View as to What Both Nations Lack.

LONDON, March 24.— The Daily Chronicle publishes a special article by St. John G. Ervine on the temper of the Russians. He says:

"If one compares Russia with America, one sees at once what is wrong with both lands. America has collected all the moralities of the European, but has not yet sufficiently fused them to be able to form a new and distinctive morality. America has got education and intellectual movement, but has not got the spirit of tradition and national coherence.

"Elucidation and intellectual movement by themselves make a nation a place of hucksters. The spirit of tradition and national coherence without elucidation and intellectual movement keep a nation standing still. If Russia can acquire the quality of America, and add it to the quality it possesses, then Russia will become the greatest spiritualizing influence in the world."

Could Have Avoided War by Conference--Germany Alone Refused

LONDON, March 24.—"War might have been avoided by a European conference when and where Germany desired," Foreign Secretary Sir Edward Grey told an audience in London this afternoon. Continuing along this line, the Foreign Secretary said:

"Germany, from her experience in the Balkan conference, knew she could count on our good will, and that we were to do last July what we did before. But Germany refused every suggestion, and on her rests for all time the appalling responsibility for the war. We now knew that Germany had prepared for war, and only those who have planned for war can prepare for it."

Amid loud cheers Sir Edward added. "This is the fourth time within living memory that Prussia has made war upon Europe, and we are determined it shall be the last."

"The expenditure of hundreds of millions of money and the loss of millions of lives might have been avoided by a conference of the European powers held in London or at The Hague, or wherever and in whatever form Germany would have consented to hold it. It would have been far easier to have settled the dispute between Austria-Hungary and Serbia, which Germany made the occasion for the war, than it was to get successfully through the Balkan war."

Would Accept Conference.

"In recent years," the Foreign Secretary went on to say, "we have given Germany every assurance that any aggressive movement upon her would receive no support from us. We withheld from her only one thing —the unconditional promise to stand aside, however, aggressive Germany herself might be to her neighbour.

"Last July, before the outbreak of war, France, Italy and Russia were ready to accept a conference. Germany refused every suggestion made for settling the dispute in this way, and on her must rest now and for all time the appalling responsibility of having plunged Europe into this war."

Asking "What is the issue—for which we are fighting?" Sir Edward proceeded as follows:

"In due time terms of peace will be put forward by the allies. One essential condition must be the restoration to Belgium of her independent national life and free possession of her territory. The great issue is this: We wish the nations of Europe to be free to live their independent lives, working out their own form of government and their own form of national development in full liberty, whether they be great states or small states. That is our ideal.

German Conceit.

"The German ideal is that the Germans are a superior people to whom all things are lawful and against whom resistance is unlawful and must be put down, that they must establish domination over the nations of the continent, and that all must be subservient to Germany.

"I would rather perish or leave the continent altogether than live in it under such conditions. After this war we and the other nations of Europe must be free to live without the interference of the superior war lord; without the clang of armour and the sword continually rattled in the scabbard; heaven continually invoked, and without our policy being dictated by the military domination of Prussia.

"We claim for ourselves and together with our allies we will secure that right to live and pursue our national existence, not in the shadow of Prussian supremacy, but in the light of equal liberty."

MINE-SWEEPERS AGAIN AT WORK IN DARDANELLES

SPECIAL CABLE:

LONDON, March 25.—The Tenedos correspondent of the Times in a despatch dated Tuesday says:

"Mine-sweepers are again at work in the Dardanelles, but the wind is still too high for other naval operations."

The Athens correspondent of the Havas Agency, in a despatch dealing with the attack on the Dardanelles by the allied fleet, says:

"Navy officers at the straits declare that the Turkish marine defence was greatly weakened following the explosion of numerous mines during the last attack. They add that if it had not been for floating mines an entrance would have been forced last Thursday, as the forts themselves do not offer a sufficient obstacle to prevent a passage.

"The warships Gaulois and Inflexible, which are anchored in waters that are well protected, have finished their repairs.

"The shortage of coal is being felt at Constantinople, where numerous words, notably those supplying the street railway with power, have been forced to suspend operations.

"The authorities ate compelling Christians up to the age of 40 years to enlist and work on the defences of the heights which protect the capital on both the European and Asiatic side.

"At Dardanelles the Turks have pillaged the habitations of subjects of the allied countries and have forced them to quit the city."

From three to four weeks is the time estimated by British authorities for forcing the Dardanelles. Much depends on the weather and operations may take long, but with a reasonable amount of good luck it is believed the allies will be through the straits into the Bosphorus in that time. The impression is growing that the successful completion of this plan will have a tremendous effect on the ultimate decision of the great war, probably bringing the end within a measurable distance.

The success of the Dardanelles venture admittedly depends upon the presence of a sufficient landing force to take possession of the forts. It is pointed out that the ships may batter at the fortifications all day, but at night the garrisons have a chance to recuperate and rearrange the defences. Furthermore the Turks are using field guns, which are very difficult to locate or destroy. A sufficient land force would take possession of the fortresses when the warships had silenced the batteries. That land force is now being assembled and will shortly be ample for all purposes. It is impossible to review just how far mobilization has proceeded, but it has gone to a point where confidence is expressed that the Dardanelles will be forced before another month is completed.

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad and smothering feelings came on till I thought I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me, so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

BRIDE TRAVELS FAR TO WED SOLDIER

Miss Norah K. Kay of Aberdeen, Washington Marries Soldier at Camp

TORONTO, March 24.—St. Matthias' Church on Sunday saw the culmination of a last summer's Muskoka romance, when Private Guy Alfred Henry Dymond, of the second contingent, was united in marriage to Miss Norah Katherine Kay, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Stanley Kay, of Aberdeen, Washington, U.S.A. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Malcolm Dymond, of 27 St. Mary street.

Private Dymond secured a two-days' leace of absence from the Exhibition camp, and the bride travelled all the way from Aberdeen, arriving in Toronto on the morning of the wedding.

Only relatives of the bridegroom were present. Miss Helen Dymond, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid, and a brother, Mr. Arthur Dymond, was best man. The bride was given away by an uncle of the groom, Mr. Julian Sale. Those also present, besides the members of the groom's family were Mrs. Julian Sale,, Professor Alfred Baker, of the University of Toronto, another uncle, Mrs. Baker, and Mr. and Mrs. E. Thomas.

Mr. Guy Dymond has been connected with the Q. O. R. for some years. He was with the regiment when it was taken to England by Colonel Sir Henry Pellatt. A brother, Mr. Jack Dymond, is now at the front.

Thick, Glossy Hair Free From Dandruff

If you care for heavy hair, that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one aplication doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff; you cannot have nice, heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast.

If your hair has been neglected and is thin, faded, dry, scraggy or too oily get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine at any drug store or toilet counter; apply a little as directed and ten minutes after you will say this was the best investment you ever made.

We sincerely believe, regardless of everything else advertised, that if you desire soft, lustrous, beautiful hair and lots of it—no dandruff—no itching scalp and no more falling hair—you must use Knowlton's Danderine. If eventually—why not now?

GAVE NO FOOD TO CAPTIVE BABIES

ROTTERDAM, March 22 (Despatch to The London Daily News).—Only two English passengers were aboard the Batavier V. which was captured by a German submarine and taken into Zeebrugge. One of these, Miss Platts, of London, tells a remarkable story of the callous treatment of the women and children by the Germans, who allowed them to travel a whole day without food or drink, despite the fact that there were babies in the party only three months old.

"When we arrived near Zeebrugge," said Miss Platts, "we were met by three armed steam pinnaces and sailors were sent aboard to guard us. As we neared the harbour we were sent below, but I noticed that the boat circles to avoid mines. There were crowds of marines at Zeebrugge. The men passengers were taken from their wives and marched off amid the screams of women and children. We were kept on board, but although we pleaded to know, no one would tell where we were going. No lights were allowed on board because an aeroplane attack was feared. The next day another submarine came into the harbour. Throughout Friday we waited, and on Saturday morning, after a breakfast of bread and jam, we were put into trains, but waited hours before starting. Armed sailors still guarded us, and neither the women nor the children had any food or drink, although the captured ships were full of food. The Belgian women implored the guards to say where they were going, but the soldiers teased us by replying, 'Perhaps to Ruhleben.' The women went into hysterics, and their screams, coupled with the moans of the hungry children and the general suspense, was terrible. As I spoke German, I gave them a piece of my mind, but all they replied was 'It's war.' They laughed at the crying women, and I was furious.

"We saw seven German aeroplanes flying over, and saw one start on a raid toward England. Later he returned, and the guard told me he had only dropped a few bombs and done little damage. All that day we were in the train foodless, and at night we travelled in darkness and suspense. At 10.30 o'clock we drew up at the Dutch frontier and were allowed to get out of our locked carriages. We had been sixteen hours without food or drink, and the condition of the women and babies was terrible."

Spring Overcoats

No luxury, but a necessity. In this time of almost universal Economy, it is wise to buy a Spring and Fall Coat that will fill every want for some time, and not one of the freak styles that vanish (like the summer sun) leaving naught behind but regret.

A gentlemanly model is always good taste. Such are the styles we produce. $15. to $35. all made with same care. Inspection convinces.

Labour Conditions In Peterborough

There has been a slight improvement in the labour market caused by war orders, some of the factories working overtime. Spring orders have helped others who have not been working more than half time.

The civic authorities were doing all they could to help those who were out of work by giving them two weeks' work at a time and were making efforts to start every civic work as soon as the weather will permit.

In the building trades the outlook was anything but bright, so far as the city is concerned, but the farmers are taking advantage of conditions and considerable building will be done in the surrounding country. They were drawing material for the work while the roads were good.

In the woollen trade and leather trade work was very brisk. The iron foundries were doing very little. Machine shops were busy.

There was very little change in the cost of living since last month; prices remained about the same except in flour which has gone up over one dollar a hundred since the first of the year.

Farmers were getting ready for their spring work. They have been busy with care of stock and marketing produce. A good number have been well employed cutting pulp wood. There was a scarcity of feed and many farmers were selling stock owing to the high cost of carrying the animals over until spring.

Lumbering operations were rather quiet, the mills being well stocked with lumber owing to falling off in building operations.

Textile factories were enjoying busy conditions mostly owing to war orders. The B. F. Ackerman & Sons Company have big orders for harness for the French Government and ware working full time. The Canadian General Electric Company were busy in some departments; their tool room was working full time. Some other departments were working four days a week.

Campbellford—The Dickson Bridge Works Company were busy. They have secured a contract for a new bridge on the Intercolonial Railway.

How You Can Quickly Remove Hairy Growths

(Aids to Beauty)

A well known beauty specialist advises this treatment for the removal of hair from the face. Mix into a paste some powdered delatone and water, apply to hairy surface and after about 2 minutes rub off, wash the skin and every trace of hair has vanished. This method is quick and entirely safe. To avoid disappointment, however, it is well to make certain you get genuine delatone.

ASKS CHILDREN'S SACRIFICES.

Cardinal Suggests Doing Without New Clothes at Confirmation.

LONDON, March 23.—The Chronicle says that Cardinal von Hartmann, Archbishop of Cologne, has addressed a pastoral letter to the children of his diocese in which he asks for their prayer and offerings. He reminds the children that the war is costing the State enormous sums of money, and that it is their duty to collect gold, "for the Kaiser requires much gold for the war."

The Cardinal, however, remembers that many children are too poor to be of use as gold collectors, and points out that there is another kind of gold, often of far greater value than the metallic sort, and a gold which the poorest child may possess in ample store; this is the gold of self-sacrifice. He tells the children that the custom of buying a complete outfit of clothes for confirmation purposes might be dispensed with this Easter. These new suits for boys and white dresses for girls cost a great deal of money, and, however admirable the custom of appearing at confirmation service in new clothes, the Cardinal thinks that this year money will be better spent either for support of poorer children or as a voluntary offering for war purposes. He begs the children to bear this sacrifice willingly.

STOMACH TROUBLES DUE TO ACIDITY

SO SAYS EMINENT SPECIALIST.

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, wind and stomachache are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that fermentation is taking place in the food contents of the stomach, causing the formation of gas and acids. Wind distends the stomach, and causes that full, oppressive feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the fermenting food. Quick fermentation is unnatural, and acid formation is not only unnatural, but may involve most serious consequences if not corrected. To stop or prevent fermentation of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid, and render it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, probably the best and most effective corrector of acid stomach known, should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water immediately after eating, or whenever wind or acidity is felt. This stops the fermentation, and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments. Fermentation, wind and acidity are dangerous and unnecessary. Stop or prevent them by the use of a proper antacid, such as bisurated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist, and then enable the stomach to do its work properly without being blackened by poisonous gas and dangerous acids. — E. P. P.

ACID IN STOMACH SOURS THE FOOD

A well-known authority states that stomach trouble and indigestion is nearly always due to acidity — acid stomach—and not, as most folks believe, from a lack of digestive juices. He states that an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach retards digestion and starts food fermentation, then our meals sour like garbage in a can, forming acrid fluids and gases which inflate the stomach like a toy balloon. We then get that heavy, lumpy feeling in the chest, we eructate sour food, belch gas, or have heartburn, flatitulence, waterbrash or nausea.

He tells us to lay aside all digestive acids and instead, get from any pharmacy four ounces of Jad Salts, and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast while it is effervescing, and furthermore, to continue this for one week. While relief follows the first dose, it is important to neutralize the acidity, remove the gas-making mass, start the liver, stimulate the kidneys and thus promote a free flow of pure digestive juices.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and sodium phosphate. This harmless salts is used by thousand of people for stomach trouble with excellent results.

"There Is No Doubt of the Outcome"---Sir John French Commander-in-Chief Praises Canadians

RUSSIANS SMASHING TOWARDS BUDAPEST

Press Through the Western Gap of Dukla Pass and Entrench Themselves---Fighting in the Carpathians Has Taken on Tremendous Importance Since Fall of Austrian Fortress.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 25.—(Special Cable).—In the first stages of the great battle preceding the Russian attempt against Budapest, a Slav force has pressed through the western gaps of the Dukla Pass and entrenched itself within 15 miles of the Hungarian city of Bartfa.

Reports both from Petrograd and from Vienna agreed to-day that near Bartfa and between Lupkow Passes, the troops of the Czar are now delivering their mightiest smashes. Since the fall of Przemysl the fighting along this 50 mile battle front has taken on tremendous importance. One report from Petrograd to-day said that both the Czar and the Grand Duke Nicholas will go to the scene of the Carpathians operations as soon as railway communications are restored south of Przemysl.

PETROGRAD, March 25.—The Russian troops operating in the Persian province of Azerbijan, have been ordered to march immediately against the bands of Turkish regulars and natives in northwestern Persia. The Turks nad the Kurds, according to the reports from these villages, have executed several hundred of the Assyrian Christians, and have carried scores of girls away as captives after mistreating many of the older women in the villages.

SAVE PETROLEUM

COPENHAGEN, March 25.—On April 1st, the hands of every clock in Germany will be advance an hour. The Germans estimate that by rising one hour earlier and retiring one hour earlier during the six summer months they will save five millions dollars worth of petroleum which is very much needed in Germany just now.

ARE DESPONDENT

LONDON, March 25.—The Daily Telegraph says in a despatch from Copenhagen: "According to a prominent American business man who was travelling last month in Germany, the commercial classes are very despondent regarding the issue of the war. German business men admitted they were convinced that Germany would certainly be defeated and that it was generally believed that the war would be over by August."

According to the best information received here, the Russians who have retained control of the important passes of Dukla, have advanced to a position near Svidnik, in Hungary. Their present objective is Bartfa, the northern terminus of the railway leading south through the principal Upper Hungarian city of Kassa. Bartfa lies 150 miles northeast of Budapest. The first great engagement, if the Russians succeed in capturing the railway, will be fought around Kassa, some 42 miles south of the position now occupied by the Slavs.

WALL STREET BETTING THAT WAR WILL END WITHIN FOUR MONTHS

NEW YORK, March 24.—Following the publicafion of cable despatches in which Sir John French commander of the British forces in France, predicted an early ending of the war, Wall street began to bet on the date when peace would be restored.

Even money was offered that hostilities would cease within four months from date, and odds of 8 to 5 were asked that negotiations would be on by June 30. Plenty of even money was in evidence that the fighting would be ended by September 1.

Bettors based their wagers on the fact that Germany's supply of ammunition would fail in the next few months because of the government's inability to import nitrates and copper, the latter principally owing to the blockade established by the allies.

C.G.E. EMPLOYEE WAS INJURED

While Operating What is Known as the "Shears"

Mr. W. J. Burrell, 502 Homewood avenue, was the victim of a painful accident while operating what is known as the "shears" in the punch press department of the Canadian General Electric Company. Mr. Burrell lost a part of one finger of the left hand. He was treated at Nicholls Hospital.

GERMAN PRISONERS FIGHT.

Latest Arrivals Had Stated Fatherland's Cause Was Hopeless.

PARIS, March 24.—The Matin's Poitiers correspondent says a pitched battle was recently fought in the German prison camp owing to the statement made by the larest batch of forty prisoners that the German cause was hopeless. Earlier arrivals assaulted the new-comers with fists until the guards intervened.

When peace was restored a crowd surrounded a French interpreter demanding information. The despatch concludes:

"There has since been a noticeable diminution in the arrogance of the prisoners."

BANK CLEARINGS FOR THE WEEK

The bank clearings for the week ending March 25th totalled $403,511, an increase over last week of $5,457. The corresponding week last month the clearings were $200,083.

Police Court

Hugh Bradford's face was a new one at the Police Court this morning. The Chief had never seen him before but took his word that he came from Toronto. He was arrested yesterday on a charge of having been drunk in a public place. He said he was not working and in answer to the Chief's query as to where he got money to spend on drink, said he did not buy any, but got a few drinks around town. He was fined $2 and costs, amounting to $6.75 in all, to be paid forthwith, and in default of payment, fifteen days in jail. Unless some "friend" comes to the rescue Hugh will be a boarder at Castle Neshitt for a few days.

"Sunny" Jim Wilson admitted he took a little too much again yesterday. He said he was working steady and making about $3 a day. He was asked to contribute $2 as a result of his inebriety yesterday. The fine was to be paid forthwith and in default, fifteen days in jail was the alternative.

THREE PETERBOROUGH BROTHERS HEAR CALL

GUNNER DANIEL LINDSEY, 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, First Contingent.

PTE. RICHARD LINDSEY, B Squadron, 8th C.M.R., Third Contingent.

PTE. EPHRIAM LINDSEY, with 57th detachment, 39th Battalion, Third Contingent.

The three pictures show the soldier sons of Mrs. J. (Lindsey) Crouter, 313 Murray Street, three native-born Canucks, who have heard the call of the Empire. Gunner Lindsey enlisted with the 24th Field Battery, and is at the front in France. Pte. Richard Lindsey is at Ottawa with the Mounted Rifles, and Pte. E. Lindsey at Belleville with the 39th Battalion. The latter two were members of the 57th Regiment.

WARM PRAISE FOR THE TROOPS FROM CANADA

"I Cannot Pay Too High a Tribute to Them" Sir John French Tells Frederic Palmer, United States Correspondent

NO DOUBT OF OUTCOME

Examiner Special:

LONDON, March 25—In an interview published here to-day, with Field Marshall Sir John French, by Frederic Palmer, the war correspondent of the Associated Press, the British Commander in Chief says:

"There is no doubt of the outcome. I was never so confident of victory as I am to-day."

Asked what was the contributing factor of the successful retreat from Mons, he said:

"The dogged tenacity of our little regular army, which contested every foot of ground as we fell back."

"Not once did our soldiers lose heart. They understood that we were not defeated, but making a strategic retreat before heavy odds."

"We have abundant evidence now of the German deterioration on our own front. Their attacks lacked their former vigour and spirit. Neuve Chappelle was an important victory. It proved that with a strong push we could put the enemy out of a well-fortified position and then hold what we gained.

"One of the gratifying things to us," said Sir John, "Is how well our territorials have done once their period of preparation was over and they had an opportunity. They have surpassed our expectations. As for the Canadians, I cannot say too high a tribute to them".

RECRUITS IN LINE ALREADY FOR NEXT DRAFT

Number Have Already Offered Themselves Although None Have Been Examined Yet—Six 39th Men Rejected

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

A number of recruits have already presented themselves at the Armouries to enlist in the infantry battalion that is bein raisel in the division, but so far none of them have been medically examined, Major Cameron, A.M.C., having been busy at the hospital this morning operating on several 39th members. There will be a number of candidates to face medical inspection this afternoon.

Nine members of the Peterborough detachment to the 39th Battalion who went to Belleville yesterday returned last night, six of them having been rejected as medically unfit and the other three to go into the hospital for minor operations that were declared necessary. The other members of the detachment, about 110 men, passed their final examination satisfactorily. They were examined early yesterday afternoon before they were issued with their service uniforms. The rejected men were a badly disappointed lot. "It's a bit disheartening," remarked one of them to the Examiner, this morning, to drill for three months, pass two or three examinations and then get rejected at the last minute".

Recruiting is still going on for the 26th Overseas Battery and another draft of men will be sent to Kingston in a few days. In the meantime they are reporting daily at the Armouries.

Gunner Victor of the 26th Overseas Battery and brother of Lance Sergt. Peter Victor, the Peterborough boy recently reported wounded, is home from Kingston on leave.

The Belleville Intelligencer says: This morning 110 enlisters from the 57th Regiment of Peterborough arrived here as part of the 39th Battalion, which is being mobilized in this city They were attired in their uniform of red and were a fine body of men.

DRUG CLERK REFUNDS $6300 OF HIS PROFITS

Publicity Given the Transaction Brought Results—Hon. J. D. Reid Says Matter Will Be Taken Up by Dept. of Justice

INVESTIGATION GOES ON

OTTAWA, March 25.—The publicity given the drug transaction brought results. It was announced to the Public Accounts committee this morning that E. Powell, the clerk in the retail store of W. F. Garland, M.P., had refunded $6,300 profits from the drug transaction.

Major McWharrie admitted to the committee that in 1912 he signed an agreement or receipt for $1,200 for the use of influence with the Minister of Militia on behalf of the Gramm Motor Truck in sale of three trucks.

Major McWharrie and T. A. Russell purchased trucks for the First Canadian Contingent. The price paid for the Gramm truck was highest of all. Some 25 of them being purchased for about forty-one hundred dollars each.

Hon. J. D. Reid, in his statements, said:

"I have brought to the attention of the Prime Minister and my colleagues the circumstances of the case and I have explained to them evidence which is shared by his colleagues that the circumstances surrounding the purchase from Mr. E. Powell, are of such character that the whole matter should be referred with the evidence taken before the committee to the Department of Justice for the purpose of making such further investigations as may be necessary and of taking such action as may be warranted by the facts."

The Minister of Militia had no personal knowledge of the contract with Powell and knew nothing of the circumstances until they were disclosed at a later date. The Government is determined to protect fully the interests of the country in this and all cases and take such proceedings as may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. Garland told the committee that he had seen the Prime Minister and asked for an investigation. He admitted that he had made a mistake in recommending Powell, it having since developed that the policy of the department was to deal direct with the manufacturers.

New Gents' Store On Charlotte St.

Mr. E. G. Wellwood Will Open One in About Ten Days

In the course of a week or ten days Mr. E. G. Wellwood will open a gents' furnishing store at 204 Charlotte Street. These premises are undergoing extensive repairs and alterations and when completed, one of the most attractive stores in the city will be the result. Mr. Wellwood has had a wide experience in this line of business and this fact, coupled with the up-to-date stock that he intends to carry, should augur well for a successful business career.

THREE GERMAN ATTACKS REPULSED BY FRENCH

Attempts by Enemy to Capture Lost Ground Are Unsuccessful---Paris Prepares for a Zeppelin Raid Which Fails to Materialize---Lively Artillery Fighting in the Champagne District.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, March 25.—French official.—Lively artillery fighting along the line in the Carpathians region, and the repulse of the German attacks north of Mesnil, were reported in the official communique this afternoon. Two isolated infantry engagements were fought in the Argonne. The Germans attacked unsuccessfully near Fortaine Madame. Other German forces made fruitless attempts to regain the ground captured by the French near Sparges. On the rest of the battlefront there was nothing to report. For the third time within a week reports reached Paris of a coming Zeppelin raid, early to-day. French aviators took the air, searchlights swept the sky and every precaution was taken. The Zeppelin reported as approaching from the Soissons region, failed to appear.

RAN THE GAUNTLET

LONDON, March 25.—Duplicating the feat of the British cruiser Amethyst, two British destroyers ran by the Turkish forts at the entrance to the Dardanelles narrows to-day, and penetrated a short distance beyond Kilid Bahr, according to the despatches to-ay from Athens. The destroyers accompanied a flotilla of the Anglo-French warships that entered the strait and shelled the forts at long range. Almost unnoticed they approached the narrows entrance and dashed by the forts. On their return they were greeted by salvos from the Turkish batteries on both sides of the entrance but escaped undamaged. Their observations, according to the Athens reports, confirmed the reports of the aviators that the Turkish forts had suffered heavily from the bombardment of one week ago.

BLOCKED BY GERMANY

LONDON, March 25.—The Evening Chronicle to-day published a despatch stating that the surrender of Constantinople and the Dardanelles to the allies was fully arranged for some weeks ago but was blocked by Germany, who sent large reinforcements to help the Turks.

THE BERLIN STATEMENT

BERLIN, via wireless, March 25.—The Russian army that was rolled back on Grodno with heavy losses ten days ago is again attempting to resume an energetic offensive, admitted the war office despatches this afternoon. The Russians are making Augusttow their objective. In France and Flanders little of importance has occurred in the last 24 hours. There have been unimportant engagements along the Meuse heights, southeast of Verdun and around Hartmannweilerkopf.

Many English Farm Hands Have Answered Call to Arms

A farmer from the vicinity of Omemice stated to-day that so many of their hired men had enlisted that the spring work promised serious difficulties. Men who had come out from the Old Country in recent years, who had succeeded in adapting themselves to Canadian farm methods and were becoming really useful on the land, had answered the call of the Mother Country in her hour of need. To replace this labour appears to be a serious task. Some farmers are of the opinion that help will be fairly plentiful by reason of the unemployment in the cities, but most farmers have been utterly discouraged by the inexperience of agricultural novices. The supply of capable farm hands in recent years has been altogether inadequate, but the call to the front is said to have made conditions appreciably worse.

To-day's List of Casualties

Three Canadians Killed in Action and Others Are Wounded

Special to The Examiner:

SUSTAINED FATAL INJURIES FROM FALL

Inmate of House of Providence Falls From Window

Mrs. Bridget Lynch sustained a fall from a window at the House of Providence last night which resulted in her death. About 10.30 p.m. she got out of bed and, going upstairs to another floor she fell from a window and was so badly injured that death came within a short time. She has been an inmate of the House of Providence for some time and has not been in very good health lately. She has been worrying quite a lot lately about her condition and it was probably while in a demented state of mind that the accident occurred.

The funeral arrangements have not been completed.

As Frank W. Leonard, druggist, was arrested for selling dope in New York, he fell dead in the detectives' arms.

THE TRAFFIC AND POLITICS.

Hon. J. W. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, and head of the License Department, asserts that putting the administration of the license law under a provincial commission "will put the liquor traffic out of politics." This is extremely doubtful. Mr. Hanna's assertion proves what has long been apparent, that the liquor traffic is in politics up to the eyes. If it isn't, why the necessity of a commission to "put the traffic out of politics"? It is notorious, and we don't need to go out of Peterborough to know how intimate the connection between the party machine and the traffic; as we only need the light of the resignation in 1905, of J. W. Powell, and his fellow commissioners, in Toronto, to prove the direct connection of the traffic and the government. They only accepted office on the written assurance of Mr. Hanna that the government desired a "fair, fearless, and non-partisan," administration of the License Act. This was not lived up to, and their resignation was forced by the designs of "men" who, as the News said at the time, "seemed to be inflamed with passion for office, or for dispensing patronage, and determined to get rid of commissioners who refused to play the part of hired men, subject to the dictation of party followers." No stronger proof could be given of the administration of the license law in the interests of the party directly, and as directly in the interests of the traffic. This does not say much for the non-political character of the proposed Central Commission. Its appointment will permit of more direct and concentrated influence being applied to protect and promote the neutral interests of the party and of the liquor traffic. The traffic can take heart of grace. It is safe so long as the present government is in power — not a hair of its head will be injured. We couldn't do less by turning over the administration of the license law to the Attorney-General's Department, than by entrusting it to a commission, the creation and consequently creature of the government. The best way to "put the liquor traffic out of politics" is to put the liquor traffic out of business.

CANADA'S SOLID PATRIOTISM.

If there had been at any time any doubt that all parties and all classes in Canada were prepared to give the utmost possible financial assistance, as well as assistance in men in fighting the battles of the Empire at this time, it is removed by the fact that within ten minutes in the House of Commons yesterday, the House without a dissenting voice voted 100 million dollars as an additional war appropriation. This is not at all surprising; one was sure when the appropriation was suggested that it would receive the hearty support of every member of Parliament, as it is sure to receive the endorsation of every loyal and patriotic Canadian citizen.

Those who doubted or denied that a party truce existed, will now see that there is a party truce, faithfully observed in regard to the great essential of the moment, that of Canada doing her full duty. We have done our duty to the Empire as Canadians, by both furnishing men and munitions of war, as well as by unanimous contribution of the means necessary to give our military contributions the effect, that our soldiers on the field, adequately equipped and supported, are ready in courage and resource to give.

But while we are at one in the great principle of voting money and sending soldiers, there may legitimately be difference of opinions, as to the details of giving these things effect. If we vote money freely without party division of opinion, we should be equally prepared without party difference of opinion, to see and provide, that the money voted should be expended to the best advantage, without waste or ineffectiveness from any cause. Herein is not involved so much the matter of principle that insured unanimous support for a war vote, as matter of details, which, as human judgment is involved, is sure to arouse difference of opinion which might be reconciled, by a determined resolve to treat matters of such supreme moment on their merits and without, or with as little as possible, partizan bias, which it seems impossible to entirely eliminate from our exceedingly human members of Parliament.

In the matter of voting money for war purposes, our aim was to help the Empire to the utmost of our ability in the hour of the greatest stress and trial the Empire has ever experienced in her long and strenuous history. In providing for war revenue it was equally incumbent upon Canada to consider first the benefit of Great Britain, and to avoid penalizing Great Britain in our efforts to help her. The partial removal of the British preference—practically enacting a discriminating tariff against British goods, imported into Canada—was a matter of detail, evidently inconsistent in character with the great principle that led Parliament to unanimously support a war appropriation of 100 million dollars.

While the Liberals were loyal to the party truce and to the duty of Canada, to help the Empire with our resources, opinion became divided upon the question of ways and means. The British Preference is a Liberal doctrine—a loyal free gift and display of duty—a most striking display of affection and fealty—towards Great Britain, that was hailed with delight, not only by Great Britain, but by all loyal Canadians irrespective of party. There were, however, exceptions, and the exceptions in their own interests considered their advantage, as taking precedence to our duty to Great Britian.

Thus arose the first sharp delimination of party feeling—on a matter of principle—since the war began. The Liberals demanded that the discrimination against Britain, through an increased tax on British goods, should be foregone. And, though this be foregone. And, though this patriotic proposal failed to find parliamentary acceptance, it did not affect the Liberal observance of the party truce, and the Liberal determination, in common with the rest of Canada, to help Britain to the utmost in the present war. The Liberals voted unanimously with the Conservatives for the 100 million dollars' additional war appropriation.

Thus it appears that loyalty to the party truce, as well as the more important matter of loyalty to the Empire is not impaired by, nor inconsistent with, reasonable criticism in matters of detail. There has been too much detail of facts furnished to admit a doubt that there has been a great deal of irregularity, not to say crookedness, in connection with the furnishing of war supplies; great abuse of public patronage leading to positive cruelty and criminality in equipping our soldiers with "rotten" boots. These things are details that cannot consistently come within the benefits of the party truce; for the abuses are so notorious, that condemnation, journalistic and other, is freely made of the conditions, even prominent Conservative journals, denouncing the abuses in no mild nor measured terms.

Every act of graft committed, especially if permitted, take so much from the effective experiture of the 150 millions Canada has voted. The furnishing of "rotten" supplies to soldiers destroys the efficiency of our troops in the field, and so far represents "aid and comfort to the enemy" —is so far an act of treason. Every act of graft that tends to cripple our soldiers, makes an unjust and superfluous demand upon the Red Cross Fund, to care for the additional men invalided or broken down through the results of wearing "rotten" boots, with "soles stuffed with wood, shavings and cork." Things like these; abuses like these, are not a matter of mere party concern. They don't come within any party truce. They are a matter of national concern. They concern every Canadian soldier sent to fight; they concern every household that has furnished a soldier for the fighting line; they concern the life of every soldier; they concern the good name of Canada—in the eyes of the Empire and the world. No party nor social considerations should be allowed to come between these crimes and the punishment of their perpetrators.

MAGGOT EATING AT THE HEART OF CANADIAN LIFE

Scorching Condemnation of "Graft" by Prominent Conservative Newspaper

OTTAWA, March 24—Moved by the revelations brought out before the Public Accounts Committee in connection with the purchase of war supplies through political middlemen. The Ottawa Citizen, Conservative, says editorially today:

"There is a maggot eating at the heart of Canadian national life. Young men, young soldiers are voluntarily giving their all, their lives, in defence of British freedom. British honour and British tradition, and the political maggot is eating into the health of the citizen army through the soles of its rotten boots.

Having eaten into the health of the soldiers who were strong and well the maggot is now fattening on the sick and wounded, broken in the Empire's war. Field dressings, even the salve and balm and bandages, for the poor broken limbs and shattered bodies of Canada's wounded men and boys, have been made a medium for the cursed maggot to ply its loathsome business. Where are the upholders of British tradition, the loyal orders, the Sons of England, and the Sons of Honour in Canada? Must they remain forever silent while such damnable maggotry is being laid bare?

Scoundrelly Patronage System.

"Here it has been demonstrated and confessed before a committee of members of Parliament that a junior clerk in the Carleton Drug Company —of which William F. Garland, M. P. for Carleton, is principal owner— has made a profit of $9,000 on an order for $40,000 worth of field dressings and other necessities intended for the brave men at the firing line. The drug clerk, a mere inexperienced youth, paid about $15 a week, is introduced to the Militia Department under the scoundrelly political patronage system, tolerated by the pinch beck political practice of this country.

"It is pretended that the junior clerk of the Carleton Drug Company is allowed to appropriate this patronage-begotten $9,000 of public money without hint or interference regarding its disposal by his political masters.

"The Red Cross fund is having to appeal for more help, and many good people are giving of their scant earnings to do what little they can for the tender nursing of the Empire's poor, broken men. For the sum of $9,000 eighteen trained nurses could have been sent from Canada and maintained at the saving line for a whole year—perhaps till the end of the war — to wash the wounds and soothe the pain-racked bodies of Canada's injured soldiers. But the $9,000—just one instance of the work of the maggot eating at the heart of Canada—is now deposited to the account of a junior clerk of the firm of the Carleton Drug Company, of which William F. Garland, M.P., is principal owner.

"Within a few weeks the political packs will have scattered across the country, and if the ring-leaders have their way Canada will be plunged into the swirl and swill of a general election. Such patriot gentry as the head of the Carleton Drug Company and the sophist members of the committee investigating the profits over the bodies of wounded soldiers will be expanding themselves upon political platforms and appealing for the support of the loyal orders and believers in British tradition and honour! They will vow themselves to be the saviors of the Empire. What will the loyal orders and independent citizens say? Britain would surely abhor and repudiate such professed aid. Will it seem well in the sight of the Great Architect of the universe?" — Ottawa Citizen (Conservative).

THE PATRIOTISM OF PENALYZING BRITISH TRADE IN WAR TIME

The Liberal Position in Regard to Hampering Great Britain in This Time of Stress and Strain

The offer of the Liberals at Ottawa to withdraw all opposition to the new tariff, provided the clause increasing the duties on imports from the motherland was dropped, secured scant consideration in the House of Commons from the members of the Borden Government. It will be more justly dealt with and more favourably regarded by the electorate should it become one of the issues in a general election. Behind the Government stand not a few men who are as strongly opposed to the importation of goods from Great Britain as from the United States or any other foreign competing country. They know that under normal condition the duties on British goods could not have been increased without serious protest from the mass of the Canadian people, and they have done and still are doing all they can to mask the protectionist features of the increase behind the idea that it is not a tariff measure, but a war-time necessity based entirely upon the need for more revenue.

In offering to withdraw the amendment, which was regarded by the Government as a motion of want of confidence, provided the taxation upon British goods was permitted to remain as it had been before Mr. White's Budget was brought down, the Hon. Geo. P. Graham spoke for Canadian Liberalism. His words should have the widest possible publicity, not only in Canada, but in Great Britain, where there must be sore disappointment over an increase in the Canadian duties upon British goods at the present time of stress and strain. Mr. Graham said in part:

"The fact remains that to the extent of five per cent. it will be more difficult to do business with Great Britain after this proposed legislation becomes law than it was before. Let me put it this way to the Minister: Great Britain is giving us $150,000,000, the interest on which at 4½ per cent. is $6,500,000. We import from the motherland about $133,000,000 worth of goods yearly, the duties on which at five per cent. would amount to $6,650,000. There is therefore but a slight difference between the interest we are going to pay the motherland on the money we are getting from her and the value of the barrier we are placing against British trade. That is, we say to the motherland: We want your money and we will pretend to pay your interest, but we will put up a barrier against your trade which will enable us to get the money back from you.

"At a time when we have as our Allies the great nations of the world — Great Britain is not our ally; Great Britain is ourselves—is it a time to take such a course as this? The world is largely controlled by sentiment. It is a time for the Dominion of Canada, whose men are fighting side by side with the sons of the mother country, to put up trade barriers against Great Britain, who is supplying us with money? The Minister of Finance himself told us that we could not get our money except by the consent of the British Government. When our sons are fighting side by side with Tommy Atkins in the trenches, is that the time for the daughter to put up a trade barrier against the great mother of the household? Even if my honourable friend were right — and I do not admit for a moment that he is—are the interests of Canada which might be served by these proposals paramount to the great object-lesson that would be given to the world at the present time if, while compelled to raise taxation against the goods coming from other countries, we should not increase the taxation against Britain, who is bearing so large a part of the burden of the world's war at the present time? The Finance Minister ought to see to it—and this is the gist of the amendment of my Right Honourable leader—that the tariff against Great Britain be not raised at the present time. I have not consulted with my leader, but I think I am safe in making the proposition that if the Finance Minister will agree not to raise this barrier against trade with Great Britain at the present time we will withdraw the proposed amendment."

The offer was not accepted. In the division that followed the Conservatives were lined up solidly in favour of the increase of duties on British goods. There is still a final court of appeal, before which the case must come. Whether the Government goes to the country this year or next, Liberals will insist upon placing the facts before the electors. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's amendment deprecating the increase of taxation upon British goods represents one of the cardinal principles of Liberalism in Canada. Upon this principle the party takes its stand, and for it Liberals will fight, no matter who the assailant of British preference may be. — The Globe.

The scoring was pretty ev- y divided among the Hustlers. t. Heaslip did the major part, le Preston and Best were the top notchers on the Boosters. Final score, Boosters 28, Hustlers 17.

Cressman's Triumph Over Unknowns.

Fred Cressman and his bunch of co-horts are wearing that "Sunny Jim" smile and it is rumoured that they were so jubilant over their victory that they held a banquet afterwards in honour of the win. They certainly had full steam ahead last night and come through like pennant winners. The Excelsiors are heading the league with only one defeat, which the Unknowns handed them last Saturday night. Cressman's still have to meet the Excelsiors, so these three teams still have a chance for first place in A division.

F. Cressman and Bartlett were in fine fettle and scored 28 out of the 40 points for their team, while Robertson was the dependable score getter for the Unknowns. The Cressman checks camped right on their men last night, giving them very little chance to score. The first half ended with the yellow shirts in the lead 22-15. But in the second half they drew away and succeeded in scoring 18 points to their opponents' 10. Final score being, Cressman's 40, Unknowns 25. Line-up:

Boosters — Munro, Preston, Kerr, Best, Wilson.

Hustlers — Heaslip, Carruthers, Jones, Lewis, Lang.

Referee, Dobbin; scorer, Thackering; timer, Smith.

Unknowns— Muthern, Brown, McCarrell, Smith, Robertson.

Referee, Dobbin; scorer, Taylor; timer, Stuart.

VILLIARD AND JOHNSON BOTH WORKING HARD

HAVANA, March 24—Warm weath- r to-day gave Jack Johnson and es. Willard the first opportunity in several days to work in the open air n training for their battle for the world's heavyweight championship, on April 4. Both pugilists drew crowds of people who were anxious to see them at work.

Willard trained at Miramar in the presence of 500 spectators, a third of whom were women. Many tourists were among those who watched the challenger do an hour and a quarter's hard work at the pulleys, punching the dummy, throwing the medicine ball and boxing 13 rounds. He faced John Pentz for three rounds, Walter Monahan four, and Jim Savage five, and later wrestled with Tom O'Rourke.

Willard has developed a straight left. His wind is only fair. His sparring partners landed freely to-day, and despite the fact that they are smaller men the challenger was easily thrown off his balance in the clinches. Willard hits a terrific blow when he lands, but is still far from a finished boxer. Without defending himself he took punishment about the head and body, apparently not being discomfitted. During the morning Willard did six miles of road work.

Johnson likewise took a six-mile run this morning. The champion boxed nine rounds with Bob Armstrong, Colin Bell and Dave Mills without intermission. Willard took a minute's rest between rounds while he was boxing, and Johnson's partners are huskier and more experienced than those of the challenger.

Johnson declared that he could fight to-day if necessary, and said that in another week he would be in perfect condition.

Americans have begun to bet in favour of Johnson, offering small sums at eleven to five. Thus far there is only a fair demand for seats at the championship fight. Harry N. Frazee, principal backer of the bout syndicate, arrived here to-day and took personal charge of affairs.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who is here on the yacht Wayfarer, visited both training camps to-day. He is planning a large party for the big battle.

GUELPH MAY NOT BE IN CANADIAN LEAGUE

GUELPH, March 24.—According to J. E. Reynolds, proprietor of the King Edward Hotel, who has been interested in placing the Erie franchise in the Canadian League in Guelph for the season of 1915, Guelph will not be represented in the Canadian League.

According to Mr. Reynolds, who is the spokesman for a syndicate of Guelph business men who proposed to buy the franchise from Geo. O'Neil, the former Erie owner wants too much for the club and refuses to meet the Guelph men half way. O'Neill demanded the same amount he paid Guelph for the franchise, $2,500.

Local business men offered him $2,000 with the provision that he take five hundred dollars stock in the Guelph Club. The Guelph men are still willing to take on the franchise, providing O'Neill will come on terms.

CITY LACROSSE LEAGUE AND O.L.A. TEAM PROPOSED FOR THIS YEAR

The Lacrosse Club last night decided to place a team in the O.A.L.A., and also to form a city league without an age limit. There was a fairly good attendance in the Y.M.C.A., and everyone felt that this should be a good year for lacrosse. The officers elected were as follows:

Hon. Presidents — J. H. Burnham, M.P., and G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P.

President—Ed. Dillon.

Vice-President—Lou LeBarr.

Secretary-Treasurer—J. Sutherland.

Executive—Mr. Carson, Dr. Sutton and Harold Dunsford, and a representative from each team in the city league.

Mr. Carson, physical director of the Y.M.C.A., is taking a deep interest in the game, and especially in the proposed city league. He expected to enter two teams, he said, and while all the boys might not be equally proficient, the advancement of the game should be materially helped. It was also stated that a team from St. Peter's T.A.S., and another from the south end may be formed. However, the next month will produce whatever real efforts will be made for a city league. The idea is a good one, and the club has undertaken to promote the league and an O.L.A. team. If their hopes are realized they can secure their big team players from the city league, which will not only develop the game, but should also create new interest among the public. The new officers intend to pay off their slight deficit from last year and begin with a clean slate.

Mr. Dillon was appointed to attend the meeting of the O.A.L.A. in Toronto on Good Friday. The work of stirring up city league interest will be commenced in the near future. It is realized that an early start must be made, in order to make sure of a senior team in good condition for the opening of the O.L.A. season.

To Cairo, by Allah's Aid.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 25.—Syrian newspapers publish a proclamation issued by Djemal Pasha, commander of the Turkish troops operating against Egypt, denying certain rumors concerning the first Turkish reconnaissance against the Suez Canal.

He denies any serious defeat.

"The people must put their trust in the army and remain calm. With the help of Allah, we shall enter Cairo as conquerors."

According to Djemal Pasha, the Turkish losses in Egypt were four teen officers killed, 19 wounded and 15 missing; 109 privates killed, 35 wounded and 446 missing.

'TIS A SAD NOW FOR A PITCHER

Hurlers of Former Days Often Took Part in Sixty or More Games

NEW YORK, March 23.—These days a pitcher who works in fifty games in one season is looked upon as a wonder and is called everything from an iron man to a "regular horse for work," and at that the pitcher who gets in fifty games nowdays is a rare athlete. Back in the '80s fifty games a season was considered a fair amount of work for the average pitcher, but when it comes to winning fifty full games of big league baseball in one season, then a hurler is touching the miraculous. Baseball history gives the names of several big league pitchers who have accomplished this wonderful feat.

The pitcher who holds the record in games won in a single season is A. G. Spalding, the greatest hurler of his day, and the many records he created stand to-day as the best. Of course, Mr. Spalding's work was accomplished under different conditions than exist to-day, but even at that his pitching was wonderful. It was in 1875 that A. G. Spalding made his great record in games won. During that season he pitched sixty-three full games and won fifty-six, a percentage of .889, the largest average of games won in the history of the game.

Pitches in 71 Contests.

In the season of 1884 Charles Rad bourne of Providence pitched seventy-one games, winning fifty-seven. This is the largest number of games won in a season in the history of major league baseball. Guy Hecker, another famous hurler of the old school and the star of the Louisville club of the American association in 1884, pitched seventy-one games that season and won fifty.

Hecker performed in a wonderful manner that year. He struck out seventeen men in nine innings of one of the losing games. He also had a stretch where he won thirteen games without a defeat. At the same time Hecker was hitting the ball far over the .300 mark.

Clarkson Brings $10,000.

John G. Clarkson was the first $10,000 player the game ever had, and if there were another such pitcher on the baseball horizon to-day he would bring $100,000. In his first full season's work for "Cap" Anson, in 1885, Clarkson won fifty-two games of real fighting baseball. John G. pitched sixty-nine games that year and lost only sixteen, one being a tie. Clarkson put a nick in the record of all other hurlers in this respect by repeating the wonderful stunt of winning fifty games or more in one season.

After the great Clarkson sold to the Boston Nationals he proceeded to show the owners of that team they had made no mistake in paying $10,000 for the use of his pitching arm and the brains that guided it. In the next season following the sale, which was 1889, Clarkson pitched seventy-two games for Boston and was a victor in fifty-one of them, losing seventeen and four being tied.

IS MARRIED BALL PLAYER BETTER THAN BACHELOR TO CLUB

There is a heated debate going on just now in baseball circles over this subject:

"Is a married ball player of more value to a club than a bachelor ball player?"

One faction—the wedded faction—asserts loudly that the wedded gent is more valuable to the club, while the other faction takes the opposite viewpoint. It looks like a deadlock.

The wedded fellows say that after a ball player gets married he quits frivoling and that the less frivoling the better it is for the ball club as a whole. That faction asserts that after a ball player gets married he becomes steadier in his habits; he doesn't stay out all night, or even half the night. He realizes that he has family responsibilities and that he must keep working so as to hold his job and thus keep the wolf from the door-step.

Ollie O'Mara, a former Central leaguer, who shortstops for the Brooklyn Dodgers, and who is the spokesman for the bachelor gang, has this to say:

"As soon as a guy gets married he begins to go back. He loses his pep and he loses his nerve. He no longer takes the chance that he did in the past. He doesn't try the long shots on the bases that he did before he got hooked up.

"A married fellow destracts from team spirit; instead of getting around with the boys in the evening, he ducks off into some corner and writes a letter to his wife. Then he sneaks off to bed. The married fellow won't get into a card game unless the limit is about ten blue chips for a penny.

"A married ball player doesn't sass an umpire as an umpire sometimes needs to be sassed. Why? Oh, because the married fellows fear a fine and a later accounting to wifey for the shyness in the pay envelope.

"The unmarried ball player plays baseball all the time—on the field, in the Pullmans, and in the hotel lobbies. As soon as a fellow gets married he plays the game only on the field. At all other times he plays the love game. And baseball and love don't mix."

Seems to us as if Allie's words are going to be used against him some day. He's of the heroic type of athlete, he's a Beau Brumel dresser, and he's made a perfectly tree-mendous hit with the girl fans in Brooklyn, N. Y.

GOLF.

The annual spring meeting of the players of the Golf Club will be held on Monday evening, March 29th, at 8 o'clock in the Bank of Montreal Chambers.

"RUBE" RELEGATED TO SECOND TEAM

Marquard's Poor Showing at Waco Fails to Appeal to Manager of Giants

MARLIN, Texas, March 24.—Gipe, pitcher, and Holloway, infielder, are two other Giants' rookies who are to be players of the St. Paul (Minn.) club. Holloway Glass and Marshall have reported to the St. Paul's training camp in Fort Smith.

There was to have been a picked game between the regulars and colts, but a heavy wind and sand storm prevented.

Marquad's showing against the Waco team in Waco did not appeal to the Giants' manager. On the contrary, it resulted in his sending a notice to "Rube" that he prepare to accompany the second team back to New York. This party is to leave here Wednesday and will be in charge of the assistant secretary, "Eddie" Brannick. It will travel through parts of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansis, Tennessee and Virginia.

JOHNSON SOUNDS BASEBALL ALARM

Several Minor Leagues Should Close Their Parks This Season, He Says

OWE PLAYERS SALARIES

Chicago, March 22—Baseball is in for an overhauling such as it has never before experienced if the suggestions of B. B. Johnson, President of the American League, are carried out. According to the head of that circuit, there is need of reform along both artistic and financial lines. Included in the scheme for a "new deal" are the closing of the gates for the coming season of some fifty ball parks, and the abolition of Spring training trips. The padlocks would be distributed among five or six minor leagues, while the American and National Leagues would be principally affected by the new system of training.

The apparent lack of interest in baseball in smaller towns is the reason for the first suggestion, and needless expense, coupled with the chilly reception both at the gate and by the weatherman at the Southern training camps, is responsible for the second. Then the hippodrome features of the Spring trips probably had considerable to do with it.

The policy of closing the gates of scores of minor league clubs has been brought home with added pressure the last few days through appeals to the National Commission from ball players for back salaries. It seems that the majority of minor leagues failed to make both ends meet last year, and the players are at present in possession of I O U's, on which they have been unable to collect. Not being able to get any satisfaction from their employers, the players have flooded the commission with requests for money.

The Supreme Court of Baseball has been unable to offer much encouragement, and it was pointed out to-day through Mr. Johnson that the worst is yet to come. Hundreds of players are likely to be out of jobs the coming season, with no relief in sight, regardless of whether certain clubs close their gates or not.

President Johnson pointed out that the National League will have to get rid of probably 150 players, while the American League will discard almost as many. The larger minor leagues will cut their rosters to sixteen, seventeen and eighteen players for each club, and these moves will throw more men out of jobs.

"We have come to the parting of the ways," said Mr Johnson, "and either have to furl our sails and run before the wind or take the chances of being wrecked on the financial shoals. I am not referring to the American or National Leagues when I say this, except that retrenchments along certain lines may be necessary there. What I refer to is connected with the minors, and most of the leagues throughout the country are in a bad way.

"There is no question that if would be a good thing for the game were the gates of five or six minor league clubs closed during the coming season. In fact, I cannot see how the smaller club owners can afford to keep their parks open. Few made any money last year and it doesn't look as if they are going to do so this season.

"The National Commission has been bombarded of late with requests for back salaries These have all come from minor league players who were unable to collect from different clubs last Fall. The commission naturally tries to satisfy the players to the best of its ability, but if the club owing the money is bankrupt our hands are tied.

"I am going to suggest to the club owners in the American and National Leaues that hereafter all players be compelled to report in condition to play one or two weeks before the season opens," said Johnson.

"These training trips are getting to be a joke They are of no benefit, and cost the clubs $3,000 to $4,000 every year."

To Protect Attack on Ship.

WASHINGTON, March 25. — The United States Government yesterday decided to call to the attention of the German Government a bomb attack reported to have been made recently by a German aeroplane on the Belgian relief commission steamship Elfland, in the vicinity of the Dutch coast.

Early in the day American Ambassador Van Dyke, in a message to the State Department, detailed the incident and said representations concerning the attack already had been made to the Government at Berlin by the Netherlands.

Old Country Football Notes

The teams which represented England and Scotland in the League international at Celtic Park, Glasgow, on Saturday last, were as follows:

England—Smith (Manchester City); Longworth (Liverpool) and English (Sheffield United); Thorpe (Burnley), Roberts (Oldham, captain), and McNeal (West Bromwich Albion); Chedgzoy (Everton), Buchan (Sunderland), Elliott (Middlesboro), Latheron (Blackburn Rovers), and Martin (Sunderland).

Scotland—Brownlee (Third Lanark); McNair (Celtic) and Dodds (Celtic); Gordon (Glasgow Rangers), Wright (Greenock Morton), and NeNllies (Heart of Midlothian); McAtee (Celtic), Bowie (Glasgow Rangers), Reid (Glasgow Rangers), McNenemy (Celtic), and Wilson (Heart of Midlothian).

Spratt, the Brentford back, who has been on trial with Manchester United, and has been appearing in both positions at back in the league team, has most favourably impressed the critics in Lancashire, and there is not any doubt he will have a permanent engagement with the Old Trafford club.

Scott, formerly outside left of Newcastle United, has been granted a free transfer to any club except one in membership with the Football League.

If their display against Manchester City is any criterion of what they serve up, then Notts County are entitled to a better position on the table. But the fates have been unkind to them. Hear what Albert Iremonger says: "It's enough to make a saint swear the luck we've been having. Our players are certainly a bit down-hearted, but can you blame them? Nothing upsets players more than to have the best of the play and lose at the finish. This is what we have had to put up with all season. If we had any luck at all we could get away from the foot, but it seems to be hoping against hope to wish for that."

TO HOLD THEIR JOBS.

A Million British Women Ready To Release Men For War.

LONDON, March 25.—Women are crowding to register for employment at the labor exchanges here and throughout England at the rate of about 150,000 per day. It is estimated that already one million women have shown themselves ready to fill positions now occupied by men if the men will go in the army. The Government has expressed its approval of this movement, but no definite action has been taken. However, women are now being employed as clerks in the censor's office and elsewhere in Government work that formerly occupied men. All the railroads and tramways throughout England have received letters from the Government asking them to do all they can to employ women and release able-bodied men for fighting. Registration at the labor exchanges is increasing daily and at the same time efforts are being made to find employment, but as yet the million of registered women have not all found positions.

LONDON, March 25.—Geneva despatches to London papers yesterday asserted that during the vote on the general budget in the German Reichstag, thirty Socialist members left the sitting and that the Socialist Liebknecht voted against the budget.

The Berlin press bureau announced through Sayville, L.I., wireless last night that two Socialists, Liebknecht and Lebedour, voted against the budget, but asserted their action was disavowed by Socialist leaders.

Crown Prince Not Disgraced.

COPENHAGEN, March 25. — The newspaper Politiken, by no means pro-German, yesterday made the positive announcement that rumors that the German Crown Prince had been removed from command and disgraced by the Kaiser, were untrue. "All kinds of rumors have been circulated about the German Crown Prince," said The Politiken. "We are in a position to state that he is in good health and with his regiment."

German Fleet In Baltic.

BERLIN, March 25. — (Via London.)—A further official announcement was given out in Berlin yesterday as follows:

"German sea forces have assisted the land forces in the operations to the north of Memel on the Baltic. They bombarded on Tuesday forenoon the village and castle of Polangen, and kept under fire the road from Polangen to Libau."

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The City Council has authorised the payment of $3,036.75 to the Peterborough Light and Power Company for street lighting covering a period of three months.

Want Street Name Changed.

The Council is in receipt of a letter from Mrs. Hugh Betram asking that the name of Anson Street be changed to Sperring Street in memory of the late Anson Sperry. The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

Separate School Rate.

Mr. John Corkery, secretary of the Separate School Board, wrote the Council asking that the city collect $10,940 from the Separate school ratepayers. The communication was received.

Copy of Act.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., has forwarded to the city a copy of the Act respecting the city. It will be turned over to the Legal committee.

From Mr. T. A. Hay.

Mr. T. A. S. Hay Assistant City Engineer, has addressed a letter of thanks to the city for the kindness shown during his recent illness.

Street Names.

A by-law to authorize the change of the name of Cedar Street to Murray Street has been laid over for sixty days in order to give the aldermen an opportunity of locating other streets that might be re-named under the one by-law.

The Market Clerk.

Mr. W. N. Savigny, the newly appointed market clerk, will be allowed a refund of $15 providing he pays down the whole amount of the market tender of $750. This will obviate the necessity of preparing bonds.

WITH OTHER COUNCILS.

A reduction was made on electric light rates at Orillia. The reduction on flat light rates is 10 per cent.; on current for domestic appliances, 17 per cent. This is the second reduction this year.

Petition for Oil.

The property owners on Sydenham street, Brantford, have sent in a petition to the city clerk asking for oil distribution on their street. The petition is signed by some ten persons, and is the first of many that are expected.

Matter Re-opened.

The Hamilton City Council will hold a special meeting to settle the matter of the appointment of a city auditor. The Board of Control has recommended Mr. F. Todd, of Toronto.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

SOME SURPRISES IN Y BASKETBALL LEAGUE

In the games last night in the 'Y' Basketball League, the leaders got another check back, which makes the finals more uncertain. In the A division Cressman's beat the Unknowns, which means that if they can do the same trick with the Excelsiors the division will be tied up and a draw for play-off between the three teams will follow. In the B division the Boosters beat the Hustlers, which makes another tie between the Hustlers and Collegiate in B division. The Hustlers beat the Collegiate on Saturday night. Both teams are on edge for this game. The Collegiate beat the Hustlers when they met in the first series of games, but the Hustlers have developed a lot since then, and the fans can expect their money's worth on Saturday night.

Boosters Down Hustlers.

Capt. Best and his troop of Boosters succeeded in doing what he and the rest of the teams in the division wanted him to do, not that they have anything against the Hustlers, but just wanted them kept from getting too much of a lead. As it is now the division is again tied up. The Hustelrs gave the best there was in them, but they didn't have their eye on the basket sufficient to hold their place, while the Boosters had nothing to lose, so were not under the same tension. The first half ended 12-5 in favour of the Boosters, and they succeded in retaining their hold during the rest of the game. The scoring was pretty evenly divided among the Hustlers. Capt. Heaslip did the major part, while Preston and Best were the top notchers on the Boosters. Final score, Boosters 28, Hustlers 17.

Cressman's Triumph Over Unknowns.

Fred Cressman and his bunch of cohorts are wearing that "Sunny Jim" smile and it is rumoured that they were so jubilant over their victory that they held a banquet afterwards in honour of the win. They certainly had full steam ahead last night and come through like pennant winners. The Excelsiors are heading the league with only one defeat, which the Unknowns handed them last Saturday night. Cressman's still have to meet the Excelsiors, so these three teams still have a chance for first place in A division.

F. Cressman and Bartlett were in fine fettle and scored 28 out of the 40 points for their team, while Robertson was the dependable score getter for the Unknowns. The Cressman checks camped right on their men last night, giving them very little chance to score. The first half ended with the yellow shirts in the lead 22-15. But in the second half they drew away and succeeded in scoring 18 points to their opponents' 10. Final score being, Cressman's 40, Unknowns 25. Line-up:

Boosters — Munro, Preston, Kerr, Best, Wilson.

Hustlers — Heaslip, Carruthers, Jones, Lewis, Lang.

Referee, Dobbin; scorer, Thackering; timer, Smith.

Unknowns— Mulhern, Brown, McCarrell, Smith, Robertson.

Referee, Dobbin; scorer, Taylor; timer, Stuart.

WILLIARD AND JOHNSON BOTH WORKING HARD

HAVANA, March 24—Warm weather to-day gave Jack Johnson and Jess Willard the first opportunity in several days to work in the open air in training for their battle for the world's heavyweight championship, on April 4. Both pugilists drew crowds of people who were anxious to see them at work.

Willard trained at Miramar in the presence of 500 spectators, a third of whom were women. Many tourists were among those who watched the challenger do an hour and a quarter's hard work at the pulleys, punching the dummy, throwing the medicine ball and boxing 12 rounds. He faced John Pents for three rounds, Walter Monahan four, and Jim Savage five, and later wrestled with Tom O'Rourke.

Willard has developed a straight left. His wind is only fair. His sparring partners landed freely to-day, and despite the fact that they are smaller men the challenger was easily thrown off his balance in the clinches. Willard hits a terrific blow when he lands, but is still far from a finished boxer. Without defending himself he took punishment about the head and body, apparently not being discomfitted. During the morning Willard did six miles of road work.

Johnson likewise took a six-mile run this morning. The champion boxed nine rounds with Bob Armstrong, Colin Bell and Dave Mills without intermission. Willard took a minute's rest between rounds while he was boxing, and Johnson's partners are huskier and more experienced than those of the challenger.

Johnson declared that he could fight to-day if necessary, and said that in another week he would be in perfect condition.

Americans have begun to bet in favour of Johnson, offering small sums at eleven to five. Thus far there is only a fair demand for seats at the championship fight. Harry N. Frazee, principal backer of the bout syndicate, arrived here to-day and took personal charge of affairs.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who is here on the yacht Wayfarer, visited both training camps to-day. He is planning a large party for the big battle.

GUELPH MAY NOT BE IN CANADIAN LEAGUE

GUELPH, March 24.—According to J. E. Reynolds, proprietor of the King Edward Hotel, who has been interested in placing the Erie franchise in the Canadian League in Guelph for the season of 1915, Guelph will not be represented in the Canadian League.

According to Mr. Reynolds, who is the spokesman for a syndicate of Guelph business men who proposed to buy the franchise from Geo. O'Neil, the former Erie owner wants too much for the club and refuses to meet the Guelph men half way. O'Neill demanded the same amount he paid Guelph for the franchise, $2,500?

Local business men offered him $2,000 with the provision that he take five hundred dollars stock in the Guelph Club. The Guelph men are still willing to take on the franchise, providing O'Neill will come on terms.

CITY LACROSSE LEAGUE AND O.L.A. TEAM PROPOSED FOR THIS YEAR

The Lacrosse Club last night decided to place a team in the O.A.L.A., and also to form a city league without an age limit. There was a fairly good attendance in the Y.M.C.A., and everyone felt that this should be a good year for lacrosse. The officers elected were as follows:

Hon. Presidents — J. H. Burnham, M.P., and G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P.

President—Ed. Dillon.

Vice-President—Lou LeBarr.

Secretary-Treasurer—J. Sutherland.

Executive—Mr. Carson, Dr. Sutton and Harold Dunsford, and a representative from each team in the city league.

Mr. Carson, physical director of the Y.M.C.A., is taking a deep interest in the game, and especially in the proposed city league. He expected to enter two teams, he said, and while all the boys might not be equally proficient, the advancement of the game should be materially helped. It was also stated that a team from St. Peter's T.A.S., and another from the south end may be formed. However, the next month will produce whatever real efforts will be made for a city league. The idea is a good one, and the club has undertaken to promote the league and an O.L.A. team. If their hopes are realized they can secure their big team players from the city league, which will not only develop the game, but should also create new interest among the public. The new officers intend to pay off their slight deficit from last year and begin with a clean slate.

Mr. Dillon was appointed to attend the meeting of the O.A.L.A. in Toronto on Good Friday. The work of stirring up city league interest will be commenced in the near future. It is realized that an early start must be made, in order to make sure of a senior team in good condition for the opening of the O.L.A. season.

To Cairo, By Allah's Aid.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 25.—Syrian newspapers publish a proclamation issued by Djemal Pasha, commander of the Turkish troops operating against Egypt, denying certain rumors concerning the first Turkish reconnaissance against the Suez Canal.

He denies any serious defeat.

"The people must put their trust in the army and remain calm. With the help of Allah, we shall enter Cairo as conquerors."

According to Djemal Pasha, the Turkish losses in Egypt were fourteen officers killed, 18 wounded and 15 missing; 109 privates killed, 2?? wounded and 446 missing.

'TIS A SNAP NOW FOR A PITCHER

Hurlers of Former Days Often Took Part in Sixty or More Games

NEW YORK, March 23.—These days a pitcher who works in fifty games in one season is looked upon as a wonder and is called everything from an iron man to a "regular horse for work," and at that the pitcher who gets in fifty games nowdays is a rare athlete. Back in the '80s fifty games a season was considered a fair amount of work for the average pitcher, but when it comes to winning fifty full games of big league baseball in one season, then a hurler is touching the miraculous. Baseball history gives the names of several big league pitchers who have accomplished this wonderful feat.

The pitcher who holds the record in games won in a single season is A. G. Spalding, the greatest hurler of his day, and the many records he created stand to-day as the best. Of course, Mr. Spalding's work was accomplished under different conditions than exist to-day, but even at that his pitching was wonderful. It was in 1875 that A. G. Spalding made his great record in games won. During that season he pitched sixty-three full games and won fifty-six, a percentage of .889, the largest average of games won in the history of the game.

Pitches in 71 Contests.

In the season of 1884 Charles Rad bourne of Providence pitched seventy-one games, winning fifty-seven. This is the largest number of games won in a season in the history of major league baseball. Guy Hecker, another famous hurler of the old school and the star of the Louisville club of the American association in 1884, pitched seventy-one games that season and won fifty.

Hecker performed in a wonderful manner that year. He struck out seventeen men in nine innings of one of the losing games. He also had a stretch where he won thirteen games without a defeat. At the same time Hecker was hitting the ball far over the .300 mark.

Clarkson Brings $10,000.

John G. Clarkson was the first $10,000 player the game ever had, and if there were another such pitcher on the baseball horizon to-day he would bring $100,000. In his first full season's work for "Cap" Anson, in 1885, Clarkson won fifty-two games of real fighting baseball. John G. pitched sixty-nine games that year and lost only sixteen, one being a tie. Clarkson put a nick in the record of all other hurlers in this respect by repeating the wonderful stunt of winning fifty games or more in one season.

After the great Clarkson sold to the Boston Nationals he proceeded to show the owners of that team they had made no mistake in paying $10,000 for the use of his pitching arm and the brains that guided it. In the next season following the sale, which was 1886, Clarkson pitched seventy-two games for Boston and was a victor in fifty-one of them, losing seventeen and four being tied.

IS MARRIED BALL PLAYER BETTER THAN BACHELOR TO CLUB

There is a heated debate going on just now in baseball circles over this subject:

"Is a married ball player of more value to a club than a bachelor ball player?"

One faction—the wedded faction—asserts loudly that the wedded gent is more valuable to the club, while the other faction takes the opposite viewpoint. It looks like a deadlock.

The wedded fellows say that after a ball player gets married he quits frivoling and that the less frivoling the better it is for the ball club as a whole. That faction asserts that after a ball player gets married he becomes steadier in his habits; he doesn't stay out all night, or even half the night. He realizes that he has family responsibilities and that he must keep working so as to hold his job and thus keep the wolf from the door-step.

Ollie O'Mara, a former Central leaguer, who shortstops for the Brooklyn Dodgers, and who is the spokesman for the bachelor gang, has this to say:

"As soon as a guy gets married he begins to go back. He loses his pep and he loses his nerve. He no longer takes the chance that he did in the past. He doesn't try the long shots on the bases that he did before he got hooked up.

"A married fellow destracts from team spirit; instead of getting around with the boys in the evening, he ducks off into some corner and writes a letter to his wife. Then he sneaks off to bed. The married fellow won't get into a card game unless the limit is about ten blue chips for a penny.

"A married ball player doesn't sass an umpire as an umpire sometimes needs to be sassed. Why? Oh, because the married fellows fear a fine and a later accounting to wifey for the shyness in the pay envelope.

"The unmarried ball player plays baseball all the time—on the field, in the Pullmans, and in the hotel lobbies. As soon as a fellow gets married he plays the game only on the field. At all other times he plays the love game. And baseball and love don't mix."

Seems to us as if Allie's words are going to be used against him some day. He's of the heroic type of athlete, he's a Bean Brumel dresser, and he's made a perfectly tree-mendous hit with the girl fans in Brooklyn, N. Y.

GOLF.

The annual spring meeting of the players of the Golf Club will be held on Monday evening, March 29th, at 8 o'clock in the Bank of Montreal Chambers.

"RUBE" RELEGATED TO SECOND TEAM

MARLIN, Texas, March 24.—Gipe, pitcher, and Holloway, infielder, are two other Giants' rookies who are to be players of the St. Paul (Minn.) club. Holloway Glass and Marshall have reported to the St. Paul's training camp in Fort Smith.

There was to have been a picked game between the regulars and colts, but a heavy wind and sand storm prevented.

Marquad's showing against the Waco team in Waco did not appeal to the Giants' manager. On the contrary, it resulted in his sending a notice to "Rube" that he prepare to accompany the second team back to New York. This party is to leave here Wednesday and will be in charge of the assistant secretary, "Eddie" Brannick. It will travel through parts of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansis, Tennessee and Virginia.

Spratt, the Brentford back, who has been on trial with Manchester United, and has been appearing in both positions at back in the league team, has most favourably impressed the critics in Lancashire, and there is not any doubt he will have a permanent engagement with the Old Trafford club.

Scott, formerly outside left of Newcastle United, has been granted a free transfer to any club except one in membership with the Football League.

If their display against Manchester City is any criterion of what they serve up, then Notts County are entitled to a better position on the table. But the fates have been unkind to them. Hear what Albert Iremonger says: "It's enough to make a saint swear the luck we've been having. Our players are certainly a bit down-hearted, but can you blame them? Nothing upsets players more than to have the best of the play and lose at the finish. This is what we have had to put up with all season. If we had any luck at all we could get away from the foot; but it seems to be hoping against hope to wish for that."

TO HOLD THEIR JOBS.

A Million British Women Ready To Release Men For War.

LONDON, March 25.—Women are crowding to register for employment at the labor exchanges here and throughout England at the rate of about 150,000 per day. It is estimated that already one million women have shown themselves ready to fill positions now occupied by men if the men will go in the army. The Government has expressed its approval of this movement, but no definite action has been taken. However, women are now being employed as clerks in the censor's office and elsewhere in Government work that formerly occupied men. All the railroads and tramways throughout England have received letters from the Government asking them to do all they can to employ women and release able-bodied men for fighting. Registration at the labor exchanges is increasing daily and at the same time efforts are being made to find employment, but as yet the million of registered women have not all found positions.

LONDON, March 25.—Geneva despatches to London papers yesterday asserted that during the vote on the general budget in the German Reichstag, thirty Socialist members left the sitting and that the Socialist Liebknecht voted against the budget.

The Berlin press bureau announced through Sayville, L.I., wireless last night that two Socialists, Liebknecht and Lebedeur, voted against the budget, but asserted their action was disavowed by Socialist leaders.

Crown Prince Not Disgraced.

COPENHAGEN, March 25. — The newspaper Politiken, by no means pro-German, yesterday made the positive announcement that rumors that the German Crown Prince had been removed from command and disgraced by the Kaiser, were untrue. "All kinds of rumors have been circulated about the German Crown Prince," said The Politiken. "We are in a position to state that he is in good health and with his regiment."

German Fleet In Baltic.

BERLIN, March 25. — (Via London.)—A further official announcement was given out in Berlin yesterday as follows:

"German sea forces have assisted the land forces in the operations to the north of Memel on the Baltic. They bombarded on Tuesday forenoon the village and castle of Polangen, and kept under fire the road from Polangen to Libau."

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The City Council has authorized the payment of $3,038.75 to the Peterborough Light and Power Company for street lighting covering a period of three months.

Want Street Name Changed.

The Council is in receipt of a letter from Mrs. Hugh Betram asking that the name of Anson Street be changed to Sperring Street in memory of the late Anson Sperry. The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

Separate School Rate.

Mr. John Corkery, secretary of the Separate School Board, wrote the Council asking that the city collect $10,990 from the Separate school ratepayers. The communication was received.

Copy of Act.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., has forwarded to the city a copy of the Act respecting the city. It will be turned over to the Legal committee.

From Mr. T. A. Hay.

Mr. T. A. S. Hay Assistant City Engineer, has addressed a letter of thanks to the city for the kindness shown during his recent illness.

Street Names.

A by-law to authorize the change of the name of Cedar Street to Murray Street has been laid over for sixty days in order to give the aldermen an opportunity of locating other streets that might be re-named under the one by-law.

The Market Clerk.

Mr. W. N. Savigny, the newly appointed market clerk, will be allowed a refund of $15 providing he pays down the whole amount of the market tender of $750. This will obviate the necessity of preparing bonds.

WITH OTHER COUNCILS.

A reduction was made on electric light rates at Orillia. The reduction on flat light rates is 10 per cent.; on current for domestic appliances, 17 per cent. This is the second reduction this year.

Petition for Oil.

The property owners on Sydenham street, Brantford, have sent in a petition to the city clerk asking for oil distribution on their street. The petition is signed by some ten persons, and is the first of many that are expected.

Matter Re-opened.

The Hamilton City Council will hold a special meeting to settle the matter of the appointment of a city auditor. The Board of Control has recommended Mr. F. Todd, of Toronto.

Here Are Women's Suits of Modish Charm---

Beautifully Tailored--Priced from $15 to $35

IT'S QUEER, ISN'T IT? In all the suits made of this spring's models, there's an intricacy of designing not thought of a season ago, yet present prices are, if anything, more moderate than they have been heretofore.

Candidly, we've never shown such good looking suits at popular prices as we have on display in our cloak and suit section at the present time. New models reach us every day and when they are taken from their boxes and marked, the prices—when coupled with such lovely suits—seem too good to be true.

CITY COUNCIL SUBSCRIBE ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS

MAY RAISE $800

After thinking out loud for the best part of an hour the City Council last evening voted one hundred dollars towards the purchase of a travelling field kitchen for the use of the 21st Battalion, 2nd Canadian Contingent, now stationed in Kingston. The Council was disposed to shoulder the responsibility of equipping the Canadian troops upon the Dominion Government. It happens the field kitchen, for which a municipal as well as public subscription is asked, is not included in the Government issue, although its use is claimed to add twenty-five per cent to the efficiency of the culinary department. Like some of the speeches that emanate from the Council Chamber, the travelling kitchen covers a lot of ground and is not bound by schedule. It follows the troops wherever they go and can always be relied upon to supply hot meals whenever required. They cost in the neighbourhood of five thousand dollars each, and so far have been provided by pulic subscription.

A $50 Subscription.

Mr. T. F. Matthews of this city is a contributor to the extent of fifty dollars, and plans are on foot whereby about eight hundred dollars may be raised in this city. Captain Gray, officer commanding E Company, 21st Battalion, of which the Peterborough contingent form a part, is expected in the city to-day or to-morrow and will take up the matter with the local authorities. Canon Davidson is interesting himself in the matter, and hopes to enlist the aid of the Ministerial Association.

Mayor Buller reminded the Council that the city had not expended anything on the departing soldiers in the way of wrist watches or five dollar gold pieces as other cities had done, therefore it might be well to consider the advisability of contributing something towards the field kitchen.

Ald. Green felt that the Council should do something but he was at a loss to name a figure. There were different ways of looking at it. If the equipment was essential to the welfare of the men it should be supplied by the Government with the regular equipment.

Should do Something.

In this Ald. Edgar concurred. He was of the opinion that the Council should do something.

Ald. Duffus said that the military regulations required each man to prepare his own meal when on active service, and that a travelling kitchen which would supply the needs of a whole battalion was a very desirable adjunct. Some municipalities had turned down a similar proposal while others had contributed a whole kitchen.

Ald. Dobbin regaled the Council with an account of what he had seen while in Belleville. The stores department were stocked with all kinds of equipment designed to add to the comfort and well being of the men, from the regulating cooking equipment to the tonsorial appliances.

"The British regiments are all supplied with field kitchens," said the Mayor.

Ald. Green—"Is it possible that the Canadian soldier is not as well looked after as the British soldier?"

Ald. Dobbin said that from what he had heard and letters that he had read he had yet to hear of one complaint respecting the treatment accorded the Canadian troops. He moved that $150 be granted for the purpose named.

At the suggestion of a number of the Aldermen the amount was reduced to $100.

Tax Rate of 24½ Mills Is Confirmed by Council

Proposal to Add an Extra Half Mill on Behalf of "The Working Man" Was Turned Down—Garbage Tax will be Seven Tenths of a Mill

The tax rate for municipal and school purposes will be twenty-four and one half mills and for garbage collection seven-tenths of a mill on the land in the garbage collection area. This rate was confirmed at last night's meeting of the City Council, immediately following a maxim fire oration delivered by His Worship Mayor Buller.

Things ran along smoothly while Ald. Stratton, as chairman of the Finance committee, read several extracts from the budget, indicating the manner in which the tax rate varied from years to year, concluding with a comparative statement.

An Extra Half Mill.

This done, Ald. Dobbin took a leaf out of Ald. Green's book by moving that an extra half mill be added to provide for surface drainage and incidentally work for the unemployed. He figured that a half mill would construct about one mile of surface drainage.

Mayor Buller thought it a late hour to introduce such a resolution. As Ald. Stratton had said, there are a great many taxpayers to be considered. Instead of reducing the rate by two or three mills we are trying to get it back to the old rate, said the Mayor. If we intend to go on with a surface drainage system we should adopt some other means of providing for the work. I think we should let the rate go as it is."

To this Ald. Saunders acquiesced.

Ald. Stratton pointed out that the taxpayer was paying an extra mill for the patriotic fund and one-fifth of a mill for workmen's compensation, besides a few other extras such as the provincial tax.

Aldermen McIntyre and Edgar concurred in the opinion expressed by His Worship, Mayor Buller, Aldermen Stratton and Saunders.

Ald. Green regretted that the matter was not considered at an earlier date. As a private citizen he would prefer to have the rate lower than higher. He was still of the opinion that it would have been particularly good business to had undertaken the work suggested. It was a class of work that should be taken up in relays each year and paid for etach year rather than load it on to the debenture debt. He believed that the Council made a mistake by not adding a half mill to the rate on behalf of the working men. It is possible that the city may have to increase the amount of charity before the end of the year. "I would rather give a man work than charity," said Ald. Green. By giving him charity for the first time you take away his manhood next time he accepts it with a spirit of toleration and finally you find him waiting for it. We should endeavour to reduce the amount of charity. I am not in favour of the Mayor's scheme to finance the work by debenture issue. We should pay for it each year as we go along.

Ald. Weir fell in line with Ald. Green's idea. He was in favour of providing work for the unemployed.

Ald. Dobbin—"Hear, hear."

Mayor Buller said that his idea was not to construct the whole surface drainage system in one year, but to adopt a scheme that would not only provide for the construction of one mile, but several miles. Five thousand dollars that would be raised by one half mill would be inadequate. It would hardly buy the pipe and cover other expenses. Ald. Dobbin has got $7,000 of the citizens' money in the patriotic fund. I would say let us get three or four thousand dollars of that back in the form of labour. I think the poor man as well as the rich should be relieved of any unnecessary taxation.

"I think by your remarks you are getting over to our side," observed Ald. Green.

"I am always on that side; no mistake about me," replied the Mayor.

"Carried, carried!" chorused several of the aldermen as the budget received its final baptism.

Salary For Commissioners

Power Board Members Will Be Able to Draw Pay

TORONTO, March 25. — A number of very important amendments to the Power Commission Act were incorporated in a bill brought down in the Legislature yesterday by Hon. W. H. Hearst. It provides for the payment of salaries to all the commissioners other than the chairman, who now receives certain remuneration. These funds will come out of the moneys now advanced by the municipalities. Furthe powers of expropriation were also granted, and this will be made retroactive to March 1st.

The large purchase of land at Eugenia, in connection with that development resulted in acquiring some of no immediate value, and power is taken to dispose of such lands.

By a radical amendment to the present regulations a uniform open season for small game was yesterday established by the fish and game committee of the Legislature. All manner of game, except waterfowl, will in future be shot only between the dates, Oct. 15 to Nov. 15. This season applies to hare and squirrels but a special privilege is granted of shooting cottontail rabbits for two weeks at Christmas time. The committee sets the later dates at Dec. 20 to Jan. 10.

After some discussion when a close season of years was advocated, it was decided to limit the season's bag of quail to 25 and the number to six per day.

Hon. T. W. McGarry now proposes to levy a flat tax of $25,000 yearly on all companies.

In changing the method of taxation, the Treasurer will not reckon the charge on gross premiums, as in the past, and the tax apparently rests more heavily than before. A loophole of relief is afforded in a clause stating that when the annual return is made, application can be put in for a reduction of the tax to a point not lower than an equivalent of 1 1-3 per cent. of gross premiums. The situation means that companies will pay the same amount as before if amenable, but if rebellious will pay the full $25,000.

Russo-Canadian Corps Possible

So Many Have Offered to Enlist

OTTAWA, March 25. — So many Russians have been offering themselves for service in the Canadian overseas contingents, that there is some talk of forming a Russian battalion to serve with the Canadians.

Many Russians have already enlisted, but the difficulty is that many cannot speak English, and it is impossible to enlist them, even if they have had former military service.

During the past few days a number of Russians have applied to enlist for the new service battalion of the Governor-General's Foot Guards. It is believed that the news of the fall of the great Austrian fortress of Przemysl has led to the sudden offer from so many Russians. However, most of them have so far been refused on account of their lack of knowledge of English.

Recruiting is very satisfactory for this fourth contingent unit. The 38th Ottawa Regiment, it is now found, when all the companies are gathered together, is two or three hundred over strength. The additional will be either transferred to the new fourth contingent unit, or to some other Ontario regiment which is under strength.

THE DRUGGISTS ARE AGREED that the most reliable Corn and Wart remover, is Putnam's Painless Corn and Wart Extractor, which has been used with universal satisfaction for more than thirty years. We recommend "Putnam's."

VON BUELOW HAS GIVEN UP HOPE OF WINNING ITALY OVER

LONDON, March 25.—The London Chronicle correspondent at Rome cables that opinion is growing that Prince von Buelow is merely playing for time, realizing that his efforts have failed. Among well-informed people much more importance is attached to the negotiations proceeding at this moment between Italy and Great Britain regarding the Dardanelles Straits and Constantinople. It should be realized that for Italy and also for the Balkan States the future of Constantinople is the all-decisive factor.

Despatches from Rome reveal a growing insistence by the people for immediate action by Italy.

The Government has been given a free hand, and the Italian press construes this as an assurance that Italy will strike when the hour arrives.

In Austria-Hungary all hope of the continued neutrality of Italy has vanished, and the Government is preparing for war by moving troops to the Tyrol and Trieste.

A half million Austrian troops are now massed in southern Tyrol and the Trentino, where strategical organization for a fortnight has been carried on with feverish activity, indicating that invasion is feared to be imminent.

Practically all villages between Susana and Lake Garda have been evacuated by their inhabitants. Many houses along the frontier have been dynamited, so as not to hamper the range of guns and to destroy cover to an invading army.

The eastern portion of the city of Rovera has been razed and the debris used to improvise fortifications. Field batteries are posted on every point of vantage. Trees have been ruthlessly felled everywhere.

The region is entirely devastated. Heavy guns are mounted at an altitude of 7,000 feet. The inhabitants along the frontier are treated as spies and closely watched.

CONFESSES TO CRIMES

Henry T. King Says He Was in a Rage When He Killed Boy

OWEN SOUND, March 25.—Henry Thackeray King, the Englishman arrested here on a charge of murdering 12-year-old Eddie Nicholson, yesterday confessed to the crime. He gives no motive other than an unreasoning rage with his brother, William King, alleging that he turned him adrift a week ago, and from the fact that he was refused employment at a factory.

In the presence of a witness he gave a written and signed confession at noon and in it stated that as he was driving with the boy he had been seized with a vicious mood which he could not put into words, and "something came over me so that I drew the dirk knife from my right hand coat pocket and struck the boy down."

King was arraigned yesterday morning before Magistrate Creasor. He pleaded guilty to burning his brother's barn and not guilty to the murder charge. Later in jail he made the confession.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The report that Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria has been seriously wounded by a shell is officially denied in Berlin.

Charles H. McLaughlin, aged 62, vice-president of the Empire Malt Co., of Geneva, New York, died Tuesday night. He was born in Toronto.

The Norwegian sailing ship Gazelle reports that she was stopped by a German submarine in the North Sea, but was allowed to depart after her cargo had been examined.

Thomas W. Nash, a veteran land surveyor and engineer, aged 88, is dead at Kingston. He assisted in the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway from Toronto to Montreal.

A Petrograd despatch says that it is officially announced that the Germans abandoned two 16 1-2-inch howitzers when they withdrew from before Ossowiec, in Northern Poland.

Two thousand dollars reward is offered for the capture of "Jack" Cramer, one of the burglars concerned in the murder of Chief of Police Finnell and Detective Sergt. Gradwell at Elmira, N.Y., Tuesday afternoon.

The British steamer Teal reports that she was attacked by a German aeroplane when off the Dutch coast Tuesday. Two bombs were dropped and twenty rounds were fired from a machine gun, but little damage was done.

Dean Connell, of Queen's University, has received a message from W. F. Nickle, M.P., at Ottawa, stating that the War Office had accepted a stationary hospital staff from Queen's Medical College for service in France.

DRILLING IN CHURCH.

TORONTO, March 25.—Detectives surrounded St. Stanislaus Polish Church, at 16 Denison avenue, last evening, and rounded up about thirty Austrians and Polacks, who were drilling in the hall of the church. They were locked up on a charge of illegally drilling. It is the first arrest for the offence of "illegally drilling" within the memory of the oldest police official, and is probably the only one since the Mackenzie rebellion.

The detectives watched the manoeuvres for some time before breaking in on the drillers. Dummy rifles were used and orders were given in Polish and Austrian. The men were a well-drilled body and carried out every order with military precision. With the men placed under arrest was an American-Austrian, who, according to the police, was brought across from the United States for the express purpose of whipping the squad into shape. The dummy rifles were all seized and carried to the police station for use at the trial of the men. St. Stanislaus Church, where the men were arrested, is a Polish Roman Catholic Church.

TRAGEDY IN FARMHOUSE.

Grant N. Kilborn Charged With Killing His Housekeeper.

BROCKVILLE, March 25.—Grant L. Kilborn, a young farmer living in the township of Elizabethtown, three miles from Brockville, will be called upon to face a charge of murder for a tragedy enacted at his home yesterday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. James White, an elderly couple, have been keeping house for Kilborn, and owing to some dispute they had collected their household effects to move out. While so engaged yesterday morning and without any apparent provocation, Kilborn, it is alleged, deliberately shot the woman, using a small shotgun at close range. The full charge entered Mrs. White's abdomen, inflicting a horrible injury, from which she died.

What The Council Did

Voted the sum of $600 to the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition.

Adopted a by-law authorizing the levying of a rate of seven-tenths of a mill on the dollar to defray the expenses of the collection, removal and disposal of garbage.

Accepted report of special committee recommending that $2,000 be placed in the estimates to provide for the city's liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act and that a charge be made upon permanent work to cover this liability with respect to such work.

Fix the tax rate for municipal and school purposes at 24 1-2 mills on the dollar and for garbage collection seven tenths of a mill on the land in the garbage collection area.

Passed a by-law authorizing the execution of an agreement with the Canadian Independent Telephone Company respecting the installation of a fire alarm telegraph system at a cost of $1,364.00.

Accepted Ald. Johnston's resignation and appointed Ald. Weir to fill the vacancy on the Finance committee caused by the retirement of Ald. Johnston

Refused to add one-half mill to the tax rate "on behalf of the workingmen" to provide for the construction of a surface drainage system and incidentally give work to the unemployed.

Decided to ask the City Trust Commission for an improved system of ventilation at the city hall.

Agreed to notify the Utilities Commission of its intention to pave Hunter Street so that arrangements be made to provide for any additional water mains that might be required.

Passed a by-law appointing Mr. Frank Adams city treasurer at a salary of $1,400 a year, dating from the first of January.

Referred back a recommendation concerning a grant of $292.50 to the 57th Regimental band and Temple band respectively.

Adjourned at 11.15.

HONOUR FOR DEAD SOLDIER.

Sergeant to Answer for Collignon When Roll is Called.

PARIS, March 22.—A notei sued by the War Office to-day concerning the death recently on the battlefield of Henri Collignon, Councillor of State, says M. Collignon was trying to take a wounded soldier out of the range of fire when a fragment of shell struck him.

The note orders that M. Collignon's name shall be carried on the rolls of his regiment, the Forty-sixth Infantry, and that when the regimental roll is called the oldest Sergeant shall answer to Collignon's name, "Dead on the field of honour."

WEARERS of our Clothes are usually complimented on the Style and Smartness of their Appearance. To be conscious of the fact of being dressed correctly and becomingly makes one feel more self-assured.

OUR SHOWING of Suits for Spring is a revelation in absolute correctness. Nothing foppish or extreme, but styles that are being worn by well-dressed men in the fashion centres. Here you will find the suit that your heart desires and your physique requires—a suit with that correctness of style which you can wear without fear of criticism—wherever your calling may take you. Several new style changes are noted; the coats are mostly quite high-waisted and a little longer than last season, with fuller skirt. They are shown in one, two and three button models. The young mens styles are mostly shown with soft roll lapels, the coats are close-fitting, giving quite an English effect. Prices range from $15.00 to $27.50.

AND then the OVERCOAT question. Here they are, hundreds of them—Overcoats with plenty of dash and style, lively spirited models that will catch and hold your fancy, Semi and Full Balmacoaan. The cloths are mostly Tweeds—particularly adapted to this style of garment. The prices range from $14.00 to $18.00.

FOR the man of more conservative taste, we have the Spring and Fall Weight Chesterfield. This is a plain cut fly-front Coat made in both dark grey and black. The black can be had with or without silk facing. Prices range from $15.00 to $22.00.

Ald. Johnston's Resignation Accepted by City Council

This Will Necessitate a Bye Election in the North Ward—Question of Band Grants Referred Back to Finance Committee—City Treasurer Appointed Under New By-law—More Ventilation Required at City Hall

Last evening the City Council formally accepted the resignation of Ald. W. J. Johnston, thereby creating a vacancy in the north ward that will have to be filled through the medium of a bye-election. The resolution accepting the resignation was moved by Ald. Edgar and seconded by Ald. Saunders after Mayor Buller had reported upon his failure to persuade Ald. Johnston to reconsider his decision.

Electric Signs.

City Solicitor Gordon reported upon a number of election signs that were erected by the Peterborough Light and Power Company, and which the City took possession of in October last. The signs did not figure in the arbitration as there was some difference of opinion respecting certain payments that are outstanding. The signs were under lease to merchants and others until such time as the final payment was made. Mr. Gordon was of the opinion that the city should not pay for the signs until the outstanding amounts were collected. The amount outstanding was $518. Mr. Gordon intimated that it might be possible to collect the whole amount. In addition to the above there were signs in stock to the value of $210, as fixed by the Hydro-Electric Commission, and a company valuation of $250.

It was finally decided to leave the matter in the hands of City Solicitor Gordon and His Worship Mayor Buller.

Was Referred Back.

Clauses five and six of the Finance committee's report, recommending an equal division of a grant of $725 to the 57th Regimental Band and the Temple Band respectively, was referred back to the Finance committee for further consideration. Ald. McIntyre wanted to know why the grant was equalized.

Ald. Stratton in reply said that the Finance committee was of the opinion that $725 was sufficient to appropriate this year for the purpose named, and as some of the members were in favour of increasing the grant to one organization an amendment was passed dividing the grant between the two.

"We all have our own opinions and I don't think that we should be asked to state why," said one of the aldermen.

At Ald. Greens suggestion the matter was referred back to the committee and the two deputations that were present on behalf of both musical organizations filed out.

City Treasurer Appointed.

A by-law appointing Mr. Frank Adams treasurer for the city of Peterborough was read a third time and passed. The by-law provides for a salary of $1400 a year, dating from the 1st of January, 1915. The by-law also provides for the employment of a deputy treasurer.

Both Aldermen Stratton and Green failed to understand why a deputy treasurer was required. They were of the opinion that the department could be operated by two under normal conditions. The matter was dropped with the understanding that it would receive further consideration at a future date.

More Ventilation.

Ald. Green moved that Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Property committee, take up the question of ventilating the city buildings, with the City Trust Commissioners. "The ventilation is enough to kill ordinary mortals," said Ald. Green as he cast his eyes towards the hole in the ceiling that was put in as a means of ventilation. It was also suggested that the Council chamber be renovated. Ald. McIntyre promised to deal with the matter as requested.

Pole Will be Removed.

Ald. Duffus drew the Council's attention to a pole that blocks the entrance to Banks garage on Charlotte Street. He thought that a bracket extending from the building could be substituted, as there were only one or two wires on the pole. He failed to exact a promise that it would be removed inside of ten days. Its removal depends on some arrangement that has to be made with the Bell Telephone Company.

Pave Hunter Street.

The Public Utilities Commission will be notified of the Council's intention to pave Hunter Street west of Aylmer Street, so that if any additional water mains are required, steps may be taken to provide for them.

Admiration for Gallantry and Regret for Loss of Col. Farquhar

OTTAWA March 23.—Government and Opposition to-day united in the expression by Parliament of admiration for the gallantry and regret for the loss of the late Col. F. D. Farquhar, former Governor-General's secretary, whose death in action with the Princess Patricia's was announced last night. A letter which was written by Col. Farquhar to Sir Robert Borden on March 4, and in which he spoke highly of the behaviour of the men of the Princess Patricia's and related a hitherto unheard of exploit performed by that regiment, was read by the Prime Minister. It contained copies of telegrams of congratulations and praise called forth from Sir John French, from British regiments and from the general of the division of which the Princess Pat's form a part, by the behaviour of Canada's crack battalion.

Letter From Trenches.

"If the House will permit me I will read a few short extracts from this letter and the telegrams which accompany it. The letter is as follows:

"Belgium, March 4.

"My Dear Sir Robert, —You may like to have a copy of these telegrams. The episode which called them forth was the rushing of a German trench and its subsequent destruction.

"The enemy has been very active in front of us, and night reconnaissance made it clear to me that we had an opening. For various reasons, it was inadvisable to occupy the trench, so I got leave to rush it and pull down the parapet. Lieuts. Crabbe and Papineau led the party, the latter being our bomb-thrower. They both showed very great dash and ran the Teutons off their legs."

Later in the letter Col. Farquhar wrote: "Nothing could have been more spirited than the way the men went in."

The messages which Col. Farquhar enclosed were as follows:

From the Fifth Corps: "The corps commander has great pleasure in transmitting to you the following message from the second army, 9.18 a.m.: 'The army commander wishes you to express to the Princess Patricia Light Infantry his appreciation of the grand piece of work performed by them this morning.'— From Brigade Major."

"To Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry: Gen. Plummer wires: 'Please give my heartiest congratulations to the Princess Patricia Canadain Light Infantry on their gallant and useful exploit.'— From Brigade Major."

"To officer commanding Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry: Best congratulations on splendid achievement last night. Please tell us how you do it.—From officer commanding 3rd King's Royal Rifles."

"To Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry: Best congratulations on success last night.—From 1st Canadian division.

"'I heartily congratulate you and your gallant men on your successful operation this morning. Please express to Lieut. Crabbe and the party he led my great appreciation of their services. —From Commander-in-Chief.'

"To Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry: Well done, P.P.C.; congratulations on your splendid work.—From Gen. Snow."

"To Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry. Twenty-eighth division wire hearty congratulations. —From Brigade Major."

SAVE THE EXPENSE OF AN ELECTION

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I hear that ex-Alderman Johnston's resignation was accepted last evening. That being the case and in order to avoid the expense of an election I would suggest that Mr. Johnston's opponent at that time be elected to fill the unexpired time. His opponent at that time, I understand, was Dr. Holloway, and he should make a very good representative.

Yours truly,

NORTH ENDER.

MUCH MUD ON THE ROADS IN COUNTRY

Most of the country roads radiating from the city are beginning to dry up, but for the most part they are deep in mud and driving is not very inviting. The east and west roads are in many places deep in snow. Many a waggon arrives in the city showing mud to the hubs. Further out of town they are still drivin gthrough parts of fields and the entire condition of the highways in the worst part of the transitional stage from snow to dust.

AS COOL AS IF ON ROUTE MARCH

Peterboro Boys Were Unshaken When They First Came Under Fire

In writing to a local friend Pte. O. D. Taylor, formerly of the editorial staff of the Review, and now with the 57th contingent at the front in France, gives some interesting news of the Canadians first experiences under fire. He says:

We certainly have moved some since we left England. To-day is the first Sunday that we haven't been in the trenches or on our way to them. It is not so bad as they say, although we have only touched the edges so far. We have only lost a few, and then only by accident. Our first turn in the trenches at —— was our first time under fire. Really one can hardly say it was under fire, but still it was sufficient to get an idea. The bunch were as cool as if we were on a route march. We were exposed to machine gun and rifle fire for nearly a quarter of a mile. It is very interesting to have lead banging around your feet and head. Our turn in the trenches lasted twenty-four hours, then two days' rest and then another twenty-four hours. While there we rebuilt trenches, carrying on the daily routine of firing a few shots and working. A few of us were sent down to the grub stake for supplies. When about half way down they turned a machine gun on us and chased us into a ditch. The same night we took out wire entanglements for the engineers.

A few days later we had a long march back to ——, nearly seventeen miles. It was sure tough going, and it knocked out a few of them. Our 'rest' included route marches. Last Sunday we went up the line again and took up our position in the dug-outs again. We stayed four days this time and acted as the supply for the battalion. Some job, take it from me, taking in rations to the trenches. The Germans shelled the village where we went for rations, daily, and raised Cain in general. It was nice working at night with the buildings burning. We pushed dump carts loaded with grub, ammunition and engineers' supplies for three-quarters of a mile and then carried them the rest of the way. Outside of being hanged at with maxims and stray bullets you are quite safe. The last night I made my trip with a bundle of barbed wire and had the extreme pleasure of having a bullet split the board I had just laid down. We go back in three more days. I like the prospect of this big advance."

Do you know that no grocer can be sure of getting the same quality of tea in bulk twice running? It is impossible for him to have the extensive machinery that makes it possible to blend the choicest teas in varying proportions to form an absolutely uniform tea like "SALADA." So true is this, that many grocers will neglect quality and only think of the greater

Collided With A Horse and Buggy

Cyclist Had Narrow Escape on George Street When Brake Refused to Respond

Harry French got off pretty lucky last night when he collided with a horse and buggy at the corner of George and Simcoe Streets, about 9.30 o'clock. He only received a few scratches about the face. He was cycling south, on George street, and as he was crossing Simcoe street, he noticed a horse and buggy coming from the West, and crossing the intersection at the same time as he was. He tried to apply the brakes to his wheel and the chain came off. The wheel coasted ahead and could not be stopped until he collided with the horse. The outfit passed over him.

Mr. Cuthbertson, who was driving the horse, came back at once to see what had happened to the cyclist. He gave his name to P. C. Lawrence and address as the Empress Hotel if he should be wanted. However, French took all the blame of the accident. He was taken to the Police Station, where his injuries were looked after, and he was given an opportunity to have a wash. Outside of a shaking up and a few slight scratches about the face his injuries did not amount to anything. He lives on Albert Street.

When the accident happened there were a number of people standing around the corners and in less time than it takes to tell the story there was a crowd of people on the scene which resembled a swarm of flies around a can of spilled honey on a July day. All that was needed to get the crowd started was for a couple of people to start running in the direction of Simcoe Street and the rest followed. As a spectator a couple of blocks away remarked, he did not before believe that there were so many people about the streets.

KEENE NEWS

KEENE, March 23.—The Keene Methodist League will give an entertainment and supper on Easter Monday evening, April 5th. A good supper and a good programme is in course of preparation. Supper will be served from six to seven-thirty. The programme will begin promptly at 8 p.m. Admission will be 25 cts.

Mr. Harry Smith, a private of Ottawa, spent a few days this week with his father, Mr. A. St. A. Smith.

Mrs. Peter Heweie was in Peterborough on Monday.

Mr. Alfred Kempt returned home on Monday from Lakefield, where he spent the week-end with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Braden are busy this week moving into the village, having rented the property belonging to Mr. Peter Macfarlane.

Tickets will have to be purchased now from the conductor by any one going up on the night train on the G.T.R. Owing to the decrease in business the station will be closed at 5 p.m. for general business. The waiting-room, however, will be open and kept comfortable for passengers waiting for night train.

Miss Estelle Cuffe, of Villiers, was in the village over Sunday.

The skaters' dance given by the manager of the rink last Wednesday night was a splendid success in every way.

Mr. Thomas Nelson is visiting his brother William, near Lang, this week.

Mrs. William Campbell and daughter, Mrs. Robert Nelson, are spending a few days with friends at Toronto.

Mr. George T. Gall was in Bellville on Monday last.

Any one having finished work for the Red Cross Society will have it at the home of Mrs. H. McLachlan not later than Friday, as a shipment will be packed on that day.

A few of our farmers are busy with the sugar-making, as they tapped last week; a good run of sap is reported gathered on Monday.

Rev. Laird, of Toronto, occupied the pulpit at the Presbyterian Church last Sunday, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. F. T. Goodwill.

The many friends of Miss Agnes Lumsden, who has been very ill with pneumonia at Peterborough, will be pleased to know she is getting along splendidly.

Mrs. Robert Hope is ill with the measles.

Mr. William Shearer, of Peterborough, was in the village on Tuesday.

Death claimed one of Keene's highly respected residents on Sunday morning last, in the person of Mr. David J. Henderson, in his 73rd year. He was a life-long resident of Otonabee, where he followed the occupation of farmer, until four years ago, when he retired and came to Keene. He is survived, besides a sorrowing wife, three daughters: Mrs. William Nelson, Mrs. Robert J. Hope and Miss Wilhelmine, at home, and one son, John S. Henderson. The funeral took place from his late residence on Tuesday afternoon at 2 p.m., the Rev. F. L. Goodwill conducting the services.

Must Consult Dominions.

LONDON, March 25. — No peace without consulting the leading statesmen of the Dominions overseas was the main theme of an address delivered by Lord Milner in the Whitehall rooms last night. It was true that the people and Government of Great Britain had shown their warm hearted appreciation of the moral and material help that the Dominions had brought into the present conflict, but there was a far greater obligation than gratitude binding upon the Mother Country.

No Death Sentences For Rebels.

be utilized and probably a local camp near Medicine Hat, both for the Province of Alberta. For Manitoba the exiting camp at Sewell will be used, while in Ontario it is probable that camps will be established at Niagara, London, and Barriefield. In Quebec the troops will go to Valcartier if it is ready in proper time. The difficulty there is that there is to much snow that it may not be ready until the beginning of May.

In the Maritime Provinces the troops will be trained at Amherst and Kentville.

It is realized by the Militia Council that during the long winter months the troops have not had the opportunity to get into the training necessary for active service, and, above all, they have not had the opportunity of being trained in rifle work. Owing to the late spring at Valcartier, there still being two feet of snow in that place, the troops cannot well be mobilized there until well on in May. As time is the main thing in the present mobilization and in the training of the men, the plan of training the men in divisional camps has been decided upon. It is probable that the troops will be moved in to these camps at an early date.

Kingston, March 24—A number of Varsity men who have enlisted in the ammunition column of the 7th Artillery Brigade, in command of Lieut. W. Harty, have been requested to transfer to the 26th Battery, which has only so far received fifty recruits of the required 150. The ammunition column is with ten of being

THE DOG.

(The Peterborough Dog Not Excepted.)

"The dog is a detestable quadruped. He knows more ways to be unmentionable than can be named in seven languages. The word "dog" is a term of contempt the world over. No man loves the dog. He loves his own dog partly because that thrifty creature tickles his vanity by fawning upon him as the visible source of steaks and bones; and partly because the graceless beast insults everybody else, hurting as many as the dares.

The dog is an encampment of fleas, and a reservoir of sinful smells. He has no discrimination; his loyalty is given to the person that feeds him, be the same a blackguard or a murderer.

There are women who adore not only their own adorible little beasts, but those of others. But women will love anything; they even love men who love dogs. These women who have the dog and never have the child fail. The female heart which has a dog in it is without other lodgers.

There are women who even kiss dogs. If these women would but observe the dog walking modestly at the heels of another dog they would not be so eager to seal their affection with a kiss.

The dogs are our only true leisure class. They toil not, neither do they spin. If a beneficial Providence would assemble all dogs into some quiet valley and submerge the valley for twenty-four hours, many a grateful heart would praise Him.

RUSSIANS ARE CONFIDENT.

Are Said to Have Soldiers Enough to Insure Victory.

PETROGRAD, March 24.—(Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—There is a universal feeling here that after seven months of arduous but increasingly successful warfare against the well-prepared Germanic powers we are now on the eve of reaping the harvest of these long-sustained, strenuous efforts.

Russia, whether she has an even million or ten million men under arms has sufficient for all the purposes of her strategic scheme. The Germans for months past have been driving in wedges all along the Russian strategic front, with the net result of leaving thousands and tens of thousands dead on the field without making any but the slightest impression upon the Russians.

Thanks to their methods of fighting, the Germans, being always the attackers, have lost much more heavily than the Russians, but even supposing the losses were equal, the German case would be no better. In the next few weeks a great call upon the manhood of Russia against the machinery of Germany will be made.

VICTORY NEAR, SAYS PAU.

PETROGRAD, March 24.—The Russkoye Slovo correspondent interviewed General Pau in Warsaw on the fall of Przemysl. General Pau summarized his impression in one word, "Excellent."

He declared that victory in the war was imminent. This was his conviction when leaving France, and it had been strengthened since his arrival in Russia.

"The spirit of the Russian soldiers, the enthusiasm felt by them for their officers and lastly the military skill of the Russian chiefs, which I was able fully to appreciate after personal intercourse with them, all fortify these hopes," said General Pau, "and allow me to look into the future serenely."

NEXT TO WARNE DRUG COMPANY

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. J. L. Nicol, Campbellford, is visiting Mrs. Robert Yeoman, London street.

Mr. W. B. Warne, of the Warne Drug Co., is in Toronto on business.

Miss Alice M. Hopwood is in Toronto for a few days, visiting relatives.

The local Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire, will hold their last tea of the season at the Oriental Hotel tea-room on Friday, March 26th. Mrs. T. W. H. Young and Mrs. J. H. Eastwood will be in charge. It is hoped that it will be largely patronized.

The residence of Mrs. C. Huffman, Sherbrooke Street, was the scene of a very interesting affair on Tuesday evening last, when Miss Margaret Frye, also of Sherbrooke Street, a popular local girl, was given a miscellaneous shower by about twenty of her friends. The affair was a complete surprise to Miss Frye. A pleasant evening was spent in music and games, and Miss Frye was the recipient of the heartiest good wishes and congratulations on her approaching wedding, which is to take place the latter end of this month.

OBITUARY

MR. PATRICK QUINLAN.

Mr. Patrick Quinlan passed away on Wednesday evening, March 24, at the family residence, Dummer, at the good old age of 84 years. He has resided in the Township of Dummer for between fifty and sixty years. He is survived by three sons, Messrs. Wilfred and John of Dummer, and Patrick of Peterborough, also one daughter, Mrs. David Conroy of Douro.

The funeral will take place on Friday morning, leaving the family residence at 8 o'clock and proceeding to Norwood Church and thence to Norwood cemetery for interment.

MRS. AGNES McNEILL.

The following from the Auburn (N. Y.) citizen, refers to a former local resident, in the person of Mrs Agnes McNeill:

After an illness of several months duration Mrs. Agnes McNeill died at her home, No 3 Court Street, about 5 o'clock last evening. Mrs. McNeill was born in Scotland and much of her life was spent in Canada. For the past five years she had lived with her daughter, Miss Catherine McNeill in this city. She is survived by three other daughters, Mrs. T. J McManus of this city, Mrs. C H. Wilson of Vancouver, B.C., and Mrs. Harry MacAuley of Inlet, Ontario. The remains will be taken to Byns Inlet for services and burial.

HAVELOCK LACROSSE MEN ALREADY OUT

The Lacrosse fans of town are again reminded of the re-organization meeting in the Council Chamber on Friday night of this week, when the business for last year will be wound up and plans laid for a good season's sport. The national game was quite popular in Havelock last year and should be more so this coming summer. The first thing necessary is to have a big enthusiastic organization meeting, and all our young men should make it a point to attend.

The park is partly dry already and lacrosse enthusiasts were out with their sticks last week.

A meeting of the Hastings lacrosse club was held in that village on Friday last.—Havelock Standard.

PERISCOPE INVENTOR DEAD.

Morgan Robertson Was Also Noted Short Story Writer.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., March 24.—Morgan Robertson, one of the best-known short story writers, and the inventor of the periscope, used on all submarines, was found dead in his room at the Alamac Hotel this afternoon. Physicians say he died from an overdose of protiodide. He sold the periscope to the Government for $50,000.

Mr. Robertson was sixty-five years old. His body will be brought to this city to-morrow.

The periscope was first conceived by Mr. Robertson in his book "The Submarine Destroyer." When the story was first published in 1905 officials of the Holland Submarine Co. sent for the author and asked him if he considered the scheme practical.

"Of course I do," he replied. "Here is a model of it which I have already patented."

Officials of the company were so impressed that they purchased the invention for the price named.

A financial appeal on behalf of Mr. Robertson was recently made through American magazines.

PRESENTATION TO MR. AND MRS. ANDERSON

Were Entertained by the Members of Their Congregation —Hastings News

Special to The Examiner:

HASTINGS, March 23.—The second rendition of the "operatta," "The Dust of the Earth," which was given in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening last was a marked success in every particular. The hall was filled with a large and appreciative audience and the performers certainly done credit both to themselves and their training. The committee may rest assured that another attempt of the kind will be well patronized. Proceeds in aid of the band.

Death has once more entered our midst and claimed as its victim Mr. J. Brown, who had reached the advanced age of 78 years, and who had been ailing for some months. Deceased came here from near Roseneath some years ago, and during his residence had made a large circle of friends, who regret to learn of his demise. The funeral was held on Thursday to Roseneath. He leaves to mourn his loss his sorrowing wife and four daughters, only one of which resides at home, the others having homes of their own. The public express sympathy with the bereaved family.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jones entertained the members of the Adult Bible Class of the Methodist church at their home on Tuesday evening, when every one present spent a very enjoyable time together. Mr. Jones is the teacher of the class and is untiring in his efforts to make it a success.

Ormonde cheese factory held a meeting here on Saturday last, when the milk drawers were engaged, and other arrangements made for the season's operations.

We are pleased to report improvement in Mrs. Wm. Tate's condition after an attack of pneumonia.

Mr. J. Warner has returned from a visit with friends in Peterborough.

Mr. H. Thistlewaite occupied the pulpit in the Methodist church on Sunday morning last.

Rev. T. H. P. Anderson is confined to his home through illness.

Mr. R. Nicholls, travelling agent for P. Hamilton Co., Peterborough, has been travelling with the local agent in the interest of the firm.

Things looked somewhat lively for a short time on Thursday when the fire inspector was in town, testing the power of the fire engine.

Mrs. Smith of Cobourg attended the funeral of the late Mr. Brown on Thursday last.

Miss G. Ingram of Campbellford visited Miss Ethel Collins for a few days during the week.

Miss C. Lajoie of Peterborough, was in town last week.

Mrs. Gregg of Campbellford, visited Mr. F. Runnels recently.

Mr. T. Hill went to Peterborough on Saturday.

We noticed Mr. S. Fisher of Campbellford in town on Thursday.

Rev. T. H. P. Anderson and Mrs. Anderson were entertained at Bethel on Friday evening by the members of the congregation, when a very sociable time was spent together. During the course of the evening Mr. and Mrs. Anderson were presented with a well-worded address an a useful gift for each, to Mrs. Anderson a handsome autograph quilt and to Mr. Anderson a very fine buggy rug.

The presentation came with so much surprise that it was a somewhat difficult matter to find words to express their feelings. Nevertheless a very suitable reply was made and the members of the congregation expressed pleasure at the good feelings that exists between pastor and people.

A number from Norwood drove over on Wednesday evening to attend the operetta, "The Dust of the Earth."

Friends of Mrs. J. Collins, Sr., regret to learn of her serious illness, and wish her a speedy recovery.

DR. TAIT IN CHARGE.

Did you know that the Tait Optical Co., 410 George street, is now under the personal care of Dr. Tait, and that no one who was conencted with it during the time Dr. Tait was away from Peterborough has any connection with it now. That is the reason that people are getting such good satisfaction now in glasses.

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS USE FLAXOAP

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS Flaxoap is a pure linseed oil soap, made to clean surfaces such as floors, furniture, woodwork, windows, mirrors, railings, etc. Owing to the great cleansing properties of linseed oil, Flaxoap has a great advantage over ordinary soaps for cleaning the dirt, grease and smudge from the above mentioned surfaces and a host of others. As a handy soap for the home it has no superior. We are handling Flaxoap in this vicinity and would like to have the opportunity to place a few cans of it on the shelves of every home. No one should be without it. It is a clear, amber jelly, readily dissolved in luke warm water and used like ordinary soap suds. Its strength does not injure the most polished surface or the most tender skin. Let's talk Flaxoap to you.

TO SHARE BIG CONTRACT.

NEW YORK, March 24.—The American Car and Foundry Company will participate in the big order for shrapnel shells placed with the Canadian Car and Foundry Company by the Russian Government, according to information received in the financial district yesterday. This company is preparing bids and is making arrangements to extend its plant for rush work when the business is apportioned out. In quarters acquainted with the terms of the big order it was said that the total would probably be $80,000,000, and all deliveries are to be made within one year.

It is understood that the Russian contract covers the $30,000,000 order reported several days ago to have been placed with the New York Air Brake Company and the Westinghouse Air Brake Company. The reason the railroad equipment concerns are being favoured with orders for shells is that their plants are running on only part time so far as ordinary business is concerned, and, besides, they have lathes and other machinery, which can take care of much business the moment the orders are distributed.

As far as is known the only contracts already sublet in this country by the Canadian Car and Foundry Company are those taken by the New York Air Brake and Westinghouse companies. Canadian companies will be favoured to the limit of their capacity before the concerns here are considered, and the fact that additional bids are being called for in the United States is taken to mean that the plants of the Dominion have about all they can handle.

Should a Horse Be Clipped?

Clipping in the Early Spring is recommended by leading Veterinarians—Clipping improves the health of a horse, makes him feel better, work better, and increases his value.

A horse is a valuable asset and should receive the best care possible. He should be well fed, comfortably stabled, carefully groomed and clipped in the early Spring. If he receives these attentions he will work well and improve in value.

If you would get the best returns for your investment in your horse, treat him right and be sure and Clip him in the Early Spring.

DECISIVE VICTORIES OVER AUSTRO-GERMANS

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PETROGRAD, March 26.—Decisive victories over the Austro-Germans at two points where important battles are raging, were reported in the despatches received here to-day.

An official report said that Austrians are again evacuating Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina. A semi-official statement from the war office reported the Austro-German armies near Lupkow pass, driven from the railway stretching north to Przemysl.

Despatches from two Roumanian frontier towns relayed here from Bucharest, reported the Austrians in flight from Czernowitz before a large Russian force that broke over the Pruth river, both east and west of the Bukowina capital.

One Slav army, Bucharest reported, was pursuing the fleeing Austrians, while the second was moving in to occupy Czernowitz.

The war office, however, had no confirmation of this report and the officials pointed out that in the past Bucharest despatches regarding the Bukowina campaign had not always been reliable.

MASSACRE OF MISSIONARIES

WASHINGTON, March 25.—The massacre of foreign missionaries in northwestern Persia, and respite the plight in which many others, with native Christians now find themseves, is causing this Government serious concern. Advices received by the State Department, from private and official sources emphasizes the dangers to which the missionaries (many of them members of the American Presbyterian sect) are exposed. Turkish troops and Kurds are over-running the entire northwestern part of Persia, murdering all male Christians and carrying off the women and children.

LIEUT.-COL. MARITZ ESCAPES

CAPETOWN, March 26.—Lieut. Col. Maritz, the leader of the Boer rebellion of last October, has escaped from his prison camp and has fled toward central Africa. Maritz was one of the Boer generals placed in command of an army for the invasion of German Southwest Africa last fall. Early in October he mutinied and led part of his command over to the Germans.

The Capetown Assembly only yesterday voted that the death penalty should not be imposed upon Maritz and other rebels.

U. S. SUBMARINE PERHAPS LOST

HONOLULU, March 26.—Apprehension for the safety of twenty-six men on the United States submarine F4, which submerged early yesterday morning, and has not yet been found, grew early to-day after an all night scouring of the seas by naval rescue vessels.

Rear Admiral Charles B. Moore, commanding the Honolulu naval station, said that there was some hope that even if yet submerged the men on the submarine might be saved. The oxygen tanks had air, he said, for 24 hours submersion; and in addition emergency tanks sufficient for several days more, unless some accident had burst the tanks.

CANADIANS UNDER HEAVY FIRE SINCE NEUVE CHAPELLE FIGHT

Examiner Special:

FOLKESTONE, March 26.—Five Canadians, including Lieut. J. B Neale, of the Toronto Regiment, late Royal Grenadiers, arrived at Shorncliffe Hospital last evening. Lieut. Neale is crippled with rheumatism as a result of standing in water up to his knees in the trenches. He says the Canadians have been heacily shelled lately, but are doing fine work.

The Toronto men have been in the first line trenches regularly since reaching the front. The Germans shelled a trench so heavily one day that the wire entanglements were utterly destroyed. A searchlight was turned on the party repairing the damage that night. There has been no hand-to-hand fighting of much account since Neuve Chapelle, Lieut. Neale says. The march of the Canadians from their original position to Neuve Chapelle took place at night, and was exciting.

Rumours of Early Ending of the War Induce a Rush to Sell

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, March 26.— Rushes to sell gave a downward swing to-day to the wheat market here. Indefinite rumours that an early ending of the war might be looked for appeared to have most to do with the revailing bearish sentiment. Support was so poor that little attention was given to the steadiness of quotations at Liverpool. After opening unchanged to three-quarters lower, prices dropped to as much as 1 3-4 under last night before a reaction set it, followed by further selling, the market finally closing 1 1-4 below the previous close.

OF THE GERMANS—

BOUNTY ON WOLVES IS INCREASED TO $20

Deer Licenses Raised From $2 to $3 and Moose $5 to $7

To overcome the danger to life and property in Northern Ontario by wolves the Fish and Game committee of the Legislature, acting on the suggestion of Hon. F. G. Macdiarmid, resolved to recommend to the Provincial Treasurer an increase in the bounty paid for grey timber wolves to $20 instead of $15 and that provision be made for the payment of a bounty of $5 for a brush wolf.

There was some discussion over the raising of the license fee for deer and moose. It was decided to raise the deer license from $2 to $3, and the moose licetse from $5 to $7. In sparsely settled districts it was thought advisable to have the fee regulated by order in Council.

A prohibition will be placed in the act to prevent one person sending out more than one flock of decoys, to consist of not more than 35 birds, and no two flocks should be placed nearer together than 100 yards.

Transforms Complexion; Wins Social Favors

"Had I been unable to transform my complexion so quickly, so completely, by a unique process I had just learned of, I never could have attended the Charity Ball." A certain social favourite, a picture of loveliness at the great event, told me this. "I had been much run down," she said. "When I beheld myself in the mirror after a night's troubled sleep, I saw I was becoming heavy-eyed and pale. I could not take, and attend the ball, the long rest my physician advised. A friend suggested I get an ounce of mercolised wax at the druggist's and use it as I would cold cream. I did—the result is apparent. In a week I had a new complexion. The wax took off the old skin so gradually, there was no discomfort. Now you see the fresh, bright underskin, with its youthful glow and expression.

"The worry lines and wrinkles, which had become quite numerous, removed very easily by simply bathing my face every morning in a harmless lotion made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. You see the result—my skin as smooth and firm as a schoolgirl's."—Aileen Cooper in Home Queen.

PIRATE U-29 THE SIXTH ONE TO GO DOWN

Recently Sank Four British Steamers and One French Steamer in the English Channel---Damaged Three Other Vessels.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 26.—The British Admiralty stated last evening that the German submarine U-29, which recently sank four British steamers and one French steamer in the English Channel and damaged three other vessels, had been sunk with all hands. The text of the official statement follows:

"The Admiralty have good reasons to believe that the German submarine U-29 has been sunk with all hands."

This makes the sixth German submarine reported by the Britain Admiralty as having been sunk. Besides these the French warships sank one.

The German submarine U-29 displaced 800 tons, and was one of the largest and fastest of the German under-sea boats. Two weeks ago the U-29 made a record raid off the Scilly Isles and in the Channel, being successful in sinking four British steamers and one French steamer, and in damaging three other vessels.

The submarine was chased by patrol boats, but she proved too elusive for them, and when steamers tried to ram or escape her they found that the submarine was a much faster boat than her sister craft.

The German commander gave the crews of most of the steamers time to leave their vessels, and in some cases towed the lifeboats of the ships, with the crew, to passing steamers, in which they were taken to port. It has been stated that the commander of the U-29 was the same officer who early in the war commanded the German submarine U-9, when the latter sank the British cruisers Aboukir, Hogue and Cressy.

Birmingham, "No Mean City" Doing Its Duty For Empire

Examiner Special:

KIDDERMINSTER, Eng., March 25.—The City of Birmingham, England, has the honour of a representation of a hundred thousand men in Britain's army. Seventy-five thousand of its civilian population are engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war for the troops at home and abroad, but "Brummagem" is as gay a city today as it was at any other period before the war.

Amusements Galore.

The pantomime season of the leading theatres of the hardware city, has been the most successful on record. Picturedromes and music halls are crowded nightly. Football matches still attract thousands of spectators, and the usual quota of racing men leave the Midland metropolis to attend race meetings near and far.

An air of prosperity and content pervades the place. "Joe" Chamberlain may not be named as frequently as Lord Kitchener, but the men and women of Birmingham are the least war scared of any people in the British Empire.

Mourners.

Their gifts to the war, in men and money, have been enormous, but the perky pride of the "Brum," prevents any feelings of regret being observed by an outsider.

Of course, there are women in black mourning dress in the streets of Birmingham —for many a happy-go-lucky Birmingham man has found a grave in the trenches, but Birmingham—does not seem more down-hearted over that fact than they would be were Aston Villa defeated by an unheard-of football team in the competition for the English cup.

Plenty is piled on the tables of the homes and eating houses of Birmingham. Food prices have gone up since the war, but wages have outstripped the rise in the price of food, and the stomachs of Birminghams work people are as full as they ever were.

High street, New street, Corporation street and the Bull Ring are as congested Saturdays and Sundays as ever. One mixing with the crowd can hear whispers of war occasionally but most of the tales told are descriptive of the lighter side of man slaying.

Hunt For Boots.

Some sturdy wench, whose daily duty it is to make bullet casings at one of the three large ammunition factories about Birmingham, may be heard to tell how her brother wrote from France to the effect that he "Had to kill ten Germans before he found one who wore a pair of boots to fit him, while a Garrison Lave worthy — limping along as a result of shrapnel wounds received at "Wipers" will tell of his yearning to use a brick in a hand-to-hand struggle in the trenches.

Knitting.

Deft-fingered girls and women by the thousand knit, sew, or paint patriotic designs to retail on behalf of the refugees.

Outlying hamlets support separate colonies of the Hun-harrowed people. The ancient villages of King's Norton, hard by Birmingham, has a population of about four hundred people, who have fed, clothed and cared for thirty Belgians since Antwerp fell.

No housewife is too poor to pay out a small amount weekly in support of the "strangers within their gates," and no mother hesitates to help provide necessities for those of the Belgian women who are facing maternity.

No need is left unfulfilled and many an English-born Belgian will be rocked to slumber in cradles that have served as the resting place for English babies, born before them.

Not Mouth Fighters.

Nowhere in England does a more thunderous "No" follow the query: "Are we down-hearted," than is heard in Birmingham, and Birmingham is not "fighting the Kaiser with its mouth," but with men and money, munitions and motor cars, bullets and buttons, cartridges and castings; all and everything that the "workshop of the world," that it is, can give.

LONDON FUR SALE.

Prices obtained at the sale of furs conducted in London by C. M. Lampson & Co., this week, showed the declines which have been anticipated in the prices prevailing here. The following comparisons are made with prices of last March, when skins were high: ermine, 50 per cent. lower; civet cat, 50 per cent. lower, beaver, 35 per cent. lower, otter 35 per cent. lower, linx 40 per cent. lower; and fisher 60 per cent. lower. These drops will have no effect on merchandise here, as the condition brought about by the war, which forced the declines, were discounted some time ago by the domestic dealers.—New York Times.

LAST NIGHT'S BULLETINS ON THE WAR

Special Cable to The Examiner:

COPENHAGEN, March 26.—French aviators in large numbers passed over Belgium towards the Lake Constance region for an attack on the Zeppelin base.

PARIS, March 26.— Official statements to-night describe conditions all along the allies lines as the quietest for a week.

LONDON, Eng., March 26.—The Admiralty announced to-night that there is good reason to believe that the German submarine U29 has gone to the bottom with all on board. This is the vessel known to have sunk four or five British freighters.

ATHENS, March 26. — Three new dreadnoughts and four transports full of troops have joined the allied attacking forces off the Dardanelles to-day.

PETROGRAD, March 26.—Russian troops have met and captured a large body of Turks in Persia.

ROME, March 26.—Influential newspapers to-day tell the government that if Italy does not soon join the allies her services will never be accepted.

A HAPPY CHILD IN JUST A FEW HOURS

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels. "California Syrup of Figs" becomes in a few hours all the clogged-up and they become tightly packed, liver gets sluggish and stomach disordered.

When cross, feverish, restless, see if tongue is coated, then give this delicious "fruit laxative." Children love it, and it can not cause injury. No difference what ails your little one—if full of cold, or a sore throat, diarrhoea, stomach-ache, bad breath, remember, a gentle "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." We make no smaller size. Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

SHOT FOR CARRYING FLAG.

Two Belgian Youths Killed by Germans in Town Near Brussels.

ROTTERDAM, March 24—In many towns and villages of Belgium every man of military age is compelled by the Germans to sign a book at the Town Hall daily to indicate his presence in the town.

The Echo de Belge reports that at Ternath, near Brussels, the young men, instead of going singly, marched in a body to sign their names, the leader carrying a Belgian flag. The Germans, on the ground that this was an illegal manifestation, fired on them, killing two and wounding three. Much feeling has been aroused in Brussels by this incident.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Arasdis., B. C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was for merly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

For the Cat.

"He is the most tender-hearted man I ever saw."

"Kind to animals?"

"I should say so. Why, when he found the family cat insisted on sleeping in the coal-bin he immediately ordered a ton of soft coal."

BRONCHIAL COUGHS

When the bronchial tubes are affected with that weakening, tickling cough, they need immediate and sensible treatment. The breath seems shorter because of mucous obstructions; usually fever is present and your head jars with every cough. Your chest aches and the inflammation often spreads to the lungs.

The food-tonic that has proven its worth for forty years—is Scott's Emulsion. It drives out the cold, which is the root of the trouble, and checks the cough by aiding the healing process of the enfeebled membranes.

If you are troubled with bronchitis or know an afflicted friend, always remember that Scott's Emulsion builds strength while relieving the trouble.

CONSULT FARMERS MR. BURNHAM'S IDEA

OTTAWA, March 26.— Mr. J. H. Burnham, of Peterborough, has given notice of an interesting resolution in the Commons, which has a bearing both on the present legislation with regard to providing seed grain for western farmers and also on the tariff subsidies for manufacturers. Mr. Burnham's resolution is as follows:

"That in the opinion of this House it is desirable that a modus referendi be provided whereby the farmers of Canada may be consulted whenever it is proposed to take the money of the farmers of one part of Canada for the purpose of subsidizing the farmers of any other part or parts of Canada.

SWEDISH STEAMER SEIZED.

Was Carrying Iron Ore, Presumably for German Use.

SUNDERLAND, Eng., March 26.—Swedish steamer Goose Bridge, with a cargo of iron ore, was brought into Sunderland to-day by a British prize crew. The Goose Bridge sailed from San Tander, Spain, and her cargo is presumed to have been destined for Germany.

THIS IS AN AGE OF SPECIALISTS

WHEN a man makes a life study of a subject, he becomes in the natural course of events a SPECIALIST. A. A. Fowler, after having taken his degree in Pharmacy at the Toronto University 14 years ago, has devoted his entire time to the study of the eye.

He is an Honor Appendence Graduate of the Best Optical Colleges of America, the Diplomas of which may be seen at any time hanging in his Optical Parlor.

His energy, thought, and ability are devoted exclusively to the examination of the eyes for defective vision, and the fitting of the proper glasses.

A most modern Lens Grinding Plant enables him to give the most accurate and prompt service.

By Frank Frost

"So you are a colleague of Mr. Foyle's?" she went on, and though her voice was soft there was a trace of mockery in it. "He is charmingly considerate to send you to look after me. I was desolated to think that I should have to take such a long journey by myself."

"The pleasure is mine," said Blake, falling in quickly with the atmosphere she had set. Nevertheless, he was not quite easy. He recalled the troubles that had beset Waverley, and half regretted that he had not brought his companion on the train with him.

"Smoke, if you like," she said, with a gracious wave of her hand, "I know you are dying to do so. Then we can talk. Do you know, I have long wished to have a talk with a real detective. Your work must be so fascinating."

He took a cigarette case slowly from his pocket and dangled it in his hand. He had never before seen the Princess, but he was certain of her identity.

"Indeed," he said grimly. "I thought you had met Mr. Foyle. In fact, I believe that he afforded you some opportunity of seeing a portion of the workings of our police system. Do you smoke? May I offer you a cigarette?"

She selected one daintily.

"Thank you. But that was different. I don't think it quite nice of you to refer to it. It was all a mistake. Mr. Foyle will tell you so, if you ask him. Do detectives often make mistakes?"

Her air of refreshing innocence tickled Blake. He laughed.

"Sometimes," he admitted. "I made a mistake just now in coming on this train alone."

She laughed musically in pure amusement.

"I believe the man is afraid of me," she said, addressing the ceiling. Then more directly, "Why, what harm could a poor creature like myself do to a great stalwart man like you? I should have thought you'd greater sense."

"Common sense is my strong point," he parried.

"And therefore you are afraid," she laughed. "Come—Mr.—Mr.——"

"Smith—John Smith."

"Mr. John Smith, then. It's a good English name. I shan't do you any harm. But if you like to lose sight of me when we reach Liverpool—"

"Well?"

"It would be worth £50 to you."

He shook his head. "I am afraid, Princess, you have a very poor opinion of the London police. Besides, I told you just now that commonsense was my strong point."

She shrugged her shoulders for answer. The train droned on. They had lunch together and chatted on like old friends. It was when they had returned to their own compartment, and the train was nearing Liverpool, that Blake found his cigarettes had run short. The Princess produced a daintily-jewelled enamelled case.

"Won't you try one of mine?" she asked. "That is, if you care for Egyptian."

He took one. What harm would there be in a cigarette? Yet, in half an hour's time, when the train slowed into Lime Street Station, the Princess descended to the platform alone. In his corner of the compartment Blake slumbered stertorously.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Heldon Foyle and Chief Inspector Green paced to and fro along Westminster Pier patching a couple of motor-boats as they swung across the eddies to meet them. A bitter wind had chopped the incoming tide into a quite respectable immitation of a rough sea. There were three men in each boat. Wrington at the tiller in one. Jones, his lieutenant, steering the other.

"It's going to be a cold job," commented Foyle, as he turned up his coat collar and stamped heavily on the frosty boards.

"Ay," agreed Green. Then, without moving his head: "There's that chap Jerrold of the Wire behind us. Has he got any idea of what we're on?"

Foyle wheeled sharply, and confronted a thin-faced, sallow-complexioned man with a wisp of black hair creeping from his hat, and with sharp, penetrating, humourous eyes. Jerrold was one of the most resourceful of the "crime investigators" of Fleet Street, and, while he had often helped the police, he could be a dangerous ally at times. He started with well-affected surprise as Foyle greeted him.

"Well, I never! How are you, Mr. Foyle? And you, Mr. Green? What are you doing down here?"

"For the matter of that, what are you doing?" asked the superintendent, who had made a shrewd guess that he and his companion had been seen from the Embankment, and that Jerrold, scenting something afoot, had descended to wait an opportunity. But Jerrold was ready.

"Me?" he retorted. "Oh, I'm writing a story about Westminster Bridge. Cracks have developed in the pier. Is it safe? You know the kind of thing."

"Yes, I know," agreed Foyle, with a smile and a glance at the waiting boats. "Well, it's nice weather. Green and I are going off with Wrington. There's some question of increasing the river staff, and we've got to go into it."

Jerrold nodded as gravely as though he quite accepted the explanation. In fact, Foyle, shrewd as he was, could not feel certain that he had. The journalist took a casual glance about the wide stretch of water, and with an unconscious gesture that had become habitual with him flung back the lock of hair that dangled over his right eyebrow.

"Got a minute to spare?" he asked. "A rather quaint thing happened at our office. You know they're excavating the foundations for a big hotel in Piccadilly? Well, on Monday a couple of burly navvies, carrying a big paper parcel, came up to the Wire office and Brashton saw them.

"'Me an' my mate 'ere,' says the spokesman, 'ave been employed on those works in Piccadilly, and we made an interesting discovery to-day. Seeing as the Wire is an enterprising paper an' pays for news, we thought as 'ow we'd come along.'

"'Always glad to pay for information if we use it,' says Brashton.

"'We'll leave it to you,' says the spokesman, undoing the parcel. 'Look at this.'

"Inside the wrappings was a battered but full-sized human skeleton. Brashton was a bit staggered, but put a few more questions to the men, and they went away. He forgot all about the skeleton till M'Gregor, the news editor, happened in. Mac's hair stood on end, and he pointed at the skeleton with a long forefinger.

"'What's that?' he demanded.

"Brashton looked up from some copy he was writing. 'That,' he said calmly, 'Oh, that's not necessarily for publication; it's just a guarantee of good faith.' And he explained.

"Mac was horror-struck. He stared at Brashton as though he had taken leave of his senses.

"'Good God, man,' he cried, 'why did you let them leave it here? It might have died of the plague or something.' And, stepping back into the corridor, he yelled for a boy. 'Take that thing away,' he ordered. 'Get rid of it. Put it in the furnace.'

"Well, they took it down and cremated it. To-day, a fine, old, crusty police sergeant rolled up to the office. He wanted to see some one, he said, about the find of a body in Piccadilly.

"Brashton received him suavely. 'Very good of you to come, sergeant,' he said. 'We're always grateful for any information about matters of interest.'

"The sergeant fidgeted with his helmet. 'That's all right, sir,' he said. 'As a matter of fact, though, I've come to you for information this time. You see, I'm a coroner's officer, and we've got to hold an inquest, but we ain't got no body to hold it on?'

"For a moment Brashton was flabbergasted but he recovered himself almost immediately. 'I'm very sorry,' he apologized 'but the fact, is although we had the skeleton here it has—er—been mislaid.'

"That coroner's officer" went on Jerrold gravely, "is now looking over the excavations to see if it's possible to find a few odds and ends to hold the inquest on. But I see Mr. Green's getting impatient. Don't let me keep you."

The boats had been brought up to the quay and, as the detectives stepped aboard, slipped downstream, hugging the Embankment. Foyle turned a speculative eye on the pier they had just quitted. A steam launch had just brought up, but Jerrold had vanished. The superintendent swore softly.

"So that's why he kept us talking," he said. "He suspects something, and wanted to keep us till he could send for a boat himself. We shall be a regular procession if we don't stop that." He leaned over and spoke to Green in the second boat. Immediately it slackened speed, and as the launch came alongside the chief inspector swung deftly aboard.

"Where's Mr. Jerrold?" he demanded of the man at the wheel.

"Who's he?" was the gruff response.

"Come, you know who he is well enough. He's the man who's borrowed or hired this craft, and he got on board just now. I want to speak to him. If he has ordered you to follow us, let me tell you that I am a police officer, and shall be justified in arresting you for obstructing me in the execution of my duty if you are not careful."

"Hello, Mr. Green. Threatening the skipper? What's wrong?" said the equable voice of Jerrold, emerging with cigarette between his teeth through the sliding door of the saloon.

The detective swung round upon him angrily. "This isn't the game, Mr. Jerrold. We can't have you hampering us like this."

The journalist gave a shrug. "Really? Do you object to me having a blow on the river? Because I'm going on, in any case. I can't help it if you're going the same way."

Green was helpless, and he knew it. Although he raged inwardly, he knew that it would be unwise to arrest the journalist, though such a course might be justified. Apart from the bad feeling such procedure might create, there was the difficulty of establishing a case without disclosing the object of their journey. It was a dilemma where diplomacy might with advantage be employed. He smiled at the reporter.

"Mr. Jerrold, can't we settle this without quarreling? We're on a queer job, and you might spoil it all by hanging around. Leave us to it, and if there's anything fit for publication you shall have first pull. Don't ask me anything else and I'll promise you that."

Doctor Said She Had Bright's Disease.
DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED HER.

Bright's disease is a term applied to one of the most serious of all diseases of the kidneys, the symptoms of which are often of a severe character.

Severe pains in the back appear at first and are followed by disturbances of the urinary organs which show that the urine contains a large amount of albumen. Dropsy is also another forerunner of the dreaded Bright's disease. On the first sign of any kidney trouble you should at once put the kidneys right by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. The pill that cures kidney troubles only.

Mrs. C. A. Heistand, Mooswa, Alta., writes: "Last May I was taken down sick. The doctor told me I had Bright's disease. My kidneys got so bad I could not rest day or night. The doctor's medicine did not give me any relief. I used four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, and they put me in good shape again."

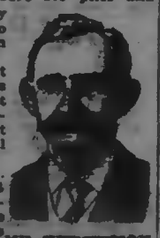
Doan's Kidney Pills are the original kidney pill, so when you ask for "Doan's" do not accept any others with similar names.

Price, 50c per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Cured Fifteen Years Ago of Piles and Eczema
By Using Dr. Chase's Ointment—Certifies That the Cure Was Permanent.

Some people have tried so many doctors and so many treatments in their search for cure for piles and eczema that they find it difficult to believe there is an actual cure.



MR. KETCHESON

The strong point about Dr. Chase's Ointment is that it not only brings relief promptly, but brings about actual and lasting cure.

In 1897 Mr. Ketcheson, 88 Douro street, Peterboro', Ont., wrote as follows:—"I was troubled for thirty years with itching piles and eczema. I could not sleep at night, and when I got warm the itching was terrible. Eczema covered my legs down to the knees, perfectly raw. I have tried every preparation I could hear of. Seeing Dr. Chase's Ointment advertised, I procured a box, and this Ointment effected a complete cure."

On Sept. 28, 1912, Mr. Ketcheson wrote as follows:—"I received a letter from you to-day, saying that you found on file a statement made by me 15 years ago. I have always given Dr. Chase's Ointment a good name since it cured me, and shall tell you how I came to use it.

"I had suffered for many years from eczema and piles, and had tried doctors and everything I could hear of in vain. Reading about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I purchased it at once, and was soon completely cured. That was fifteen years ago, so there can be no doubt of the cure being a permanent one. I have met a great many people who have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

Don't Be Fussy About Eating

Your Stomach Will Digest any Kind of Food When Given the Proper Assistance.

We are prone to fall into the error of singling out some article of food and soundly berating the fiend who first invented the dish. The habit grows with some people till almost all food is put on the blacklist. This is all wrong. What is required is a little assistance with those agencies upon which scientific students for many years have set their seal of approval because they have become absolute facts. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets for all stomach disorders are recognised; they have a fine record; they are rated reliable, dependable and worthy of confidence just as the president of a big bank puts his O.K. on a depositor's check. And so you can eat what you want, whatever you like, knowing well that should indigestion, sour risings, gas formations, fermentations, or any other stomach distress arise, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in a few moments will put you right.

Coated tongue, bad breath, heartburn, belching, flatulency, bloat—all the symptoms of digestive troubles disappear quickly when these tablets are used. They are not a cure for anything but dyspepsia and kindred complaints. But they have brought relief to more sufferers from digestive diseases than all the patent medicines and doctor's prescriptions put together.

The stomach does the heaviest work of any of the bodily organs, yet it's the one we treat with the least regard. We eat too much of the wrong kind of food at any time. The patient stomach stands such treatment as long as it can and then it rebels. You get notice of the rebellion in the shape of the gases and pains caused by undigested, fermenting food.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING

Don't waste wood ashes. Apply them, as produced, to acid soils.

Wood ashes contain a large proportion of lime which makes them of value in correcting acid soils. Oftentimes land intended for clover or alfalfa can be better prepared for the crop by a top dressing of fresh wood ashes, either hard or soft wood being equally satisfactory. Such a treatment will be of especial value on marshy and sandy soils.

If not allowed to leach out wood ashes are also rich in potash and so form a home source for a much needed element. Practically all of our potash supply has been imported into this country from certain of the countries of Europe now at war which fact has caused considerable concern with many here who purchase in large quantities.

There is nothing like love to keep the heart young and there is so much that needs our love and that we need to love, that there is no excuse for growing "heart-old."

COCOANUT OIL FINE FOR WASHING HAIR

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, the less soap you use the better.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy, and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

THEATRICAL STAGNATION

NEW YORK, March 22.—March in New York has rarely seen such a period of theatrical stagnation in the way of new productions as this year has shown. The Lenten season may possibly be an excuse, but in this city religious considerations, looked at simply from the religious point of view, have not often been a deterrant to theatrical enterprise.

The week before Christmas is always dreaded by the theatres, but this is on account of the activities of Christmas shopping. Holy week— the one before Easter—is made an excuse for cutting theatrical salaries, but the drop that usually occurs in New York just before Easter is not so much religious as a kind of reaction from previous gaieties preparatory to resuming them with the renewed energy of Easter week. Mid-Lent as a rule finds things going on very much as usual.

The truth is that the whole theatrical situation is anaemic. It needs new blood. The drama in America has been put on such a perfect commercial basis that artistic initiative has been strangled. The combinations that control the theatre in America seem to have lost their energy and their courage. They are content to do the same old things in the same old way. The principal reliance is the girl-and-music show, of which the public never seems to tire in spite of the fact that every new one produced differs only slightly from the hundreds that have gone begore.

Dance Above Audience.

Florence Ziegfeld has come very much to the rescue of New York's insomniacs. There is a large population of them in this city, both resident and visiting. They are not content with the usual dinner, theatre and supper, but according to Mr. Ziegfeld —and judging from the attendance he must be right — they yearn for more entertainment after the hour when graveyards yawn. For the modest payment of two dollars per person the sleep-dodgers are permitter to take an elevator to the roof of the New Amsterdam theatre, here they find a regularly equipped restaurant surrounding a dancing floor with the drop curtain of a theatre on one side. At the stroke of 12 the formal entertainment begins, and the informal part continues as long as anyone wants to dance or consume food or drinks or both.

The show proper consists almost entirely of singing and dancing numbers of the cabaret type, carried on by a liberal number of young women very stingily clad. A principal feature is a balcony suspended from the ceiling by chains. The floor of this balcony or runway, is of plate glass, so that when the young women of the company use it as the scene of some of their trepischorean efforts, and the electric light that border it are turned on, those of the audience who are sitting at the tables beneath it, and care to look up, are supposed to see the dancing from a new point of view.

This sounds very vicious, but as a matter of fact, the dancing of the day is always so liberal in its exposures that no one pays much attention to this particular display. It is simply an advertising feature for an unusually well staged cabaret entertainment, starting at an hour when most persons have already gone to bed, or art starting to do so.

"Florodora" Is Revived.

London is apparently worse off for new attractions than we are. Sixteen-year-old "Florodora" has just been revived at the Lyric.

Thirty-five years ago Willis Sweatnam went to England as one of the end men with Haverly's Minstrels. After this long interval he is back in London again playing his familiar role of the sleeping-car porter in Rupert Hughes' successful farce, "Excuse Me."

Granville Barker's production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" has apparently not caught the New York fancy. It has been reduced to two performances a week, the other evenings and matinees being given over to the more popular "Androcles and the Lion." Shaw's "The Doctor's Lelemma" will be added to the repertory week after next.

We are shortly to have a revival of "Trilby," with Phyllis Neilson-Terry in in title part, and Wilson Lackaye in his famous impersonation of Svengali. Among others from the original cast are Leo Ditrichstein as Zou-Zou, and Burr MacIntosh as Taffy.

"Ninety in the Shade" was such a pronounced failure as a drawing proposition that both D. V. Arthur, the producer, and Marie Cahill, the star, have filed petitions in bankruptcy.

The latest reports are to the effect that Madame Sarah Bernhardt is in better health and spirits after the amputation of her right leg at the hip than she has been for ten years following the original injury to her knee and that she is coming here next season to tour in Rostand's poetic drama, "La Princesse Lointaine." The play has already been done in New York in English, with Madame Simone in the title part.

FRANCE IMPROVES MATCHES

PARIS, March 22.—For forty years France has endured the worst matches in the world uncomplainingly because the Government took the monopoly, manufacturing cheap and selling dear, as one means of paying the German war debt.

Now, however, big, cheap wooden matches, easy to strike, have replaced the sulphur-tipped splinters that nearly choked unwary smokers or obstinately refused to light.

The newspapers do not chronicle the reform or its reason.

NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA, GAS OR INDIGESTION

"Pape's Diapepsin" settles sour, upset stomachs in five minutes.

Time it! Pape's Diapepsin will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour, gassy or out-of-order stomach surely within five minutes.

If your meals don't fit comfortably, or what you eat lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of indigestion.

Get from your pharmicist a fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take a dose just as son as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, nausea, debilitating headaches, dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery is waiting for you at any drug store.

These large fifty-cent cases contain enough "Pape's Diapepsin" to keep the entire family fre from stomach disorders and indigestion for many months. It belongs in your ohme.

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

Take a Glass of Salts If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Troubles You

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

A New Palestine If The Allies Win

NEW YORK, March 23 — Through missionary channels there reach this country from England reports that a definite understanding among the Allies exists concerning Palestine in the evnt of the fall of the Turkish power, and concerning the mosque of St. Sophia in case Constantinople be taken. It is reported that British capitalists are looking to the modernization of the Holy Land with a view to making it a convenient place to visit.

The missionary informants report the British copitalists to desire to network the Holy Land with rapid trolley lines, to deevlop horticulture and to dot the country with good, moderate-rate hotels. A seaport is also to be developed. This done, it is held that all the world will journey thither.

It is further reported through these promoters are in thorough sympathy promoters are in thorouh sympathy with the Zionist movement. It is reported that the conditions of the Jews in Poland is likely to be worse after the war, if Russia grants Polish autonomy, than it has been in the past. The Holy Land offers a refuge since Jews are at home in Palestine.

Concerning St. Sophia, the same missionary reports say it is to become, if Constantinople falls, a cathedral of the Russian church It is declared on all hands that the famous mosque will not be permitted to remain in the hands of the Moslems.

The reported determination of the Allies to drive Turkey, not only out of Europe, but from the map altogether, so the missionary leaders hear, has led to the opening of the Holy Land to permanent improvement. It is said in this connection that in Smyrna, in Beirut, and other parts of Asia Minor, so general are Christian interests, that it will be difficult to find a country where the Turk will be privileged to plant and hold his capital city.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, March 24.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market receipts of live stock for the week ending March 20 were 775 cattle, 120 sheep and lambs, 385 hogs and 1150 calves, while the offerings on the market today for sale amounted to 400 cattle, 135 sheep and lambs, 800 hogs and 1100 calves.

On account of the limited supplies of cattle coming forward and the good quality of the same, the tone of the market remains steady under a fair demand for small lots to fill actual wants, and a moderately active trade was done with no change in prices to note. Sales of good steers were made at $7.25 to $7.50, fair at $6.50 to $7; and the lower grades at from $5 to $6 per hundred pounds, while choice butchers' cows brought $6.50 to $6.75, and the commoner grades at from $4.75 to $6, and bulls from $5.50 to $7 per hundred pounds.

The trade in sheep and lambs was quiet and the tone of the market is steady, with sales of a few small lots of Quebec lambs at $8 to $8.50, but choice Ontario stock is firm at $9 per hundred pounds. Sheep sold at $6.25 to $6 per hundred pounds. The tone of the market for calves was easier and prices show a decline of 50c to $2 per head. The demand at this reduction was good, and an active trade was done at from $3.50 to $10 each as to size and quality. The market for hogs is firm under a good demand and small supplies and sales of selected lots were made at $8.75 to $9 per hundred pounds, weighed off cars.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, March 24.—Cattle—Receipts, 9000; market strong; beeves, $5.85 to $8.80; cows and heifers, $3 to $7.75; calves, $6.50 to $10.

WONDERFUL WORK DONE BY AEROPLANES IN THE WAR ZONES

GERMAN PRESS IS BEHIND RUMORS OF PEACE, IS REPORT

FOOD RESOURCES BEHIND MOVEMENT

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)
LONDON, March 20.

Peace rumors are afloat, writes a correspondent in Basle, started by the German government with inspired articles both in the Berlin and Vatican press. The ball was set rolling by an article in the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, entitled "Kriegsziel," written ostensibly to deprecate any discussion of the future peace terms, but cunningly devised, nevertheless, to elicit expressions of opinion from the allied press and governments. But the German government's ballon d'essai is regarded as too transparent.

The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung plunges into the matter by saying that Germany does not want peace until all her enemies have been crushed and until Germany's world power has received undisputed recognition. Germany's life and power must be freely unfolded, and she must not let this firm determination be shaken by untimely discussions of peace, it says. The general in the field and the soldier in the trench, it adds, revolts at the idea of any such premature discussion of the future boundaries of the German Empire.

The Vossische Zeitung follows this up with a similar article to the effect that the time has not yet come to discuss peace. The Kreutzzeitung says the German people have only one positive object in view—the possessions which it has won with the blood of its armies "will never be wrung from it by Englishman or devil." And the Deutsche Tageszeitung concludes by saying that Germany still has plenty of time to discuss the annexation of her conquests.

Meanwhile the German press is giving wide publicity to a report that the Pope once more has approached the Kaiser with suggestions that now is the time when Germany could sign most advantageous terms.

The entire campaign seems intended to impress the German people that it is the Allies and not Germany who are at the end of their tether. The real reason, however, it is asserted, is the uncomfortable feeling of the German government at the growing scarcity of provisions and supplies of all kinds for the army and civilian population. They may do their utmost to regulate the consumption of bread and all foodstuffs, but they clearly perceive that the time will come when the scarcity of all necessary products will rapidly increase and reach a climax, and that therefore if Germany could only induce the Allies to offer acceptable terms of peace she would be but too glad to discuss them.

From the samples of the German war bread he has seen, the correspondent says, no government that is compelled to order its people to live on such can feel very happy. Those who were inclined to think that Germany, after all, had immense resources which might last for years may have to change their view likewise, for these resources are said to be rapidly diminishing, and all sorts of stratagems are tried by which people living in Germany along the frontier cross the border line to purchase a few pounds of flour in Swiss territory, and return with very limited supplies.

That Germany must feel the stress heavily is evident from the fact that all the neutral countries on the Continent are being reduced to considerable straits, and yet they have a certain amount of freedom for importing foodstuffs which Germany has not. It may, therefore, be concluded that the meeting of the peace question is primarily brought about by Vice Admiral Jellicoe's blockade and by the inability of the German armies to break through the allied lines.

COLLECTORS PAY HIGH FOR "WAR STAMPS"

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)
BERLIN, March 20.

According to the Berliner Tageblatt, the European war has raised greatly the value of postage stamp collections, and dealers in cancelled stamps from the belligerent countries are doing a very profitable business.

There is a frenzied demand for stamps at present, and every postage stamp collector is making a special effort to get stamps of those countries engaged in the war. Stamps which have been used since the war started are rising in price in the market.

The pretty stamp of Belgium, containing the portrait of King Albert and the little perforated coupon below containing the inscription, "Not Delivered on Sunday," now are no longer to be had. Collectors all over the world made a bid for them and high prices were given for these stamps. The small quantities in Belgian post offices, which were seized by the German government, were sold quickly, the greater portion of them going to dealers in cancelled stamps. They were replaced with stamps of the German Empire of 2, 5, 10 and 20 pfennig value, also stamped in black ink with their equivalent value in French coin, 2, 5, 10 and 20 centimes.

Germany has not issued any Red Cross stamps, but Belgium and France have issued them in large lots. The French stamp contains a little emblem of the Red Cross. A ten centimes stamp printed in red costs fifteen centimes. The French Morocoan stamps are similar.

Vienna Angered by German Plea to Conciliate Italy

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)
VIENNA, March 20.

Considerable irritation, not to say resentment, has been caused in Austrian official and political circles by the recent attempts made by Germany to induce the Austrian government to offer territory to Italy in return for the latter's continued neutrality until the end of the war. The German proposal is that a strip of Austrian territory in Southern Tyrol bordering on Italy shall be ceded to the latter country as the price of its abstention from active hostilities against the two central European empires. The territory in question is inhabited chiefly by persons of the Italian race, and has long been coveted by Italy, though not so keenly as Trieste and its environs.

The resentment felt in Austrian government quarters is due quite as much to the tactless way in which this proposal has been pressed upon the Emperor Francis Joseph and his advisers as to the suggestion itself, which meets with disapproval on its own merits. Germany has wounded Austrian feelings by suggesting that Austria ought to make this territorial sacrifice to compensate Berlin for the defeats which the Austrian armies have suffered at the hands of the Russians and Servians. The German government and its spokesmen argue that Austria has not done her share in the actual fighting, so that she ought to pay a contribution to the common cause in another shape and form. How the Hapsburgs, the great Austrian noblemen and the high State officials of Austria were humiliated and infuriated by this suggestion can be well imagined by those who know their proud and haughty traditions.

Proposal Pleases Hungary.

Not content with laying these considerations before Austria, Germany actually tried (and partly succeeded) to gain the support of Hungary for this suggestion of ceding Southern Tyrolese territory to Italy. The journey of the Hungarian Premier to the Kaiser's headquarters some time ago was utilized for the purpose of persuading Count Tisza that such a sacrifice on the part of Austria was absolutely necessary to restrain Italy from throwing in her lot with the Allies, and the leading Hungarians were more than ready to listen with sympathetic ears to the proposal. No Hungarian interests are involved.

In a general way anything that weakens Austria is welcome to Hungary, and the surrender of Tyrolese territory to purchase Italy's friendship would in itself insure the safety of Hungary's own outlet to the Adriatic at Fiume. Emperor Francis Joseph and his advisers were thus faced by the unpleasant fact that Germany's demands for this transaction were more or less openly supported in Budapest. The ways and means employed to obtain Hungarian support were regarded in Vienna as disloyal and unchivalrous.

The irritation felt in Austrian circles has been increased by the German press campaign. The German government is said to have set its press machinery in motion to intimidate the Austrian government by the apparent force of German public opinion on this matter. The Berlin correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung, said to be inspired by the German Foreign Office, has contributed to his newspaper a series of very strongly worded despatches saying it would be treachery on the part of Austria not to dispose of Italy's hostility by this "trifling" sacrifice, and similar articles have appeared in many other German newspapers thought to receive their inspiration from the Wilhelmstrasse. Some of these German press utterances have been threatening in tone and they have produced in Vienna mingled feelings of indignation and disgust.

Thus there is a rift in the Austro-German friendship, and though it may not be serious for the moment the seeds of more serious future discords have been sown. In the Austrian army, especially among its higher officers, there is a growing resentment against what is regarded as the overbearing manners of the German officers in command of Germany's troops operating in Galicia and Hungary. These German officers, it is said, have become intolerably arrogant since the Austrian armies met their succession of defeats, and many Austrian officers have experienced great difficulty in co-operating with them against the Russians.

Moreover, there is a growing disappointment visible in Vienna and throughout Austria at the failure of the Germans to achieve decisive victories. In the earlier stages of the war the Austrians took their reverses with a certain indolent resignation, saying the Prussians would extricate them from all dangers and difficulties. But that feeling has disappeared. The Germans are no longer supermen, but quite ordinary human beings in the eyes of their Austrian allies.

A mutual disillusionment and a growing mutual dislike—this is the seeming condition of affairs between Austria and Germany.

SAY MR. CHURCHILL FACED DEATH AS "SPY"

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)
LONDON, March 20.

The Prague Daily News of February 6 contains a despatch from Berlin purporting to give private advices to the effect that Winston Spencer Churchill on his recent trip to the front in France was almost shot as a spy. The information is said to have been imparted in a letter written home by a Scottish corporal.

The Gordon Highlanders one evening received strict orders to be on the watch for an automobile painted black, as information had been received that two dangerous spies—a man and a woman—would try to pass through the English lines. The woman was said to be one of the most notorious of Austrian spies, speaking English fluently, and a special watch, therefore, was ordered.

The next morning the Scottish corporal was on guard. A heavy fog had fallen and suddenly, at great speed, an automobile, painted black, came into view. The corporal cried "Halt," but the chauffeur paid little attention.

The corporal threatened to shoot and at last the soldiers opposite them [illegible] The automobile stopped, and a Field General, Mr. Churchill and a [illegible] showed [illegible] and explained [illegible] were addressed [illegible] their indifference [illegible] the apologies were [illegible] made.

Sent to Hospital After One Turn in Trenches

"Pins and Needles" in the Feet and Swollen Hands Some of the Soldiers' Discomforts.

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)
LONDON, March 20.

The discomfort and even actual suffering caused by doing only one turn in the trenches is described by a Canadian soldier in Princess Patricia's Light Infantry in a letter written at the front. Such was the condition of the troops that some of the men hardly were able to crawl from the trenches when the relief hour arrived. With too much mud to sit down and the trench too shallow to stand up straight, the troop was in a difficult position. The letter, which was printed in the London Times, says:—

"We left the place from which I last wrote, marched fifteen miles and billeted in a barn. The following day we marched twelve miles to within about three miles of the trenches, which we entered late at night, relieving some French troops. We stayed forty-eight hours in the trenches, or rather ditches, as they're little better, and such a time I never experienced in my life.

"It was raining most of the time, sniping was going on all night, and in the daytime we were subjected to a most awful bombardment, especially on the first day, shells exploding near my trench sometimes in bunches of six. Mud and pieces of shrapnel fell quite close several times. The shells from the German big guns burst with a terrible din and fairly made the earth quake, our trenches caving in in many places from the severe concussions.

"We of my platoon consider ourselves very lucky indeed, as we suffered the hottest shell fire along the line occupied by the battalion, but fortunately the German gunners had too much elevation, which resulted in the shells, with two or three exceptions, falling over and clear of the trenches. The German trenches opposite our position were only 120 yards away, but very little rifle fire was indulged in, every one on both sides keeping well under cover.

"The bottoms of the trenches in most places are just ankle deep in mud. We sat on our equipment, which was soon smothered in wet, cold mud, and in a deplorable state. But it saved us from actually sitting in the mud, and one could not stand upright as the trench was not deep enough. Of course, sleep was practically impossible, though most of us negotiated forty winks at intervals when not on watch.

"Our feet were wet through the whole time, also our nether garments. During the long nights we just longed for daylight, although we knew it would bring a renewal of the bombardment. Some of our men were hardly able to crawl out of the trenches when our turn came to be relieved.

"I hardly think human flesh could possibly stand the conditions prevailing for more than three days at the most. The night we came out and into billets I put on dry socks. I had the most peculiar sensations in my feet all that night—a kind of pins and needles. This, I suppose, was the returning circulation.

"My hands were also much swollen, but two days' rest soon put me all right again. I feel absolutely none the worse for my experience, but some of the men had to go to hospital, and others were unfit to march and had to ride in transports. I myself have been able to stay with the best of them, although I am the oldest man in the section.

"We occupied the trenches on the night of the fifth and were relieved on the night of the eighth. Twenty of us are billeted in what you would call a country public house and sleep in the kitchen on the floor, so far the most comfortable digs we have had so far.

"I was much struck by the behavior of the boys who had never been under fire before; in fact, I was surprised. Of course we all realize that we carry our lives in our hands and I think the most we ever worry. We found time to laugh and joke while the shells were bursting overhead and quite a few are [illegible] were addressed at [illegible] their indifferent [illegible] the apologies were [illegible] made.

Berlin Objects to New Night Life Restrictions

Regulations Closing Cafes at One o'Clock Said To Be Result of Seditious Speeches Following Hours of Conviviality—Empress' Influence Discerned.

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)

The new decree fixing the closing hour for restaurants at one o'clock in the morning came into force in the early hours of this morning, and strange scenes were witnessed in those parts of the capital in which most of the night cafés and restaurants and cabarets are situated. The huge crowds which always assemble in all public resorts on Sunday evening prolonged their suppers to the very stroke of one, and when the fateful hour arrived the Friedrichstrasse and Leipzigerstrasse and many other adjoining streets were literally black with men and women who had reluctantly left their sausage and beer.

Nor were the crowds disposed to go home. On the contrary, they began promenading the streets of the inner city, and dense throngs of people filled the Friedrichstrasse and its neighborhood until three o'clock. There was much grumbling about the new early closing hour, and there were moments when the forcible intervention of large bodies of police, mounted and on foot, who had been called out for duty, appeared inevitable. But the rougher elements in the crowds cooled down and ultimately the throng dispersed. The arrests were limited to about half a dozen individuals whose enthusiasm for night life could not be otherwise suppressed.

These nightly jollifications, of which the Germans are excessively proud, asserting that thereby their capital takes the lead among the pleasure cities of the world, had been permitted to continue because the authorities were anxious to interfere as little as possible with amusements that tended to keep the people in good humor.

Influence of Empress.

Why the official attitude toward night life has changed is a question hard to answer, except that certain influences at the Imperial court may have gained the upper hand. There is a group round the Kaiser, of which the Empress herself is the principal figure, which condemns as frivolous and irreligious all the lighter forms of amusements composing Berlin night life, and from this quarter there has been a persistent demand that eating and drinking and merrymaking shall be replaced by gravity, prayer and meditation.

The supreme authorities in ignoring such demands have shown that they understand more sympathetically the mood of the Berlin population, which dislikes above everything else to be deprived of its pleasures. That these same supreme authorities should choose a time when, more than at any previous period of the war, the people most urgently need to be kept in good spirits, to suppress the greater part of Berlin night life, must be attributed to quite another consideration.

It appears that in the early hours of the morning, toward sunrise, the Berlin people, excited and exhilarated by their environment, encouraged by the general atmosphere of irresponsible gaiety, have been indulging in far too unrestrained discussions regarding the war, its causes, its progress, its outcome and the unhappiness which it has brought upon Germany. [illegible] reached the government [illegible] police authorities that many of those semi-public discussions, conducted so loudly that they assumed a public character, were frankly seditious in tone, and the tendency to talk too freely has shown a remarkable increase since the beginning of the year.

It was thought that up to one o'clock Berlin would remain sufficiently sober to keep its tongue in check and that the happy medium would be struck by allowing a fair portion of night life without incurring the dangers resulting from its extension to still later hours.

Will Rigidly Enforce Closing Hour.

A number of clubs and associations (Verein) have petitioned the authorities for a relaxation of the new rule, saying their members have been accustomed always to eat and drink together until much further into the early hours of the morning than one o'clock, and that any restriction of their privileges in this respect will be felt as an especial and unnecessary hardship. The authorities have announced that they will make no exception whatever, but that the one o'clock closing hour rule will be rigidly enforced until the end of the war.

More serious inconvenience has been caused to Berlin by a great reduction in the number of motor buses available for passenger service. Before the war there were 375 motor buses in use in Berlin. Immediately after the declaration of war 200 were commandeered for military purposes, leaving only 175 for the street service of the capital. Subsequently, owing to the requisition of more buses for the army, the number in use in Berlin was reduced to 83. No more have been requisitioned, but there is such a serious shortage of petrol that seventy of these will be withdrawn from the streets unless the military authorities are willing to allow the company to obtain more petrol.

The total suspension of all motor buses is expected to ensue in the near future, and in this event horse drawn buses will be provided to meet the most pressing needs of the public. The lack of petrol will also lead to the withdrawal of all the taxicabs from the streets not only of Berlin but of all German towns.

A new military decree promulgated here prohibits the supply of brandy, rum, or other spirits to officers or privates in uniform. Any one found selling or giving spirits to officers or men wearing uniform will be punished by one year's imprisonment, and the license of the house from which the liquor is supplied will be cancelled if the landlord is accessory to the offence.

A Precaution.

URGES BRITAIN TO END WAR BY USING GREAT AIR FLEET

An Authority on Aeronautics Would Have Government Build 2,000 Aeroplanes.

ESTIMATES COST AT $50,000,000

Mr. L. Blin Desbleds Says the Machines Can Be Constructed and Manned in Six Months.

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)
LONDON, March 20.

Under these headings:—"To End the War" and "How Victory May Be Obtained at a Cost of £10,000,000," a remarkable article appears in to-day's issue of Land and Water. The writer is Mr. L. Blin Desbleds, an acknowledged expert on aeronautics, and the view he propounds is that the war can be won inside of six months if Britain were to build da fleet of 2,000 aeroplanes and carry the war into Germany. Having gone thoroughly into the subject, he has no doubt of Britain's ability to build such a fleet and to train the pilots necessary to man it. The whole outlay, he says, would fall short of £10,000,000.

Mr. Desoleds begins his article by emphasizing the ascendency which he says the British airmen have acquired over the Germans. This it will be necessary to retain and nothing in his proposals is intended to impair the efficiency of reconnoissance work ashore or afloat. But after nearly seven months' war experience of the aeroplane he says the time has come for taking stock.

When this is done, he says, it will be found that a most important quality of the aeroplane has been brought to light. This quality is its value for offensive operations. Britain has already, so far as the number of machines is concerned, utilized it in a timid manner in carrying out a number of raids. Is that timidity, he asks, due to the fact that Britain has not really grasped the full value of the aeroplane for offensive purposes? Or is it because Britain is so engaged in maintaining the supremacy she has already obtained that she cannot vigorously push the development of a real offensive air fleet?

The writer has constantly explained the importance of an aerial offensive. Since the publication of his articles the Admiralty have reported two air raids by aerial squadrons of thirty-four and forty aeroplanes strong respectively. Compare the result of these raids with those undertaken with a still smaller number of machines—the Cuxhaven raid on Christmas Day, 1914, for instance, and the importance of the number of aeroplanes composing an attacking aerial fleet will be realised clearly. For offensive work of permanent value it is not an air fleet of a few dozen machines that is required, but one of about a thousand or more strong.

Value of Fifth Arm.

With such an air fleet, it is said, Britain could enter on the conquest of a second kind of "supremacy of the air," a kind in which the offensive value of the fifth arm would make itself felt, in a permanent manner, miles beyond the range of her guns. In fact, such an air fleet would be a force that could not be stopped by trenches, rivers or fortified places, it would be a force in whose way no obstacles could be put, and which would carry the war straight into the heart of the enemy's country.

In connection with the employment of aeroplanes at the front it is important, he says, to remember that the fifth arm is still somewhat frail in construction. Major W. S. Brancker, Royal Artillery (Royal Flying Corps Reserve) General Staff, in a lecture delivered at the University of London a few weeks before the beginning of hostilities said:—

"A good average pilot may fly, day after day, round an aerodrome and make many landings without ever straining his aeroplane, or even breaking a wire; but in war the pilot must fly in any weather to obtain information, and land on almost any ground to deliver it. The result will be numerous small breakages and strains, all of which take time and skill to repair, and which demand the provision of a large quantity of spare parts and their delivery wherever they are required in the theatre of war. The difficulty of supply of spare parts will be increased in proportion to the number of different types of aeroplanes employed. The same applies to engines which, in addition, require thorough periodic overhaul, after a comparatively short time at work.

"Again, in war there will be no sheds available for housing machines on the ground. The aeroplane of the moment cannot stand for long in the open without serious deterioration in its flying qualities. All this indicates that only a small proportion of the aeroplanes in the field will be fit to take the air at any given moment."

Must Have 2,000 Machines.

These, and other reasons, show that if 1,000 aeroplanes are to be always ready for offensive purposes Britain must possess at least twice that number of machines and keep on making good the losses.

Now the question which presents itself is whether it would be possible for Britain to build in the space of a few months 2,000 aeroplanes, train the men necessary to pilot them, form the necessary contingent of mechanics which would be required to accompany them at the front and organise an adequate transport service.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

IN THE DRIFTWOOD

Flooded River Brings Precious Gift to Reunite Husband and Wife.

By MARGARET CAMERON.

John Bascombe stood upon the bank of the whirling river, looking on the wreck of his home. His wife, Mary, stood at his side, but even in this extremity of affliction her hand did not seek his, and there was no sign that their common disaster had united them.

Things had not gone well with them during the three years that had elapsed since their marriage. He had been a clerk in St. Louis, and Mary was a school teacher. It was a boy and girl flirtation, followed by a boy and girl marriage; then, spurred by necessity and aided by the inheritance of a few hundred dollars, John had purchased a few acres in the flat lowlands of the western part of the state. There they had struggled almost from the beginning. It was the desperate struggle of the soil-hungry, seeking to maintain their hold upon the precious earth.

Gradually, under the influence of the hard and remitting toil, they had drifted apart. If Mary had had a child it might have brought them together. But because this was not destined to be they had grown to be almost strangers. Mary found the hard struggle intolerable, and longed for books, people, intellectual life, such as she had been accustomed to; and John, busy from dawn to dark in his battle with nature, hardly had any other life at all.

When they ceased to hope for a child it seemed as though they must drift apart forever. In fact they had spoken of a separation, at first tentatively, then hopefully, then eagerly, as something to be anticipated.

"You can have everything except the house and the land," John said to her. "I want to be free, as you do. I'll send you—"

"I don't want your money, John," she flashed out at him. "There isn't anything of yours I want—now. There was only one thing—love—and I don't want that any more."

They were to have separated that very day, John remaining there, Mary returning to St. Louis, to take up her work in the public schools again.

And then, a week before, the river began to rise. And soon came stories of the floods up the country that were carrying all before them, bursting through levees, overwhelming towns, sweeping away houses and churches as though they were but driftwood floating upon the stream, and drowning thousands.

And hourly the river rose, and Mary, forgetting for the time her own plans, stayed at John's side and fought the floods with him. It was little she could do; but all along the banks men were building up the levees, hoping to dam back that roaring tide before it burst through into the fertile fields that they had won from the scrub-covered bottoms of the old water-channels. And Mary, with a corps of devoted women, ministered to the ravage, wearied, toiling men.

Then the worst happened; the river burst its banks, and, when the crest of the flood had passed, the little settlement was as matchboxes. Not a house was left standing. Only logs, shingles, and foundations remained. And down the stream poured the debris from a half dozen states on its wild career toward the Gulf of Mexico.

They stood side by side upon a little knoll and looked at the dull yellow ponds that covered their land. The land was there still but all the fruits of their works had been carried away. They looked into the turbid river, and then into each other's eyes.

"What are you going to do, John?" asked Mary.

"I'm going to move west," he answered. "And you?"

"I shall go back to St. Louis," she answered. "There is no use in my staying here now."

"No," he agreed.

Mary was to leave on the following morning. They were sheltered in the railroad depot nearby which accomodated the homeless sufferers and stood just beyond the highest reach of the flood. On the next morning John set off at dawn. He could not resist the temptation to look once again at the ruin of his home; but he had not the heart to awaken Mary. When he left the squalid, sordid enclosure it was with no intention of returning.

And Mary knew that. She had not slept that night. She had thought, all through the long, sleepless hours, of that other ruin, their common life. Had she not also been to blame for that? She recalled times when she might have been more to John; endearments which she had repelled; times when she had let pride master her inclinations toward reconciliation. And John had not changed, only he had let material things creep up between their love like noisome weeds and strangle it. Yet she could not bring herself to call him back. She watched his tall, bent figure pass out of the enclosure, and out of her life, as she thought.

Half an hour later he was back, his face aflame. She looked at him in amazement. He might have been another man—no, the old one, her boyish sweetheart who had so long been only a memory to her.

"Mary!" he called. "Come! No, put on your cloak and bring your grip. I will carry it for you. Come—I'll show you!"

She accompanied him outside the squalid buildings to where the receding floods had left a swampy stretch of earth. Here their farm had been, their house and growing crops, and now—

Stood Side by Side Upon a Little Knoll.

She started in amazement. A new house stood almost upon the spot of the old one. It might have been their house—the house they had planned in the first dreams of their married life. Firm and foursquare it stood, with its eight rooms, its neatly shuttered windows, its front door with the gleaming knocker. Mary turned to John.

"It's magic, John. What does it mean?" she asked.

John pointed to the receding river. "It is the river's gift to us," he answered.

Torn from its foundations, hundreds of miles away, in heaven only knew what county or state, even, it had been deposited there by the flood. It needed but two teams of oxen to place it upon the foundations of the old home. And it was theirs! For it could never be taken away; probably those who had once owned it had died in the cataclysm. It was their this home. They crept up toward wading like children through the swampy places. And, looking in Mary gasped with wonder. For it was furnished, neatly, cheaply, but tastefully. There was a parlor, with table and chairs, a living room; even the curtains swayed upon their rod. The river had borne it upon its breast as gently as a child.

Suddenly she caught his hand in hers and motioned to him to remain silent. "Hush, John!" she whispered, listening intently. "Did you hear anything?" she added presently.

John had heard nothing except the sullen lapping of the waves upon the river banks. But Mary's eyes were alight with a strange fire and her cheeks flushed and the hand that he held in his was trembling.

"What is it, Mary?" he asked stupidly.

Suddenly she dashed wildly up the steps of the stranded house, while John looked after her, wondering at the feverish eagerness which had succeeded her customary apathy. She disappeared inside, and almost immediately afterward she reappeared. Her hair was tumbling all over her face, upon her lips there played a smile of tenderness that he had often imagined there but had never seen. In her arms she carried a bundle.

She came toward him, and, as she unwrapped it, the feeble cry of a child smote upon his ears.

"Look, John!" she whispered.

An infant of six months was lying in her arms. And even as John looked he saw the little arms go upward, seeking Mary's neck, and, having found it, they clasped themselves contentedly around it.

"What do you think, John!" said Mary, with a little laugh. "He hasn't even finished his bottle—although the milk is souring. You didn't hear him," she added, "but I did."

She stood there so proud, so happy in this vicarious motherhood that John's arm stole timidly around her waist and he drew her toward him.

"Mary, dear," he whispered, "I have often thought that if we had a child—like this—it would have drawn us together. We would not have drifted apart as we have done."

"So have I," she answered passionately. "I felt that you resented it, John, my—my childlessness, and so—and so—"

"You hadn't grown tired of me?"

"No, John, indeed no. If I had thought you wanted me to stay—"

"But I did and do want you," he answered triumphantly. "Only, Mary—"

"John!"

"He stays with us."

"Of course," she answered, turning up the little face for her husband's kiss.

SUFFERED FROM BILIOUS HEADACHE.

At Times Thought She Would Go Mad.

Headaches are one of the most aggravating troubles a person can have. They are many and varying; but when the headache starts you may be sure that there is some other chief cause of this most painful difficulty. The stomach may go wrong, the bowels become constipated, the blood may not circulate properly, but the presence of the headache clearly shows that there is some other baneful disease which is liable to assert itself unless the cause of the headache is removed. Get rid of the headache and thus perhaps save yourself many years of trial and suffering.

Burdock Blood Bitters has, for the past forty years, been curing all kinds of headaches, and has also proved itself to be a remedy that cures where all others fail. It does this by removing the cause of the trouble.

Miss Mary A. Roberts, Hampton, N.B., writes: "For about two years I have suffered from bilious headache. At times I thought I would really go mad. Not long ago a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters which I did, and after taking three bottles I have never been troubled with any kind of a headache. I think that B.B.B. is one of the wonders of the world. I can safely recommend it to all who suffer from bilious headache."

Burdock Blood Bitters is the oldest and the best known blood medicine on the market to-day, and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

TONSILITIS, SORE THROAT, CHEST COLDS, CAN BE CURED OVER NIGHT

They Vanish Quickly If Nerviline Is Well Rubbed In.

When the throat tickles, when it hurts to draw a long breath, when you feel as if a knife were stuck in your side, it's time to draw out the congestion that will soon become pneumonia.

An ordinary cough syrup has no chance at all—you require a powerful penetrating liniment.

Rub it liberally over the sides and chest—rub it in hard.

The warm, soothing effect of Nerviline will be apparent in five minutes. Nothing like it for quick relief—takes soreness out of the throat in one rubbing—breaks up the chest cold, draws out the inflammation, stops the cough quickly.

No pain-relieving remedy compares in power to cure with Nerviline. Largest sale in Canada of any liniment for nearly forty years. The reason is plain. It satisfies every time.

The large 50 cent. family size bottle is more economical than the 25 cent trial size. Sold by dealers everywhere or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

60,000 DUCKS TAKE WING IN MARYLAND

Scene on Chesapeake Flats Shows Results of New Migratory Law

BALTIMORE, Md., March 24.—Fifty thousand canvas back ducks, 5,000 or more whistling swan, many thousands of Canadian geese and big ricks of black ducks and some few red heads greeted a semi-official party that made an inspection of the Chesapeake flats in a big motor boat this afternoon.

Such a quantity of wild wings had not been seen on the flats this late in the spring for many years. It was conclusive evidence as to the excellence of the new Federal Migratory law that prohibits spring shooting of ducks on the flats.

The trip was made to see if one year could make any difference, and all in the party, which consisted of experienced sportsmen from Cecil county and Baltimore, were amazed at the results shown.

At one time during the afternoon by circling up on them the boat put on the wing practically every duck on the flats and the sight was a remarkable one. It was estimated that there were fully 60,000 birds on the wing at one time.

The canvas backs predominated, practically three-fourths of all the ducks on the flats being of this species.

SAGE TEA TURNS GREY HAIR DARK

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Colour and Lustre to Hair

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns grey, streaked and looks dry, wispy and scraggy, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the tonic; you can get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," ready to use. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural colour, thickness and lustre of your hair and remove dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy, lustrous and abundant.

Germany Ignores Dutch Note.

LONDON, March 25.—The Times correspondent at The Hague, in a despatch concerning the recent seizure by a German submarine of the Dutch steamers Batavier V. and Zaanstroom, which were conveyed to Zeebrugge, where their cargoes were confiscated, says:

"The Government has received no reply from Germany regarding its request for an explanation concerning the Batavier V. and the Zaanstroom and the situation arising therefrom is considered grave."

THREE GERMAN KINGS

Rulers Over Millions Are Subordinate to the Kaiser

Wilhelm II., King of Prussia, in his position as German Emperor, so overshadows the other kings of Germany that we almost lose sight of their existence. The king we hear of is the King of Prussia, who also bears the title of Deutscher Kaiser and in whom is vested the supreme direction of the military and political affairs of the empire.

It was the successes of the German armies in 1870 that removed every obstacle to the carrying into effect that union of Germany which had been the dream of enthusiasts for years, not the least among these enthusiasts being Bismarck. The fact that the victories gained had been the direct result of German unity of action under the guidance of Prussia, forced itself on the mind of every thinking man in Germany.

Various small concessions demanded by several states to save their dignity were granted, but the principal articles—those especially which demanded one diplomatic representation, one assembly for all the states of the union, and one supreme command of the army—were insisted upon by Prussia. Its chief was to be the King of Prussia, with the title of German Emperor. Thus—particularly since the beginning of the great war—we have heard much of the king who reigns over Prussia with its area of 134,616 square miles and its population of 40,165,219. But there are still other kings in Germany—three of them—their titles unchanged though their power may be less great than in the old days.

Ludwig III. reigns over the German kingdom of Bavaria with its 29,292 square miles and 6,887,291 population. Ludwig III., now seventy years of age, became regent in succession to his father, Prince Luitpold, who died December 12, 1913, and he was proclaimed king on Nov. 5, 1913, in succession to his cousin, King Otto, who was declared incapable of ruling owing to mental infirmity. The king's son, Prince Rupprecht, is now commanding a German army.

Over the kingdom of Wurttemberg with its 7,534 square miles and 2,437,574 population reigns Wilhelm II. who is now in his sixty-seventh year. He is the son of the late Prince Friedrich of Wurttemberg and ascended to the throne on the death of Karl I., Oct. 6, 1891. The king is now with his troops in the field.

Frederick Augustus III. reigns over the kingdom of Saxony with its 5,789 square miles and 4,806,661 population. He is fifty years of age and is the son of the late King George and succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Oct. 15, 1904. He was married in 1891 to Princess Luise of Tuscany, but the marriage was dissolved in 1903. The king occasionally visited his troops in the trenches in Russia.

War Measures Pass

OTTAWA, March 25.—No opposition was made to the passing of Canada's war vote of $100,000,000 in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon. It took just ten minutes to despatch this business.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier asked for information as to the measures taken for the defence of the Dominion. He did not ask for anything confidential, Sir Robert Borden said that he would be pleased to communicate privately to the members any information on this point that they desired. Protection of public buildings was given to any person who asked for it.

At the afternoon sitting, the House put through committee the war revenue tax bill, which will come into effect on April 15. One amendment was made to the effect that the special tax on wines would apply to wines used for medical purposes.

Postmaster-General Casgrain announced that negotiations were on foot with the British and French Governments by which letters to soldiers at the front might be carried postage free.

Hon. Mr. White, in reply to a question, stated that the extra war stamp would not be required upon letters to countries for which five cents in postage was required. Otherwise Canada would be violating the International Postal Convention. He also stated that for ordinary postage three one-cent stamps would be used and that upon checks and notes a two-cent postage stamp could be affixed instead of a special war stamp.

While the militia estimates were under consideration, Major-General Hughes announced that the second contingent would sail for England within the next six weeks and before the Valcartier Camp will be available for training purposes, but declared his belief in the large concentration camps for mobilization and training.

MAIL TO SOLDIERS SHOULD GO FREE

Sir Wilfrid's Contention is to be Considered by the Postmaster-General

OTTAWA, March 24.— That letters and postcards to Canada's soldiers at the front should be freed not alone from the stamp tax, but also from postage, was the plea made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when the stamp taxes were under consideration in Parliament this afternoon.

The Liberal leader pointed out that these boys were fighting the battles of Canada in the trenches and that no consideration should be denied them by those whose cause they served. It would, in his opinion, mean something very real to many homes to be able to communicate with fathers, sons and friends at the front free from all postage assessment or taxation. The motherland had effected arrangements whereby the letters of the soldiers came to Canada free, and he thought it the least Canada could do to endeavour to make similar arrangements to encourage the sending of cheerful messages from home to the boys in the trenches.

Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, demurred. He thought the friends and relatives of the soldiers would be only too glad to pay the additional taxation, "calculated to better support the soldier in the trenches." As a matter of fact, however, he did not think the additional postage tax would apply to letters to France, which required five cents postage under the Universal Postage Convention.

Hon. Charles Marcil and Hon. Dr. Pugsley warmly championed Sir Wilfrid Laurier's proposal. The latter pointed out that the Minister of Finance had set up the claim that the so-called "war stamp" was not increased postage but was a special tax. If such were the case the provisions of the International Postage Convention would not apply, and parents and friends of the soldiers would find the law required the new tax stamp to be affixed.

Hon. Mr. Casgrain, the Postmaster-General, promised to take Sir Wilfrid's suggestion under advisement There was this difficulty; that letters to soldiers in France required the co-operation on the British and French Governments before free delivery could be arranged. The matter would, however, engage the immediate attention of the department.

SUDDEN DEATH OF NORWOOD MAN

Mr. Bristow Moffat Passes Away After a Brief Illness—Funeral on Sunday

Examiner Special:

NORWOOD, March 26. — A well known resident of Norwood, in the person of Mr. Bristow W. Moffat, died suddenly on Wednesday morning. He had been ill only a few days, and the announcement of his death was quite a shock to the community. Deceased had just passed his sixty-sixth birthday a few days ago and up to that time was apparently hale and hearty. The late Mr. Moffat was a man of high integrity. He was a hard working, industrious man, a devoted husband and father, and a good citizen.

He is survived by his wife and five daughters, viz., Mrs. H. R. Pickens, of Panama, U.S., Mrs. A. A. McRoberts, of North Bay, Mrs. Chas. Ballard, of Mount Eagle Valley, Ont., Gertude of Brooklyn, N.Y., and Evelyn who resides at home. One brother and two sisters are also living: Thomas of Norwood, Mrs. Creighton of Syracuse, N. Y., and Mrs. Bartley, of Bad Axe, Mich.

The funeral will be held on Sunday afternoon from his late residence, Victoria Street, and will be conducted under Orange auspices, deceased having been for a long period an active member of that Association.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

The waist is really very simple, with plain front and back and a one-piece sleeve finished with a pointed cuff. The skirt is in four gores and measures about two and an eighth yards around the bottom. It is attached to the waist at high waistline, the joining concealed by the pointed belt, which buttons in waistcoat effect. This belt feature is a smart touch that, with the revers goes to make the effect of the whole dress. For the best result the skirt should be several inches above the ground, the exact length depending upon the figure and height of the wearer. The pattern, No. 7,081, comes in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

Thinks War is About Over a German Soldiers' Idea

LONDON, March 24—A Canadian lieutenant in the hospital here furnishes a striking personal proof of how men may be laid aside although perfectly untouched by the enemy's missiles. He was in the trenches when a shell burst in the neighbourhood, although not struck he was incapacitated by the concussion of the brain. "It is utterly impossible," he said, "to give any adequate idea of the conditions at the front. The atmosphere in a double sense is perfectly unearthly. In its literal meaning, the atmosphere to begin with is permeated with a faint odour of chloride of lime which hangs over everything. When the artillery is not active you have a perfectly peaceful countryside, but you know that right under the earth for miles are thousands of men. It is perfectly ghostly at night. Every now and then great blue stars burst in the sky.

Got Lost Once.

"I got lost outside the trenches in one of the earliest nights," he continued. "I had gone forward to reconnoitre when a German star burst. I fell flat at once. When it was dark again and I was able to get up I was utterly unable to remember which direction our trench lay and moved along cautiously for some time. Then I heard low singing voices. They were English, so I called out and crawled over the parapet of the trenches, which incidentally look tremendously formidable from the side facing the enemy. If a German star had burst when I was crawling over I should have been picked off for certain."

How's Vancouver?

"We had a queer experience once when the trenches were within fifty yards. A German called out, 'Hullo, Canada, how is Vancouver looking?' It was evidently some German who had rejoined his colours when the war broke out. The German system of intelligence is perfectly marvellous When we first relieved the British some who were coming back told us the Germans had asked if the Canadians had already arrived or were due next day. I was in the hospital in France with several German prisoners; they were well educated and intelligent and all were convinced that London was already in German hands. There is not the least doubt that the general body of Germans think the war is nearly over in their favour, and that after England and France are utterly disposed of Russia will collapse in about three weeks.

WITH THE FRENCH WOUNDED

The Woman's Sacrifice

LONDON, March 26th, 8.30 p.m. — Away from the battlefield one sees war stripped of its glamour. We see the heroic work of nurses who are on duty day and night. There is devotion, self-sacrifice, suffering patriotism—qualities which only a great war and its terrible consequences can inspire to the highest development. The women everywhere are helping and everywhere one sees self-sacrifice and devotion to country.

The women of Canada do not know how fortunate they are. Here there are plenty of women who suffer in silence, whose strength is out of proportion to their ambition. Their hands are tied by some chronic disease common to womankind; that weak back, accompanied by pain here or there, extreme nervousness, sleeplessness, maybe fainting spells or spasms, are all signals of distress for women. She may be growing from girlhood into womanhood, passing from womanhood to motherhood. At any or all of these periods of a woman's life she should take a tonic and nervine, prescribed for just such cases by a physician of vast experience in the diseases of women. Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription has successfully treated more cases the past fifty years than any other known remedy. When you feel dull, headachy, backache, dizzy, or perhaps hot flashes, there is nothing you can accomplish, nothing you can enjoy. You can find permanent relief in Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription. It is sold by medicine dealers, or trial box by mail from Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., on receipt of 50 cents, or one dollar for large box.—Adv.

TEACH HATE, CRIES GERMAN.

LONDON, Tuesday, March 23.— The Daily News quotes from the Lille War Gazette, a weekly newspaper issued by Germans at Lille, an article by Lieutenant Colonel Kaden. It reads:

"You men of Germany from East and West, forced to shed your blood in defence of your homeland through England's infamous envy and hatred of Germany's progress, feed the flame that burns in your souls. We have one war cry, 'God punish England.' Hiss this to one another in the trenches and in the charge. Hiss it as if it were the subject of licking flames.

"Behold in every dead comrade the sacrifice, forced from you by this accursed people. Take the ten-fold vengeance for each hero's death.

"You, German people at home, feed this fire of hate. You mothers, engrave this in the hearts of the babes at your breasts.

"You thousands of teachers, to whom millions of German children look up with eyes and hearts, teach the hate inquenchable.

"Hate, you German fathers. Let hatred be inculcated in your children and it will grow like a landslide, irresistible from generation to generation.

"You, fathers, proclaim it aloud over the billowing fields that the toiling peasant below may hear you and that the birds in the forest may fly away with the message into the land.

"Send it reverberating like clanging bells from tower to tower throughout the countryside: 'Hate! Hate the accursed English! Hate!'"

BELGIAN TWINS TO WILSON

"Thank You for the Good Bread" —The President's Reply.

WASHINGTON, March 24—An exchange of letters between President Wilson and two little Belgians in Brussels, in which the children thanked the President for food sent by Americans, and the President expressed his appreciation of their gratitude, was made known at the White House. The children, twins, 9 years old, wrote:

Dear Mr Wilson: Thank you very much for the good bread. The poor people in our villages were starving, for they have nothing to eat, but now that you have sent over to our dear little country a big provision of wheat, both rich and poor can live—thanks to the Americans. Best love and wishes from little

PUSSY DESPOELBERCH.

Pussy's brother added: "I join in with my sister in thanking you, too, for it is jolly good bread, enough to satisfy any schoolboy's hunger."

My Dear Little Friends: Your letter touched me very deeply, and I thank you for it with all my heart. It makes me very happy to think that what generous Americans have done to relieve the hunger and distress in your country has brought you the help you needed and given you a little happiness in the midst of these terrible days of war. I hope that you will grow up to be strong to do the work that will have to be done in the days of peace that are coming. It would be a great pleasure to me if some day I might see you both when those happier times have come. Your sincere friend.

WOODOW WILSON.

A CRITIC'S CHOICE.

Past was the winter's terrors wild,
And gentle spring serenly smiled,
When, in a garden blooming gay,
Wandered a careless youth one day,
Dreaming away the golden hours,
Amid the sunshine and the flowers.
Until some secret influence stirred
His heart, perchance a warbling bird,
That thrilled a love song to his mate
From shady tree or garden gate.
Though subtle, soft, the spell it broke
And from his reverie he awoke,
Thinking how sweet 'twould be to wear
The loveliest gem that blossomed there
Upon his bosom as his own;
That it might bless his heart alone.
No other ere could satisfy
His soul's artistic ideals high.
So scarce he gave by very chance,
Snow drops, and Crocuses, a glance,
Violets and pansies frail and shy.
Looked up with wide coquettish eye;
Spirea, tossed white plumes in air,
As if his doubtful hand to dare;
Dianthus, rare of varied hue;
Phlocks, Canterbury's bells, of blue,
Anemonies, and golden glow,
Stocks, lilys, spotless as the snow.
Awaiting, but his choice he sees,
Yet, still his fancy none could please,
Soft, fragrant sephyrs soon disclose,
The presence of the stately rose.
Whose superb beauty might adorn
A monarch's brow, but, ah the thorn,
Time hastened on with restless tide,
But still the youth could not decide,
Though nature's graces there combined;
None suited quite the critic's mind
One was too languid, pale or small;
Another florid, stiff or tall.
Some were of weak, inconstant sheen,
Or chilling with proud, haughty mein.
In each and all, flaw or defect,
His careful eye could soon detect,
Anon the sun's meridian ray,
In vain essayings slipped away.
Then deep regret his bosom wrung,
That he had failed when day was young,
To call with firm, decisive hand,
Some gem, as he had early planned.
But, as the evening shades drew on,
Each favouring chance was past and gone.
Others had sought and won and prized
What he had slighted and despised.
Decision now he may not shun,
The sunflower it must be, or none;
So, with keen rueful pang of pain,
He called at last the sunflower plain.

Moral—
Let all fastidious youths beware,
Lest the same luck, they likewise share;
Nor dilly dally thus with fate,
But choose life's partner 'ere too late.
For they must take when youth is past,
Not what they would, but can at last.

—Mrs. A. F. Calder.

WHY TEACH A CHILD TO PLAY.

This question will be answered in these columns during the next three weeks.

Watch For It!

A special committee of the Local Council of women met on Wednesday afternoon to discuss the steps to be taken for the establishment of supervised playgrounds in the city this summer. Great enthusiasm was shown and various plans discussed. The committee separated full of determination that at least one supervised playground will be fully equipped and running by July.

Most of the battles that are being fought in Flanders to-day were fought and won on the cricket fields of England's Public schools. What are these cricket fields but supervised playgrounds? Only in supervised play can a boy learn the double lesson of how to bear defeat and how to temper victory.

King George, in discussing the misuse of the white flag by the enemy, said, "They don't play cricket, do they?" Does your boy "play cricket?"

A South African agricultural society has offered a substantial cash prize for the best, cheapest and most effective means for pulling stumps.

A Systematic Attack On The Dardanelles

Von Buelow's Efforts Are Unsuccessful

"Queen Elizabeth" Is Again Turning Her Big Guns on Forts

Systematic Bombardment of Turkish Strongholds Has Commenced---Warships Will Relieve Each Other and Steady Pounding Away Will Prevent Defenders From Replacing the Guns Destroyed.

RAIN PREVENTS ACTION IN THE WEST

(Special Cable to The Examiner.)

LONDON, March 26.—The super-dreadnought Queen Elizabeth, supported by the battleships Triumph and Agamemnon and the cruiser Cornwall, has entered the Dardanelles and has begun a systematic battering of the Turkish forts at long range, according to the Athens despatches to-day. The Anglo-French will not again expose itself to any attack at close range, Athens cabled. The sinking of the battleships Bouvet, Irresistible and Ocean in the engagement of March 18th when the warships ran in close to the forts, has convinced Admiral De Robeck, who succeeded Admiral Carden after this reverse, that the Dardanelles cannot be forced by a spectacular dash. At a conference of the fleet commanders aboard De Roebeck's flagship, it was determined to begin a methodical and incessant shelling of the Turkish defences. From four to five warships will enter the strait each day, withdrawing at intervals, when they will be relieved by other warships. By pounding away in this steady fashion the attacking warships will keep the Dardanelles defenders busy and prevent the mounting of any new guns to replace those destroyed.

The gale that drove Rear Admiral Roebeck's squadrons out to sea has now entirely ceased. Ideal weather now prevails at the strait.

The London newspapers to-day printed more despatches from Balkan sources telling of panicky conditions in Constantinople, but the Berlin despatches reported life as proceeding as usual in the Turkish capital.

AVIATORS ATTACK NEUTRALS

LONDON, March 26.—Neutral vessels carrying cargoes to English ports as well as British merchantmen, are suffering from the new German policy of airship reprisals.

Captain Vogt of the Norwegian steamer Diana, reported that several German aviators attacked the Diana as she passed out of the English channel. They threw at least 500 darts a foot long, and sharply pointed on the end, upon the deck of the Diana. The crew took refuge below and aside from splintering the deck no damage was done. The owners of the Dutch steamer Medea, reported as sunk by German submarine U28 in the channel, has sent a representative to The Hague to urge a sharp note of protest to Germany.

THE DARDANELLES SITUATION

LONDON, March 26.—The Turks have placed a number of new batteries at the Dardanelles. Taking advantage of the four day lull in the operations of the allied fleet, new guns have been mounted at Erenku, six miles inside the strait, on the Asiatic shore, and Anglo-French warships are being heavily shelled. A hot fire came from Fort Kilid Bahr and from Namazieh, overlooking the Narrows entrance, when the war ships resumed the bombardment, according to Athens despatches to-day.

The Turkish batteries at first replied feebly, ceased firing altogether, and then broke out violently as the cruiser flotilla moved into closer range. Athens messages express the belief that the damage done by the warships on March 18 had been partly repaired by the Turks.

PARIS, March 26.—Heavy rains along nearly the entire battle-front are hindering the operations in France and Flanders, according to the despatches received here. The war office announced that several German attacks south east of Verdun and in the region southwest of Pont A Mousson, have been "easily and immediately repulsed."

A German attack against the French positions in the Lorrette Hills region north west of Arras failed to gain any ground.

BERLIN, via wireless, March 26.—The French and British have resumed their attempts to drive a wedge in the German line extending south from Verdun and cut off the German force at St. Mihiel. The war office announced this afternoon that strong French attacks near Combres, south east of Verdun, had been repulsed after a tenacious struggle. Fighting for the possession of the hills around Hartmannsweiler, in Alsace, continues, with the French infantry engaged in sporadic attacks. Elsewhere nothing of importance has been reported from the western battleground. The Russians have delievered several attacks east of Augustow in the lakes region, but have been checked at every point.

STEAMER TORPEDOED

LONDON, March 26.—The British steamer Delmira has been torpedoed by a German submarine, it was announced here this afternoon. The Delmira is a 3,450 tons steamer owned by the British and Chilean Steamship Co.

The Delmira was sunk in the Channel, the Admiralty has since announced. The German submarine commander accorded the crew very courteous treatment but allowed them only ten minutes to collect their belongings and take the boats. The crew was landed at the Isle of Wight, going later to Portsmouth.

VON BUELOW UNSUCCESSFUL

ROME, March 26. — The efforts of Prince Von Buelow, the German ambassador, to bring about an agreement between the Italian and Austrian governments, regarding the cession of territory, have definfiitely and finally failed, according to the Agenzia Nationale.

It is reported that Prince Von Buelow has resigned the role of mediator.

DEPUTATION FOR RADIAL AID MONSTER ONE

2000 Representatives From All Parts of the Province of Ontario Invaded the Legislative Halls This Afternoon

PRESENT MEMORIAL

TORONTO, March 26.— Never was this prosperous province of Ontario more largely or better represented than to-day, when 2,000 municipal and Board of Trade representatives waited on Premier Hearst in the interests of the proposed Hydro radial system. The pilgrims came from Windsor on the west, Cornwall on the east, Huntsville on the north and from almost every other important point in space lying between. The invasion began at a fairly early hour and continued until noon, when this army of public control transportation system representatives started for Queen's Park. At 1.30 the Premier received them to hear their request that the Ontario Government vote $3,500 for each mile of radial railway approved by the Hydro Electric Radial Railway Association.

Owing to the absence of President J. W. Lyon, Mayor Church, vice-president, led the delegation to the government.

At 1.30 this afternoon Premier Hearst and his cabinet stood on the first landing of the great stairway in the rotunda of the Parliament Buildings and received the largest deputation ever welcomed within legislative walls in Queen's Park.

Sir Adam Beck referred to the numerical and municipal strength of the gathering. He alluded to what governments had done for private roads, and believed that the people's radial system should receive at least equal encouragement. The success of the Hydro-Electric system from a power and light standpoint was well known.

RECRUITS ARE TAKEN ON FOR NEW BATTALION

Only Four Men Accepted Out of Fifteen Applications -21st Battalion Officers Here—Lindsay Detachment Goes Through

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

So far fifteen applications for the next "contingent" have been received at the local armouries, but only four men weathered the strict medical examination and were accepted, the others being rejected for different physical defects. One of these men, a member of the 57th Regiment, has tried to get away with four different companies, only to be rejected. He says he is going to try the navy next. Several more recruits for the battery were successful in passing the doctor. The next draft of batterymen will go down to Kingston early next week.

The Peterborough boys in the 25th Battery will have associated with them such well known athletes as Jack Tait and Jack Tressiders and Raymond Hughes, the Toronto runners, and Jack O'Connor of the Argonaut Rugby club, all of whom have enlisted in the 26th.

Major Cameron, A.M.C., is on duty each day at the armouries to examine recruits either for the intantry or for the battery.

Pte. W. McKim of the 21st Battalion, returned to Kingston on Wednesday after spending a few days at his home, 769 Water Street.

Capt. Gray and Lieut. Spriggs of the 21st Battalion, Kingston, are in the city to-day, in connection with the fund to provide a travelling kitchen and other comforts for Peterboro soldier boys in the second contingent.

Three Peterborough boys, Ptes. W. B. Grady, Ernest Hawthorne and Geo. A. Jeffries, are with the Port Hope detachment of the 39th Battalion. There are also seven Lakefield boys in the detachment, Ptes. L. Charlton, Roland Carter, Ernest Cassan, Wilfrid Hull, Fred Moon, Wm. Robinson and Stanley White.

The "Lindsay" detachment of the 39th Battalion passed through Peterborough at 10.45 o'clock this morning for the mobilization camp at Belleville. There were some 250 red coats on the train and the unit was accompanied by the Lindsay band, who will enable the 45th representatives to make an impressive entry into the Bay of Quinte city.

COMPLAINS OF 39TH'S QUARTERS AT BELLEVILLE

Local Member of the Detachment in a Letter to the Examiner Calls Barracks a "Fire Trap"

"HARDSHIPS TOO SOON"

Belleville, March 25, 1915.

To the Editor, the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The boys of the 57th, to whom your city extended such a hearty farewell, arrived in Belleville on scheduled time, and received from Col. Preston some very complimentary remarks upon their appearance.

This was, of course, very nice, and it was also very nice to be told dinner was ready. The boys had a sharply whetted appetite, and the 1½ or 2 miles' walk from the station added piquancy to their already lively anticipation.

But alas, anticipation was doomed to disappointment.

The meagre stew which was allotted to each hungry Tommy, was just enough to make him realize he was hungry, and four or five more hours of tedious hanging on, fitting with uniforms, etc. made him quite ready for supper at 5:30.

For this meal the menu consisted of ½-pint of sparsely sweetened, unmilked tea, three slices of bread and a piece of cheese the size of the dole of butter, usually in a "Chinks'" restaurant, and a spoonful of some mysterious compound designated as "jam."

But the canneries where we are stationed. What shall be said of them?

The boys shout, Are we downhearted? And the echo answers "Are we?"

Of all the disgracetul, I had almost said disgusting propositions, surely this is the worst.

I question if even the cubical space for each individual is up to requirements. But we will let that go.

The lavatory for 1,000 men cannot be said to be otherwise than a part of the dormitory.

The exit is something which would not be tolerated by the most easy-going building inspector, and to sum up briefly we are quartered in a "fire trap," and are in as much danger momentarily of untimely death from epidemic or fire as any whom are more fortunate than us, and have only to take a chance of a more romantic death in the trenches.

We are soldiers and we are men. We realize that we did not enlist for luxuries. We will not growl at hardships when they may be reasonably expected, but we do think we are being asked to encounter them a little too soon in the "City" save the mark, of Belleville.

Another private writes to say:—"Slightly crowded but fairly comfortable.

Fire Drill at School

While the Fire Department was at the King George School, East City, this morning, to put out a chimney fire, the pupils were put through a fire drill, and the school was emptied of the four hundred pupils in 43 seconds. There was no damage from the fire, but the rooms were pretty well filled with smoke.

KEEP YOUR EYE ON THE FIRING LINE SAYS GEN. HUGHES

Impossible to Train Troops in Small Centres Remarks the Minister and Then He Permits Over 700 Soldiers to Be Kept in His Home Town.

PATRIOTISM OR PATRONAGE?

The military situation at Lindsay, the home town of Major General Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, affords food for considerable study and the facts do not seem to be generally known. It may be surprising information that there have been over seven hundred recruits in Lindsay.

How they came there is an interesting story. The public will remember that when the organization of the third contingent was commenced and it became known that Kingston could not accommodate another battalion, there was a determined effort by the authorities in Lindsay, Cobourg, Port Hope, Peterborough and other towns and cities to have their respective municipalities chosen as mobilization centres. Deputations were sent to wait on Major General Hughes and Premier Borden, military officers visited all the towns and reported on the facilities offered and finally it was announced that the third contingent units would be mobilized at Belleville and Ottawa. At the same time Lindsay, Peterborough and other towns were named as organization centres and it was officially stated that Peterborough would raise a squadron of mounted rifles and an infantry company, Lindsay two infantry companies, etc. So far so good.

Recruited in Toronto.

The authorities in Major General Hughes' town, instead of confining their recruiting to their own locality and to the third division, have been sending recruiting officers to Toronto, which is in the divisional area and have been bringing down recruits by the car load, picking them up wherever they could and dropping them into Lindsay to be paid $1.86 a day by the government. Now this was a fine thing for the men themselves, a splendid thing for Lindsay, especially the hotels, but from a military standpoint the benefit is hard to see. There were, according to a Lindsay newspaper, 715 soldiers in Lindsay on Wednesday. Only some 250 of these left for Belleville to-day to join the 39th Battalion. The remaining 365 will continue to remain at Lindsay at the government's expense until such times as the new infantry battalion to be raised in this district is mobilised, whenever that will be.

Poor Training Facilities.

The facilities at Lindsay are not adequate to the training of men in any such numbers. The armouries are smaller than the local building and the latter was none too large for the proper training of the 120 infantry men who had been doing their preliminary drilling here. How five or six times that number have received any training in the town of Lindsay that will recompense the government for the money that has been paid them is a mystery. Probably the government has already paid out $70,000 in wages to these men. The pay roll of the 57th detachment of the 39th battalion amounted to about $10,000 in the three months here, so that it is not hard to figure out what it is costing the government to keep that number in Lindsay.

Lack of Discipline.

The Lindsay papers are evidently carefully censored, but from the many reports heard it is apparent that the discipline exercised over the men is, to say the least, not strict. The officers can hardly be blamed for this. How can they expect a handful of officers to enforce discipline over 600 or 700 men picked up here, there and everywhere, dumped into a town the size of Lindsay, boarding all over the place, many of them in the hotels?

Some Questions.

Looking over the situation the following question among others suggest themselves:

Major C. G. Thompson Is Recommended by Sir John French for Gallant Service in the Field

FATHER IN OTONABEE

A former resident of Peterborough, Major C. G. Thompson, son of Mr. Thos. Thompson of Otonabee, has been mentioned in despatches by Sir John French, for "gallant and distinguished service in the field." Major Thompson received his preliminary education here and is well known to many citizens. He is attached to the Royal Army Medical Corps and has had seventeen years' service, having been stationed in West Africa and in India. His many friends here will be glad to learn that his gallant conduct has received official recognition.

Hope Is Abandoned

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, March 26.—Commander Smith, in charge of the first submarine flotilla cabled Secretary Daniels that the mouth of Honolulu Harbour, where the F-4 had disappeared, was covered with fuel oil. The frail craft was operated by oil engines. The presence of oil on the surface indicated that either the water ballast tanks had failed to empty, and the oil tanks were dumped to lighten the boat or that the vessel had been smashed open and her oil had flowed out.

HONOLULU, March 26 — After hours of diving and grappling, hope was practically abandoned to-day of rescuing alive the crew of the submarine F-4.

FREE POSTAGE FOR SOLDIERS.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in discussing the increased postal rate to come into effect on April 15th, under the guise of a war tax, pleaded that letters and postcards destined for the soldiers at the front, should be free, not only from the war stamp tax, but from postage altogether. Hon. Mr. White, Minister of Finance, objected to this proposal. He thought "the friends and relatives of the soldiers would be only too glad to pay the additional taxation calculated to better support the soldiers in the trenches." It is all very well for Hon. Mr. White to jauntily lay burdens upon the shoulders of others, and to express the joy they will have in adding to the burdens they already bear. One would think that the friends and relatives of the soldiers have enough to bear — have made enough sacrifice in surrendering their loved ones, to the perils of war, to be able to forego the joy of the further sacrifice of placing a war stamp tax on a letter which may reach a son dead in the trenches or a grievously wounded husband in the base hospital. It is not enough, Mr. White thinks, that friends and relatives should pass sleepless nights and days, heavy, with anxiety over the possible fate of their soldier lads, but would "only be too glad" to bear an extra burden of taxation "calculated to better support the soldiers in the trenches." This seems to be a cold and calculating way to regard the feelings of relatives who have given soldiers to the battle line, a cavalier way of regarding the burdens that have to be borne by others. Considering the sacrifices that wives and mothers have to make, the harassing anxieties they have to bear, we might well spare them the indignity of taxing the only means of communication between them and those who place life and health in peril to fight our battles. If it is the proper thing to frank the correspondence of members of Parliament, including campaign literature, it certainly is a little thing to ask that the correspondence of our soldiers should also be franked. Mr. White could justify his tax on soldiers' letters all the better if he would assure that the revenue "calculated to better support the soldiers in the trenches" would be applied to cobbling the boots the Canadian soldiers were condemned to wear. However, the Postmaster-General promised to take Sir Wilfrid's suggestion of postage-free letters to the soldiers under advisement, and if there is a sincere desire to not add to the burdens and anxieties of those who have relatives at the front, the thing can be done. Our Canadian soldiers are doing splendid work in fighting the battles of the Empire, and are bringing credit and glory to Canada, and we should do our utmost to lighten the burden, and minimize the scarifice they and their relatives are making, and not intensify the situation with pin-pricking imposition of extra or other postage on their correspondence.

LOOTING THE WAR FUND.

It has been urged that the insistence of the Liberals in Parliament upon investigating the furnishing of war supplies has been a breaking of the party truce. It has been nothing of the kind; the principle of voting money for the war has been lived up to; but it was only ordinary business prudence to insist that the money voted for war purposes should be properly spent. And there has been ample justification of investigation. Not to speak of the disgraceful scandal of "rotten" boots for soldiers, we have the specific scandal of the medical supplies, in which a druggist's clerk, a protege of a member of Parliament, was enabled to make a profit of $9,000 —in a few hours; that is he made a profit in ten hours equal to the amount of his 15 a week salary if it had all been banked for ten years. The result of this investigation is that $6,500 of these profits—spoil—sounding to the clerk's credit in the bank, was returned to the government by W. F. Garland, M.P., for Carleton, under whose patronage the raid on the public treasury was made possible. This incident is mentioned as furnishing a justification of the investigation that has been demanded and made, and a justification for further investigation. Especially in view of the fact that a member of a special committee appointed by the Minister of Militia to purchase transports, a major at that, admits to the investigating committee that he signed an agreement, on receipt of $1,200, to use his influence with the Minister of Militia on behalf of a Motor Truck Company. As a result 25 of these trucks had been purchased at the very high price of $4,500 each. If the confidence of the government has been abused in these cases, it may easily have been abused in others; and it is to the interest of the government itself, as well as the country, that the whole matter of the purchase of war supplies should be aired, and means taken to provide that henceforth the money voted unanimously by Parliament should not be wasted on "rotten" boots or fancy prices for surgical dressings, and high-priced motor trucks. At the same time, when a purchasing agent admits that he accepted a bribe to use his influence against the interests of the government and country he was appointed to serve; and when under the patronage of a member of Parliament, exorbitant profits are made by the waste of the peoples' money, something more than investigation is indicated—exemplary punishment, so that others in positions of trust may be deterred from committing like acts of treason to the country and the soldiers in the field.

Hon. J. D. Reid, Minister of Customs, did well in moving that the evidence in the case be reported to the House with the recommendation that the case be referred to the Department of Justice. It is natural that extreme partisans should condemn the Liberals in Parliament for insisting upon investigation; but if they had not done so, these cases, and many others that may be revealed by further investigation, would have remained undiscovered, and we should have had the looting of the war fund going on secretly to the prejudice of all the interests involved.

"MAKING MONEY OUT OF MEN'S LIVES."

We sometimes hear hard things said about manufacturers—that they are anxious for profits and greedy for gain. But there is one manufacturer, and a Toronto one at that, who refused to make boots for the Canadian soldiers, not on a point of profit, but of conscience. He was Alfred Minister, of the boot-making firm of Minister & Miles, Toronto. He was before the boot investigating committee, and here is the statement he made:

"I came to Ottawa and saw the chief boot inspector, Col. Brown. He showed me samples of the boots I would be required to make. I asked him if those were the boots which were to be made for the soldiers, and he said 'Yes.' I said I would not make them at any price; I didn't want to make money out of men's lives. I felt I could not make the boots conscientiously for men going to war. I felt that a manufacturer has a certain responsibility. ibility."

And Mr. Minister's firm was on the "patronage list"—had been put on in 1913. In August he had received telegrams asking if he could make army boots, and when he went to Ottawa and saw the type of boots he was required to make, he had given the answer quoted above. The boots shown him as samples were inferior in manufacture and material, and generally inferior for the purposes intended. It is thus seen that the manufacturers are not all to blame for the "rotten" boots, but the judgment of the Department was greatly at fault. The samples from which boots for our soldiers were to be made must have been bad, when a manufacturer refused as a matter of conscience to make them—did "not want to make money out of men's lives." Other manufacturers must have had mighty poor judgment, or they were willing "to make money out of men's lives."

Premier Hearst's "Temperance" Record

Parliament Bldgs., Toronto, March 24.—Actual roll-call votes taken on restricting the evils of the liquor traffic in Sessions 1912, 1913 and 1914—12.

Hearst in favour.....None
Hearst against 12

Many temperance people are expressing their disappointment and surprised that Hon. Mr. Hearst has allowed the liquor interests to dominate so decisively in the new liquor license act and that in spite of the war he has done so little to deal at all effectively with the unusual conditions, and especially that he has let Ontario lag so far behind other provinces and countries in dealing with the liquor traffic.

A glance at the above table, however, showing Mr. Hearst's record on the temperance question for the last three sessions will show where he really stood.

In 1912 and 1913, Hearst voted against excluding club licenses from local option districts In 1913, Hearst voted against the motion protesting against the sale of liquor on steamboats. In 1913, Hearst voted against a majority in local option contests. In 1913, he voted against closing the bars on Good Friday. In 1913 he voted against the proposal to close bars and shops at noon on Saturday and at eight o'clock at night.

In 1914, on both occasions, Mr. Hearst voted against an enquiry into the Snider charges.

In the question of Good Friday closing the Government eventually did bring about this reform, but when originally proposed by the Liberals, it was rejected.

In addition to these votes where the actual roll-call was taken and Hearst's name appears, Mr. Hearst also voted against temperance proposals which were lost on a general vote, not on a roll-call. For example, in 1914, together with the Government, he opposed the motion to extend local option to counties, and also in 1914 he opposed the bill to close bars at Saturday noon and on all legal holidays.

Civilians of Cracow Leaving.

VIENNA, March 26.—Recognizing that the Russians will now bend their efforts to crossing the Dunajec river and besieging Cracow, the civilian inhabitants have been asked to leave that city unless they are prepared to "undergo the rigors of military life."

Great numbers of the inhabitants have decided to leave and all trains from Cracow are filled with men unable to perform military service, women and children.

Have Found Excuse.

BERLIN, March 26.—The seizure of the Dutch steamers Batavier V. and Zaanstroom in the North Sea by a German submarine, which took them to Zeebrugge, was due to the fact that both vessels had on board food and clothing for the Belgian army, it was officially announced here yesterday.

INTERESTING INFORMATION REGARDING RED CROSS WORK

TORONTO, March 25.—The relatives and friends of members of the Canadian expeditionary forces now on active service will be glad to learn that the Information Department of the Canadian Red Cross Society in London, England, has arranged to send to the head office of the society in this city each week a list of Canadian soldiers who have been reported as in hospitals, either in the United Kingdom or abroad. For some time past the relatives of wounded soldiers have been experiencing some difficulty in learning of the progress that these men are making, but this difficulty will be practically eliminated in the future.

Lady Drummond, in a letter written to Mr. Moel Marshall, chairman of the Executive, says: "The names with the address of next-of-kin, will be taken from the blue cards which are given to Canadian soldiers by the disembarkation officers at Dover and Southampton, who assign them to hospitals, and are filled in and despatched to this office (in London) immediately on their arrival at these hospitals. We shall also send each time the week's lists from the Record Office.

"As each card is received, the secretary writes to a visitor in the neighbourhood of the hospital specified, asking her to report progress. When the visitor's report comes in it is entered on an index card and can be turned up in a moment as enquiries are made. Our rule is to let the next-of-kin, if in England, know at once the whereabouts of sick and wounded soldiers, as it puts them immediately into touch, and it is easy for the relatives to ascertain the nature of the illness."

Members of families who have been notified that relatives are sick or wounded, but not of the hospitals where they are, may forward letters to them c/o Canadian Red Cross Society, 14 Cockspur Street, London, S.W, England. These letters will be re-addressed direct to the hospitals, thus avoiding the delay consequent on their being sent first to the expeditionery force in France, and then returned to England.

Lieut.-Colonel Gorrell, officer in charge of the Duchess of Connaught Hospital at Cliveden, England, in a letter writen recently to a friend of his in Montreal, makes an earnest appeal for maple products, both sugar and syrup. He says the hospital is filled to the doors with sick and wounded and everyone is doing his best to make the men happy. In connection with this appeal for maple syrup and sugar, Col. Gorrell says: "We opened a case from home the other day and found a few cakes of maple sugar in it. The men went crazy with delight when it was given to them. It was because I saw their great pleasure that I am emboldened to ask you if you will contribute some of your valuable product to the comfort of the sick and wounded. I suppose the spring tapping will soon begin."

It is to the farmers of Canada, especially in those provinces that produce the maple product, that this appeal will come home, and if they were each to give a gallon or more for this worthy object, they would be the means of bringing comfort and contentment to many a wounded Canadian soldier. Dr. George Fisk, of Montreal, has already promised to send a fair donation for this object, and he speaks very favourably upon the suggestion of Colonel Gorrell.

Those farmers or producers of the product in Ontario who are willing to give a gallon or more to the Canadian wounded are asked to send it to headquarters at 77 King St., East, Toronto. Those in the Province of Quebec are asked to write for particulars to the Secretary of the Provincial Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, 45 Belmont Park, Montreal.

In a letter to the secretary of the Quebec Branch Mr. Noel Marshall, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Society, says: "In the Province of Ontario the amount of maple syrup production is very limited, but I am making an appeal and am quite sure we will get a considerable quantity."

This is a splendid chance for the farmers of Canada to once more show their usual generosity when an appeal for a worthy object is placed before them. A large amount of this product will be needed, but the society believes the answer to the appeal will be prompt and generous.

This stirring poem below, is being enclosed in all garments and packages sent to the Canadian soldiers in the hospitals, and at the front, by the Canadian Red Cross Society:

"VIM"

Did you face the trouble that came your way
With a resolute heart, and cheerful?
Or turn your soul from the light of day
With a craven heart, and fearful?

Oh, a trouble's a ton or a trouble's a pound,
Or a trouble is what you make it;
But it isn't the fact that your hurt that counts
But only—how did you take it?

Your beaten to earth? Well, well, what's that?
Come up with a smiling face!
It's nothing against you to be knocked flat,
But to lie there—that's disgrace.

The harder you're thrown, the higher you bounce;
Be proud of your blackened eye!
It isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But how did you fight—and why?

And though you be done to death, what then?
If you did the best that you could,
If you played your part in the world of men,
Why, the critic will call it good.

Death comes with a crawl, or comes with a pounce,
But whether 'tis slow orspry,
It isn't the fact that you're dead that counts,
But only—how did you die?

AMOUNT TO BE RAISED IN 1915 IS $294,390.95

This Represents a Substantial Increase Over Last Year—Increase in Taxes Amounts to $21,316.33—Assessments and Rates Upon Which This Year's Taxes Will Be Based—The Striking of the Tax Rate Disposes of a Contentious Question.

Now that the battle of the estimates is over and the tax rate decided upon for the current year, the municipal government will have an opportunity of focusing its attention upon matters of seasonable importance. The season is fast approaching when the Council will find it necessary to prepare for the various civic works that are to be undertaken during the year. This includes the construction of sidewalks, sewers, roads and a thousand and one other things that subscribe to the maintenance and upbuilding of a rapidly growing city. It is a matter of several weeks since the first assault was launched upon the estimates. The opening round was staged in the office of Fire Chief Howard, and from there the fight was carried to the City Hall. The estimates for the Police Department and the Board of Education were laid away early in the struggle, once they had received the endorsation of the governing bodies under which they are classified. The main issue was wrapped up in the departmental estimates, such as the Fire, Water and Light and Board of Works Departments. The chief opposition being raised by those who had the least to do with the work for which the departments are responsible and who, in many cases, were the least qualified to adjudicate upon the departmental requirements by reason of their short acquaintance with the work. Despite the vast amount of criticism directed at the estimates, very little change was made and at Wednesday night's meeting of the City Council, the rate of 24 1-2 mills, as announced nearly two weeks ago, was struck.

A Statistical Feast.

To the intrepid taxpayer who is willing to commit a portion of his time to a perusal of the budget that was presented by Ald. Stratton, chairman of the Finance committee, a few comparisons are offered. It will be noted that the total amount to be raised for 1915 is $294,390.95. This represents an increase of $17,259.78 over last year's general rate, made up as follows:

Increase in revenue this year from taxes	$21,316.33
Increase in revenue from other sources	8,383.44
	$29,699.77
Increase in requirements under special rates	$12,439.99
Increase in requirements under general rates	17,259.78
	$29,699.77

The increase in the general rate is made up as follows:

Canadian Patriotic Fund	$10,000.00
Workmen's compensation	2,074.78
	$12,074.78
Increase in various departments	5,185.00
	$17,259.78

This brings the grand total up to $29,699.77.

Increase in Revenue.

To offset the increase in the requirements is an increase of nearly a million and a half in the assessment, which will fatten the revenue to the extent of $21,316.33 in taxes alone.

For the first time in many years the Separate school rates and the Public school rates are the same. Last year the Separate school rate was one-fifth of a mill lower than the Public school rate and the year before it was four-tenths of a mill lower. This year they are both 24.50. The Board of Education has asked for $84,200, while the Separate school trustees have asked for $10,960.

Following is a comparison of the rates:—

SENTENCED TO SEVEN YEARS

Desclôux Will Also be Degraded for Theft of Stores

PARIS, March 26.—Col. Francois Desclaux, former paymaster-general in the French army, charged with stealing military stores, was convicted yesterday and sentenced to seven years solitary confinement and military degradation. His name was ordered removed from the list of the Legion of Honor.

Mme. Bechoff, the wife of a German, in whose house the stolen goods were found, also was declared guilty by the court-martial and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. A soldier named Verges, who was accused of aiding in thefts, was given a one-year sentence. All the other defendants were declared not guilty.

Charles Philippe, counsel for Madame Bechoff, protested during the summing up against the imputations that his client had organised in France a spy service, and that at her country home she had installed cement foundations for the emplacement of German cannon. These charges, he said, were calumnious inventions. Mme. Bechoff's father and uncle, he averred, had fought for France in 1870, and a number of her relations were doing the same to-day. M. Philippe also referred to Mme. Bechoff's work as a nurse and as the directress of a hospital. Tears were dropping from the eyes of Mme. Bechoff as her counsel completed his address.

Deficit On the I.C.R.

House Spends Day on Estimates —Senate Enlargement Petition

OTTAWA, March 26.—With several committees meeting morning, afternoon and evening there was a slim attendance in the House yesterday.

At the afternoon sitting the railway estimates were taken into consideration. Hon. Mr. Cochrane stated that the I. C. R. showed a deficit of $33,000 for the ten months' period ending Jan. 31. He said that the deficit could have been avoided by laying off employes.

When the militia estimates were taken up last evening, Mr. Sinclair (Guysboro) and Messrs. Rhodes (Cumberland) and McCurdy (Queen's and Shelburne) read affidavits and counter-affidavits respecting the alleged mistreatment of the 17th Battalion, Nova Scotia, at Salisbury Plain.

At the morning sitting a resolution was passed providing for a joint address of both Houses to the Imperial Parliament asking for an amendment to the B. N. A. Act, so as to include the Senatorial representation of the west. A similar resolution passed the House at the last session, but the Senate put on a rider declaring that it should not come into effect until after the next general election. The Government refused to accept the amendment, but it seems to be generally understood that the resolution passed yesterday morning will be concurred in by the Senate as the Dominion elections will probably be over before the desired legislation can be obtained from the Imperial Parliament.

"TRUE TO THE KING"

Grand Opera House, Tuesday March 30th

BRANTFORD, Ont., March 30. — Mr. Alexander Loftus and a specially selected company will present the great romantic military play by A. Montague, with musical numbers as played in all the principal cities of Great Britain. The company includes Mr. George Sydenham, Mr Wilfred Jessop, Mr. Jesse Willingham, (Irish tenor); Mr. Robert Barret, Mr. Chas. Adams, Mr. Jos. Beasley, Miss Ceila Mavis (the Australian Song Bird), and the well-known emotional actress, Miss Grace Webb.

In the Camp Scene in the Romantic Military play "True to The King" the song written and composed especially for the Evening News, proceeds of which are devoted to the Evening News War Fund, is sung by the entire company, the chorus of which appeals to the heart of every home loving patriot:

"Tell my daddy to come home again, please, Mr. Soldier Man;
Tell my daddy to come home again as soon as e'er he can;
Tell him when I go to bye-bye I can hear the fife and drum,
And I dream about the war I don't want to sleep no more
Until my Dad comes home."

RECENT PURCHASES BY ITALY IN NEW YORK

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, March 24 — Heavy buying by Italy was the feature of the ten-day statement issued yesterday at the Custom House covering the period March 11 to March 20, inclusive. Shipments from this port to that country totalled 1,103,430 bushels of wheat; 48, 788 bushels of barley and 2,150 horses. The Netherlands came next with wheat exports set down at 838,698 bushels, while the same country took 263,440 bags of wheat flour. A considerable part of this wheat was for Belgium. England purchased 550,000 bushels of American and Canadian wheat. There also went to Enland 13,336 cases cheese. France took 38,228 quarters fresh beef and 141 horses. Exports of wheat, flour, barley, oats and rye showed in most instances a falling off.

Mrs. Duncan Walker Receives Letter From Secretary of Missions to Seamen

Mrs. Duncan Walker of the Women's War Fund committee has received the following letter from the secretary of the "Missions to Seamen," acknowledging the receipt of forty helmets and other articles for the comforts of sailors:

The Missions to Seamen,
11 Buckingham St.,
Strand,
London, W.C.
March 9, '15.

Dear Madam,— I cannot tell you how immensely grateful we are to you and the other members of the Women's War Fund committee of Peterborough, Ont., for your exceedingly kind thought and sympathy for the men engaged in the dangerous and exposed work of mine sweeping around the shores of these islands.

There are, as you know, an enormous number of men now employed in this work, and in the small patrol vessels, and our chaplains and readers are in touch with a very large number of them, at many ports from Kirkwall in the Orkneys, to Plymouth. We have already distributed a large number of woollies amongst the crews of these vessels, which have been most gratefully accepted and are immensely appreciated by the men. I am quite sure that they will be greatly touched by the gifts of warm things from the Dominion of Canada, and more especially, by the very kindly thought for their welfare and comfort, which has prompted the donors to send them.

The boxes have arrived quite safely, and we are sending on the contents at once to our chaplains for distribution.

Again thanking you most warmly, and wer are sending on the con-

Yours very truy,
Stuart C. Knox,
Secretary M.S.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

New Bill Prepares For Ontario's Good Roads Programme

Premier Hearst Says a Fuller Discussion Will Be Given the Subject Later —Hon. Dr. Pyne Introduces Measures to Keep Ottawa Schools Open

TORONTO, March 26.—An important feature in the Legislature yesterday was the introduction of a roads bill, marking the launching of the $30,000,000 highway scheme. It was actually a skeleton bill which Hon. Findlay Macdiarmid brought down, and any of the larger features of the work will be begun only by proclamation. The intention of the Government is to prepare the way for a rapid advance in 1916, and the purpose of this year's legislation is to arrange the county system so that no wrench will be sustained when the broader machinery is brought into action.

The report of the commission has been followed to some extent, although in future their recommendations will be more feasible when financial conditions brighten. The Government will advance 40 per cent. of construction and 20 per cent. of all maintenance costs on all work undertaken. In the former case there is an increase from the 33 1-3 per cent. formerly allowed.

To encourage municipalities to assume responsibility beyond their confines the Government proposes, upon application from a county, to arrange local boards of trustees to define suburban areas and to superintend construction. The municipality appoints one man, the county another, and in case of disagreement on the third the Government chooses. On such work the Government will assist up to 40 per cent., or a maximum of $4,000 per mile, with the other parties shouldering the balance equally.

The bilingual question was raised in the Legislature yesterday afternoon, and in response to the demands of the French-Canadian members, the Premier promised a discussion of the subject later in the session.

Mr. Hugh Munro, member for Glengarry, advocated racial as well as public and separate schools for Ontario. Schools should be established to suit the various classes in each community, he thought. In his riding he said that practically all the French-Canadians could speak English, but where it was impossible for two sections to agree on the matter of schools, they should be permitted to have schools of their own.

"Your suggestion is to permit racial schools as well as public and separate schools," asked Premier Hearst.

"Yes," replied Mr. Munro.

"Would you give Germans and Italians schools, too," interrupted Mr. A. H. Musgrove of North Huron.

"That is not an issue," remarked Mr. Munro.

Mr. Rowell said the question was one for non-partisan consideration. Mr. Munro had no doubt made his suggestions with reference to his own constituency. Personally he would deplore a division in the separate schools, and hoped some other solution would be found.

Hon. Dr. Pyne introduced in the Legislature at midnight last night several important amendments to the Ontario Educational Act.

An amendment to the Industrial Educational Act will remove several restrictions on admission and entrance to classes.

Dr. Pyne introduced a bill to meet the Ottawa separate school situation by the appointment if necessary of a commission which would keep the schools open and pay qualified teachers.

The trouble which settlers in newer parts of the province are experiencing with wolves, influenced the fish and game committee of the Legislature yesterday to institute bounty increases.

The bounty on the timber wolf is raised from $15 to $20 per pelt, and a $5 bounty will in future be paid on his lesser brother, the brush wolf. It was stated that in the Kenora district children are kept from school through fear of these creatures.

FUNERAL OF WELL KNOWN PHYSICIAN

Father of Mrs. R. H. Parsons Laid to Rest at Ottawa

The funeral of the late Dr. Wm. Ralph Bell was held yesterday afternoon to Beechwood Cemetery, there being a large attendance, which included many prominent in the medical profession.

Dr William Ralph Bell, one of the best known and oldest physicians in Ottawa, died at his residence, 151 Stanley Avenue, at a late hour on Monday evening. Dr Bell, who was in his eighty-third year, had been ailing for nearly two years, and had given up his practice about six months ago. He was particularly well known as a surgeon, and for many years was recognized as one of the Capital's best consulting physicians. He was born at Thirsk, and was the only child of the late Wm. Bell, Esq., of Brook House, Thirsk, Yorkshire, England. He came to Canada in 1866, and settled in Ottawa, taking up his residence in the house in which he died.

He had completed his medical courses before coming to Canada, being a graduate of Marshall College, Aberdeen University, and studied at a number of colleges on the continent. Dr. Bell was for many years a director of the Protestant General Hospital, and a consulting physician on the staff.

He was connected with the Masons and a number of other fraternal societies. He was for years prominent in military circles being an officer in the Governor General's Foot Guards, when that reziment was organized, and later for a long period was surgeon of the Ottawa Field Battery, retiring with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He was a member of St. David's Episcopal Church, being one of the original members of the church when the congregation was organized, twenty-six years ago.

Besides his wife, Dr. Bell is survived by seven sons, Dr. Wm. David Bell of Ottawa; Ralph, of Victoria, B.C., Ernest, of Cochrane, Alta.; George, of Revelstoke, Alta.; J. Morrison and T. Grayson, of Ottawa; and Major Archibald de Mowbray Bell, Officer Commanding the Ammunition Park with the first Canadian Contingent in France; also three daughters, Mrs. J. B. Donaldson, 157 Stanley Avenue; Mrs. D. C. Cadenhead, of Three Hills, Alta., and Mrs. Roy H Parsons of Peterborough, Ont.

B SQUADRON GOOD SINGERS

Peterboro Boys Shine in Providing Music on Route Marches

OTTAWA, March 25—Members of the 8th Mounted Rifles, C.E.F., are quickly hardening down to active service conditions. Early yesterday morning parade was called for all three squadrons and the men issued forth from the barracks for a route march into the surrounding district. Mud-spattered from head to foot the men continued their march over the country roads, which, as one officer stated, were practically a preliminary to active service in the trenches. The mud in some portions of the roads overtopped the boots, and the continued lengthy trek wrought havoc to the erstwhile neat and clean putties and breeches.

While passing through the country district the members of the squadrons whistled and sang while marching at ease. "B" Squadron especially distinguished itself for the chorus work in both patriotic and popular selections.

A rather amusing incident was given out by a gentleman in the city yesterday afternoon. He was driving up the driveway early in the morning and very soon fell into line with a large body of soldiers marching toward the Experimental Farm. He was unable to pass for a little while, and the noble steed contentedly plodded along behind the marching men.

"Do you want to pass?" said one of the soldiers in the rear rank of the long file.

The driver stated that he did.

"Well, then," said the soldier, "shout out as loud as you can LEFT INCLINE!"

"I did so," said the civilian, 'hard as I could yell, and on my word the whole line moved over and let me pass".

MEMBERS OF "B" SQUADRON ILL

Ooccording to letters received here from some of the members of "B" Squadron at C.M.R. at Ottawa a number of local boys are feeling very well. They are not very enthusiastic about the medical attention they are receiving, either.

One letter follows:

"I am feeling pretty rotten, but I guess I am fit for a few lines. About twenty-five per cent of the strength are affected with tonsolitis and I am of course one of the lucky ones, and the fun of it is you are not allowed to be up with the disease, so perhaps you have a slight idea of how I feel.

We were reviewed by General Lessard last week and, I think, made a pretty favourable impression. The names of those wanting to go home at Easter were taken to-day, and the preference will be given to married men first and there is only a small percentage of each Squadron allowed off at a time.

"B" Squadron has drawn the least number of penalties for serious offences up to date, which speaks well for them".

At the regular monthly meeting of the 57th Regiment Chapter I.O.D.E., yesterday, an interesting paper on the causes leading up to the present War" was read by Mrs Jamieson.

"An open letter concerning peace" which is published by the National Committee for Patriotic Service, was heartily endorsed by the meeting. In this letter, attention was drawn to letters and circulars in praise of peace, calling on women of the world to unite to stop the war. It was pointed out, however, that though we hate war and admit that there is always wrong at the root of war, we cannot unconditionally condemn all war, nor regard all belligerents as equally guilty". The war in which we are now engaged is no mere scramble for gain, nor quarrel over rights in which all parties are alike to blame. It is rather a struggle between the principles of law and force.

We have drawn the sword to defend the rights of the weak, the liberty of the many, and the pledged honour of our Empire. To sheathe the sword before this has been accomplished is to render useless the sacrifice of countless lives."

"Shall not the women of this country bear their part in this war, with the same high courage and steadfastness of purpose as animate our troops?

The annual meeting of the National Chapter will be held in Halifax, the latter part of May.

The Visiting Committee reported having made no visits.

The Oriental tea room has been largely patronized.

Under the auspices of the Chapter they will hold their last tea this (Friday) afternoon, when it is hoped a large number may visit them.

A hearty vote of thanks was passed to the management of the Oriental for the use of the room every week; to Mr. John, for his gift of tea, and to Mr. Grafton, for flags for decorating; also to Mrs. Hounsell for card.

Wool, for knitting, is still being given out, and the next 100 pairs of socks will be sent (by vote of the Chapter) to Shorncliffe Camp.

Several new members were received into the Chapter, and the "aims and objects of the Order" were read for their benefit.

The Chapter accepted with thanks, the kind offer of Miss Morrow, of the use of her house, for a social in aid of the funds. This will probably be held soon after Easter

FLEET IN THE DARDANELLES

Forts Near Narrows is Subjected to Violent Bombardment

LONDON, March 26.—The Anglo-French fleet has again entered the Dardanelles and opened a violent bombardment of the Turkish forts near the Narrows according to a despatch fom the island of Tenedos yesterday afternoon. Several forts near Kilid Bahr replied feebly as the warships steamed into action, but soon ceased their fire. The bombardment was continuing when the last word reached Tenedos.

"According to reliable information obtained from refugees from the Dardanelles, the Turks suffered enormous losses in the attack of the allied fleet on March 18. The greater part of the fortresses and powder magazines was reduced.

"The Turkish submarine defences are declared to have lost their military value, owing to the mines breaking adrift.

"Two British destroyers on Wednesday penetrated the straits to a considerable distance."

A despatch from Bucharest, Roumania, says:

"Turkey's entire fleet has sailed into the Black Sea to give battle to the Russian warships, according to a despatch received here from Constantinople yesterday. If successful in engaging and defeating the Russians, the Ottoman commander will then attack all the important coast towns on the Russian coast, the despatch adds.

It says that the Goeben, which was recently damaged, has been completely repaired, and that this battle cruiser, together with the Breslau, forms part of the Turkish fleet that has emerged from the Bosphorus.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles--Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

His Worship Mayor Buller left for Toronto yesterday afternoon. He anticipated a conference with the Hydro Railway Union officials, to take place last evening.

The Bye-Election.

Now that Alderman Johnston's resignation has been accepted, there is springing up in the North Ward, a crop of likely aldermanic candidates. When in Toronto on civic business, the Mayor usually hangs up his chapeau in the Queen's Hotel.

KEEP YOUR EYE ON THE FIRING LINE

How many of the 715 are Lindsay men?

How many officers are there on duty?

How many qualified instructors, and non-commissioned officers are in charge of the training?

How many hours' drill a day has it been possible to give each man?

Is Lindsay to be a mobilization centre for the fourth contingent, and if so is it possible to house the men together as is necessary for the sake of discipline?

If the authorities have been consulted in regard to recruiting outside the division?

If Linrsay was not considered suitable as a mobilization centre why should it be permitted to keep half a battalion there?

Why should Peterborough, the headquarters of a regiment of infantry, a regiment of cavalry and a brigade of artillery be allowed to send only 110 men, while Lindsay sends 350 and keeps as many more to receive a makeshift training?

"Out of His Own Mouth."

Bearing in mind the conditions that exist at Lindsay with so many soldiers on the salary list that the Lindsay Post last night remarks: "Recruits are being enlisted at the armouries in such numbers that the departure of several hundred soldiers will hardly be noticed," the remarks of Major General Hughes to the Mayor of Winnipeg recently are interesting, to say the least. Says the Minister of Militia:

"Fully appreciate your desire to have money spent in a few local cities, towns and villages, but please do not overlook the fact that these troops are untrained and IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO TRAIN THEM IN THESE CITIES, TOWNS AND VILLAGES. The motive in calling out these troops is the defence and honour of the Empire, and they would be worse than useless if untrained; they would be a menace. PLEASE KEEP YOUR EYE ON THE FIRING LINE IN EUROPE AND NOT ON THE LOCAL BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENTS."

And there have been over 700 troops in Lindsay, where it is impossible to train them, costing the government over $9,000 a week. This is the Minister's home town. It looks as if the "local business establishments" are blocking somebody's view of the firing line.

In the interest of cleanliness there has been invented a bottomless milk bottle, having paper caps at each end.

Never Know Destination

Germans to Yser District Go a Roundabout Way

LONDON, March 26. — The Daily Chronicle has the following from its Amsterdam correspondent:

"That there is a terror of the Yser for many German soldiers seems certain from accounts I have lately received of scenes and incidents in the far western corner of Belgium. In spite of all the frontier guards, there is still a good deal of uncensored communication with Holland, and news occasionally reaches us from the heavy heart of the German lines. From this it seems clear that large bodies of young and unseasoned men are never allowed to know the exact locality to which they are being sent when they entrain. It is never for the rail-heads nearest the Yser, always it is for some destination whose name is not synonymous with certain death, for such is the reputation of the Yser front. A roundabout train journey is arranged in order to delude the soldiers still further if possible. According to their officers, the enemy in front of them is always more than half-beaten and ready to run away at the approach of the ever-victorious Germans."

PRESENTED CUP TO THE WINNERS

No. 1 Company Home Guards Received the Trophy

A feature of the meeting of the Home Guard organization held in the old Baptist Church quarters, last night, was the presentation of the Nicholls Cup to No. 1 Company, the winners of the Inter Company Shooting competition. The presentation was made to Captain Pilling, who is in command of No. 1 Company.

On one side was engraved the following inscription:

"Peterborough Home Guard"
The Nicholls Cup
for Inter Company
Shooting Competition
1915.

The inscription, which was a work of art, was executed by Mr. J. Kennett of No. 12 Company.

Military Status For Home Guards

They Are to be Included Officially in the Reserve

OTTAWA, March 26—During the consideration of the estimate of the Militia Department in the Commons, last evening, Major-General Sam Hughes announced that the Home Guard organizations formed in several cities, notably Toronto and Montreal, would be given official recognition and status by being included in the reserve.

GERMANS SEE THEIR FINISH

War Over by August is Opinion of Despondent Merchants

LONDON, March 26.—The Daily Telegraph says in a despatch from Copenhagen:

"According to a prominent American business man, who was travelling last month in Germany, the commercial classes are very despondent regarding the issue of the war. German business men admitted to him they were convinced Germany certainly would be defeated and that it was generally believed the war would be over by August."

'Round the Stores

In the spring a young man's fancy—
That is, if he has a chance—
Leads him to a natty tailor
Who advertises pants.
In the papers every day.
Goes to purchase lingerie;
And she scans the ads of merchants
In the papers ev-ry day.
And of course there's many others
Who need things in spring, you know.
And the man who advertises
Is the chap who gets their dough.

Scotland Woollen Mills' Store.

Men's clothes this season show a definite progress over the lines that were shown a year ago. Changes are less spectacular, and more elusive, than those in women's garments. For this season, if for no other, the average man should carefully heed the diagnosis of those who have their fingers on the pulse of style.

Mr. F. N. Honrigan, the local agent for the Scotland Woollen Mills, has received his spring samples of British woollens for men's spring suits and top coats. The display is remarkable for its variety, and the beauty of the patterns, especially when the moderate prices are taken into consideration. The announcement which appears elsewhere in this issue is a real spring herald of cash-saving to men

At Gordon-Davies.

Housewives, who are watching the Gordon - Davies advertising every week, will find some interesting items for the table in to-day's menu list. Since mighty roast beef is a Canadian man's food, it accounts for the snap that runs in his blood; for generous good living's a step to what's good; so, the roast beef of Ontario is pretty good food.

In season and out of season, the Gordon-Davies people cater with painstaking regularity to the table needs of our housekeepers. Their week-end bill of fares in meats and groceries have always some special money-saving prices in both departments—Meats that satisfy and groceries that put good values into every purchaser's basket, is the kind of service this firm aims to give.

Made in Peterborough."

"Our office supplies are produced in Peterborough, by Peterborough workmen, whose money comes back to us." is the interesting legend to be seen in some of the business offices in the city. It is a reminder, not only of the encouragement that should be given to home products, but also of the wisdom of keeping our money at home that goes out for these office supplies. "The money comes back to us again," sounds like good business sagacity and foresight.

Now, then, all together!
Let's buy, boom and boost,
Peterborough City-made goods.

TURNBULLS

THE LEGISLATIVE CHAMBER IS CLOSED TO DEPUTATION

The Hydro Radial Proposes to Be Aired in the Lobby of the Ontario House This Afternoon---Peterborough is Well Represented

Peterborough is well represented in the big deputation that will wait upon Premier Hearst this afternoon in connection with the Hydro Radial Union's proposal, to ask the Provincial Government for a subsidy of $3,200 per mile to help build radial lines throughout the Province, including Peterborough County. According to all accounts the deputation will not be heard in the legislative chamber, but in the corridor and on the stairs.

What Sir James Did.

Mr. Hearst is reported as having explained that the late Sir James Whitney laid down the principle that deputations should not be received in the chamber during a session. Friends of Mr. Beck are saying that Mr. Hearst may not know that the late Premier met the Hydro delegation of ten years ago and invited that large and influential body into the chamber of his own accord. It was one of the things that the bluff and hearty statesman could do quite naturally. A recent incident, small enough on the surface, but somewhat larger in effect, is related as throwing some light on the situation. A farming representation is said to have found its way unaccompanied in to the chamber one morning with the result that its exit followed.

Large Representation.

This afternoon's audience with the Premier may be one of the most important of the kind in Ontario's history. According to Sir Adam Beck, the honorary president of the Hydro-Electric Association, Ontario will be represented from Windsor on the west to Cornwall on the east. Not only will the Radial Association, under whose auspices subsidies will be asked, be present, but the Boards of Trades of Hamilton, London, and other Ontario cities and towns will send delegates. When the Hamilton Board met the other day to consider the matter, fifty-eight out of the sixty members present said they would go. Toronto, keenly interested in radials and transportation generally, will give ample evidence of its sympathy with the movement.

Covers Fifteen Districts.

At least 250 municipalities have petitioned for a radial line. The association itself covers fifteen districts, as follows. These zones are:

The St. Lawrence district, comprising the counties east of Frontenac, west of the Ottawa River, Lanark, Leeds, Granville, Carleton, Russell, Dundas, Stormont, Glengarry, Prescott and Renfrew.

Hamilton district, comprising the counties of Wellington and Dufferin.

Stratford district, comprising the counties of Perth and Huron

The Peterborough Deputation.

Among those present from Peterborough and County are His Worship Mayor Buller, Aldermen Green, Dufus, Stratton, City Clerk Armstrong, Mr. T. F. Matthews, District Vice-President of the Hydro Radial Union, Mr. B. D. Hall, President of the Board of Trade, also Warden Kindred of the County Council, and a number of Councillors.

ORIGINAL IDENTIFIED

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Ont., March 26—When the Public Accounts Committee resumed this morning Frank Carvell, of Carlton, produced the original of the receipt given by Major McQuarrie for $1,200, which he received from Wylie, Ltd., for "using his influence with the Minister of Militia" to secure an order for three Gramm trucks in 1912

Mr. Carvell asked if the signature attached was Major McQuarrie's, the Major looked at it and answered "yes".

The receipt was dated Ottawa, April 22, 1912, and read as follows: "Received from Wylie Ltd. Dated April 22, 1912, twelve hundred dollars for my influence with Col. Sam. Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence, in securing from the Department an order for three Gramm trucks. This is in accordance with an agreement made with your Company, February 19, 1912."

Farmers Report That Sap Flows Freely

Farmers reported at the market today had almost opposite statements regarding the maple sap flow. The majority, however, said that the prospects were encouraging and most woods were running freely. Some state that many trees have been tapped this year, but the news covered only one or two sections, and no authoritative report can be given of the extent of the supply of maple syrup this spring from the neighbouring farmers.

A BEAUTIFUL POEM

Mrs. R. H. Leary, Dundas, Ont., has sent the following touching and well-known poem for re-publication:

THE SONG OF THE STRAITS.

Give us a song, the sailors cried
While o'er the bulwarks leaning,
When the heated guns, of their ships allied
Grew weary of bombarding.

There was a pause, a captain cried
We storm the forts to-morrow,
Sing while we may, another day
Will bring enough of sorrow.

They sang of love, and not of fame
Forgot was Britain's glory—
Each heart, recalled a different name
But all sang Annie Laurie.

Voice after voice, caught up the song
Until its tender passion,
Rose like an anthem, rich and strong
Their battle-eve confession.

Dear girl, he dare not speak her name,
But as the song grew louder,
Something upon the soldier's cheek
Washed off; the stains of powder.

Beyond the darkening ocean, burned
The bloody sunsets embers
While we in Canadian valley's learn name
How dearly love remembers.

Sleep soldiers, all in honoured rest
Your truth and valour wearing,
The bravest are the tenderest
The loving are the daring.

Traveller Was Arrested In Lindsay

And Accused of Declaring His Sympathies for Germany—Will Be Interned

LINDSAY, March 26.—A commercial traveller named George Livingstone was arrested here yesterday by the military police in connection with the local detachment of the 36th Regiment, Canadian expeditionary force.

Livingston, it is said, represents an Austrian house, havin gheadquarters at Toronto, and carries samples of men's furnishings. He is said to be a German, although he claims Switzerland as his place of birth.

He has been doing business here during the past few days, and it is said, between whiles, made inquiries at many places as to the number of soldiers stationed in Lindsay, and when they intended leavin gtown. It is also claime that he made certain statements that provoked suspicion. The local military authorities detained him for examination, and finally placed him under arrest.

On instructions from Col. Heming of Kingston, it is understood that Livingston will be taken under escort to Fort Henry.

Livingston is determined to test the legality of his arrest, and has secured the services of a lawyer to look after his interests. He claims that he has never declared his sympathies either for Germany or for Austria.

GIRLS' AUXILIARY OF ST. LUKE'S CHURCH

Hold Their Annual Meeting Last Night—Officers Elected

The annual meeting of the Girls' Auxiliary of St. Luke's church was held last evening at the home of Mrs. R. B. Rogers, Hunter Street east. A large number of the members were present, the president, Mrs. Beauclere presiding. Who is expected to command the Second Canadian Contingent. While heading a recent parade of ten thousand soldiers in the Toronto Division, he fell from his horse and was temporarily indisposed.

VISITOR TALKED ON IMMIGRATION

Mrs. Derrington Ham, national secretary of the Immigration Department of the Young Women's Christian Association, gave a very interesting talk at the local Y.W.C.A. last night. She discussed the work of the Immigration Department, explaining the methods and the work they are endeavouring to do among those who are coming to Canada. Part of her duties was to meet the large incoming ocean liners and assist strange girls to find the addresses they sought and to get them in touch with the Y.W.C.A. Last year she met personally over 2,000 girls in this manner.

Mrs. Ham had a number of views with her of the immigration offices in Quebec and pictures showing the types of girls who are coming to Canada.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon Mrs. Ham will give another talk in the green parlour at the local Y.W.C.A.. It is expected quite a large number will be present.

SERVED HIS TIME AT SEA NOW JOINS THE ARMY

Sample of the Men in Britain's New Army---The Plutocratic Private

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 15 - He wore a Victoria Cross ribbon won by a valiant father — a prerogative of sons whose sires have gained that hero's meed. Moreover, though a major's crown decorated his arm, the smooth-shaven, rubicund visage and whole bearing of the writer's vis-a-vis at the little table evidenced the naval man, despite his khaki. Hard by the cabaret band rattled off American rag-time in the crowded grill of the "Savoy."

"Canadian, aren't you?" enquired the service man presently, with a friendly nod. "Awfully decent chap from your country in my regiment. Name is Lafferty, comes from Calgary. He came over unattached, and I was jolly lucky to get him as a lieutenant in my company. I say, old Lafferty swears by us—the Lincolns. I know it is rather like asking one if he has ever heard of John Smith, of Chicago, but do you happen to know him?"

What a small world it is, after all! The Lincoln's new subaltern and the writer had been friends on the Alberta prairie years ago.

From Sea to Land.

The grey-haired major, as his appearance betokened, retired from the navy after years of service. He had fought under Lord Charlie at Alexandria. Now, despite his fifty-six years he was back under arms in one of the new battalions.

Soldiers flood the "Savoy. It is a favourite rendesvous for Canadians. "Up in town" for a few days. Among the colonels, and pseudo millionaires in the smoking room the other day a rather incongruous figure was a stalwart blue-jacket.

If Kitch. Saw It.

Service discipline and financial reasons generally cause all men not holding commissions to seek less pretentious places of refreshment. Horrors! Here was the red-faced jackie slapping Marc Klaw, the theatrical manager, on the back. Yet that autocrat of the stage only laughed and exclaimed: "Hello, Dick."

What! Here he was drinking with two captains of infantry, betimes pretending to stand at attention as became one addressing a superior officer. Shades of Nelson and Wellington! What would Kitch. say should he drop in from the War Office for a beer!

Truth to tell, Jackie is a nice young man, despite the fact that he looks like a full-blown salt in his blue serge. He drives a big car in times of peace and inhabits this hotel. He hopped right into the naval brigade as an ordinary sailor, just as plenty of Oxford and Cambridge men and sixth-form boys at Eaton and Rugby and other aristocratic schools have done.

Plutocratic Private.

"Waiter, here goes two days' pay; keep the odd pennies," declares the bluejacket Croesus, tossing half a crown in payment for the drinks. With that he lights a Havana cigar, pulls on a beautiful fur-lined coat of a type that Winston Churchill has not yet issued generally in the navy and which most admirals would ill afford, and strolls out. To-night, belike, he will go to dinner in a dress suit.

Another Notable.

At a little table in the corner sits Will Irwin, the American writer, whose stories are read by thousands of Canadians. Irwin is receiving great praise in England to-day for his splendid story of the Battle of Ypres. Sir John French has read it, and even the War Lord in his sanctum of the Whitehall has spared a quarter of an hour from his ceaseless labours to con the masterly epic which will go down in history to commemorate that heroic achievement of the British Army.

Irony of fate! Just the other day the Scotland Yard man employed by the British Government at Boulogne had orders to turn Mr. Irwin back should he venture to cross from England. That inscrutable department—doing invaluable work, too—intended to treat him just as the Canadian correspondents were treated. No correspondent to remain there unless specially permitted.

An Undesirable.

"Yes, I have heard that I am an undesirable," replied Mr. Irwin, with a smile, when a Toronto newspaperman informed him which way the wind blew at British base headquarters in Boulogne. "The allegation against me is all wrong, of course. I understand that some American writer has queered me there".

Warned of what lay in store, the American writer has kept aloof from France. Some day soon he will cross the Channel with every facility ensured by the signature of a certain great man whose hand he is likely to shake. The War Office knows how to show its appreciation.

Heard From Him.

Just as I am scribbling this, a newspaper man has dropped in. He knows Irwin and is just returning to Boulogne, being one of the coterie tolerated there by the War Office. He has three copies of the special brouchure in which the London Daily Mail has reissued Irwin's great story. At the top of one copy, surmounting Sir John French's full page picture, is a delicately satirical message to Scotland Yard's emissary at the French post, in the author's own handwriting.

"Dear Sergeant ——," it reads, "I haven't met you yet, but I have often heard from you.

(Signed)"Will Irwin"

FILM NOTES.

Lois Meredith, Theodore Roberts, James Neill, and Mabel Van Buren have been engaged for the picture version of William C. De Mille's melodrama "The Woman" to be produced shortly by the Lasky-Belasco studios. Miss Meredith will play the role of the telephone operator.

The Famous Players Film Company has acquired the motion-picture rights to Madeline Lucette Ryley's comedy, "Mice and Men," in which Sir Johnston and Lady Gertrude Forbes-Robertson were seen last season. Marguerite Clark will play Lady Gertrude's role.

At the Royal.

A Klan and Erlanger three-part film, "The Road to Yesterday," is the Grand picture feature for the rest of the week. It deals with the days when knighthood was in flower, and has many pretty scenes in its presentation. "The Mexican" is set in ball scenery and moves rapidly through strenuous action. "Buster Brown" shows a film of the pranks of the mischievous youngster, and "Josie's Legacy" provides additional comedy. The vaudeville act presents the Vincettes, a team of Australian comedy acrobats who show considerable ability in their work.

The Tiz-It.

Manager Clayton concludes the week with the fourth installment of the Trey o' Hearts, advancing the story considerably and holding the interest in this serial in good style. A two-act romance drama, entitled "His Heart, His Hand, His Sword," with J. Warren Kerrigan, one of the most popular film favourites in the lead. This is a particularly pleasing picture with strong action coursing through it. Three comedy films provide a liberal supply of laughs. The subjects are "When Their Wives Join the Reiment," "Traffic in Babies," and another. The Tiz-it presents the universal programme, having secured it for this city.

The Empire.

"The Straight Road," running at the Empire, suggests its story. In four parts it realistically portrays the struggle of a girl of the slums against numerous temptations to turn from the straight and narrow to the broad and easy road, with its tinsilled terrors. The setting of this film drama is taken from any big city with its present day conditions. Mary O'Hara never had much of a chance but in spite of environment she avoided the worst of its dangers. She meets Ruth Thompson, a wealthy settlement worker, and her fiancee, Douglas Aines. Ruth becomes interested in Mary's welfare and Aines sets out in the opposite track. The late Clyde Fitch, who wrote the play, weaves a thrilling plot that is well sustained and guaranteed to hold the interest through a maize of machinations on the part of Aines, and another woman who is jealous of Mary. However, the darkest hour precedes the dawn, even in the "movies". Mary is tried to the utmost, but is completely vindicated. "The Straight Road" has a strong climax, and throughout the many scenes has a strong dramatic appeal.

GUELPH WON'T ENTER UNLESS PRICE IS CUT

GUELPH, March 25—According to J. E. Reynolds, proprietor of the King Edward Hotel, who has been interested in placing the Erie franchise in the Canadian League in Guelph for the season of 1915, Guelph will not be represented in the Canadian League.

According to Mr. Reynolds, who is the spokesman for a syndicate of Guelph businessmen who proposed to buy the franchise from Geo. O'Neil the former Erie owner, wants too much for the club, and refuses to meet the Guelph men half-way. O'Neil demanded the same amount he paid Guelph for the franchise, $2,500.

Local businessmen offered him $2,-000, with the provision that he take five hundred dollars' stock in the Guelph Club. The Guelph men are still willing to take on the franchise, providing O'Neil will come to terms.

Down at Ottawa, the Peterborough Squadron of the 8th C. M. R. have adopted names for the corridors of their sleeping apartments. One is known as "Free and Easy," street, another as "Tipperary" street, still another as "Rough and Tough" street, and the fourth as "Tiz-It" street.

The Peterborough Garrison at the Armouries has shrunk from 300 Mouned Rifles and Infantrymen to four or five battery recruits and a couple of recruits for the new infantry battalion. Judging by the applications yesterday afternoon this number will be speedily augmented.

Pte. Footitt of B Squadron, 8th C. M. R., is home from Ottawa on leave. A number of other members of the Squadron will get a few days home, next week.

PLEASURE SEEKER'S SUGGESTION HAS BEEN ADOPTED

Mr. Editor,—Allow me through your valuable columns to express my appreciation of "Pleasure Seeker's" suggestion in your Tuesday evening's issue. We have adopted the suggestion of putting "a slide on the screen asking the ladies to kindly remove their hats." This rule will not be compulsory. The manager or ushers will not ask the ladies to remove their hats. Any lady wishing to do so may, to oblige people sitting behind her. I do not personally believe the hats of this spring will in any way block people's view, but, however, "Pleasure Seeker's" suggestion of placing a slide on the screen will be carried out.

Will "Pleasure Seeker" kindly call at Tiz-It ticket office and receive award of $1.00.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for space and also patrons who are taking an interest in the bettering of my shows, I am,

Yours respectfully,

Sam Hughes on Home Guards

Department Gave Them Its Blessing and Any Aid It Could With Its Left Hand

The following appears in to-day's Globe:

OTTAWA, March 25.—During the consideration of the militia estimates to-night Major-General Sam Hughes was asked concerning the policy of the department regarding Home Guards. General Hughes explained that they could not come under the militia act. There was nothing to prevent them from calling themselves Generals and Colonels — the Salvation Army did that. Some of them had bought rifles and for some a corporation had bought them. "Now," said the Minister, "we don't know what to do with them." The Minister stated that the department gave them its blessing and any aid it could with its left hand. "We are now, though, bringing them under the reserves," he concluded.

Comforts For The Soldiers

Canadian Kitchener League Sends a Box to Kingston

The Canadian Kitchenr League sent another box of comforts to the Peterborough soldiers in the 21st Battalion at Kingston, to-day. During the months of February and March the League has forwarded the local boys at Kingston 172 pairs of socks, 19 knee caps, 18 scarves, 22 pairs of wristlets, 13 helmets, and 31 "hussifs" as well as a number of flannel shirts. The League is aiming at furnishing 500 pairs of socks for the soldiers.

Moose Will Be Protected

Fish and Game Committee Increase Cost of Hunters' License

The Fish and Game Committee of the Ontario Legislature increased the cost of licenses for hunters of deer and moose. The license for deer has been raised from $2 to $3 and for moose from $5 to $7. The bounty on timber wolves was increased by the Committee from fifteen to twenty dollars, and a new five-dollar bounty was placed on brush wolves.

New regulations for duck hunters are that one man may not have more than one flock of decoys, the limit to be 25 and flocks of decoys must not be placed closer than 100 yards apart. The old regulations regarding muskrats were allowed to stand.

Would Not Allow An Investigation

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Ont., March 26.—An attempt on the part of Herbert Lennox, K.C., M.P.P., to allow the Liberals to fully investigate the public accounts of the province this morning in the Public Accounts committee, resulted in failure. Mr. Lennox is chairman of the committee and on two occasions when he ruled that Mr. Rowell and Mr. Bowman could ask questions of Provincial Auditor Hardy, the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, and formerly chairman of the Public Accounts committee, appealed to the committee, and by an overwhelming Conservative vote, succeeded in overruling Mr. Lennox.

OBITUARY

MR. ROBERT VANCE.

Death claimed a highly respected resident of Cavan township yesterday morning, when Mr. Robert Vance passed away at the family residence, "Pine Grove," Cavan, near Ida. The late Mr. Vance was in his 79th year. He has followed farming as an occupation during his life, and was considered a very successful farmer in his community. Though he had reached a good old age he was not ill until Saturday last, when he contracted a bad cold, after which he sank rapidly, passing away yesterday morning.

He leaves to mourn his loss four sons and three daughters. The sons are: R. S. Vance, Frobisher, Sask.; Rev. Wm. Vance, Vancouver, B.C.; John and J. Arthur Vance, at home; and the daughters are: Mrs. Chris. Howson, Stellar; Mrs. Frank Longh, Winnipeg, and Mrs. L. Dunbar, Montreal, Que.

The funeral will take place from the family residence on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock to the English Church cemetery, Cavan.

SOCKS FOR SOLDIERS.

The Canadian Kitchener League remind the people of Peterborough of the sock shower to be held at the home of Mrs. Thos. Barrie, George Street, on Friday, April 9, to provide socks for the soldiers.

Was Elected.

Mr. George D. Kirby was elected a member of the Sarnia City Council in succession to Alderman Gilmore.

Hostilities To Cease When Dardanelles Are Forced Party Opposed to Present Government to Seize Control ---Warships Have Again Entered the Strait to Protect Mine Sweepers.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 27.—A Rome despatch says that Prince Salah Eddine, nephew of the Sultan of Turkey, Ahmed Riza Bey, former Speaker of the Ottoman Parliament, and other prominent Turkish statesmen, are now in Switzerland on their way to Constantinople to form a new peace Cabinet when the Dardanelles are forced.

This is taken to indicate that the forcing of the strait is expected in some circles in Turkey at least. It shows that the party opposed to the Young Turks and the present Government has laid plans for such a contingency, and is preparing to seize control of the Porte when Constantinople is threatened by the allied warships. Prince Salah Eddine has been in Paris for some time, and from there has distributed peace propaganda. He opposed Turkey's entrance into the war, and has worked continually against German influence.

There are other signs that disquiet over the situation at the Dardanelles is growing in Turkey, and also in Germany. It is now known that the war party in Turkey and leading German military authorities believed that the allies would merely make a demonstration at the strait for political purposes, and then would retire when they discovered the strength of the defences. Consequently the determination to win to Constantinople, no matter what the cost, is said to have discouraged the Turkish Government, and to have caused alarm at Berlin.

VON DER GOLTZ DEPARTS.

Some idea of the situation at Constantinople is given in a news agency despatch from Athens which says that Field Marshal von der Goltz, former military Governor of Belgium and lately military adviser to the Sultan, has left for Sofia, Bulgaria. The same despatch announces that Gen. Liman von Sanders, German commander of the Turkish armies in Europe, has left for Andrianople. These events are attributed to recent developments in the Balkans. The relations between Turkey and Bulgaria have become strained within the past week and the Ottoman Government evidently fears an attack from that quarter.

Advices received from Berlin by way of Amsterdam state that the purpose of Field Marshal von der Goltz' departure from Constantinople is to journey to Berlin to present a special Turkish war medal to Emperor Wilhelm and also to hold an important conference with the Emperor. It is pointed out, however, that Turkey would not spare von der Goltz for a mere honorary mission at such a time and that a deeper significance must be attributed to the situation. In some quarters it is believed that his visit to Berlin is caused by the necessity of forming plans to cope with the Turkish peace party, which is unquestionably increasing in strength.

AIRMEN BUSY.

As to the actual operations in the Dardanelles the report continues to be vague. Warships have again entered the strait, but apparently only for the purpose of protecting mine sweepers and not to make an attack upon the forts. A despatch from Tenedos says that the Queen Elizabeth, the Agamemnon and the cruiser Cornwall, took positions inside the entrance on Wednesday night and remained there until morning, while mine sweepers were at work. The forts at Eronkoi and at Kilid Bahr fired several shells and the warships replied, but nothing more was heard from the fortifications.

"Owing to the damage caused by the shore torpedo tubes in the Dardanelles," says an Athens correspondent, "the allied Admirals in a council of war have decided to designate certain warships to fire at the forts at long range. Officers of the allied fleet declare to the correspondents that the forcing of the straits at all costs is certain." The despatch says there are now 1,000 German gunners in the Dardanelles forts.

A German aeroplane coming from the direction of Gallipoli Peninsula flew over Tenedos at 8 o'clock this morning. Crossing the island it circled around high above the Anglo-French fleet lying anchored on the western side of the island, after which the airman returned in the direction whence he came.

An Athens despatch says: Nearly all the troops have left Constantinople for Gallipoli. All the warships are in the Golden Horn excepting the Hamidieh, which is in the outer harbour, and the Goeben in Sonia dock. The latest arrivals from Constantinople report continued tranquility, but many Greeks have been expelled.

Missing United States Submarine F4 Has Been Located With Grappling Irons

DOWN 300 FEET

HONOLULU, March 27.—The missing submarine F4 will be raised to the surface to-day. Reports early this morning were that the vessel, located by grappling irons late yesterday, 300 feet beneath the waves, would probably be brought up before noon.

That the submarine is the steel tomb of her two officers and 19 men is accepted. Naval construction experts and divers say it is futile to hold hopes for their lives. Quantities of oil which came to the surface when the wrecking vessels found and attempted to bring the vessel to more shallow waters make it certain in the minds of all here that no life remains aboard the sunken craft.

The depth to which the vessel sunk is now accepted as the direct cause of the first United States' submarine disaster. Enormous water pressure at 300 feet, it is regarded as certain, crushed in her sides like an egg shell.

ENEMY WITHDRAWS THE STRONGEST PART OF FORCE

Into Hungary---Large Calibre Guns Mounted to Resist Progress of Invasion---Germans in Retreat

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PETROGRAD, March 27.—Air reconnaissances have established the fact that the Austrians have withdrawn altogether from Lupkow Pass in the Carpathians, and the Russians are now in unopposed occupation. There are signs also that the Austro-German armies are availing themselves of the drenched mountain roads to draw back into Hungary the strongest column containing the main German force. This is slowly changing its position south of Beskidas and Koziome.

It is expected that in accordance with the Budapest-Berlin compact the Magyars and Germans will now prepare a stubborn defensive campaign for the plains of Hungary. Large calibre guns have been brought to the Austro-German position at Yuz, where the cannonade is intensifying, with occasional fierce infantry fighting.

The strong Russian threat inside the border of East Prussia in the direction of Tilsit has had the desired effect of hastening Gen. Von Eichhorn's retreat from Suwalki. The shooting of the new German infantry is utterly inadequate. The young prisoners admit that they had had no musketry training until they entered their first battle.

The expedition to Memel destroyed a depot of contraband through which necessaries had been taken into Germany. Documents were seized disclosing the organisation.

Blood-stained Garb of Woman Gives a Clue

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, March 26.— A blood-stained woman's garment and a gingham apron, found at No. 360 Third avenue, not many feet from the scene of the murder of five-year-old Leonore Cohn, last week, were subjected yesterday by detectives to a microscopic examination. The result has been kept a secret. It was admitted Thursday night, however, an arrest was imminent.

Otto Spengler, resident of the flat below the Cohns, was brought forward as a man seen masquerading in woman's garments. Spengler himself has admitted this fact to the police. He conducts a press clipping bureau on the premises, where many girls are employed.

According to testimony brought out little Leonore and the three Spengler children frequently played together in the Spengler flat. Spengler was fond of Leonore and often objected to her being sent on errands at night.

Throughout the day a stream of visitors passed in and out of the Spengler flat. One of these was Alphonse G. Koeble, who defended Hans Schmidt, convicted of killing Anna Aumuller. Mr. Koeble remained in conference with Spengler for an hour and a half. He stated he was a client of Spengler's clipping bureau and had called to collect press notices.

Fifteen detectives, under Acting Captain Gildea, yesterday patrolled the block upon which the Cohns lived. Clues to the murderer have narrowed down to tenants of the house. No one was allowed to enter or leave the premises without official scrutiny.

Deputy Police Commissioner Lord stated yesterday, after a two-hour conference with Inspector Faurot and Captain Gray, of the First Franch Detective Bureau, that startling developments in the case might be looked for to-day.

Joseph Hoey, thirty-two, a bricklayer, of No. 200 East Thirty-second street, was held without bail yesterday on a charge of disorderly conduct. Hoep is short, stocky, and gray-haired. He was unable to give an accurate account of his movements last Friday.

According to Patrolman Saloman of the East Thirty-fifth street station, Hoey seized nine-year-old Nellie Palm, of No. 50 Second avenue, and dragged her half a block before she was released.

NEWEST EFFORT TO BRING PEACE

On the Part of President Wilson Has Been Futile—No Possibility of a Peace Compromise at the Present Time

MUST GO ON

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, via The Hague, March 27. —(Special cable.)—President Wilson's newest effort to bring about the cessation of hostilities in Europe has met with failure. Colonel E. M. House of New York, the President's personal emissary, will leave Berlin for Switzerland to-morrow, convinced that peace negotiations at the present time are out of the question.

Col. House conferred with Sir Edward Grey, England's Foreign Secretary, with French Prime Minister Rene Viviani and finally with Herr Von Jagow, secretary of German Foreign Affairs.

With all possible courtesy and appreciation of President Wilson's kindly interest, Col. House has been told that there is no possibility of a peace compromise at this time.

The date for closing the subscriptions to the new war loan has been extended until April tenth, enabling soldiers afield to subscribe.

DURATION OF WAR DEPENDS ON MUNITIONS

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 27—In a statement to the London Times, replying to a request for an interpretation of the phrase "a protracted war," which he used in a recent interview, Field Marshal Sir John French, Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in the field says:

"The protraction of the war depends entirely upon the supply of men and munitions. Should these be unsatisfactory the war will be accordingly prolonged. I dwell emphatically on the need for munitions."

Arranging To Carry Reservists

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 27,—The Italian Consul, says the Times Buenos Ayres correspondent, called a meeting of the agents of the Italian steamship lines and warned the agents to be in readiness for the possible transportation of sixty thousand Italian reservists.

"It is stated," the correspondent adds, "that one vessel already has left Buenos Ayres for Brazil to embark reservists."

Operates To Save Sight

Injured Physician Withstands Frightful Pain and Will Do It Again

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, Ill., March 26 — Dr. Walter F. Pauly, osteopath, of Kahoka, Mo., is in Chicago, awaiting strength to perform a second operation upon himself in order to save his sight.

The physician, now suffering from what he hopes is only temporary blindness, told of how he operated upon his forehead a month ago in spite of blindness and intense pain. Propped up in his bed at the home of his brother, the physician was able to smile over his misfortune.

"Like Mme. Bernhardt, I can say 'I'll never die unless somebody kills me,'" he laughed.

A month ago Dr. Pauly was adjusting a bone in the arm of a woman patient. Her husband, who was holding her well arm, suddenly released it, and the woman struck the physician a hammer-like blow across the left eye. The blow glanced to the nose, fracturing the bridge.

In a few days the sight of the right eye was gone, and soon afterward the physician became totally blind. The force of the blow had paralzed the crossing nerves of the two eyes.

In describing the operation he performed upon himself Dr. Pauly said: "With a small surgeon's knife I made an incision as close to the infected part as I dared, on the left eyebrow at the point closest to the nose. Then I took a small dentist's gimlet with a screw-like end, measuring in length about three-sixteenths of an inch, and began to bore. It took an hour and five minutes. The worst pain came when I attempted to withdraw the gimlet head. That was frightful. The operation was successful, and when I gain strength I will have to operate again on myself."

"The Canadians Never Budge" The Proverb In The Army

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, March 27.—An interesting speech by General Alderson, commander of the Canadian division at the front, delivered to his troops just before they went into the trenches for the first time, is given in a despatch from a Canadian official observer received to-night by the Militia Department by cable from the British War Office. The observer quotes General Alderson's address as follows:

"We are about to occupy and maintain a line of trenches. I have some things to say to you at this moment which it is well that you should consider. You are taking over good, and on the whole, dry trenches. I have visited some myself. They are intact and the parapets are good.

"Let me warn you, first, that we have already had several casualties while you have been attached to other divisions Some of these casualties were unavoidable, and that is war. But I suspect that some —at least a few— could have been avoided. I have heard of cases in which men have exposed themselves with no military object, and perhaps only to gratify curiosity.

"We cannot lose good men like this. We shall want them all if we advance, and we shall want them all if the Germans advance. Do not expose your heads ,do not look around corners unless for a purpose which is necessary at the moment you do it. It will not often be necessary. You are provided with means of observing the enemy without exposing your heads.

"To lose your life without military necessity is to deprive the State of good soldiers. Young, and brave men enjoy taking risks. But a soldier who takes unnecessary risks through levity is not playing the game, and the man who does so is also stupid, for whatever be the average practice of the German army, the individual shots, whom they employ as snipers, shoot straight, and screened from observation behind the lines, they are always watching. If you put your head over the parapet without orders they will hit that head.

Sit Low and Sit Tight.

"There is another thing. Troops new to the trenches always shoot at nothing the first night. You will not do it. It wastes ammunition and it hurts no one. And the enemy says, 'These are new and nervous troops.' No German is going to say that of the Canadian troops. You will be shelled in the trenches. When you are shelled sit low and sit tight. This is easy advice, for there is nothing else to do. If you get out you will only get it worse. And if you go out the Germans will go in. And if the Germans go in we shall counter-attack and put them out; and that will cost us hundreds of men instead of the few whom shells may injure.

"The Germans do not like the bayonet, nor do they support bayonet attacks. If they get up to you or if you get up to them go right in with the bayonet. You have the physique to drive it home. That you will do it I am sure, and I do not envy the Germans if you get among them with the bayonet.

"There is one thing more. My old regiment the Royal West Kent, has been here since the beginning of the war and it has never lost a trench. The army says, The West Kents never budge.' I am proud of the great record of my old regiment, and I think it is a good omen. I now belong to you and you belong to me, and before long the army will say, "The Canadians never budge.'

"Lads, it can be left there, and there I leave it. The Germans will never turn you out."

Eighty Charged With Disobeying Rules Against Zeppelins

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, March 27—The police are insisting on a rigid observance of the precautions against lights showing in windows. The commissary of the Pantin district issued 80 summonses yesterday for those who had failed to obey the rule that windows must be covered with double curtains.

To prevent due possibility of confusion it has been decided to retain the bugle call "en garde" as a warning signal, but to use the more joyful call known as the "breloque" as a signal that danger is over.

The order has been issued in six suburbs where Zeppelins are most likely to appear to extinguish street lights regularly at 10 o'clock each evening.

With wireless stations powerful enough to reach vessels in all Chinese waters, the government of that nation will establish a typhoon warning service.

THIS IS AN AGE OF SPECIALISTS

WHEN a man makes a life study of a subject, he becomes in the natural course of events a SPECIALIST. A. A. Fowler, after having taken his degree in Pharmacy at the Toronto University 14 years ago, has devoted his entire time to the study of the eye.

He is an Honor Attendance Graduate of the Best Optical Colleges of America, the Diplomas of which may be seen at any time hanging in his Optical Parlor.

His energy, thought, and ability are devoted exclusively to the examination of the eyes for defective vision, and the fitting of the proper glasses.

A most modern Lens Grinding Plant enables him to give the most accurate and prompt service.

Mr. Fowler's large practice necessitates the assistance of two Assistants who have been with him for years.

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Frost

"Honour?" queried Jerrold.

"Honour," repeated Green.

"Right you are. Slip off and we'll go back. Ring me up at the office."

The steam launch wheeled about as Green took his place in his own boat. Both men were satisfied. Each knew that the other would not go back on his word. The chief inspector's boat caught up with that which carried Foyle and Wrington just below Waterloo Bridge. They were threading the tiers of barges moored on the southern side. The group of detectives, with eyes ceaselessly watchful, passed comments in a low voice. They were not hopeful of finding their quarry yet. The search was merely one of precaution. Now and again one of the boats stopped and a man clambered aboard a barge, dropping back in a few minutes with a shake of his head. Foyle and Green left all this to the river men. They knew the work.

But, swift as they were, they made slow progress. Foyle glanced uneasily at his watch. It was already growing dusk, and the light on the bridges were reflected in fantastic shapes from the dark waters. The superintendent spoke in a low voice to Wrington, who jerked his head in sharp assent.

"You're right, sir. If we take the likely one now we can leave the others till we're finished. We'll get on. Let her out, boys."

The two boats leapt forward, unobtrusively stealing a course in the shadow of the barges. It was delicate work in the gathering darkness, for many times a lighter swinging at its moorings threatened to crush them; but always they avoided the danger, though to the untrained faculties of Foyle it seemed that the margin of safety was no more than the breadth of a knife blade.

At London Bridge they crossed to the northern side, and here the real hunt began. Wrington signalled for the lights to be put out, and they stole forward, two black blotches on the dark water. Once they narrowly escaped running down a Customs' patrol boat, and voices cursed them with vigour out of the gloom. Again, as they were about to pass under a mooring rope, some one yelled to Foyle to duck. The warning came too late, and he would have been swept into the water but that a ready knife severed the rope. Then there was a halt for a little, while the barge was secured again.

"There's a new caretaker on a tier of barges just above Tower Bridge," whispered Wrington tensely. "We'll try there first. Keep your voice low if you want to speak, sir. Sound travels a long way on the water. Ah, there it is."

Foyle had got good eyesight, but he could make out nothing but a smudge where Wrington pointed — a smudge emphasized by a tiny point of twinklinp light. The two motor-boats slowed down and approached, as it were, on tiptoe, one on either side of the vessel. As they came nearer a barge took shape at the head of a long string.

"Stop her," ordered Wrington. "Now, sir, will you board her with me. Get ready."

As they lurched against the sides of the craft the two leaped aboard. Green and Jones had come up from the other side. The superintendent gave a whispered order, and the other three ranged themselves around a small deck cabin, while he thrust open the door and entered. It was quite dark within, and a smell of stale tobacco smoke met his nostrils.

He stood still and lit a match, holding himself in readiness for anything. A figure was dozing in a chair at the other side of the cabin. Foyle crossed stealthily and quietly encircled the man around the waist, pressing his arms to his side with all his strength. The man, suddenly awakened, struggled vigorously.

"Keep still," ordered Foyle, doggedly maintaining his hold. "Hi, Green, Wrington! Give me a hand here, will you?"

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Powerful as he was and with his prisoner at a disadvantage, Foyle found it all he could do to maintain his hold until his companions broke through to his help. Even then it was no easy task, and the fight raged over the tiny cabin with the police hanging on to their prisoner like dogs to a wounded bear. No one spoke a word; there was only the quick panting of struggling men, the shuffling of their footsteps, and now and again a sharp crash as some piece of furniture overturned. Their very numbers handicapped the police in that confined space. Hands sometimes tore at Foyle and sometimes at the prisoner. The superintendent hung on with the tenacity of a bulldog, until a sudden lurch against the side brought his head sharply in contact with the boarding. Half dazed, he involuntarily relaxed his grip. The prisoner tore himself away and struck out viciously. A man fell heavily. For the fraction of a second a shadowy figure was indistinctly outlined in the doorway. Almost simultaneously, Foyle, Green and Wrington flung themselves in pursuit. They were too late. A soft splash told that the man had taken the only possible avenue of escape.

"Look lively with those boats. He's gone overboard," yelled Wrington. "Light up and get close in to the bank."

With the alacrity of men well used to sudden emergencies those detectives in the boats were at work on the word. One darted to cut off retreat to the northern bank, though the forbidding parapet of the Tower made it impossible for any man to land for a hundred yards or more. The other cruised cautiously among the strings of barges, watching for any attempt to land on one of them.

The superintendent had dashed to the stern of the barge and dropped into a small dinghy tethered there. At his word the others came running, and with Wrington at the oars they also crept about in determined search.

"It's hopeless," growled Green, in an undertone. "On a night like this we might as well look for a needle in a haystack."

"We won't give up yet, anyway," retorted Foyle, and there was an unwonted irritability in his tone.

"We've mucked it bad enough, but I'm not going to fling it up while there's a sporting chance of finding him. Do you think he'll be able to swim across the river, Wrington?"

"It would need a good man to do it in his clothes. The tide's running pretty strong. More likely he's let himself drop down below the bridge, and will try to pull himself aboard one of these craft."

Heldon Foyle rubbed his chin. Every moment their chances of catching the fugitive lessened. In the darkness, which the lights from the bridge and from adjacent boats only made more involved, there was little hope of finding the man they wanted. He had not been seen from the moment of the first plunge, and there were a score of places on which he might have taken refuge, and where, now that he was warned, he could dodge the searchers. He might have committed suicide, it was true, but somehow Foyle did not think that likely.

For two hours the search continued, and then Foyle, chilled to the bone, decided that it was hopeless. Wrington hailed the other boats, and the detectives returned to the barge. A light thrown into the tiny cabin disclosed amid the disorder an open kitbag full of linen. Green pulled out the top shirt and felt its texture between thumb and finger. Then he pointed to the name of a Westend maker on the collar.

"Yes, it's hardly the kind of thing a barge watchman would wear," commented Foyle. "We'd better take the bag along, and you can go through it at your leisure. The laundry marks will tell whose they are. You had better stop here, Wrington, and take charge. Find out whom the barge belongs to, and make what inquiries you can. Better have it thoroughly searched, and report to me in the morning. Use your discretion in detaining any one who comes aboard."

One of the motor-boats took Foyle and Green back to Scotland Yard. Both were glum and silent: Foyle because his plan had miscarried at the very moment that he had reached the keystone of the problem; Green because it was his natural habit. It was easy enough to realize now that the whole question was one of light. Had some one thought to strike a match while the struggle was going on there would have been no confusion, and the man would have been unable to get away.

Nor did the news that awaited Foyle at his office tend to make him more pleased with the progress of the investigation. A telephone message had come through the chief of the Liverpool detective force:

"Man found drugged in first-class compartment from London, bears warrant card and other documents identifying him as Inspector Robert Blake, C.I.D., London. Is now under care of our surgeon, and has not yet recovered consciousness. In no danger. He travelled from London with a woman fashionably dressed, dark hair, dark blue eyes. Am now endeavouring to find her. Can you suggest any steps we can take?"

A NEGLECTED COLD

WILL VERY OFTEN TURN TO CONSUMPTION.

Never neglect what at first seems to be only a slight cold. Perhaps you start to cough, a little irritation in the throat ensues, then it gets lower down, settles on the lungs and bronchitis sets in, and you start to raise phlegm of a greenish, yellowish color, and you cough persistently.

If you let the simple cold run it will surely develop into something very serious, and perhaps consumption.

On the first sign of a cold or cough go to your dealer and procure a bottle of

DR. WOOD'S

NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

A few doses will convince you that it is just the remedy you require.

Mrs. J. W. Pearsons, Amherst, N.S., writes: "Some time ago my daughter had a very bad cough which settled on her chest. She had no rest day or night. I gave her everything I could think of, but without doing her the least bit of good. At last I thought of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, so I got a bottle for her. She had not taken half of it before she got relief, and with the remainder she was completely cured. Now when any of the family have a cough we always know what to get for it."

Dr. Wood's is 25c and 50.

BAD OPERATION AVOIDED

By Timely Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Sowers' Own Statement.

Hodgdon, Maine.—"I feel it a duty I owe to all suffering women to tell what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. One year ago I found myself a terrible sufferer. I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached, I had no appetite and was so nervous I could not sleep, then I would be so tired mornings that I could scarcely get around. It seemed almost impossible to move or do a bit of work and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation. I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman. I had no pains, slept well, had good appetite and could do almost all my own work for a family of four. I shall always feel that I owe my good health to your medicine."—Mrs. HAYWARD SOWERS, Hodgdon, Maine.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

"See You In London," Said They.

THE HAGUE, March 26. — With the parting salute, "Will see you again at London when we march in," the Germans yesterday permitted a party of 41 English women and six children to leave Brussels for Holland under the auspices of the American Minister to Belgium, Brand Whitlock.

Many British women remain at Brussels, fearing to risk the mines on the sea voyage.

Gained 30 Lbs. in Few Weeks Never Felt So Well

Was Pale, Weak and Thin, and Had Nervous Headaches Before Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

It is truly wonderful what Dr. Chase's Nerve Food does for women who are weak, weary and run down in health. New, rich blood is what is needed in nearly all such cases, and because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new blood it brings cure — not mere relief, but actual cure—in the great majority of such ailments.

MRS. H. LAICH.

With an abundance of rich, red blood coursing through the veins the nerves are strengthened and vigor and vitality are carried to every organ of the human body.

With the nerves properly nourished headaches and neuralgic pains disappear, appetite improves, digestion is good, you sleep and rest well, and gain in strength and weight.

Mrs. H. Laich, Cannington Manor, Sask., writes:—"You will remember me writing you last spring. Well, I gave up my doctor and began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This treatment cured me rapidly and I was soon myself again. I was pale, thin and weak, suffered from stomach troubles and liver complaint, and frequently had sick, nervous headaches.

"I was surprised to find that in a few weeks' time I had gained 30 pounds in weight. I never felt so strong and well in all my life. Headaches never bother me any more, and I am grateful for the cure. If people would only give this medicine a fair trial they would certainly be cured."

Everywhere people are talking about this great food cure, which cures in Nature's way, by supplying the ingredients to form new blood, and so overcome weakness and disease by an abundance of vitality. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

WORTH REMEMBERING

Meat should not be kept directly on the ice; it draws out the flavour and spoils it.

It is easy to open glass fruit cans without the aid of a knife if a stove cover is put on top and allowed to remain there a few minutes.

If either shoe or stove polish becomes hard, soften it with turpentine and it will polish.

If you are using wax candles for a dinner and wish them to burn slowly so as to last throughout the evening, keep them in the ice-box all the afternoon before.

Try washing your linoleum and oilcloth with equal parts of olive oil and vinegar. Rub it well in and wipe off with a soft flannel.

To renovate taffeta that has become wrinkled and lacking in crispness, lay it over an ironing board and sponge it all over with alcohol, then hang it in the air to dry. Do not press it.

To prevent discoloration after a fall or a blow, take a little dry starch, moisten it with water and lay it on the injured part.

Black lace can be renovated by washing in green tea and then pin down carefully.

To clean raincoats, sponge with a mixture of alcohol and ether, to which a tablespoonful of common ammonia to a pint of liquid has been added.

Salt and lemon juice are said to cure chilblains.

All human history attests
That happiness for man—the hungry sinner—
Since Eva ate apples, much depends on dinner.

BEING NEIGHBOURLY

Necessity once compelled a widow with a growing family to remove from a populous city to a rural community. Relating her experiences afterward to friends, she commented thus:

"We reached our destination at nightfall. We were cold and hungry after our long journey, and a more homesick lot of human beings it would have been hard to find. On entering the ramshackle old farmhouse, we were greeted by the dust and dirt of former occupants. The attic was overrun with rubbish collected by generations long since dust themselves, while the yawning fireplaces were spread with the charred remains of previous fires. We were totally unprepared for them sights, as well as for the fact that not a friendly hand from the neighborhood was stretched out to give us greeting, as well as help. Not a voice bade us welcome. We might as well have been dumped bodily on an island cut off from the mainland or on the sands of Sahara, so far as any human kindness went. I then and there made a solemn vow," continued the speaker, "that from henceforth no stranger should ever move into this neighbourhood to suffer as we suffered from loneliness and neglect. Every new-comer—and there have been several since we came here—has found her house swept and garnished, while a loaf of bread and a couple of pies have found their way to the pantry shelves. Although I absented myself for various reasons, these new-comers could not fail to understand that some neighbour had thought of them, and had in this manner bade them welcome. My painful experiences have taught me this lesson: The time to show yourselves neighbourly is when folks need it."

HOW TO USE FACE POWDER

Applying face powder has become an art and there isn't one woman in a hundred who understands how to use powder properly. She either puts on too much or not enough. Usually she uses too little then she does not know how to remove it so that the effect remains without the powder showing.

First have the face perfectly clean and choose a powder that suits the tint of the natural skin. Powders are offered in six distinct shades. After these important points have been observed, dust the powder over the face with a generous hand, using a piece of absorbent cotton in preferences to a powder puff. This is more sanitary and is better for the skin.

Do not forget to powder the neck, ears and eyelids. Very few women ever think of applying powder to the eyelids. But when they are neglected the face looks queer and the eyelids become too prominent. Then with the finger tips gently manipulate the face, rubbing the powder in, not brushing it off, as the ignorant women will do. Rub under the eyes and up close to the hair, and for the eyebrows and eyelashes use a small brush. The face will look smooth and the powder will remain on a long time if this method is pursued.

A real hearty laugh is like a tonic to the system. It not only does the person good who enjoys it, but it does everyone good who hears it. Of such a laugh there is no criticism. But there are people who do not enjoy laughing, but laugh in a forced and artificial manner, and generally at the most impossible things.

SICK-ROOM DONT'S

Don't allow the sheets to become wrinkled.

Don't jar the bed by leaning or sitting upon it.

Don't allow stale flowers to remain in the room.

Don't forget to be kind and patient

Don't have temperature of sick room over 65 or 70 degrees.

Dont give the patient more water in a glass than he is allowed.

WHAT MOTHERS SAY OF BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Once a mother has used Baby's Own Tablets for her little ones she will use no other medicine. She quickly realizes the Tablets are an absolutely safe remedy and one that will give sure results. Concerning them Mrs. R. L. Wright, Pennabit, Sask., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my three babies and think so much of them that I always keep them in the house." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HINTS FOR THE HOME

Respect grey hairs—especially your own.

If you learn to say "No" at the right time, it will be of more service to you than to be able to read Latin.

When in hotels speak low. It's a gossipy place; even the rooms communicate with each other.

We like to pull the wool over the eyes of others, but if all the world were blind, what a melancholy sight it would be.

There are old ladies of both sexes.

TOMATO JELLY SALAD.

Stew one quart of tomatoes with one-half onion, little pepper, salt and butter. When cooked, strain, dissolve one box of gelatine in a little cold water, add to the hot tomato, pour into jelly tumblers half full, first wetting, and let stand over night. Serve on a lettuce leaf, after turning from tumbler, with mayonnaise dressing. This is nice in winter, using canned tomatoes and, if lettuce is unavailable, use shredded cabbage.

MAIDS OF HONOUR.

Line a dish with pastry, put in a layer of jam, then the following mixture: One pound butter, two tablespoonfuls sugar, beat together, then add beaten egg, mixed with three tablespoons corn starch and one teaspoon baking powder. Bake like ordinary pie.

POPULAR RECIPES

SALT FISH WITH TOMATOES.

Take half a pound of boneless salt fish, wash it and cut in pieces. Soak over night. In the morning put it in fresh water and bring slowly to a boil. Put a level tablespoon each of flour and butter in a stewpan, when blended add a cup of strained tomato, cook ten minutes, season to taste with onion salt, paprika and salt. Add the fish which has been drained, and set back where it will keep hot, but not cook, for fifteen minutes.

* * *

SALT COD BORDELAISE.

Soak the salt cod for several hours in cold water, which should be changed frequently; or the fish should be placed under the tap, which should be allowed to run slowly, thus ensuring fresh water. Then place it in skim milk and water, and let it soak for several hours longer, soaking it in all for twenty-four hours if possible. Tie the cod up into shape to fit a rather deep fire-proof baking dish; rub the dish over with a cut clove of garlic, put in equal quantities of olive oil and butter, with two washed and boned anchovies, a minced shallot, a little parsley, and two slices of lemon; Let this all cook till nicely blended, then lay in the cod, let it simmer gently for half an hour, and remove the strings tying it; now sprinkle it with browned breadcrumbs, pass the salamander over it, or place it in the oven till nicely browned, and serve.

BAKED FISH BALLS.

Pick fine a cup of salt fish, soak 20 minutes, and then put in fresh water and bring slowly to a boil. Put into a strainer to drain till ready to use. Pare and cut in pieces two cups of potatoes, boil in salted water till tender. Mash, add a little butter or pork fat, the fish and a beaten egg, and salt and paprika to taste. Beat thoroughly and form into cakes, not very thick, dredge with flour if sticky. Put a few slices of pork in a pan and when tried out a little, put in the cakes, brown them on each side. Drain, and garnish with slices of pork and hard-boiled egg. If you do not wish to use pork, butter the pan well and put a bit on top of each cake.

ITALIAN FISH PIE.

Trim neatly some fillets of any kind of fish preferred, and cook in the oven in a well-buttered baking tin for eight to ten minutes; with a squeeze of lemon juice, and a seasoning of white pepper and minced parsley, covering it all with a buttered paper. Line a raised pie mould with puff paste, and sprinkle it inside with cooked vermicelli cut up small; now pack it with the fillets of fish alternately with bearded oysters and cooked macaroni cut into short lengths (it will take about two ounces of macaroni for an average-sized pie), sprinkling each layer with a little very finely minced shallot, cooked vermicelli, white pepper, salt, and grated Parmesan cheese. Raise it rather high in the centre to make the cover sit well, moisten it with the oyster liquor, and add at the last a good third of a pint of cream, cover with puff paste, and bake. Turn it out of the mould, and serve with brown sauce round.

PARSNIPS WITH SAUCE.

Wash and scrape, or peel thinly, three or for parsnips; then cut them into slices or cubes, and put them into fast-boiling water (salted). Cook for about 20 minutes; then pour off the water and drain the parsnips. Into a clean saucepan put 1 ounce of butter or dripping, and when melted add to it a similar quantity of flour; cook this for a few minutes whilst stirring without browning and stir in gradually a pint of stock or water, together with half a pint of milk. Stir till it boils, and let simmer for about fifteen minutes; then put in the partly-cooked parsnips. Allow the contents of the pan to cook gently until the parsnips are quite tender, stirring occasionally to prevent them from sticking to the pan or burning. Season to taste with salt, pepper, or a grate of nutmeg. Before serving, add a few drops of lemon juice and, if liked, a little cream. Put the parsnips and the sauce on a hot dish, sprinkle over a little finely-chopped parsley, and serve hot.

PARSNIP CROQUETTES.

Wash and peel thinly three or four large parsnips, cut them into slices, and chop them finely, or else pass the slices twice through a mincing machine. Mince finely three or four rashers of bacon, and fry them in a saucepan with 1 ounce of dripping; then put in the minced parsnips, and stir over the fire for a few minutes. Sprinkle over about two tablespoonfuls of flour, or double the quantity of breadcrumbs, or, failing these, use soaked bread, free from crust, mashed up into a pulp. Mix well and moisten with a little stock or water, season with salt, pepper, and a grate of nutmeg. Let the whole cook gently for about half an hour, or until the parsnips are quite tender. Pour off any moisture, and spread the parsnip mince on a large plate or dish to get cold. Make it up into even-sized portions, and shape each on a floured board into croquettes (cork or ball shapes). Beat up an egg with a little milk or water; with it brush over each croquette; then reshape and roll in breadcrumbs. Have ready some hot frying fat, and fry the croquettes to a golden brown. Take up when done, drain and dish up. Serve hot.

CELERY AU GRATIN.

Trim and wash two heads of white firm celery (keep the leaves and trimmings for celery soup). Cut the white part of celery (the heart) into 3 inch or 4 inch lengths, and cook them till tender in milk and water seasoned with salt and pepper and a small blade of mace. Remove the mace, and rain the celery on a sieve or a cloth. Melt 1 ounce of butter in a saucepan, stir in ¾ ounce of flour, and moisten gradually with three-quarters of a pint of the liquor in which the celery was cooked. Stir till it boils, and let simmer for about ten minutes; season to taste. Butter an oblong fire-proof baking or gratin dish, and put a layer of sauce in it; upon this range the drained celery neatly; pour over the prepared sauce, sprinkle the surface with breadcrumbs and a little grated cheese; also a few tiny bits of butter here and there. Place the dish in a hot oven for another ten minutes, so as to brown the top nicely; then send to table by placing the gratin dish on an ordinary flat dish covered with a folded napkin or lace paper.

* * *

CRACKERS A LA CREME.

Allow two butter crackers to each person. Split them and spread with butter, sprinkle on a little salt, pepper, and mustard, and then cover with grated cheese. Put them in a buttered pudding dish, cover with milk, and, if convenient, let them stand half an hour, then bake about the same time or until brown.

HARD SAUCE.

Beat to a cream one-fourth of a pound of butter, add gradually one-fourth of a pound of sugar, beat it until very white; add a little lemon juice, or grate nutmeg on top.

IT is only now that certain brilliant deeds which took place in the earlier days of the war have come to light in full detail. The storming of the Chateau de Flandres by the Buffs is one of these. Particulars of this brilliant episode, which took place in October last, have just been received. Both the details for the above drawing and the notes which accompany it have been gathered from an officer who witnessed the action. The Chateau de Flandres is a big country mansion adjacent to the village of Radingham, in Northern France, a little to the west of Lille. The chateau was held by a numerous body of Germans when an order was given to carry the chateau by storm. The task of working up to the edge of the park which surrounds the chateau was successfully accomplished, and the final dash was made with extraordinary vigor on the part of the Buffs. Sword and revolver in hand, the officers led the men at a sprinting pace up to the very doors of the building and smashed their way in. In a very short space of time the whole building was cleared of Germans and the enemy's force in the park was thrust back.

French Skiiers Dislodge Germans in Fine Camp

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

BASLE, via LONDON, March 27, 1915.

Little has yet been told about the splendid work which has been done throughout the winter by the French skiiers attached to the corps of Chasseurs Alpins on the Alsatian frontier, giving the Germans no end of trouble. I have just been told of one of the latest achievements of the Chasseurs Alpins, in which the skiiers played an important part that led to the destruction of a German battery.

The Germans had determined upon a desperate effort to dislodge the French from Thann, where they are no more advanced now than they were at the beginning, though their labors have been enormous. All the mountain slopes leading up from the plains north of Thann were furrowed with trenches and barbed wire entanglements were spread everywhere to the summits.

In some places they had to use dynamite to blast the rocks in order to continue their tunnels and hollows around the mountains. The labor expended by the Germans in many places, in fact, is described as gigantic. At one spot on the safe side of a mountain slope the encampment of the Landsturm forces became a large village, in which they had canteens, low sheds for reading and recreation rooms during the long winter hours, beer cellars, for barrels of beer were trundled up the mountains, and the entire soldier village was lighted with electricity and supplied with telegraph and telephone service. The electric plant at the same time served as a power house for supplying the electricity for boring in the rocks and preparing the trenches. This may give one an idea of the huge labor undertaken.

French Prepare Attack.

When the French were fully informed of these preparations they undertook action on their side, and prepared a carefully elaborated scheme to drive the Germans from many of their comfortable positions. My informant belonged to the detachment that joined in the attack immediately behind Hartmannswellerkopf. They picked up a number of sentries along their route and took them prisoners, and the taking of these became quite a sport.

Every man was on the lookout to make a prisoner. Thus they reached the upper sources of the little stream of the Suits, often mentioned in official reports. The advanced forces of the column consisted mostly of skiers, who stealthily moved over the mountains in all directions and who seemed to have the gift of invulnerability. They were often fired upon, but they moved along so rapidly, like shadows over the snow, that they were rarely hit. As they approached Freudenstein, an eminence immediately behind the famous Kopf, there was not a hostile soldier in sight. It was a clear moonlight night, the slopes were covered with a perfectly white mantle of snow. Not a dark spot was to be seen anywhere betraying the presence of the enemy. They encamped under the pine trees and prepared to pass the night here.

Orders were given to light no fire nor to show lights, even from a pocket lamp. They ate a cold supper and cleared the snow around a small spot in order to lie down. At some distance to their right a German field battery, with its 77-millimetre guns, kept up a desultory fire throughout the night and was answered by a French battery of 75-millimetres from the opposite crest. They lay down, resting their heads on their knapsacks, sentries were posted, and a number of their skiers set out reconnoitring. The skiers disappeared, gliding along under the pine trees like shadows over the snow, and before long they were like tiny spots on the summits and then disappeared entirely.

In Contact with Outposts.

Several hours passed and there was no news, when suddenly there was an outburst of rifle fire. The outposts had come into contact with the enemy, but it was impossible to discover at what point. The noise of the batteries drowned nearly every other sound. Finally two of the skiers returned and reported that at a certain spot some two kilometres away they had suddenly come upon a German battery concealed in the snow. It was behind the ruins of the castle of Freudenstein.

For fear of betraying their positions the enemy's gunners abstained from firing, but an infantry company started in pursuit of the skiers and the Chasseurs Alpins and fired at them with their rifles. The Chasseurs Alpins and the skiers replied, and they saw that two officers were wounded. The Germans picked them up and carried them to the back of their lines. The skiers meanwhile spread the information about the concealed batteries and gave such precise indications that the battery of heavy guns stationed at a vantage point near Thann was able to open fire on the concealed German guns, which in half an hour were demolished and thrown off their carriages, and the ammunition wagons were blown up.

The whole company of skiers was ordered forward. In a few minutes they had covered three kilometres and were at the famous Sudel farm. They were within 100 yards of the German positions. The latter waited for them with a number of machine guns carefully concealed at various points. But the scouts had discovered these positions and the order was given suddenly to turn to the left and to take the crest near by, which was held by a small detachment of the Landsturm, who were smoking their pipes leisurely and who expected no attack on their side. They were surrounded and taken prisoners. From the crest the French troops had full command of the Sudel farm and they opened fire on the Germans, who an hour later retreated from their positions.

VICTORY OR DEFEAT—IT IS ALL ONE TO THE LIGHT HEARTED VIENNESE

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

LONDON, March 27.

"A Neutral Observer," reviewing in the Times the effect of the war on social life in Vienna, writes:—

"Vienna displays an almost corpselike indifference to the chaotic fires that burn luridly on the remoter confines of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. Polish Jews, refugees from Galicia, clad in their long black cassocks, their black hair arranged in ringlets that dangle in front of their ears, a half starved, sinister look on their faces, slink about mid the crowd of well dressed, well fed Viennese. Austrian officers in gala dress, with astrakhan collared tunics, immaculate in their braided uniforms, sit about the cafés in leisured nonchalance, vacant eyed, unconcerned, that under their feet the realm of the Hapsburgs is crumbling.

"To understand the Viennese attitude of to-day it must be remembered that traditional faith in the Hapsburg monarchy is so imbred in the minds of the people that nothing, not even the capture and subjugation of half the country, would convince them that all was not well. Vienna, though the capital of the Austrian Empire, appears to a foreigner even in time of war, not to represent in any way the feelings of the people outside her walls. Sufficient unto herself, she stares with haughty indifference at the destruction of distant towns and the raiding of Hungarian or Galician villages. Her state of mind appears to be not unlike that of the French nobles when in the Reign of Terror they were led to the guillotine.

I found no expression of sympathy, no feeling of commiseration for the thousands of homeless, penniless, starving Galicians. To regret that the province had been lost to Austria—for in Vienna Galicia is already given up as lost beyond recall. The inherent, fatalistic attitude toward events is partly accounted for by the Asiatic note in the Viennese character.

"It is well-nigh impossible to obtain a clear idea of the war in Vienna. The Viennese, one is told, are traditionally light hearted; though in the circumstances their mirth would seem to have in it something uncannily 'macabre.' In Vienna the war is accepted as a fait accompli. How it came about and what share they had in bringing it about seem to have been entirely lost sight of. Nothing could be more striking than the contrast between the Austrian Germans and their allies, the Reichsdeutsche (Germans of Germany). In Germany the united strength, the ardent faith of the people in the righteousness of their cause, blazes forth with an almost fanatical zeal. In Vienna I found the very opposite—a cold, lifeless indifference, an absence of all positive qualities, to an extent that is incredible. I looked in vain for any word or phrase that should convey to me a feeling of confidence in their administration or army. And though many seem to realize that in this struggle they have everything to lose and nothing to gain, it is, as far as I could discover, a matter of no concern.

"Among the official and ruling classes, all ideas are slavishly patterned on those of Berlin, regardless of the fact that they are in most cases in no way suited to the conditions existing in Austria. A characteristic example of this is the manner of their treatment of the English. I was unable to find any one who personally had any feeling of animosity toward England. English governesses are still retained in their positions, and English goods are still being sold in the shops and yet, in order to be in complete 'harmony' with Berlin, British civilians have been interned. With the usual Austrian carelessness, these civilians are confined in old, abandoned castles that have not been used for the last hundred years, without any arrangements having been made for the most rudimentary comforts. The result has been that the interned Britons in Austria have suffered and are suffering far more than civilian prisoners in any part of Germany.

The extraordinary complacency of all classes of the Vienese in face of the present disastrous war was emphasized strongly to me by a leading financier:—

"'No matter how bad conditions may be, we are surprised beyond our most sanguine expectations that the empire is standing the shock of this world war with such a display of cohesion and strength.'

"This opinion I heard reflected again and again by the most influential men in various walks of life.

"'In Vienna after six months of war we live our lives as usual. Our cafés, our theatres are crowded, food is still plentiful. We are a much stronger people than we ever realized,' a well known Deputy said to me.

"This is the most immediate concern of the majority of the Viennese and a satisfactory proof to them of their unimpaired power. That Galicia has been lost that Austrians, though outnumbering their opponents by three to one, have been driven headlong out of Servia, seems to be of less interest or less worthy of consideration than that in Vienna the bread is still white and the cafés are open.

"The war itself is discussed with apathy; war news, when not 'edited' in Berlin, is neither believed in nor considered seriously by any one. The 'exploits' of Austrian commanders are retailed as 'ten time' gossip in Vienna. The story of the Servian fiasco, as told to me by a Viennese, reflects truthfully the feeling of many toward their military efficiency.

"The Austrian general in command of the expeditionary force against Servia made every provision for a dashing advance and speedy conquest of the country, but forgot the commissariat, as did his staff and all the other responsible officers. In utter silence, unhampered by any showy impedimenta, the Austrian troops were able to overpower their opponents, and found themselves far in the enemy's country before it was realized that they were without either supplies or ammunition."

German Enthusiasm Gives Way to Cold Resolve to Win

Traveller in Fatherland Says Early Outward Confidence Has Disappeared, but That Nation, None the Less, Is Counting on Victory.

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

LONDON, March 27.

A correspondent who has been travelling in the east of France and in neutral countries, and who has had several opportunities for discussing the internal situation in Germany, writes that in many respects the impressions of his informants do not support much that has been published.

His first informant passed through Germany in October and returned from another extended tour only a few days ago. The thing that struck him most was that the feeling of confidence in the results of the war was less marked than during his earlier trip. Nobody, it is true, would listen to the possibility of Germany being beaten, but every kind of opinion was expressed that the war was going to be a long one and that Germany would have to put forth every effort to defeat the Allies.

"You will make a great mistake in England," he said, "if you think that with the cooling of the enthusiasm for the war the determination is any the less to carry it through at all sacrifices.

"Another thing that struck me," he said, "was the intense bitterness against England. When I was in Germany before England was treated with disdain, her 'little effort' was laughed at. Now the word seems to have gone around that if victory is delayed it is the fault of England. My own impression is that the government, feeling it is losing, is fomenting the fierce hatred of England among the masses for obvious political reasons."

With the exception of bread, there is no apparent shortage in any of the necessities of life. The public did not see in the regulations a danger signal. They regarded them as a masterly administrative move. This confidence in the administrative machine is as unbounded as it is in the military machine. What might happen in a few months' time if a military reverse came on top of increased economic pressure my informant would not venture to predict.

Another informant said that Berlin and Munich, among the cities he had seen, appeared particularly gay. He was in a small town in Germany a week or two ago when the bells suddenly started ringing and the residents flocked into the streets and cafés. He asked the Burgomaster what the trouble was. His reply was:—"There is good news from Berlin, and the Kaiser's watchword is, 'We must keep the people amused.'"

Life is to be kept normal in Germany, even to the cafés remaining open until one o'clock in the morning, no sign is to be given that the people are feeling the war, but next to the quietness of railway traffic the number of women in mourning was the most significant thing he saw in Germany. In a familiar restaurant, where in ordinary times bread is supplied in abundance he found a little roll served with the meal. When he asked for another portion of bread he was told that it could not be supplied alone. To get a second portion of bread he should have to order a "follow" of meat.

From what can be judged from these various informants the situation is this:—The government is determined that the people shall not feel the pinch of war so long as it is able to prevent it, and with the middleman under the iron heel these stocks of the necessities of life which remain in the country are being sold at normal prices. But the economic tension is bound to increase during the next few months.

Not an ounce of wheat is getting in through Switzerland now. The vast supplies seized by the German armies in Poland, Belgium and the occupied areas of Northern France on which they were able to keep the troops going for a time must be long since exhausted; the present German advance in East Prussia is over territory that is devastated and offers no facilities for an army to "live on the country." The tremendous increases in the German fighting effectives, though, of course, they do not represent any more mouths to fill, react on the civil population, which always has second place in the administrative mind.

In the meantime German credit is steadily dwindling. The 100 mark note in neutral countries will fetch only 91.50, and Austrian currency has suffered even more severely. On the other hand, the British 5 note stands at five shillings, or more, premium, while the value of the French 100 franc note has never been higher, the middle premium being about 3.50 to 3.60.

GIVE PART OF PAY FOR BEREAVED FAMILIES

(SPECIAL DESPATCH.)

PARIS, March 27.

A touching letter reached the office of the Paris Figaro recently showing the spirit of the French soldiers. It reads:—

"The non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the headquarters of the Third Cavalry Division have conceived the idea of sacrificing a part of their pay to aid in serving the families of such comrades who have fallen in the present war. In this endeavor the soldiers of the General Staff of the division have associated themselves with their subordinates. Only quite recently you (the Figaro) were kind enough to apportion to our division a number of gifts which were sent by your readers for the soldiers at the front.

"We know of no better way of thanking you for this kindness than by sending you this little subscription enclosed and asking you to distribute it in the best way possible. Please receive, therefore, gentlemen, the enclosed 434f. ($86), which has been collected in our midst, and this we wish to have distributed to the ... and orphans of the soldiers given their lives for our country."

LONDON, March 26.— Details concerning the gallant dash made by the Princess Patricia's Light Infantry at the end of February, when they succeeded in capturing one of the German trenches, were given to The Mail and Empire correspondent by Princess Patricia men who were seen in the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital at beachborough Park, near Shorncliffe, this week.

The concise report made by Sir John French under date 2nd March stated: "On our left a party of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry captured a German trench with great dash. After killing eleven of the occupants and driving off the remainder, they succeeded in blowing up the trench. Our losses were trifling." This brief statement was illuminated by Lance-Corporal W. Stewart Thomson, of the 4th Company, who was formerly in the Governor-General's Body Guard at Toronto. "The actual stromy party consisted," he said, "of the corps of snipers and thirteen men picked from the 13th platoon of No. 4 Company, mostly Winnipeg men. They were led by Lieut. C. E. Crabbe, a former resident of Montreal, and Lieut. Colquhound of Hamilton, who went to have a look over the ground at midnight and never came back. The snipers led the way, and the men of the 13th platoon followed. We crept up until we were within 20 yards of the enemy's trench, our bayonets being fixed as we crept up, and when the order was given to charge we leapt right into the German trench with but few casualties, so far as I know. Then followed the storming party with picks, shovels and bombs. The German trench was partly evacuated before they got in, but those who remained were bayoneted. Three prisoners were taken, and in retiring from the trench, in accordance with orders, two of the prisoners were killed by their own maxims. The Germans made a counter-attack, and there were probably altogether 60 casualties among the Princess Patricias. No. 2 Company is supposed to have resisted the counter-attack.

"The charge was made in the early hours, just before daybreak, and as it was full moon even then we could see fairly clearly and were fully exposed. When daylight broke we should have retired, but were somewhat delayed by the absence of Lieut. Crabbe. Major Gault and and Lieut. Crabbe had conducted the recognizance beforehand.

Lance-Corporal Thomson, who narrated this story, was shot in the shoulder just after the dash had taken place. He got under cover and waited, in his own words, "until the boys had finished the job."

Lieut. Crabbe, since the above was written, was reported wounded, while the bory of Lieut. Colquhoun was found when the British captured a German trench.

Profits Returned.

OTTAWA, March 26.—The case of Ernest Powell, the Ottawa drug clerk who made a profit of $6,300 on medical supplies to the Militia Department, came to a sudden end yesterday, when the committee received a letter from Powell, stating that he did not consider it honorable to keep the money and enclosing a check for the amount. W. F. Garland, M.P., stated that he felt a mistake had been made and that he had advised that the money be handed back.

Turkish Army Rallen.

LONDON, March 26. — A correspondent of The Daily Chronicle wires from Constanza:

"A bitter struggle between the peace and war parties in Constantinople may culminate in a revolution. The army is sullen and split. A meeting recently held with the intention of asking the allies for terms of surrender was broken up by Liman von Sanders threatening to shoot. German officers are resigning and leaving."

MARVELLOUS BALSAMIC ESSENCES CURE CATARRH
NO DRUGS TO TAKE—A DIRECT BREATHING CURE

Statistics Prove Ninety-seven Per Cent. of Canada's Population is Infested With the Germs of Catarrh

This disease is most dangerous owing to its tendency to extend the Bronchial tubes and lungs, where it causes Consumption. Unfortunately the people have had faith in sprays, ointments and snuffs, which can't possibly cure, and in consequence catarrhal disease has become a national curse. Science is advancing every day, and fortunately a remedy has been discovered that not only cures but prevents Catarrh. This new treatment "Catarrhozone" has sufficient power to kill the germs of Bronchitis, Catarrh and Asthma. It contains pure pine essences and healing balsams that go to the remotest part of the nose, throat and lungs, carrying health-giving medication to every spot that is tainted or weak. You don't take Catarrhozone like cough mixture—you inhale its healing vapour at the mouth and it spreads all through the breathing organs, soothing and curing wherever Catarrh exists. This is nature's way of supplying the richest balsams, the purest antiseptics known to science.

A sneezing cold is cured in ten minutes. A harsh cough is eased in an hour, the most offensive catarrh is thoroughly drawn from the system.

For Asthma and Bronchial irritation nothing can equal Catarrhozone—every physician and druggist says so, and we advise our readers to try this treatment if suffering with any winter ill. The complete outfit costs $1.00, medium size 50c., at all dealers.

Many Ways of Making a Living

Many ways of making a living when times are hard, have been adopted by live men who refuse to sit idle when the factory gates are closed against them. While some of these schemes tide over the bad period only, others have had within them the germ of future fortune. Some methods employed are fakes, consequently their run is short. Want of capital present cramping disabilities, but this handicap has been overcome by a prodigious use of native talent and "stick-ability."

Some of the Schemes.

Oyster and clam shells collected from fish stores and baked in ovens and crushed fine for poultry grit, occupied the time and fed the family of a blacksmith, during a spell of slack trade.

Making and selling gravy salt secured a competence for a tailor. He boiled together quantities of salt, corn-flour, water, pepper and burnt sugar until the whole was a thick paste, then, cut into small pieces and wrapped in wax paper he sold them from door to door.

With her last few dollars a woman purchased nainsook and flannel. She made up a set of swaddling clothes, sold them, and continued the process. To-day that woman does an international trade.

An upholsterer asked a lady if she had any old chairs in the shed. Upon finding that such was the case and that a plush curtain had also been discarded, he persuaded the lady to allow him to recover the chair with the old plush. Two hours later the man surprised the lady with the effects of his handiwork. She gave him a dollar. The same man on another occasion made a washable loose cover for a parlour chair out of an old sheet. This man is earning a good livelihood this way.

A widow made and sold covers for brooms, made from ticking. This device permits the housewife to complete the dusting of the ceiling without changing the duster.

Fire-lighters made of sawdust and resin started one man on the way to fortune, fireballs, made from coal dust clay and coal oil, another.

Dog biscuits made from horse meat and cheap flour is a lucrative means of starting business without much capital.

Pulling Wires.

Wire has been used in various forms. Making a pan holder that can be adapted to many uses was successfully tried by a Toronto man who was formerly a painter. Flower baskets, coathangers and the clips have also been made and sold by wire twisters. Speaking of flower and fern baskets reminds us of the country.

Gathering ferns and trapping small fur bearing animals, such as muskrats, squirrels, etc., may be done on the outskirts of most cities, but the returns from such industry are small.

Repairing discarded clocks, mending broken dishes and china with a solution made from celluloid, gum and vinegar, repairing bolts and locks and making keys have been tried and found useful means of keeping the wolf from the door. Cleaning cellars, beating rugs, cindering and rolling garden paths, cueting kindling wood, repairing fences, sodding lawns, moulding concrete blocks and cleaning cellars have proven profitable as employment when work was scarce and funds low.

Key tags are made with the aid of a small set of leather dies and blanks that can be purchased at the hardware store. A Montreal man has accumulated property by this means. Rat poison ejected into the runs of the rodents procures a living for another man in Montreal.

Soliciting business for lawyers and shoe repairers, collecting money debts for doctors and storekeepers, repolishing furniture, scraping old paint from floors, fixing window shades, wiring wooden chairs that have become loose in their joints, have brought grist to the mill.

A Cat Doctor.

Hobbies have been turned into coin. A widow, who loved cats, became so capable of tending to their needs when they were sick, that she now practises as a specialist. Dog doctors and poultry specialists are often amateur fanciers who have profited by experience.

Show cards with moveable letters for store windows can be made at home and bring in a profit.

Assisting foreigners in becoming naturalized citizens, selling home-made water filters, making dolls and teddy bears, patching leaky pans and kettles with the aid of a soldering-iron and solder have been means of keeping together home, wife, body and soul, when the lack of steady employment has brought the sting of poverty to the man.

Hundreds of men with the "gift of the gab" have tried street selling or "faking." Sometimes these stunts have been genuine and profitable.

The gyroscope top became famous after a Montreal man had demonstrated its amusing qualities on the streets.

The virtues of some collar buttons were unknown until men sold them at the street corners; but th lack of real novelties causes fakirs to find other means.

"Silver plating fluid," made from mercury and nitric acid is dangerous and useless, but has sometimes provided money for the fakir. "Rontgen Rays" made from two pill boxes and a feather, fooled people and fed a fakir.

Paraffin wax and coal oil method together was sold as a stain remover. Shellac and dissolved benzine was declared to be the essence of shine for furniture. These, although profitable at first, soon dropped from the market.

that are making you feel so badly. If so, you can easily tell. If your head feels dull and achy—if your back hurts nearly all the time—if your appetite is poorly and your tongue is coated—if the urine burns, is highly coloured and offensive in odor—if you notice a brick dust deposit or mucus in the urine after standing over night—then you certainly have something the matter with your Kidneys. THE BURDENS OF AGE.

The kidneys seem to be about the first organs to wear out and fail to properly perform their work. The result is weak, lame, aching back, rheumatic pains and failing eyesight. Many people of advanced years have recovered health and comfort by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They ensure the healthful action of liver, kidneys and bowels.

(By Sir Owen Seaman, Editor of Punch.)

Ye that have gentle hearts, and fain
To succour men in need,
There is no voice could ask in vain
With such a cause to plead—
The cause of those that in your care,
Who know the debt to honour due,
Confide the wounds they proudly wear,
The wounds they took for you.

Out of the shock of shattering spears,
Of screaming shell and shard,
Snatched from the smoke that blinds and sears,
They come with bodies scarred,
And count the hours that idly toll,
Restless until their hurts be healed,
And they may fare, made strong and whole,
To face another field.

And yonder where the battle's waves
Broke yesterday's o'erhead,
Where now the swift and shallow graves
Cover our English dead,
Think how your sisters play their part,
Who serve as in a holy shrine,
Tender of hand and brave of heart,
Under the Red Cross sign.

Ah, by that symbol, worshipped still,
Of life-blood sacrificed,
That lonely cross on Calvary's hill
Red with the wounds of Christ;
By that free gift to none denied,
Lex Pity pierce you like a sword,
And Love go out to open wide
The gate of life restored.

John Was Caught.

The parson on his way home one evening, to his horror and surprise, found the churchwarden sitting against a wall, his face radiating with good cheer and a frayed cigar clutched in his fingers.

"Dear me, John, dear me!" said the parson, "what ever do you suppose will happen to you if you go on like this?"

"Nothin', sir," said John; "nothin', if you (hic) don't tell 'er!"

Was Troubled With Choking Spells and Shortness of Breath.

When the heart becomes affected, there ensues a feeling of a choking sensation, a shortness of breath, palpitation, throbbing, irregular beating, smothering sensation, and dizziness and a weak, sinking, all-gone feeling of oppression and anxiety.

Many men and women drag along with weary step, and become worn out and haggard, when otherwise they could be strong and healthy if they would only pay some attention to the first signs of heart or nerve trouble. On the first sign of the heart becoming weakened or the nerves unstrung Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills should be given a fair trial and you will find that they will soon correct both these organs.

Mr. James Leard, Tryon, P.E.I., writes: "Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I had choking spells, and was troubled with weakness of the heart and shortness of breath. I tried three doctors but they all failed. A neighbor recommended me to try your pills, so I got a box and they helped me so much I have taken six boxes. I highly recommend them to all who are troubled with their heart and nerves. I was not able to do any work for over two years; now I can do quite a bit."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

UNLOOKED FOR PRAISE

Bravery of Britons Admitted by a Famous German Editor

The Die Zukunft, a political review edited and published in Berlin by Herr Maximilian Harden, printed the following:

"The English army has dissipated many of the prejudices of the meticulous against mercenaries. In the British Isles there are plenty of professions bringing in good money. If a man voluntarily joins the army instead of becoming a clerk, agent, games-professional, or jobber, then he has done so because he likes it; it is pleasure in his work that raises a man's achievements above the average. On German soil England is still grimly hated, but the German warrior spirit, just in its appreciation, has over and over again praised the courage, stamina, and shooting skill of the English.

The beggars are artists. Show them two fingers above the edge of the trench, and they hit the mark. Dumdum bullets? Certainly. Still, such things as bomb-splinters, arrows from the sky, benzol, "Minenwerfer" hardly appertain to the armory of pious knights. Tommy has amazed us. We thought that something ridiculous was on its way to us from the other side of the water. Now every one takes him seriously. Twice, three times wounded, he fights on. And when in a hand-to-hand struggle he has reached the end of his tether, he tears open his tunic and with bared breast flings himself on the glittering steel. Such fighting is worth the doing."

Turkey's Sure Doom

Turkey's decline as a military power has been extremely rapid. When the army got into politics six years ago it lost its discipline and patriotism. It is now a mere shell of its former self. Turkey was dragged into this war by Enver Pasha and by the German officers in high command in the Turkish army and navy. The people are out of sympathy with the Young Turk faction and weary of foreign taskmasters. The empire is on the brink of ruin.—New York Tribune.

DRESS WARM AND KEEP FEET DRY

Tells Rheumatism Sufferers to Take Salts and Get Rid of Uric Acid.

Rheumatism is no respecter of age, sex, colour or rank. If not the most dangerous of human afflictions it is one of the most painful. Those subject to rheumatism should eat less meat, dress as warmly as possible, avoid any undue exposure and, above all, drink lots of pure water.

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid which is generated in the bowels and absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine; the pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly, cold weather the skin pores are closed thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate this uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles causing stiffness, soreness and pain called rheumatism.

At the first twinge of rheumatism get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts; put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which overcomes uric acid and is beneficial to your kidneys as well.

The only man who should not advertise is the man who has nothing to offer in the way of commodity or service —and— such a person is a dead one—whether he knows it—or not.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, March 25.—What was termed "peace feeling" had much effect today in lowering the value of wheat. The market, which throuout the session leaned heavily to the bear side, was weak at the close and 1 1-4c to 1 3-8c under last night. Corn finished 7-8c to 1c off and oats varied from 7-8c decline to 1-8c advance. In provisions the outcome ranged from $ 1-2c decline to a rise of 7 1-2c.

Slackness of export demand was an element which received due notice from the wheat bears. Besides, domestic crop conditions seemed to take on a more favorable aspect, little being heard today of damage by Hessian fly.

Corn suffered from the depression of wheat. The big stocks on hand acted as a weight on the market and on, too, did the slowness of cash enquiry.

Liquidating sales in May option was the principal feature of the oats trade. Despatches from Texas said the oats acreage in that state was the largest ever known.

Liberal buying of May lard strengthened provisions. Weakness in the hog market seemed to be virtually ignored.

Senate Majority For Borden.

OTTAWA, March 26.—On the list of Senators issued yesterday there are 78 names, although the Government has now power to appoint 87.

There are six vacancies in Ontario, one in Prince Edward Island, one in British Columbia, and one in Manitoba, a total of nine vacancies. When the new Senate bill becomes law, therefore, the total number of seats to fill if no appointments have been made in the meantime, will be eighteen.

With the present vacancies filled the Liberal majority will be nine, and the new bill would enable the Government to secure a fair working majority.

FISHING FOR MINES IS PERILOUS WORK

Hardy North Sea Fishermen Locate Them and Shot From Torpedo Boat Does the Rest

The most dangerous job in the world is fishing for mines at sea and the person who fills it is the daring North Sea trawler man who leaves his shore cottage in a tiny schooner and comes back weeks later with a load of fish. Sometimes he doesn't come back. That's part of his reckless life. Winter and summer the fisherman goes out to trawl, risking the worst the sea can do to make his living. But now, having divested himself of his boots and oilskins for the blue and braid of naval service, he continues to risk his life that others may not risk theirs.

Hunting for German mines is a very business-like occupation. Once away in the quarter where the mines are supposed to be laid the trawlers part off in pairs. A strong cable is stretched across from one boat to the other. In the middle of the cable there is a "kite," a huge triangular weight, which keeps the cable well down in the water; the trawlers then sail apart, and go across the tides, the weighted hawser sagging down between them.

The mines might lie 16 to 18 feet below the surface. That is about the depth of the vital parts of a battleship's engine rooms, magazines and coal bunkers. A mine exploding there has a tremendous chance of doing deadly damage; if it occurred at a shallower depth the chances are that although damaged the ship would still remain seaworthy.

Watching the Drag Cable

Perhaps for days the trawlers sweep across the tides without result. Life aboard is more deadly dull than before; there is not even the excitement of hauling the gear and cleaning the catch two or three times a day. The skipper stumps round, filled with the pride of office, his hand returning at intervals to run along the trawl warp which stretches down like a silver band into the blue depths, to rise, a sagging, dripping thread to the other little boat running alongside at a distance. The skipper's hand is a sensitive organ, hard and toil-worn, but with the training of years he can distinguish at once the vibration of water from that caused by a foreign substance.

The mines are anchored from the bottom, and the passing cable cuts the mooring rope, which goes curling around the sweeping warp. The old man notices it at once. There is a sharp blast of his siren.

"They all!" he bawls across to his partner. They have struck a channel sown with death, and where there is one there are sure to be others. The trawlers slow down and steam apart. The connecting cable tautens, and slowly above the heaving water appears a small shining sphere.

The blast of his siren has warned the watchful torpedo boat in the offing. She comes up full speed, her crew glad of the chance of something to do.

Exploded by a Shell

The deadly mine is thrown off to float on the bosom of the waters, and drifts away, such a tiny glistening atom to carry such terrible consequences. The outwater of the torpedo boat makes a gleaming arc in the sun as she swidgs round for action. The trawlers fall away, and on the war vessel the bluejackets train a light gun on the mine. A crouching figure behind heads back, there is a bark, and a wreath of smoke from the boat's bow, and, in answering roar a huge column of water shooting skywards; the mine is exploded, dropping back into the seething cauldron of the sea in scattered fragments, its deadly purpose frustrated.

Sometimes, of course, the mine explodes when the hawser breaks its mooring. It heels over with the shock of contact, and before any one aboard the trawler is aware, there is the heavy boom of the explosion, while the trawler reels and shivers in every bolt with the concussion. But the effect upon the boat is no more than if she struck a soft sand bank; she loses her course, perhaps, but the skipper or his mate calmly ticks off the feat with the position.

At night the boats anchor or return to harbor. It is essential that the work should be done in daylight to be effected properly; the explosion of the mine must be thorough, otherwise, as a floating mine, it becomes even more dangerous, the tides carrying it right out of the course of its fixed position.

Risk! Those bluff, square-built sons of the sea will laugh at you. Their life is all risk. After all, it is only another kind of fishing. They fish for mines, instead of fish. And every trade has its risks. That is the philosophy of the mine-sweepers.

Shed Your Winter Complexion

Winter weather and Spring winds have roughened and hardened your skin and it requires care and proper treatment to bring back its rosebud freshness and softness. "Your Complexion" is the title of a most useful book just issued by the Nyal people and obtainable free from any Nyal Agency Drug Store. It tells all about this most important subject, care and treatment of the complexion, including full directions for massage.

Nyal's Face Cream is the one great toilet necessity for every woman. Greaseless, unperfumed, refreshing, it is the very best emollient. Get a 25c or 50c jar of Nyal's Face Cream and gently rub this deliciously perfumed cream into the face. It quickly cleanses and leaves the skin soft and fragrant, removing any irritating, burning sensation. All the injurious effects of sunshine and winds are permanently eradicated by its touch. Nyal's skin preparations, soap, powder, etc., are first aids to good complexions. 117a

All Nyal preparations are justly famous and none more so than Nyal's Face Cream which we unhesitatingly recommend. Call or telephone us for your copy of this book which contains most valuable information.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headache, digestive trouble and irritability. Neglecting you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Ostend's Picturesque Celebration.

One of the most picturesque ceremonies which have come down from the ages is the blessing of the sea, which takes place in Ostend on the first Sunday in July every year. Early on the day a procession forms outside the church of St. Peter and St. Paul, and walks slowly to the Digue de Mer, where a temporary altar is previously erected. A young girl in a white shepherdess dress, and carrying an effigy of the paschal lamb, generally leads the way, and behind her, on the shoulders of four fisherwomen dressed as brides, the figures of the Virgin Mary, with the infant Jesus, is born aloft. Behind the women come several boys attired as fishermen and carrying sea charts, anchors, fishing nets, and baskets. The procession is completed by lads supporting a large model of a ship.

AFRAID OF HOSPITAL

Young Despatch Rider Much Prefers the Thick of the Fray

The following is an extract from the letter of a motorcycle despatch rider, who last year was senior classical scholar of a college in the University of Cambridge:

I am very much down in the mouth at present, as my left hand is rather badly smashed up. A motor lorry driver lost his head rather badly, and sent me flying, about five days ago. I am afraid they will send me into hospital, though I have managed to stay with my company through four days' trekking, by riding on wagons and getting along as best I can.

Yesterday we got into touch with the enemy. We have had hell's delight going on all round ever since. Yesterday afternoon I saw one of the most perfect specimens of modern warfare I have yet seen. So far, where we have been, it has all been artillery fire and shells, the infantry fire occasionally just audible in front. Yesterday we were well in the thick of it. All round the barn allotted to us were batteries of R.F.A. and howitzers. There were three burning villages all within a mile of us. Infantry were letting fly on our left and front; on our right maxims were expectorating vigorously. Overhead aeroplanes kept up the excitement, with shrapnel bursting all round them, while all along the road were batteries of guns galloping into action. English and French cavalry doing ditto, ammunition and supply carts, and hospital cars winding up the picture, with the help of a few poor, miserable motor cyclists frantically endeavoring to get through with their messages.

Another of our unflagging sources of interest is a poor, elderly pompom dug up from a South African grave, which is used to fire at aeroplanes. This morning some of our people collared six Bosch's Head Hussars and three German infantrymen asleep in a farmhouse quite close to us. The infantrymen were overjoyed at being captured, but the Death's Heads looked rather glum. They are fierce-looking blighters, just the sort that plunder churches and burn villages. I should love to get one of their helmets for my rooms at Cambridge. The skull and crossbones are worked in on the front of their helmets most beautifully in silver.

The above picture shows a Torpedo Boat Destroyer and an Aeroplane. The Aeroplane has been in the country. It has just dropped a bomb on the deck of the war vessel, some of the crew have been knocked down by the attack, and some have jumped overboard to save themselves by getting aboard other boats that are near by. Can you find the faces of the fourteen men in this picture? Some will be easily found, others are harder to discover, but by patience you can promptly find most of them. You may win a cash prize by doing so. Many have done this. If you find the faces mark each one with a X, cut out the picture and send it to us together with a list of names on which you have written the words. We have found all the faces and marked them. Write down the names quickly and neatly as in cases of this kind, writing and neatness will be considered factors in this contest.

This may take up a little of your time, but as there is $200.00 in Cash and One Hundred Premiums given away, it is worth your while to take a little trouble over this matter.

We do not ask you to spend one cent of your money in order to enter this contest.

Send your answer at once; we will reply by return mail saying whether you are correct or not and will send you a complete prize list together with the names and addresses of the people who have recently received over $2,000.00 in Cash prizes from us, and will give you full particulars of a simple condition that must be fulfilled in order that you may qualify for one of the cash prizes. (This condition does not involve the spending of any of your money.)

Winners of cash prizes in our late competitions will not be allowed to enter this one.

This competition will be judged by two well known business men of undoubted integrity who have no connection with this Company. Their decision must be accepted as final.

Kaiser's Busts Ready For His Paris Entry?

PARIS, March 24—In the now deserted studio of the German sculptor Bensel, in the Boulevard Arago, the official receiver has made an extraordinary find, this being no fewer than thirty-eight busts of the Kaiser.

Bensel is the sculptor who two years ago questioned the right of the Salon jury to refuse the Kaiser's bust in view of the ension in Franco-German relations.

It is believed here that the thirty-eight busts were intended to take the places of busts of the republic in the mairies, public buildings, Hotel de Ville, etc., when the Kaiser should make his triumphant entry into Paris.

The Lost One.

Fred—"My dear Dora, let this thought console you for your lover's death. Remember that other and better men than he have gone the same way."

Bereaved One—"They haven't all gone, have they?"

THE SOLDIER SONS OF FAMOUS FAMILIES

Men Bearing Honored Names Serving as Privates—British Cabinet Well Represented

With one or two exceptions, His Majesty's Ministers and the leading Opposition statesmen are vitally interested in the war by the closest personal ties.

Of the Prime Minister's sons, Mr. Arthur Asquith had his baptism of fire at Antwerp with the Naval Division and Mr. Cyril Asquith is a subaltern in the 16th County of London Regiment. Mr. Gwilym and Mr. Richard Lloyd George obtained commissions in the 6th Royal Welsh Fusiliers, in which battalion the first named secured a captaincy.

Lord Crewe has sustained a heavy bereavement by the death in action of his son-in-law, Captain O'Neill. The Secretary for War has a nephew, Commander Henry Chevalier Kitchener, serving with the Grand Fleet and a brother holding a lieutenant-colonelcy in the army.

Mr. Churchill has a brother, Mr. John Churchill, a major in the Oxford Yeomanry. Mr. Masterman is married to a daughter of General Sir Neville Lyttelton, and Mr. McKenna to a daughter of Colonel Jekyll. The Chancellor, Sir Stanley Buckmaster, has a very near relative, Mr. Owen Buckmaster, who enlisted in the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, while Mr. Birrell, by marriage, can boast relationship to the three gallant sons of Lord Tennyson, two of whom, Lionel and Alfred, are in the Rifle Brigade, and the third is a midshipman.

The Lord Chief Justice's son, Mr. Gerald Isaacs, is in the Officers' Training Corps. Lord Beauchamp has two half-brothers, the Hon. Robert and the Hon. Henry Lygon, serving in the Grenadier Guards and Suffolk Yeomanry respectively.

Mr. Walter Long has a son fighting and Lord Lansdowne suffered a cruel loss in the death of Lord Charles Mercer-Nairne, his second son, while Sir Edward Carson's two sons are both with the colors, Mr. Seymour Carson being in the navy.

Mr. Balfour is intimately concerned in the doings of the Cecils, all four sons of the Rev. Lord William Cecil—Randle, Victor, John, and Edward—having enlisted, two going from Canada. Mr. Bonar Law's son Charles holds a commission in the Scottish Borderers; while that distinguished neutral, the Speaker, likewise sent a son to the colors as a private in the new army.

Convict Jos. Nicholas, drug dealer, told a New York judge that dope was easier to get in jail than out.

GALLOPING KITCHENS

Food Cooked For Five Hundred Men in Moving Vehicles

The "Galloping Kitchen" is what "Tommy" terms the ingenious cooking machine on wheels which accompanies troops on the march, and is capable of preparing hot food for 500 men whilst it is being pulled across country. It consists of a steel cylinder with a chimney, mounted on gun carriage wheels and pulled by a single horse. The substantial wheels of the vehicle enable it to be hauled over rough country without capsizing. The cylinder of the field kitchen is filled with several gallons of water, which is heated to a boiling point by a furnace underneath. At the rear of the boiler are fitted receptacles which contain the food to be cooked, and the heat given off by the boiling water cooks meat and vegetables as thoroughly as an oven.

The furnace is fed with wood, and the water for the boiler is heated before the kitchen starts with the marching troops. Thus the device does its work whilst the men are on the move, and when they halt the food is ready for them.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

CRISIS OF HIS LIFE

Great Sacrifice of Chinaman and Awe-Inspiring Sign in Vermilion.

By GERTRUDE MARY SHERIDAN.

A beautiful young girl sat at an open window gazing out upon a garden redolent with lilac bloom. Her hands were clasped, her eyes fixed upon the full moon sailing on in silver state, her soul's thoughts going forth to her lover at the other end of the world.

She was Agnes Norton, and the person upon whom her heart centered was Wade Latham, author and artist. Once he had been a law reporter, and quite incidentally had acquired information upon which rested the vital issues of the great Norton will case. The Norton family rose or fell on the final decision upon that noted litigation. It was now appealed to the highest court, and General Norton was sure that the newly discovered evidence of young Latham would turn the scales of justice in his favor.

It was natural on account of this that Agnes and Wade should meet. It was just as natural that they should love. They seemed made for one another. No engagement existed between them, but when they had last parted the farewell meeting of their eyes told both that their hearts and their future were united.

The Norton case would not come up for a year. Wade had an offer from a publication to invade central China and bring back something new from pen and pencil to give to the world. Success in this effort meant, further, a recognition by the Academy of Design. It was a great commission for a young man and Wade ambitiously undertook its execution.

A year had nearly gone by. Agnes had not heard from her lover for nearly three months. The will case came up in thirty days. The general was anxious and worried. And Agnes sat dreaming of Wade at the other end of the world.

She pictured him among great temples, far extending mountain chains, and splendid pageants of richly garbed mandarins—only the glare and glitter of a vast empire filled her mind.

At that very hour the man she loved was at the crisis of his life—a lone figure amid a lonely, lonely scene. He crouched behind the figure of an idol in a Chinese burial ground, pale, worn, his clothing in shreds, his only possessions the picture of Agnes next to his heart and his artist outfit and portfolio.

That was stored with sketches and memoranda of immense value to science and literature, but courage had died out of his heart. Thousands of miles from civilization, a friendless hunted fugitive, he was lurking in this forlorn retreat clinging with a natural love of life to a mere thread of hope.

He drew further into the shadow of his refuge as he made out two forms approaching. Wade was expecting somebody, but he was in a situation where he dared not risk confronting an enemy, and he knew that he was in danger of meeting such. Then at a glance he made out friends, and spoke to them in the native dialect, which he had mastered quite proficiently during his stay in the district.

Both the new comers were Mongolians. One poorly dressed advanced, kotowed humbly to Wade, and even kissed his feet—reverently, gratefully.

"See," he said, arising and waving his companion forward as though he were some supreme person—"it is the high one of our family—Kwang Lo."

Wade welcomed the lithe erect young man introduced. There was a quiet dignity that attracted.

"I am the sacrifice," he said simply.

"The sacrifice?" repeated Wade in wonderment.

"It is so," was the quiet reply. "It is you who a month since found the mandarin at the home of my kinsman. He was about to be beheaded for an infringement of the law. It was that or the payment of 1,100 taels. Without that, not only would he be executed, but his oldest son and all the others imprisoned. The sacred burial would be denied. It would take generations of prayers and sacrifice to wipe out the stain."

Wade well remembered the circumstances. Sheer pity for the unfortunate family had, indeed, induced him to part with nearly all his surplus stock of money.

"Since then," continued Kwang Lo, "the evil mandarins, thinking you had money, have imprisoned you in the hopes of winning the bribe ransom you could not pay. Last night my kinsman here enabled you to escape from jail. They will seek you everywhere. From here two hundred miles across the mountains to Beiro, if you are seen it is death for you. They have sent for me, the high one of the family, to get you beyond peril, and because for some great reason that is not our affair you must be in your native land speedily."

"But I have no means to pursue my journey from Beiro to Canton," suggested Wade.

"They shall be provided," quietly assured Kwang Lo.

"Master, within your case—open it," spoke the other native.

Wade did as directed. Kwang Lo reached within it and drew from among the colored pencils a wood encased crayon of vermilion hue.

"Give it to me," he directed. "It shall be your safe conduct. Within an hour be prepared for the journey."

True to his promise Kwang Lo reappeared shortly with a two-wheeled push cart holding a close wicker box top. Across this was a broad sheet of bamboo bearing some Chinese letters in bright vermilion.

In an instant Wade knew what this meant. The royal sign manual was always written with a vermilion pencil. Kwang Lo intended to force a safe conduct to Beiro by deluding the natives with that counterfeit awe-inspiring sign manual of the ruler of the realm.

A Friendless Hunted Fugitive.

Within that wicker covert Wade Latham was conveyed to Beiro. When it was opened he found himself in the rear room of a Chinese pawn shop. Kwang Lo had disrobed to the waist. Encircling him was a band of gold, heavy and unbroken, bearing native characters. There was some talk between him and the keeper of the shop. Then money passed, and Kwang Lo came forward and placed in Wade's hand a sum equal to two hundred American dollars.

"You are safe to travel hence to Canton," he said—"you can return to your native land as soon as money can speed you now."

"But this mone—"

"I have agreed to remain here the slave of the shop keeper until I am redeemed," was the explanation. "The family circlet, sacred for generations—surely my family will not allow it to pass to others at my death! But that is naught to you. I am the sacrifice—I glory in thus dying for the man who saved my kinsman!"

That sublime sacrifice was first in the thoughts of Wade Latham when he landed on American soil. As quickly as he could reach his friends more than the amount necessary to redeem Kwang Lo and his family talesman was transmitted to Beiro to make of him a free man.

In time to act as a witness in the great lawsuit and to see it won for General Norton, honored and famous through his contributions to science and literature, Wade Latham gained a still richer prize after all his perilous adventures—the hand of loyal, happy Agnes Norton.

Too Many Alien Signs.

BERLIN, March 26. — (Via London.)—The chief of police has issued a notice to all the Berlin precincts calling attention to the fact that trade marks, signs and inscriptions in English, Russian and French still remain on shop doors in Berlin, and ordering that all precincts report not later than April 30, that steps have been taken to "abate the evil."

"Wide circles of the inhabitants," says the order, "feel that their patriotic sentiments are injured by the regrettable lack of national consciousness evidenced by these conditions."

Lady Paget Dead?

BERLIN, March 26.—(By wireless to Sayville.) — Lady Paget, chief of the British Red Cross Mission in Serbia, is reported by a Serbian daily newspaper to have died from spotted typhus fever, according to a news item given out yesterday by the Overseas News Agency.

Turkey Wanted To Give In.

LONDON, March 26—The Evening Chronicle published a despatch from Bucharest, Roumania, to the effect that the Turkish Government recently decided to surrender Constantinople and the Dardanelles to the attacking fleet. The surrender was all but arranged, The Chronicle says, when at the last moment it was blocked by Germany.

Ambassador Morgenthau made a visit of two days to the Dardanelles last week.

Turkey Fears Bulgaria.

PARIS, March 26.—A Havas' despatch from Athens says the Turks are fortifying Lule Burgas, 45 miles southeast of Adrianople, and other places, in the fear of a possible attack by Bulgaria. An army is training at Lule Burgas under German officers. Heavy artillery has been sent from Constantinople to the Darkos district, on the Black Sea.

HAIR COMING OUT

Dandruff causes a feverish irritation of the scalp, the hair roots shrink, loosen and then the hair comes out fast. To stop falling haid at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a 25-cent bottle of Danderine at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it into the scalp. After a few applications the hair stops coming out and you can't find any dandruff.

HOME-MADE COMPLEXION CREAM.

Many women whose complexions are suffering from carelessness in the pursuit of outdoor sports are now having their faces treated with a lotion called by its inventor "Pearl Cream."

This cream is made of the best sheep's fat chopped into little bits and melted on the stove, and the liquid carefully strained. A drop or two of perfume is added, and attar of roses is excellent for the purpose, though jasmine, rose geranium, or any other scent may be substituted.

Now comes the beating up of the cream, which requires patience. Begin with a tablespoonful of liquid fat and add half a spoonful of glycerine to it, beating it slowly and adding the glycerine drop by drop. In a few minutes there will be a lovely cream, which acts like magic on a tired or ill-used skin.

Rules and Regulations of Field Crop Competitions

Information of Interest to Peterboro County Farmers Who Propose to Enter the Standing Field Crop Competition Which Will be Held in Peterboro County

The Ontario Government has given a grant of $24,500 for the Standing Field Crop Competitions and Seed Fairs to be conducted under the auspices of the Board of Directors of Agricultural Societies.

1. Nature of Competition.— Societies can enter in three kinds of crops which must be selected by the Board of Directors. Fields entered for each competition must consist of not less than five acres nor more than twenty, in one block; but for beans, potatoes, mangels, turnips, clover or alfalfa, the minimum plot must be not less than one acre. In order to encourage the pioneer farmers, in Northern Ontario the minimum for grain will be three acres, and for roots one-half an acre.

Selection must be made from the following crops, viz., Spring or fall wheat, white oats, barley, rye, Flint corn, Dent corn, peas, alsike clover, alfalfa, red clover, potatoes, mangels, turnips, beans, or any other staple crop produced for seed in Ontario.

2. Competitors.— Competition will be limited to those who are paid-up members of an Agricultural Society for the current year, and fields entered must be not more than fifteen miles from its headquarters. Competitors will be allowed to make entry in one society only, for one, two or three varieties of crop and only one entry can be made by each competitor in each kind of crop.

3. Society's Entry.—Societies desiring to enter this competition must notify the Superintendent not later than the first day of May, except for corn, the latest date for making entry of which will be May 15th. Not less than ten bona fide entries for each crop in any society will be accepted and competition will be limited to the first 200 societies applying.

4. Individual Entries.—All individual entries must be forwarded by the Secretaries to the Superintendent of Agricultural Societies, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, on or before May 25th, 1915, except entries for corn, which can be sent in up to June 15th.

5. A society may charge an entry fee of not more than one dollar for each crop entered by a competitor, but this is optional with the Directors.

6. The Government Grant to a society will be $50 for each crop, making a total grant of $150, if the society holds a competition in three kinds of crops. This amount must be supplemented by the society to the extent of $25 for each crop competition, making a total of $75 prize money for each crop, but Directors must decide whether they desire to take up one, two or three crops. The total expenditure by a society would be $75, if three crops are selected.

The amount contributed by the society of $25 for each crop can be counted in as expenditure for agricultural purposes in the yearly financial statement on which the regular Annual Grant is based. If an entry fee is charged for each crop the net amount paid by a society would be very small when the large financial benefits received by the members who take part in these competition are considered.

7. Seven prizes must be offered as follows for each crop: First, $20; second, $15; third, $12; fourth, $10; fifth, $8; sixth, $6; seventh, $4.

8. The Secretaries of Societies should urge competitors in the different crops to select, if possible the same variety of grain or other crops and to have them sown as nearly as possible during the same week. By so doing the crops will ripen more evenly and the work of the judge be facilitated.

9.—Judges.— The Ontario Department of Agriculture will furnish judges free of charge.

Grain Exhibit at Provincial Winter Fairs.—Substantial cash prizes will be offered by the Government for two-bushel sacks of grain, one and one-half bushels of potatoes, and one bushel of mangels, turnips and corn in the ear, at both the Eastern and Western Provincial Winter Fairs, and also for sheaves, the competition for which will be confined for the first five prize winners in the Standing Field Crop Competitions Full particulars will be furnished later.

Sheaf Exhibit at the Canadian National Exhibition.—In addition to the above, arrangements have been made with the Directors of the Canadian National Exhibition, to be held in Toronto, August 28th to September 13th, to donate $300 in prizes for a sheaf exhibit from the Standing Field Crop Competitions. Those eligible to compete are the first five prize winners. For this sheaf exhibit the Province has been divided into three districts, and prides amounting to $100 will be awarded to the competitors in each of the three divisions mentioned below, for the following kinds of grain:

	Fall Wheat.	Spring Wheat.	White Oats.	Barley.
First Prize	$8.00	$8.00	$8.00	$8.00
Second Prize	7.00	7.00	7.00	7.00
Third Prize	6.00	6.00	6.00	6.00
Fourth Prize	4.00	4.00	4.00	4.00

Diffision 1. Includes Muskoka, Parry Sound, Haliburton, Nipissing, Manitoulin, Algoma and other Districts in New Ontario.

Division 2. All Counties east of York and Simcoe.

Division 3.. York, Simcoe, and all Counties west and south-west of same.

Each sheaf must be not less than eight inches in diameter, be carefully selected from the best grain in the field, neatly bound by hand, packed in a box lumber in same not more than three-quarters of an inch thick, and box to be not more than two inches longer, wider and deeper than sheaf and shipped to J. Lockie Wilson, Government Building, Exhibition Park, Toronto, not later than August 25th, 1915.

Grain Exhibit at the Canadian National Exhibition for two-bushel sacks of grain open to the winners of the first five prizes in the Standing Field Crop Competitions. In this section, exhibitors will show in three divisions the same as in sheaves. The prizes are as follows:

	Fall Wheat.	Spring Wheat.	White Oats.	Barley.	Peas.
First Prize	$10.00	$10.00	$10.00	$10.00	$10.00
Second Prize	9.00	9.00	9.00	9.00	9.00
Third Prize	6.00	6.00	6.00	6.00	6.00
Fourth Prize	4.00	4.00	4.00	4.00	4.00

All entries for the Sheaf and Grain exhibit must be made to the Superintendent, J. Lockie Wilson, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, not later than August 14th, 1915. Express charges on sheaves and grain will be paid by the Ontario Government.

Prizes similar to the above will be offered at the Central Canada Exhibition, Ottawa, for which the first five prize winners in these competitions will be eligible.

Grain winning prizes at the above named Exhibitions will be retained by the Department of Agriculture for experimental purposes, and that which does not receive an award will be sold to the best possible advantage and the money received for the same will be forwarded to the owner or, if exhibitors wish, their grain return, they can have this done by paying return express charges on same.

NERVOUS DISEASES IN THE SPRING

It is the opinion of the best medical authorities, after long observation, that nervous diseases are more common and more serious in the spring than at any other time of the year. Vital changes in the system, after long winter months, may cause much more trouble than the familiar spring weakness and weariness from which most people suffer as the result of indoor life, in poorly ventilated and often overheated buildings. Official records prove that in April and May neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy and other forms of nerve troubles are at their worst, and that then, more than any other time, a blood-making, nerve-restoring tonic is needed.

The antiquated custom of taking purgatives in the spring is useless, for the system really needs strengthening, while purgatives only gallop through the bowels, leaving you weaker. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine, for they actually make the new, rich, red blood that feeds the starved nerves, and thus cure the many forms of nervous disorders. They cure also such other forms of spring troubles as headaches, poor appetite, weakness in the limbs, as well as remove unsightly pimples and eruptions. In fact they unfailingly bring new health and strength to weak, tired and depressed men, women and children.

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

How Germans Economize In Use of Their Bread Supplies

Coupon System, Announced in Red Posters, Easily Installed and Patriotically Accepted.

NO BREAD WITHOUT A CARD

BERLIN, Feb. 22.— New Yorkers with long memories who recall the historic day when restaurants began charging 10 cents for bread and butter will be interested to learn that the scheme for abolishing free bread with meals throughout the German Empire, as well as putting 70,000,000 people on a bread ration, was launced with rather less excitement and far less friction —a triumph of German organization and German good nature. Patriotic Americans who began celebrating before and returned to their hotel rooms in the early morning hours had, some of them, the shock of their lives when they saw flaming red cards pasted on the walls above their beds. It looked as if the place had been put under quarantine; but the poster contained the following even more exciting announcement:

The BREAD CARDS instituted by the authorities are to be found for each of our honoured guests and good for ONE DAY ONLY at the Bread Card Desk in the lobby, to be obtained daily. The honoured guests are reminded that from Feb. 22 bread may only be given at meals on presentation of this official bread card. We therefore beg guests always to keep this BREAD CARD by them and to give it back on paying bill on day of departure.

THE MANAGEMENT.

You could buy and eat all the cake you wanted to, but not even an American millionaire could get a crust of bread in Berlin without producing his bread card. It was Red Monday, for not only were the red posters conspicuously put up in hotel rooms, but all the advertisement pillars of Berlin were plastered with red announcements explaining the intricacies of the new bread ordinances.

The pre-breakfast bread card line at the Kaiserof, for instance, was something not only to have seen, but to have been in on and to tell your grandchildren and great-grandchildren about — an historical event. The newly installed bread card clerk (with a military mustache and three medals pinned to his chest) after a deal of checking up of numbers and entries in his bread card ledger, passed out the coveted scrap of paper to you as if it had been a $1,000 bill. It was about four inches square, cream coloured, with four red cross stripes, and in addition to the seal of the city, the rampant bear of Berlin, bore the following legend:

"Not transferrable. Only good for Feb. 22, 1915. Not good unless bearing date. See back!"

And when you looked at the back you learned that white bread, black bread, and zwieback could be obtained only by weight and on presentation of the card and the tearing off of corresponding coupons; that the card had to be turned in, (including all unused coupons), before you would get your next day's card; that only the seller could tear off the coupons and that in your own interest you would do well to guard your card most carefully. In smaller type you learned that any infringements rendered you liable to a maximum punishment of six months in jail or 1,500 marks, ($375,) fine. The fringe of the bread card consisted, you noted, of eleven coupons, each good for twenty-five grams, your weekly bread allowance being two kilograms, (four pounds and some ounces), and never have you had such an appetite for bread as since you find yourself strictly limited in quantity.

Harvard Man's Bread Orgy.

The psychology of the bread car is interesting. I noted one American, a Harvard man, and a most respectable-looking grey-haired father of a family, who indulged in a regular bread orgy at breakfast, using up all his 275 grams' worth of coupons, and spent the rest of the day trying to borrow bread coupons from his acquaintances; he could have tried to borrow money with more hope of success—for good Samaritanism comes high at 1,500 marks or six months in jail, and the Germans have an absurd habit of making laws to enforce them.

Supreme good nature marked the inforcement of the new bread measures everywhere —with a significant substratum of seriousness; and you had the impression that these Germans at the rear felt that they, too, were fighting for the Kaiser by presenting coupons. The first day's experience, too, seemed to indicate that the daily ration of about ten ounces was sufficient, even for an American. Your correspondent found he had saved seventy-five grams of breadstuffs for the Kaiser at the end of the day, and he expects to do even better tomorrow.

The City of Berlin is divided into 170 bread districts, or controls, the presiding genius in most of them being the Superintendent of the public school within the district. These controls are intended to keep the machinery running smoothly. Every house owner is obliged to obtain the requisite number of bread cards himself and see that they are given to the bona-fide residents in his house, one card or book for each member of a family, children and babies counting as full members, but no provision being made for dogs. Bona-fide residents are those registered at the nearest police station.

For permanent residents, bread books were issued containing coupons for two weeks. Families can pool their coupons for buying bread or flour. Public placards, however, contain the intimation that people need not use up the full quantity they are entitled to just because they have that many coupons; that, on the contrary, it is the public spirited and patriotic thing to do to see how many unused coupons you have left over when the term of the book or card expires.

The underlying theory of the whole business is that no bread or breadstuffs shall change hands except on payment and against presentation of coupons, which in turn limit the individual consumption to the maximum fixed by law after exhaustive statistical studies by experts. And Americans should not jump at the conclusion that the ironclad bread ordinances indicate that there is, was, or will be danger of famine. Your own well-fed correspondentis not making a gash for the nearest neutral food, because a score of German professors have written articles in the papers to the effect that the German people cannot be starved out by the allies; and my own private suggestions and inquiries in different parts of the country tend to confirm the verdict of the spectacled ones. These consulting experts, after weeks of studying the "Volksernaerungsfrage," inside and out, have given the verdict that there are enough breadstuffs (including Germany's best ally, the potato) to stretch till the next harvest at the normal rate of consumption of breadstuffs is therefore a measure to lay up a savings bank fund of food against the twin possibilities of a poor harvest and a long war.

It is one more example of what I have repeatedly pointed out in connection with their military organizations—that the Germans are absolutely playing safe and taking no chances. They are consistent exponents of the "Safety First' game. It seems, however, to be intended as something more than a precautionary measure; to be, in a sense, the throwing down of the economic gauntlet to the allies—a notice to their enemis that the German people cannot be starved into submission and that the decision must be fought on the battlefield—in terms of blood and iron, not bread and beer. Even to one who has been on the ground for months, it is a significant revelation of the unity of these 70,000,000 people, and the national "will to win."

Who Owns Boy's Trousers?

To whom do a boy's trousers belong—to the boy himself or to his father? This momentous question was debated at a London county court, when a new trial of an action was asked for. While playing football in the street the boy concerned ran against a tin box outside a tradesman's shop, and tore his trousers. His father put in a claim for the value of the trousers, and the registrar allowed $1.25. The tradesman's counsel argued that the boy had no right to sue at all, as the trousers really belonged to his father, he being an infant. "Of course, the father could not steal them," remarked the judge. "It is clear they belong to the father," replied the counsel. "Whether the father could take them off or not, I will not say," observed the judge. "A father has a prior right over his son's trousers," repeated counsel. The judge refused the application for a new trial.

In accord with the eternal fitness of things, a man with narrow shoulders ought to wear a broadcloth coat.

"CASCARETS" CLEANSE LIVER AND BOWELS

No More Headache, Bad Colds, Sour Stomach and Constipation

Get a 10-cent box now.

Are you keeping your liver, stomach and bowels clean, pure and fresh with Cascarets—or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels.

No odds how sick, headachy, bilious and constipated you feel, a Cascaret tonight will straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Don't forget the children — their little insides need a gentle cleansing, too.

BRILLIANT FRENCH VICTORY IN ALSACE

A General Advance Is Expected

REINFORCEMENTS HAVE REACHED DARDANELLES

Three British, Four French and One Russian Warship Have Arrived as Well as Transports Carrying Troops---"Queen Elizabeth" Silences Fort on Asiatic Side of the Strait.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ATHENS, March 27.—Three British warships, four French and one Russian cruiser constitute the reinforcements which have arrived at the Dardanelles. Immediately following their arrival their captains reported to Rear Admiral De Robeck and a conference was held on board the flagship of the fleet commander.

Three transports have arrived off the coast of Asia Minor in the last 48 hours, Athens reported. Presumably these were convoyed by the British and French warships just arrived at the scene of the Dardanelles operations.

A Paris despatch received here to-day said that the guns of Fort Erenekueui, on the Asiatic shore of the strait have been silenced by the Queen Elizabeth and her sister ships.

FORTS DAMAGED

PARIS, March 27.—It has been established that the forts at Dardanus have been destroyed and those at Kilid Bahr seriously damaged by the operations of the allied fleet in the Dardanelles, says a Havas despatch from Athens dated Friday.

The French victory in Alsace is believed to be very important and indicates a general advance of the French in Alsace.

BERLIN, via wireless, March 27.—The war office this afternoon for the first time admitted that the Russians have attempted a new offensive movement, aiming at another invasion of East Prussia. The Slav forward movement, however, has been broken and rolled back, according to the official statement. The war office also frankly admitted this afternoon that the French last night occupied top of Hartmannsweillerkopf in Alsace, but stated that the edge of the height is still occupied by the German troops.

A BIG AIRSHIP

ZURICH, Switzerland, March 27.—The greatest airship ever built was turned out this week by the great Zeppelin factory across Lake Constance, at Friedrichshafen, according to advices received here to-day. It had a successful trial flight on Thursday. The new aerial dreadnaught was fully 50 per cent. larger than any airship yet designed by Count Zeppelin. It was built for the express purpose of joining in the spring air raids on London and Paris. Since the first of March there has been a marked increase in the activities at the Friedrichshafen Zeppelin works.

LONDON, March 27.—The Russian army at the eastern end of the Austrian battle line, has suffered a reverse, according to the reports received here to-day.

While two Slav armies have pressed forward successfully to invade Hungary, the forces of General Ivanoff have been beaten back from Bukowina, the capital of Czernowitz, and driven several miles north of Pruth.

In the Carpathians desperate fighting was reported to-day between Lupkow and Vidrony. The Russians have seized Lupkow, overlooking the Hungarian plain, and are now engaged in a struggle for the railway leading eastward to Vidrony, and then south into Hungary.

The opposing armies are now engaged in a terrific fight in the snow choked valley leading from Lupkow to Vidrony. A Russian force that passed through Dukla, and took up a position near Svidnik, has been reinforced and is reported as being made ready for an advance on Bartfa, commanding the railway to the south.

LOCAL SOLDIER BOYS WILL BE IN ONE CAMP

Detachments to 8th C. M. R. 39th Battalion and 26th Overseas Battery Will All Be Trained at Barriefield

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

That Peterborough soldier boys in the 8th C.M.R. at Ottawa, 39th Battalion at Belleville and 26th Battery in Kingston will all be re-united in Barriefield camp, is evident from the following from Kingston:

KINGSTON, March 26.—The troops that will be mobilized at Barriefield will be the overseas troops of this division. These consist of the 38th, Battalion, the 39th Battalion, 8th Regiment, Canadian Mounted Rifles, and the 7th Artillery Brigade. These units total over 4,000 men, and this will make the 1915 camp at Barriefield the largest that has ever been held on the heights.

The position of officer commanding No. 3 Company, C.A.S.C., vacated by Major Mitchell, who goes overseas with the expeditionary force, has been taken by Capt. J. Welch, Kingston. Capt. Welch has arrived from Belleville, where he has been looking after supplies for the 39th Battalion.

Ottawa Free Press: The work of the 8th C.M.R. at Howick Hall was disorganized this morning when it was found that the men were suffering from a severe attack of dysentery. The cause is not known, but it is believed the change of temperature may have had something to do with it or something may have got into the food. Otherwise the men are in good health.

The nominal roll of the 1st Divisional Signal Company is published with the latest issues of Militia Orders. The roll includes Pte. Robert Johnston, Napanee; Pte. C. M. Sprague, Bellevills; Pte. Stanley Townsend, Tilsonburg; Pay Sergeant H. H. French, Peterborough.

The next draft of recruits for the 26th overseas battery will leave for Kingston on Tuesday morning next in charge of Sergt. Hetherington, who is home from Kingston for a few days on leave. This may be the last chance for local artillerymen wishing to go as the battery is almost at strength. Men anxious to enlist should make their applications at the armouries as soon as possible.

All the city regiments of the third divisional area have asked for permission to train during the coming summer without expense to the military department. The request has been granted and the 14th, 41st, 43rd and 57th Regiments will undertake training purely for patriotic purposes.—Kingston Standard.

Maj. Hall is drilling the 26th Battery every day on the cricket field. Foot drill is all the men can get until they have a place for their artillery equipment, which will not be ready for a couple of weeks yet, when artillery drill will be commenced.—Kingston Standard.

Major Hilliard of Peterborough, has accepted a commission as Lieutenant in the 26th Battery under Major Hall. Mr. Hilliard is a graduate of the R.M.C.—Kingston Standard.

GERMANY TO BE ATTACKED UNTIL BEATEN

And Until the Beating Leaves Militarism Prostrate for at Least a Century if Not For All Time Says "Tay" "Pay"

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER

Special to The Examiner:

(Copyright, 1915, Central News, by T. P. O'Connor)

LONDON, March 27—The victory at Neuve Chapelle is everywhere interpreted as furnishing the Germans with indisputable evidence that the British Army, when fully equipped with shells, will prove more formidable than the Germans ever calculated. Despite the huge losses of officers the battle is regarded as a good augury of what will happen when Sir John French and the Allies begin their long-postponed advance this Spring. These things, however, do not impress me so much as what I regard as the big psychological departure in the attitude of the British mind toward the war. Just as sweltring weather heralds the approach of the crashing thunderstorm, I became conscious to-day of a big rise in temperature throughout the British Isles portending the opening of a great and new chapter in the war. The most signifiant proof of the new departure is the concentration on the question of armaments, which has passed from Lord Kitchener and Lloyd George to the masses of the people, and on the essential necessity, if the war is not to be indefinitely prolonged, of giving Joffre and French the number of shells and rifles which will first demoralise and then overthrow the eGrman soldiers even though they are strongly entrenched. This has penetrated even to the carleless mind of the man on the street. However, there is a streng though unspoken complaint that these grave warnngs were not uttered before. It is argued that an earlier knowledge of these gigantic difficulties of the task would have saved valuable time and, perhaps, greatly shortened the war. Nevertheless, the warning, whether tardy or not, has gone home.

Two Great New Facts.

At this moment I see two great and new facts standing out in England. First, a greater realization of the difficulties of the task; second, as a result of that realization there has come a mobilization of resources of war that England never knew she had. The manufacture of armaments

BRAVE RESCUE OF SERGEANT PETER VICTOR

Peterboro' Man Was Shot Through Both Legs and Was Carried Off Under Fire by Gallant Stretcher Bearers

LIEUT. GALAUGHER'S FATE

FOLKESTONE, March 26. — Wounded men at Shorncliffe state that Stretcher-bearer Prince, of No. 4 Company, Second Battalion, and one other man whose name is not available, have been recommended to headquarters for conspicuous bravery under fire.

Sergt. Victor, of Peterborough, of the Second Battalion, was shot through both legs while repairing wire entanglements. Prince and his comrade took the stretcher out in broad daylight and brought him in. They were fired on by the Germans, but reached cover unhurt. On two other occasions they performed similar acts of heroism.

Sergt. J. B. Barnes, of the Sherwood Foresters, has been awarded the Distinguished Conduct Medal for gallantry in rescuing Sergt. Victor Holland, of the Toronto Regiment.

On the occasion when the Canadians were first in action the Canadian artillery located a hidden German battery and placed a heavy shell under it, blowing it several feet in the air.

The Germans dropped a shell into a trench occupied by some Ontario men. The explosion knocked six down, but all miraculously escaped unhurt.

Omemee Boy's Death.

LONDON, March 26.—An officer of the first battalion of the Canadian contingent at the front, writing under the date of March 22, tells how Lieut. Galaugher, of Omemee, Ont., met his death in the trenches. Galaugher was shot through the head and instantly killed when he looked above the parapet to see what was going on where the Germans were entrenched.

Pony Votes At Oak Hall

The Pony Contest closes on Wednesday, March 31st, and for the next three days the Pony Stores have agreed to give Double Pony Votes. Potatoes Were Under Weight

Mr. John Faux, a North Monaghan farmer, who had a bag of potatoes for sale at the market this morning which was under weight, appearred before Magistrate Dumble at a special session of police court. The potatoes weighed 81 pounds, but the Magistrate dismissed the case, holding that the bag was apparently as full as possible. The trouble was that the bag was not large enough.

FRENCH TRIUMPHANT AFTER TERRIFIC STRUGGLE

After Charging Up the Hillsides Time After Time in the Face of Terrific Fire They Finally Capture Heights in Alsace---Victory of the Greatest Importance.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, March 27.—French official. — After a tenacious struggle lasting for several days, the French troops have recaptured the principal height at Hartmannsweilerkopf, in Alsace, according to the despatches received here to-day. Under a terrible fire from the German machine guns and the light infantry, the French rushed the hillsides time and again. Previous engagements had swept the protecting timber from the slope, but the French infantry charged up the heights in the face of veritable ribbons of flame from the German guns. The French losses were heavy, it was admitted, but victory gave the French a position dominating other hills in the same region. The Germans must evacuate these positions, according to the despatches, or try to retake the hills. The Germans are again bombarding Arras at long range. Shells of all calibres fell in the city yesterday, causing fires at several points. Despatches from Arras early to-day said that these blazes were extinguished without doing severe damage.

LONDON, March 27.—Special Cable.—The victory for the French on the mountain top of Hartmannsweillerkopf, announced in Paris and admitted in Berlin, is regarded in London as the most important development in Alsace of recent months. On this steep mass of vitrified rocks, 3,000 feet high, some five miles to the northeast of Thann, some desperate fighting has been going on for a long time, and a German victory there would have been of the utmost importance to the Germans, as it would have enabled them to command the route to Thann and later to put the French defenders of that town in a most awkward position.

"For the Germans," says the Times, "the possession of Hartmannsweillerkopf is a means to an end. Their real objective is the valley of St. Amarin from which they would be able to take Thann between two fires, and they have been trying in vain to get hold of the road which leads to Weiller. But the French have had a very strong position and considerable force on Molken. Rain, another height, a little to the west, from which they have been able to stop the Germans from getting down to Weiller. The blood of the Chasseurs Alpins is up. It is a point of honour with them that the enemy shall not again set foot on the crests of the Vosges."

As the Germans who were driven from Cerney have fortified themselves at Uffholf, north of there, and just a little way east of Thann, the advance of another force via Weiller, which is northwest of Thann, might have compelled the French to evacuate that place. Thann, which consists of two towns, the old and the new, lies at the foot of the valleys of Stamarin, with the great Belchen Peak, over four thousand feet in height, rising above it some miles to the north.

"Outwardly," says the Times, "the town does not give the impression of ruin that is to be seen in other places; generally the shells have fallen through the roof and have done their work of destruction inside the houses. But the German 210 guns have already wrecked the hospital, a number of houses around the market place and several manufacturers. Old Thann and the part of the town near the station have suffered severely, and 15 houses have been completely burned. Further up the valley several houses have been set on fire by shells at Bitscheweiler."

ROME, via Paris, March 27.—Every measure possible has been taken by the Italian government preparatory to the beginning of hostilities by Italy on the side of the allies. Close observers here of the Balkan situation say now it is believed Bulgaria hopes to act jointly with Italy and Roumania for the allies.

THE CITY GARDEN.

The city garden, bear in mind, is entirely in line with the patriotism and production slogan. We haven't any particular surplus of employment, nor promise of it. Living incomes will in many cases be low. And it is to be remembered that hundreds of our citizens have an important supplementary source of revenue in their back yards. Properly cultivated, they will supplement the table supply to a point representing from $15 to $30 each.

We cannot too strongly urge the idea of the city garden; and there is some ground of surprise that influential citizens, interested in production, and comfortable citizenship, do not take more interest in the subject. The columns of the press have been thrown open to the discussion of the subject. There are hundreds of citizens capable of giving advice and directions as to the successful growth of a city garden. This information would be useful to those who are willing and don't quite know how to go about cultivating a garden. There is a right way, and a way that is not quite so good, to cultivate a little garden. Men who know should tell those who don't know. We should have cooperation in this as well as other matters; and it is a duty of all to help our neighbour to better his condition.

Every citizen who can assist in promoting the city garden idea and putting it into general practice, will help remove the consequences and suffering of unemployment and diminish the actual deprivation that comes from a limited income. Help extended in this direction will not have to be supplemented by other help at a later period through civic machinery. It only needs a little reflection and a little prompt action to discover the benefits of, and realize the benefits of conjoining actual production to our theoretical patriotism.

PARTY PROFIT BEFORE PRINCIPLE.

Conservative newspapers, supporting the Hearst Government, with strange forgetfulness of logical consequences, quote the beneficial action of Russia and France, in abolishing strong drink in war time. If it is good for Russia and France, why, would not a similar action be beneficial to Ontario? Yet these same journals excuse the Ontario Government for setting its face resolutely against radical license reform in this province. They —the most of them—defend the recent attempt of the Government in making a show of temperance reform while tenderly protecting the interests of the traffic. Even the Toronto World, with its little spasms of independence, but a deep and underlying loyalty to party interests, declares that—

"No one appears to be very well satisfied with the Ontario Government's proposals for the amendment of the License Act."

This is inevitable, for it expresses the truth. The Ontario Government can't measure up to the self-denial and moral initiative of "semi-barbarious" Russia. It admits the evils of the traffic when it puts Canadian soldiers on the "black list"—on the same level as the bar-bound "bum," and makes it a crime to serve drink from a licensed bar to a soldier in uniform. It degrades the moral stamina of the Canadian soldier; the physical pick of the country. If men with the moral and physical courage to enlist and brave the dangers of battle, can't resist the drink, can we expect more of the rest of the population? If the soldier is to be protected by the strong arm of the law from the degradation of drink, why not every other young man? The soldiers are under strict military discipline, and more exempt from temptation than the free citizen. The Government is plainly more concerned in pleasing the liquor traffic, than in promoting the welfare of the people, through repressive measures in the sale of strong drink. We can expect nothing better from a government that places expediency and party profit before principle.

WHAT ARE WE FIGHTING FOR?

We, as a part of the Empire, are fighting for the triumph of the principles of national honesty and national honour; and it is for us in Canada to see that we do not have to fight in vain for these ideals—to fight not in the far away trenches, but in our administration—of the great trust imposed upon us by our participation in the war. While Canada is fighting with our gallant soldiers for the triumph of honesty and honour, we must see that the honour and good name of Canada are not smirched by horse scandals. If we do not we shall stand dishonoured before the world and we shall lose in substantial advantage—in industrial and commercial ways—much more than unmolested looters of the public treasury will gain. The boots scandal has already, according to report hit us hard. It is related, with how much truth cannot be said, that Russia intended placing a large order for clothing in Canada, but was deterred by the story of the manner in which the contracts for soldiers' boots were filled in Canada. If this is true, it shows how sensitive a thing national reputation is. All our glory, reaped by our soldiers in the field, will be dimmed if Canada gets a name that will not permit her to be trusted to make a pair of boots, or a soldiers' uniform. This is not a party matter; it is a national matter, and concerns every honourable and patriotic citizen. Sir George Foster, speaking to Ward Six Conservative Club, in Toronto last night, said:

"We shouldn't deceive ourselves as we contemplate the long lines at the front in Europe. It is only sacrifice of men that will bring victory. We must come to the conclusion that Canada must send more men; the cup of sacrifice is not yet filled up."

This is all very well for platform eloquence. We must and will meet the duty of sending more men; but we must remember that our duty does not consist alone in sending men—the men themselves will see that duty is done. We must see that the men we send are honestly equipped and honestly maintained in the field. We must not, while we send men to fight, impair their efficiency, and at the same time impair our national reputation for honesty by hindering victory by dishonest measures, and making the pathway to victory trodden in "rotten" boots, more difficult for our soldiers.

LINDSAY "EFFICIENCY."

If Major-General Sam Hughes' intrinsic patriotism and valour were equal to their vocal manifestations, the country could breathe freely. When the organisation of the third contingent was under consideration, important, and perhaps, unimportant places demanded to be made mobilization centres, including Peterborough and Lindsay. With a show of interest, the Militia Department sent military officers to report on the facilities offered by several places, and it was finally announced that the third contingent for this district would be mobilized at Kingston and Belleville, thus cutting out Peterborough and Lindsay as mobilization centres. This decision seems to have been founded upon the policy of Major-General Hughes, as expressed in his telegram of reply to Mayor Waugh, of Winnipeg, who had requested consideration of local mobilization. Major-General Hughes told the Winnipeg mayor, with more force than politeness:

"Please keep your eye on the firing line in Europe and not on the local business establishment. My aim is efficiency, and rest assured I shall have it. Canada's honour has been upheld in the recent fighting because our boys have shown that they can shoot, nad shoot to kill. They got this training at Valcartier camp. The second and third contingents must also get it in some suitable camp, or I shall disband them."

These were brave words. But Major-General Hughes' loyalty to his home town was not proof against his expressed desire to have "efficiency." In the recruiting for the third contingent. Peterborough was assigned a squadron of mounted rifles, and Lindsay two companies of infantry. But the military authorities in Lindsay with, either the War Minister's instructions or approval or knowledge, went at recruiting wholesale. They did not confine recruiting to Lindsay, but it appears sent out recruiting officers to Toronto (in the third military division), getting whatever men could be got and dumping them in Lindsay under pay at $1.85 per day. Lindsay was denied the boon of a mobilization centre, but it was made a mob centre; for there had been gathered a total of 715 soldiers in Lindsay with no adequate means for their training. On Thursday Lindsay sent to the official mobilization centre at Belleville 250 infantry men, leaving still 365 soldiers in the illicit mobilization centre, Major-General Hughes' home town. The facilities for training even a third of 715 men in Lindsay are entirely inadequate; there is a lack of officers and qualified instructors, so that Lindsay as a "mobilization centre," is just a refuge for men without adequate training, incurring an expense of perhaps $70,000 during the past few weeks. But the money is spent in the minister's home town, and the boarding houses and hotels (perhaps including the bars), get the benefit; no matter how far short the conditions come of the "efficiency," the General said he aimed at. There could be no "efficiency" in the "mobilization" centre at Lindsay. The result is that overflow recruits haven't got "Valcartier training" at "some suitable camp," and they are not "disbanded." Are we to conclude that other considerations than the welfare of Canada and of the Empire—influence the management of our military affairs? The whole nation is in this fight, and there is no room for favours. When everybody is interested in the fight; when every Canadian resource is called upon to the limit, there is no place for "patronage lists," and $1,200 dollar chunks of "influence," nor for hole and corner "mobilization" camps, where recruits are herded under pay they cannot earn for lack of training facilities and officers, to establish the "efficiency" which Major-General Hughes declares is his "aim."

HOW THE TRAFFIC INFLUENCED RECENT LIQUOR LEGISLATION

Special to the Examiner.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS, Toronto, March 26—On Tuesday, the day when the final Conservative caucus to discuss the Liquor License Bill was held, hotel-keepers were present from all parts of the Province, exerting influence on the Government members not to favour any radical changes. It is common knowledge that a number of Conservative members fought in the caucuses for more advanced steps, but the results show that they were absolutely overruled.

It is noticeable that the wave of criticism is directed not so much against Mr. Hearst, himself. His action, quite apart from the political situation, marks a signal failure in his beginning as Prime Minister. Several weeks ago when he told the temperance deputation "The zig-zag path is often the best" it was predicted that this phrase would become historic and would mark Mr. Hearst as a weak man. That this prediction was correct is shown by the bill itself. Right at the very time when it was not only desirable but absolutely necessary for Mr. Hearst, as a new Prime Minister, to make a reputation for himself at the first crisis as the man who allowed himself to be dominated by the liquor interests and the liquor section of his own Government and party.

OUR FUTURE IMMIGRATION AND ITS DESIRABLE CHARACTER

Many people hold a loosely formed opinion that a heavy volume of immigration to Canada will be in evidence after the war. They seem to think also that this will cure national ills, solve economic problems, and bring a return of hearty prosperity. These opinions should be closely examined, especially if men propose to base their future business plans upon them. As to the size of the future immigration movement, one can only guess. There should be a movement of some consequence, partly pushed forward by the desire to escape European devastation, by the fact that present rovers in European devastation, by the fact that present rovers in European lands may want to rove still more and taste American life, and by the wish to take up free agricultural lands. The movement may be retarded by the demand in Europe for labour to rebuild where war has destroyed and to cultivate lands which armies are stamping.

Suppose, for argument's sake, there is a rush of immigration to Canada, as many predict, involving a million men. What will be done with them here? When the war is over, extra factory hands will not be wanted, compared with the number employed, say, in 1912. Neither will we want more men for railroad construction, for car shops, for locomotive plants. Nor will we want more carpenters, bricklayers, blacksmiths, plumbers, tinkers, tailors or candlestickmakers. Office help is sufficient, salesmen are numerous. There are more qualified engineers than jobs for them. Every avenue of employment seems to be well filled with a waiting line. Labour men estimate that throughout Canada are 250,000 unemployed. What will we do with the million newcomers which some prophets say will arrive after the war to help to solve our difficulties?

We need that extra population badly. But there is only one place for it—upon the land, producing wealth. If men will not farm, it is wasted energy to turn factory wheels. It needs a Saskatchewan graingrower to do his bit in order to keep employed a Massey-Harris man at Toronto. Three big railroad systems want freight, that they may pay interest charges on large blocks of securities. Factories and mills have sufficient equipment to look after the maximum demand likely to arise for many years to come. But a hundred thousand newcomers to the western prairies, to Northern Ontario, to British Columbia and to the maritime provinces, having made up their minds to be farmers and having commenced to produce from the soil, would make a vast difference. When government authorities commense their campaign after the war to bring in new population from Great Britain, from the United States, and from Europe, the position should be made clear to those invited. Canada wants men to work on the land.

For the Year 1914 Which Is the Lowest Increase Recorded in Years—Total Debenture Debt is $1,796,800.06—The Million Mark Was Crossed Seven Years Ago—Debt Per Capita is $79.57 Based on a Population of 22,500—Bill to Curb Borrowing Powers of Municipalities to Be Introduced.

At the close of the year 1914, Peterborough's debenture debt registered a net increase of $44,246.52. At the end of the previous year the increase was $189,674.20. The total debenture debt of the city amounts to $1,796,800.06, which is equal to approximately $79.57 per capita based on a population of 22,500. It is interesting to note that an attempt on the part of several large financial houses to place a curb on the borrowing powers of municipalities in Ontario failed before the Municipal Committee of the Legislature. The bill containing the provisions was introduced by W. D. Macpherson, M.P.P., The first clause of the bill provided that in municipalities having a population of not less than ten thousand people the aggregate debenture debt, exclusive only of actual sinking fund on hand, should not exceed $300 per head of the population as shown by the last census; in municipalities having a population of not less than two thousand, $150 per head of the population; in municipalities having a population not exceeding two thousand, $100 per head of population.

MUNICIPALITY'S REMEDY.

The bill provided that a municipality could make application to the Ontario Railway Board to exceed the borrowing powers quoted above if two weeks' notice was given the people to whom the municipality had sold its bonds in the preceding three years. Any assessor who wilfully made an incorrect return on the census should incur a penalty of not more than $100 and not less than $10.

Clause five of the measure attempted to make it permissible for municipalities to issue bonds in even numbers, and that each annual instalment of principle should be for an even $100, $500 or $1,000 or multiple thereof, and the annual instalments of principal and interest may differ in amounts sufficient to admit of this being done.

LIMIT THE POWERS.

Mr. McKinnon, of the Financial Post, told the committee that it was a common practice in municipalities for a man who wanted to sell a property to have the assessor value his land higher than he ordinarily would value it. These inflated assessments resulted in municipalities borrowing beyond their proper limits, although he admitted that so far he was only aware of two such cases in the province.

Mr. Macpherson said the trouble was that new councils were constantly being elected, and did not understand half the time what they were doing to the city's credit. The purpose of the act was to force a city when it wanted to exceed the $300 per head margin to appear before the Railway Board and ask permission. That would give the ratepayers affected a chance of protesting against any further borrowing power being granted.

The principle in the act, said Mr. Macpherson, was the same as in existence in England, but there before a council could borrow money the Local Government Board had an opportunity of seeing if the venture was a safe one for the money of the people to be invested in.

Mr. Macpherson admitted that there had not been many complaints up to date of municipalities exceeding their borrowing powers, but he looked for trouble in the near future and it was just as well to be prepared.

A WET BLANKET.

Representatives from several financial houses spoke in favour of the bill and Mr. Bradshaw and Mr. Gundy also told the committee that it was a measure worthy of adoption.

Hon. Mr. Hanna remarked that he had brought the matter before the committee because he didn't think it would do any harm, but without offending anyone he was able to apply a wet blanket to the measure and on a vote of the committee the bill was lost.

So far as such a measure is concerned Peterborough would not be effected, as it is likely to be some time, if ever it does happen, before the $300 per head margin would be reached. Starting out in 1904, Peterborough's debenture debt was $650,166.65, and the population 14,175. Four years later the city's indebtedness crossed the million mark, and at the end of 1914 attained the substantial sum of $1,796,800.06. The net increase of last year is lower than it has been in years.

The following figures with the accompanying statement of debenture debt will indicate the growth of the city's debenture debt for a period of years:

Each Platoon Has Two Periods of 24 Hours Each in the Trenches

Canadians Sang Marseillaise on Way to Trenches While French People Sang Tipperary—One Man Wounded Opening a Tin of Jam

TORONTO, March 28.—The following are extracts from letters received in Toronto from an officer of the 3rd Battalion, 1st Brigade, now in France:

"This is written in the trenches on our second shift here. The battalion was sent forward for a week, and each platoon is having two periods of twenty-four hours each, the first time each man side by side with an experienced Tommy, and the second time each platoon took over a section of trench. We marched at dusk to the rendezvous just outside the town, where a guide took the party in tow, and led a way to the trenches. The trenches are quite a surprise, and much more haphazard than one would imagine. Every known rule is violated; it is just as if the men had been cast broadcast on the ground, and had gone to the earth wherever they happened to alight. In fact, our one was under enfilade fire, or, rather worse, under fire almost from our rear flank! There has been no shelling or concerted rifle fire, but only a good deal of sniping, which is quite accurate, in spite of the 800 yards distance (these present trenches are only 180 yards apart at one point).

Playing "Squat Tag."

The mud is pretty filthy, but not nearly as bad as it used to be. At first one makes an attempt to keep clean and dry, but soon this is forgotten, and it doesn't matter if the mud is plastered over one. It is nice clinging clay, too. As may be imagined, the men are in an awful state of muddiness, and the exact opposite of the dapperness always associated with a British soldier. But they are fed excellently, and everything possible is done to make endurable an otherwise wretched existence. They are extraordinarily cheery and bright. They live in little wooden-lined "bug-hutches," buried in the parapet. These are floored with straw, and hold both lice and men with ease.

The first night I was out with a party, repairing barbed wire. The snipers were about, and every time a star shell would go up we had to duck. It was like playing "squat-tag." So far there have been no casualties, though two men in the next trench got plugged, and one of the —— killed coming up the road to the trenches. The road is exposed, but there is nothing else for it.

French Sang "Tipperary."

"On our way to the trenches the men whistled the Marseillaise for the benefit of a little group of youngsters gathered in the street. They returned the compliment by singing 'Tipperary,' which they have picked up from the men or rather from the British Tommies. It was very funny to hear the cockney pronunciation with a French flavour, especially how it was a long 'way to go.' But they had the words down pat. Don't take too literally some of the tales that are written home and may appear in the papers. One chap sent a brief note explaining that he could not write much because his hand was bandaged, but not mentioning that carelessness in opening a tin of jam made the bandage necessary.

"Our new billet is quite decent, at least the officers' quarters are, which is very selfish. The men are crowded, and it is a likely chance that the floor of the loft may collapse, if it does the mixture of soldiers, tinned beef, and untinned meat will be difficult to sort out. The untinned meat is on the hoof in the stalls below. One corner of the building was knocked off some time ago, and a nearby building got one in the backyard yesterday, but we are not standing in crowds on the doorstep for the place is under telescopic observation, and we do not wish to attract undue attention to ourselves.

"The march up was as usual, by night with 'night march' rules in force, i.e., no talking and no smoking or lights. Tramping along in silence gives one such a beastly good opportunity for thinking, in fact, thoughts run riot with nothing to distract the atteniton.

Seen Very Few Horrors.

"We have struck very few of the horrors of this war, but have met a little of the impressiveness. It will be some time before I forget that silent hour, at least silent so far as talking went, for there was nothing to break the stillness but the grind of feet and the coughing almost as ceaseless as the tramping, or rather replacing it on halts. A train of carts rumbled slowly by, followed by a little string of ambulances, from which came a whiff that carried me back to the Toronto General. As we came to a crossroad the moon broke through the clouds and lit up a cricifix, and a solitary soldier directing troops to the right road. The image of the Christ seemed to look so pityingly on the whole scene and all it meant. Then a cloud passed over the moon again, and in the momentary darkness I tripped on some loose stones that filled in a shell hole made during the afternoon, —— say the burst a quarter of a mile away, and by the time we arrived a gang was filling in what the Tommies called a 'dust bin,' i.e., a small H.E. shell. The Jack Johnsons make 'coal boxes' and smaller shells merely 'dust bins,' quite a neat distinction."

Sir John French's Confidence In the Outcome of Present War

While nobody is doubtful of the growing power of the Allies, and the progressive weakening of the enemy, it is nevertheless good to have from the Commander-in-Chief of the British army in France such an encouraging and confident pronouncement as that which he gave yesterday in an interview with the correspondent of the Associated Press. Sir John French said: "There is no doubt of the outcome. I was never so confident of victory as I am to-day. I am as confident as General Grant was when he took command of the army of the Potomac. He kept at it, and so shall we."

When a man of Sir John French's reputation, and of his characteristic reserve, permits a statement like this to go forth to the world at large, we may be quite sure that he has good grounds for his confidence. He speaks not only in the light of past achievements, but also with the knowledge denied to the public, of the plans for the future.

Especially significant is his reference to General Grant's attitude on taking command of the Potomac Army. It will be remembered that the American Civil War had been dragging on interminably, swaying backwards and forwards in a way roughly comparable to what has been happening in France during the past winter. Then General Grant was given a huge new army, and with this he was able to compel victory. General French now has one of the largest armies ever got together placed at his disposal. It is composed of the best fighting material obtainable, is splendidly equipped, and is magnificently inspired. Thinking of the armies of Britain and France, and running his mind back over past wars, it is natural that he should recall the united action under General Grant which led to the complete collapse of the Confederacy and the end of the war.

Another good thing in regard to this interview is that it will take our minds back to the most important theatre of the war. The events in the Dardanelles and the fall of Perm yl (as the Russians now call it) have, perhaps, turned the heads of the public a little. While these things are important, it is well to remember that the front in Flanders and France remains unchanged in most essentials, and that it is here where the most tremendous efforts have yet to be put forth and where the most decisive actions will in all probability be fought. It is no easy road to victory that is presented to us there. When we think of the magnitude of the task in France, however, we shall face the efforts and sacrifices that lie before us with a better heart because of this message which the British Field-Marshal has given out on the eve, as it were, of the launching of the mightiest effort Britain has ever put forth.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

Gouin Offers Aid to Serbia.

LONDON, March 27.—In answer to an appeal made by the Serbian legation for British and Canadian medical men with knowledge of French or German to help in plague-stricken parts of Serbia, Sir Lomer Gouin, Premier of Quebec, through his London agent, has offered the services of forty willing helpers from French Canada. The Servian legation yesterday afternoon stated that out of these they were making a selection of fifteen doctors, whose names will be announced in a day or two.

AFRAID OF RAILWAYS.

Von der Goltz and Von Sanders Make Hurried Excursions.

LONDON, March 27. — The Exchange Telegraph Co. has received a despatch from Athens saying that Field Marshal von der Goltz, who has been in Constantinople for some months past representing German military interests, has left the Turkish capital for Sofia, Bulgaria. At the same time Gen. Limar von Sanders, the commander of the Turkish forces in Europe has left Constantinople for Adrianople.

The departure of these two officers from Constantinople, one for Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, and the other for Adrianople, the second most important city in European Turkey, and not far from the Bulgarian frontier, indicates some sudden development in the Balkan situation, which is causing Turkey concern.

Albania In Turmoil.

ROME, March 27.—The situation at Durazzo in Albania would again appear to be serious according to despatches coming to Rome. The insurgents are bombarding the port and threatening to destroy it, if the consul representatives are not successful in persuading Essad Pasha, the Turkish provisional president, to leave the country.

Several cannon shot during the bombardment struck the residence of Essad Pasha. Docks and public buildings also suffered.

DANDRUFF AND FALLING HAIR

33 De Salaberry St., Quebec, Que.—"About six years ago dandruff began to form on my scalp. At first I didn't notice it, but my hair began falling out gradually and it kept getting worse. The itching and burning were so bad that I scratched and irritated my scalp. I was kept awake at night by the irritation.

"I then tried a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, washed my head with the Soap and warm water, and applied the Ointment. After the first time my hair stopped falling. I got one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Ointment. I continued using them for a few months and my head is now well." (Signed) Miss Myrtle Davis, June 3, 1914.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

OWNER OF CATTLE WHICH SUFFERED FOR FOOD FINED

Magistrate Langley Finds North Monaghan Man Guilty of Neglect to Properly Care for His Cattle

ASSESSED $35.20

A North Monaghan man, charged under the Criminal Code for wantonly and cruelly ill-treating, abusing and torturing cattle, ta wit, three cows and 1 pig, his own property, whose case was enlarged by Magistrate Langley for judgment, was fined $20.00 and costs, of $15.20, this morning, and was given three days to pay.

His Worship found that the evidence disclosed that the defendant was the owner of three yearling cattle and one two-year-old of the bonsie species, and a pig, which were confined in a barn or stable in North Monaghan, a short distance from Peterborough, and the defendant resided in Peterborough.

Not Sufficient Food.

The prosecution sought to show that the animals were kept confined in such unsuitable quarters and so insufficiently fed as to amount to wanton and cruel ill-treatment; no evidence was presented to prove abuse, torture or ill-treatment by acts of the defendant other than the passive neglect to provide proper and sufficient food and proper housing. A number of witnesses were called by both prosecuter and defence, and the evidence was chiefly directed to the physical condition of the beasts to show a state of starvation and want of nourishment or the reserve—and there is much discrepancy in the evidence of different witnesses and sometimes in the evidence of the same witness.

Hardly Able to Eat.

By reason of a complaint made to him, A. Moore, County Constable, went to see the cattle on Thursday, March 11th. Mr. Akers, the tenant on the place, who permits the defendant, his landlord, to keep the cattle in the stable or barn, showing them to him. Mr. Moore swears that at this time he found the pig "as poor as can be," and that there was not a bite of feed in the pen or in the premises, that the cattle were very very thin, and that by the actions of the cows and pig, he says they were hardly strong enough to move for want of food and hardly able to eat. He ordered some food to be sent out from Denne's.

The Defence.

For the defence several witnesses were called who had examined the cattle shortly after the charge had been laid, to swear to their condition. I deemed this evidence revalent as the case for the prosecution largely depended upon the natural deduction to be drawn from their physical condition, and several witnesse swore that a few days' good treatment, or different treatment, would make little or no appreciable difference in their condition, although it is to be noted that Dr. Johnston, the only veterinary surgeon called, swore on gross-examination, that food for two days just before he was called would make a great improvement.

Of these defence witnesses all except Dr. Johnston were either farmers or had been farmers, or had worked about stock, and all had had long experience with stock. Their evidence, speaking generally, was to the effect that they had seen thinner cattle and cattle in worse condition, and kept by good farmers, and the same in regard to the hog; also that the barn or stable was a proper or suitable place in which to keep them. Their evidence also went to show that young cattle, i.e., yearlings or two-year-olds, are hardy to winter, and speaking from the appearance of the beasts give their opinion that they had not been ill-treated.

Suffering for Food.

I do not consider the evidence of the defence (considering also the evidence of Akers), sufficient to offset the prima facie case made out by the testimony of Moore, Parnell, Riley, Murphy and Gates, of the condition of the cattle; which leads to the conclusion that they were suffering for food.

The conclusion is that the defendant being the owner of, and having charge of the cattle, and having confined them, and being in duty bound to care for them, he, during the month of March, 1915, and prior to the date of information, neglected to properly care for them to an extent amounting to wanton and cruel ill-treatment, and amending the information accordingly, if necessary, I convict him of the offence charged.

WHO WINS THE PONY OUTFIT?

The Dunlop Pony Contest being conducted by the various local merchants is to close on Wednesday, March 31st. The Pony outfit is here, and is shown on the streets every day. It is a real handsome Shetland Pony, young and sound. The public may rely on the contest being properly finished. The merchants who are giving pony votes have agreed to call in an auditor and have him go over their sales for the period of the contest and check up all votes given and see that same corresponds.

They have taken this additional cost on themselves to ensure the public that no votes have been issued, only those that correspond with their sales and in keeping with the rules of the contest. Now go to it, boys, and hustle for your votes. Only three more days and it's who has won the pony.

90,000,000 EGGS FROM TEXAS REACHED NEW YORK LAST WEEK

Market May be Glutted and Price Should go Away Down --Wheat Cheaper in Chicago --Cheese Slightly Advanced

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs will appear in Canadian Grocer this week:

Office of Publication,
Toronto, March 25, 1915

The wheat market in Chicago and in Winnipeg took another slump this week, consequent upon the fall of Przemysl. Wheat was quoted in Chicago at $1.51 a bushel and in Winnipeg at $1.58 1-2. This Chicago price is particularly low in comparison with the $1.60 mark which was obtained less than a week ago. It will be interesting to see whether wheat is going to go up or down, for of course flour prices depend upon the antics of wheat. Such influences as this Russian victory and the promise of an early issue out of the Dardenelles troubles are all good bull factors. Without wishing to be unduly bearish, we would point out that it is a long way to those 65,000,000 bushels of wheat which Russia is going to liberate as soon as she gets the chance. And when those 65,000,000 bushels are liberated, it must be remembered that not only is Britain going to be in the market, but also several of the Continental Countries.

The egg situation is interesting at present. There are now no storage eggs coming either in Canada or the States worth speaking about and the whole production new laid. Everybody is eating eggs; they are cheaper food just at present than meat. It was not ever thus. Three months ago a very different story had to be told. We understand from the States that no fewer than 90,000,000 eggs came into New York last week from Texas, and no room could be found to store these. The fact of the matter is that the refrigerators in the States are so full up with beef imported from the Arentine and that sort of thing that there is going to be a glut on the marke, and the effect of that so far as we are concerned, will be to make the farmer keep down his price on new-laid eggs in this country, which the man in the street won't complain of at all.

Once more we record an advance on cheese, this time of a quarter of a cent. There is very little cheese in the country and what there is can be sold most advantageously to Britain. Provision men say that there is to be no let-up on the high prices on cheese, and we may not only look for no reduction on old cheese, but we must accustom ourselves beforehand to fairly high open prices on the new make when it comes along.

Private Wards in The Hospital Are Reported in Demand

It is learned that in the two city hospitals the private wards are all occupied just now and that at the Nicholls Hospital the staff has been increased by four or five extra nurses. In response to an enquiry, Dr. McPherson said the public health was quite satisfactory for this season. There have been some cases of German measles, and la grippe is prevalent. The present tax on the hospitals' private ward is in most cases for operations. It was also stated that it is next to impossible to secure a graduate nurse just now, for the reason that they are all engaged. This is but a general report and there may be exceptions.

No Night Operator

For probably the first time in twenty-five years, there is no regular night operator at the Grand Trunk Station, in this city. The office is closed at 9 p.m. and opened again at 7 a.m. This is a result of the policy of the Grand Trunk Railway system to reduce expenses.

The Keene station is also closed at 6 p.m. instead of after the passing of the late train as formerly. Anyone wishing to board a train at Keene after that hour has to either purchase a ticket before 6 p.m. or on the train.

Several smaller stations along the different lines are also affected similarly.

MAPLE SYRUP ON MARKET

Fairly Plentiful Supply This Morning—Market on the Whole Was Short of Sellers—Eggs Down

POTATOES AT 60c

The market was top heavy with buyers this morning. One would call it a big market, but the numbers were far too many on the wrong side of the selling tables. Citizens were bumping into one another with trying and tiring effects, were hitting the line hard to break through the crowds, but Market Clerk Brown could give the disillusioning facts. He observed that the market was much smaller than it looked and closer examination revealed the great minority of country cousins.

Maple syrup was plentiful on its first appearance this year, selling at from 40c to 50c. a quart. Some of the salesmen said there had been several good sap days and they looked to a fair flow next week. In nearly every case the syrup had all the appearances of the kind grandfather used to boil, an indication that there are not many modern evaporators in these parts. Most of the market-goers wouldn't buy syrup unless it was well darkened and rather "thick." This morning's supply was offered by ten farmers.

Eggs Dropping.

Eggs sold down to 17 cents, although during the first hour 18c. and 19c. prevailed. The supply was fairly plentiful, but with more farmers attending there would have been bigger business. Next Saturday should see a big market both in sellers and buyers.

Butter was firm at 35c. with a slight upward tendency. In a few weeks, however, the new season's influence should be felt, at least to some extent. Chickens sold at various prices. Several lots of well developed specimens were quoted at $1.00 each.

Potatoes at 60 cents a bag were the most plentiful commodity on the market. Citizens have a lurking suspicion that the farmers are well supplied with them and 60 cents is not regarded as a gift.

Dairy and Poultry.

Butter, per lb.	35c
Butter, creamery	37c
Eggs, new laid, dozen	17c.-18c.
Turkeys, lb.	20c.
Geese	18c
Ducks	22c.
Chickens, pair	$1.70

Fruit and Vegetables.

Apples per bbl.	$2.75
Potatoes, per bag	60c.
Onion, bag	$1.50
Onions, whole pickling, qt.	15c.
White beans, qt.	10c.
Celery, per head	5c to 10c
Carrots, peck	15c.
Turnips, bush	25c.
Parsnips, peck	15c.
Beets, peck	15c.
Cabbage, head	10c.

Meats.

Bacon, per lb.,	25c to 28c
Ham	28c
Pork	11 and 12c.
Lamb	23c.
Cooked hams	35c
Mutton	17 to 18c
Veal	11 to 15c.
Beef, dressed	10 to 12
Live hogs, cwt.	$8.10
Syrup, quart	40c-50c.

Debate Went to the Death's Head Side

The debate on capital punishment in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum last evening attracted a large and attentive audience. The subject, well contended on both sides, was won by the negative, upheld by Messrs. J. New and B. McAvoy, while the affirmative was taken by Messrs. J. Milloy and J. Christopher. The judges were Messrs. V. J. McElderry, J. Begley, and E. Reynolds. Miss Eva Tangney occupied the chair, and the musical programme was composed of a piano duet by the Misses C. Tangney and M. O'Brien, and vocal solos by Miss Helen Warmington and Mr. Costello.

UNITED FARMERS TO HOLD MEETINGS

To be Addressed by Mr. J. J. Morrison, Secretary of the United Farmers of Ontario

Arrangements are being completed through Mr. H. B. Cowan of Farm and Dairy, for the holding of a series of meetings in West Peterborough to be addressed by Mr. J. J. Morrison, Secretary of the United Farmers of Ontario, and of the United Farmers' Cooperative Co. Limited. Mr. Morrison is arranging to spend two days in West Peterborough, April 8th and 9th. The following day he is to speak at Fraserville. It is expected that Mr Morrison will speak at Zion in Smith Township at 2.30 o'clock on Thursday, April 8, and at Sewart's Hall, in Otonabee, at 8 o'clock the same evening. It is probable that a meeting will be addressed at Selwyn Friday afternoon, April 9, at 2.30 o'clock, and in the Temperance Hall, on the fourth line of Smith, the same evening. Mr. Elliott and ex-Reeve Garbutt are arranging for the meeting at Zion. Mr. Sandy Matchett is arranging for the meeting at Stewart's Hall. Reeve McKee is consulting the farmers in his vicinity about the meeting at Selwyn, and Charlie Moore is attending to the meeting on the fourth line of Smith.

Mr. Morrison will speak on the new movement that is being organized among the farmers of Ontario similar to the Farmers' movement in western Canada with which the United Farmers of Ontario are affiliated. The United Farmers of ntario is the same class of organization as The Grain Growers' Association in Western Canada and the United Farmers' Cooperative Co. Limited, is intended to fill the same position in Ontario as the Gran Growers' Grain Co. does in Western Canada. Already some thousands of farmers in Ontario are organized in these companies and the movement is making great headway Mr Morrison is an exceptionally able speaker and deals with the economic difficulties farmers are struggling with and outlines what farmers must do if conditions are to be improved.

Ernie Marks Stock Company

Supporting Miss Kittie Marks

The attraction at the Grand Opera House, which will come for a stay of three nights and two matinees, commencing Thursday, April 1st, evening, and for the balance of the week, with matinee Good Friday and Saturday matinee, will be that noted and romantic attraction, the popular comedian, Mr. Ernie Marks, supported by his popular company, who have surrounded themselves with an exceptionally clever company of people that are not only engaged for their dramatic ability, but as well for their knowledge of the musical experience they also have. The advance seat sale opens at the box office on Tuesday morning at 9 a.m. and it is expected that this attraction will do banner business of the season. For the initial offering this company will present that well known and popular drama, "The Girl From Tennessee." The drama also has a sparkling comedy and many thrilling scenes, and the theatre-goers very rarely have an opportunity of witnessing a play of its class at the popular prices, 10c., 20c. and 30c. It is always spoken of as the phenomenal triumph of the repertoire age, and more people have witnessed this latest success and triumph than any other play of its kind. Mr. Marks will offer an all new production, each and every performance while in your city. Calling your attention to the high class vaudeville numbers which will act of the drama, are also new, making a complete change from start to be introduced between each and every finish. The plays are as follows: Thursday, "Girl From Tennessee"; Good Friday, matinee, "The Pride of the Army"; Good Friday night, "A Daughter of the People"; Saturday matinee, "The American Girl"; Saturday night, "Happy Hooligans Troubles."

RELIEVE OWNERS OF "FARM" LANDS

Owners of "farm" land with municipal boundaries who are now loaded up with heavy general taxes and local improvement rates on property that brings them no return except on its value as farm land, and can not be sold except on that basis will be given relief, by the Chambers Bill adopted by the Municipal Committee. The bill gives a rural municipality the right to give whole or partial exemption from taxation on such land, and gives an owner the right to appeal to the county judge for exemption.

NEW USE FOR ALUMINUM.

Aluminum is now used to preserve the fragrance of the natural leaf in packing "SALADA" tea. The bright, clean sheets are closer in texture than the old-fashioned lead coverings and ensure perfect protection to the fresh young leaves.

In all lines of business old ideas are giving place to new, and modern efficiency is showing better ways of selling goods.

Almost everyone is familiar with the famous Nyal's Family Remedies and Toilet preparations and has been accustomed to seeing them in almost every drug store and almost every family medicine cupboard.

Very recently the Company have made a far-reaching change in their plan of doing business. In the future Nyal preparations will only be obtainable through selected drug store agencies who are shareholders in the company.

It is a proven fact that agents, selected because of their ability and business standing and more intimately connected with the manufacturers are able to market goods more economically and at the same time give better service to the buying public. Much of the friction of competitive business methods is eliminated, and the public benefits therefrom.

Mr. Warne is to be congratulated on securing the Nyal Agency in our town and will in the future make these preparations a more prominent feature of his business.

Austro-Hungary's Life Imperilled.

ROME, March 27.—The Giornale d'Italia reproduces an article from The Vienna Fremdenblatt, which says that the Austrian people now know that the existence of the Austro-Hungarian nation is imperilled, and victory will be possible only through very grave sacrifices.

The despatch adds that the Austrian press "trusts that the Austro-German forces will have their revenge for the fall of Przemysl in the battle of the Carpathians."

Boer Rebel Escapes.

CAPE TOWN, March 27.—Lt.-Col. Maritz, leader of the Boer rebellion of last October, has escaped from his prison camp and fled toward Central Africa, according to information received here yesterday. Maritz was one of the Boer generals placed in command of an army for the invasion of German Southwest Africa last fall. Early in October he mutinied and led part of his command over to the Germans, being joined by Generals Beyers and De Wet, both former leaders in the Boer war. Maritz and De Wet were captured; Beyers is reported to have been drowned.

FIGHTING RECORD OF THE MANTELL FAMILY

Covers Nearly Three-quarters of a Century---Sergeant William Mantell, One of Five Warrior Brothers is a Resident of Peterboro'--One Brother Killed at Mons, Another Interned in a German Prison Camp.

Five brothers and a brother-in-law with an aggregate record of nearly three-quarters of a century is a distinction vested in the Mantell family, which is represented on Chamberlen Street by Sergeant William Mantell, now with the Peterborough section of the second Canadian contingent. The group of photographs shown here represents the contribution of one family to the fighting forces of both land and sea. The war was scarcely under way before one brother was cut down in the person of Private Herbert Mantell, who lost his life during the celebrated battle of Mons. Another brother, Private Robert Mantell, was wounded at Mons. He was picked up by the Germans and is now interned in a German prison camp. When last heard from he was not faring any too well between the injuries he had sustained and the restrictions under which prisoners of war are obliged to exist.

Edward Mantell is a first class Petty Officer on board H.M.S. Astrea, and at the outbreak of the war was stationed off the African coast. He has had fifteen years' service in the British navy. Mrs. Mantell, Chamberlen Street, received a letter from him a few days ago.

Private Robert Mantell is a member of the West Kent Regiment. He was wounded at the battle of Mons and is now interned in a German prison camp. He is a brother of Mrs. J. D. Gardiner, whose husband's picture is shown in the group, and has had nine years' service.

Edward Mantell is a first-class petty officer on board H.M.S. Astrea.

Private Robert Mantell is a member of the West Kent Regiment.

Pte. Herbert Mantell — Sergt. Rich. Mantell — Col-Sergt D. Gardiner

A brother-in-law of the Mantell brothers, who answered Kitchener's call

The Mantell family is represented in the casualty list by Private Herbert Mantell, who was killed at the battle of Mons. He was a member of the first Battalion, Middlesex Regiment, and had eight years' service to his credit.

Sergeant Richard Mantell is another member of the first Battalion, Middlesex Regiment. This regiment has been in France for some time so it is likely that Sergt. Mantell has experienced some fighting before this. He has seen six years' service.

Col.-Sergt. D. J. Gardiner is a brother-in-law of the Mantell brothers. He answered Kitcheners' call for non-commissioned officers and prior to leaving for the rront resided in Toronto.

A South African Veteran.

Sergeant William Mantell, whose wife and family reside at 545 Chamberlen Street, is about to leave for England with the second contingent. He was nine years with the West Kent Regiment in the Old Country and was through the South African war.

Dominion House Has Two Contentious Matters Yet to Deal With

OTTAWA, March 27.—The House transacted business yesterday at high speed and to-day there is a general impression that prorogation may occur next week. Two factors make for delay. One is the investigation into Militia Department contracts now being conducted by the public accounts committee, and the other is the proposed enfranchisement of the men at the front. Negotiations are reported to be in progress to relieve the public account committee from their labors by having the cases before them referred to a royal commission upon which both political parties would be represented.

The bill enfranchising the soldiers and sailors of Canada is still before the special committee, which is to hold its final meeting this afternoon. The bill approved by the majority of the committee will be introduced on Monday.

Party differences did not disturb the rapid transaction of business in the House yesterday. Gen. Hughes finished with his estimates and Hon. Mr. White secured by unanimous vote the legislation confirming and validating his excess issue of $26,000,000 of Dominion notes and his loans to the Canadian Northern and G. T. P. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and A. K. McLean commended the action of the Minister, although the former suggested that it would have been better to have obtained the authorization of Parliament at the August session. When Parliament was here last August the railway companies had applied for loans, but Sir Robert Borden explained yesterday that it was then anticipated that the loans would be made through the banks by way of rediscount upon the Government guaranteed bonds of the companies as collateral. The banks, however, had refused to intervene, although he had earnestly urged them to do so.

Stoppages Continue

Drastic Measures May Have to be Taken With Dockers

LONDON, March 27—Despite Lord Kitchener's warning and the agreement between the Government and the trades unions that strikes should cease, stoppages of work still continues. Though the number of men involved thus far is small, fears are expressed that the disaffection may spread and the Government driven to adopt the drastic measures which have been threatened in order to increase industrial production.

At Birkenhead yesterday afternoon the men loading three steamers quit work and announced that they would not resume their labors until Monday. Their ground was that they are not paid until the following week for work done Friday and Saturday.

On the Liverpool side of the Mersey a large number of dockers are threatening to strike for a similar reason and to lay off for an entire week.

At the Dowlais, Wales, steel works Government orders for materials needed in France and Belgium are being delayed by a strike of a comparatively small number of men.

TO REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT EASILY AND QUICKLY

If you are overstout the cause of your over-stoutness is lack of oxygen-carrying power in the blood and faulty assimilation of food. To little is being made into the harder tissue of muscle and too much into little globules of fat. Therefore you should correct the mal-assimilation and increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this, go to any good druggist and get oil of orlene, only sold in original packages and in capsule form, and take one capsule after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight is reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of oil of orlene in capsule form is remarkable as a weight reducer and it is perfectly safe.—P. J. T.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

DUTCH PEOPLE BITTER OVER SINKING OF THE MEDEA

LONDON, March 27. — Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent gives the outline of statement printed yesterday by The Handelsblad of the sinking off Beachy Head Thursday of the Dutch steamer Medea. The article says that the steamer's orange cargo could not have been considered conditional contraband, and adds:

"The sinking of the Medea is an act of arbitrary violence which cannot be considered a lamentable error. This action as well as attacks on Dutch ships from the air, can only be explained on the assumption that Germany feels certain that so long as no foreign troops or warships attack our country every act of arbitrary violence against Dutch subjects or property is permissible.

"We are convinced that complete compensation must be demanded from Germany. The last act is certain to arouse great uneasiness and bitterness here."

A cable from The Hague says members of the Netherland's Government are refraining from any comment on the subject of interference with and destruction of Dutch shipping by German submarines beyond saying that requests for explanations have been sent to Germany with a view to an eventual protest after Berlin's reply has been received.

The Ministry held an extraordinary council yesterday afternoon following a conference between the Foreign and Marine Ministers and between the Marine Minister and the chief of the naval staff. The subjects under discussion were not made public.

The newspaper are taking a serious view of the situation owing, as they put it, to the repeated "unpleasant incidents."

The Dutch Government already has sent to Berlin a protest against the alleged attack by a German aeroplane on the Dutch steamer Svenbergen.

FORCING THE DARDANELLES

By WM. S. BABCOCK

A great many unexpected things have happened during the present war, and chief among them is the success with which the allies' fleet are forcing the passage of the Dardanelles. This strait, some forty miles in length, fairly bristles with powerful long-range guns, and its waters are known to be extensively sown with mines. Theoretically it should mean the destruction of any ship or fleet which attempts to enter these waters for the removal of the mines, and the reduction of the forts and break its way through to Constantinople.

Before the opening of the war, and indeed up to the time of this bold attempt on the part of the allied fleet, it was held that the accuracy of shooting possible by the guns of coast fortifications, and their extreme ranging power, was such as to render it impossible for any warship to come within range without imminent danger of being sent to the bottom. When it comes to a matter of fighting at distances of from ten to fifteen thousand yards, the effectiveness of gun fire depends primarily upon the ability of the contestants to estimate the range of the ship or the fort as the case may be. The distance is estimated by the well known system of triangulation, in which the length of the base line is known and also the two base angles. The accuracy of the distance as thus calculated, will naturally increase with the increase of the base line upon which the calculations are determined. On the ship, the triangulation is done automatically by a range-finder in which the base line is from, say, nine to twenty-one feet in length; and everyone will recognize that a calculation of a distance of twelve to fifteen thousand yards on a base line of seven yards requires great accuracy both in the instrument and its adjustment by the observer. When the shots begin to land on the fort, observers on the ship attempt to "spot" the fall of the shot by the dust which is raised, or by the smoke of the explosion, a very difficult matter, particularly when the fortification is elevated above sea level.

Calculation of the distance of the ship by observers in the fort is more accurate because a base line of great length, even up to a mile, may be used, and the angles at the ends of this base line to the ship can be more accurately determined. Furthermore, it is possible to observe the splash of the shots and determine how much they are short of the ship, with great precision, particularly if the fortification is elevated considerably above sea level. Furthermore, the fortification guns are on a solid platform and the gun sight may be held absolutely on the mark. There is not such a quick manipulation of the guns by the pointer as is necessary on a ship which is rolling several degrees.

Consequently, the rapid success which has attended the attacks of the allied fleets is causing great surprise. Indeed, it is difficult to account for it, except on the ground that the heavy guns of the Turkish forts are of old pattern and low velocity, and the work of the gunners is far below the standard which has been reached in naval gunnery.

There are two stages of progress — first the night operations of a fleet of destroyers and lighter cruisers in removing the mines in advance of the battle-ship fleet. When a stretch of the strait has been cleared, the fleet moves forward and at a predetermined distance, steam to and from raining shells from its ten and twelve inch guns until the forts are breached and the guns dismantled. If the allied fleet succeeds in forcing the Dardanelles and reaching Constantinople the exploit will constitute the most thrilling feat of its kind in the history of naval warfare. With Constantinople under the guns of the fleet, its fall is certain. With its fall, the era of Turkish rule, or rather mis-rule in Europe will have closed.

is everywhere progressing with feverish haste. The newspapers publish cables showing that Canada alone has placed orders amounting to a hundred million dollars for shells and rifles Even the London hotels are full of Americans who are doing a great armament and other war business

The Labour Situation.

But more significant than all else is the transformation of the whole spirit of the labour world. The labour unrest, as a matter of fact, was largely created by the Government itself with the best of intentions, doubtless, but with some want of foresight as to the consequences when it added three shillings to the weekly wage of the railmen. This made the application of all other worker for a similar increase inevitable. Most of the labour unrest was due to downright overwork, especially in the armament factories, where the men working eighty-two hours each week became irritable and exacting. This epoch was definitely and finally passed, when the labour leaders courageously joined hands with the government and demanded that everything give way to the crying need of the nation for ammunition. Lloyd George's negotiations with the workmen undoubtedly helped some, but even the extreme trade unionists have consented to abandon the ordinary union restrictions and are universally pleded against strikes. The new arbitration board, of which Sir George Askwith, the greatest strike breaker in England, and Sir Francis Hopwood, Lord of the Admiralty, charged with the supervision of contracts, are members, has gained the confidence of both masters and men. Lord Hopwood told me to-day that there is never a day when the tribunal has not a number of cases before it from both masters and men. Every decision is not accepted by both sides as final.

Complete Mobilization.

At last there is a complete mobilization of all the forces in England, thus marking another step in the hourly growing determination and, even, ferocity of public opinion that the war must continue until German militarism is crushed beyond recovery. When it comes to speculation, as to the duration of the war there remains an irreconcilable division even among the Cabinet Ministers. Some still feel that the war will be long, and favour a steady and not too rapid development of attack. They look to the attrition of Germany's finances and food as well as soldiers as factors so powerful and constant as to justify the slowness of aggressive operations. This school was justified this week by the splendid expansion of England's revenue, the income tax alone producing nearly four million pounds sterling more than was anticipated, also by the result of the last German loan. While the Kaiser and all Germany regard the loan as a tremendous success, English financiers see in another mortgage on paper already mortgaged symbols of unsound finance.

The Optimistic's Views.

The optimists, who are in the majority in the Cabinet, and the general public feel convinced that the war will end in July or August. The victory at Neuve Chapelle is held to justify that anticipation by the success the English achieved when they met the Germans for the first time under equal conditions, and by the revelations of German prisoners. One who was a barber said he was peacefully following his trade in a small German town a week before he was sent to the front.

Finally, there is a new light on the haunting question as to the action of neutral countries. It is realized that their hesitation reveals that there is some doubt still in their minds regarding the ultimate winner; at least doubt as to the date when the Allies will beat Germany. It is plainly evident, however, that the moment the issue becomes clearly unfavourable for Germany the neutrals will tumble over each other in joining the fight against her.

Countries like Italy and Roumanie will be dragged in at the decisive moment by the irresistable temptation to increase their territory and population. Others, like Holland, see an opportunity of defending forever their soil from what they regard as Germany's settled purpose of annexation. The most stupendous of German's mistakes were the brutalities at the beginning of the war, especially in Belgium. It is no exaggeration to say that in Europe she has none but bitter, though momentarily silent, enemies.

By summing up the discordant opinions I have set forth in an effort to convey some ideas of the difficulties of the tasks confronting us, it becomes more and more evident that the war will grow fiercer every hour Germany may take longer than was originally estimated to be beaten but she will be attacked until the beating leaves militarism prostrate for at least a century, if not for all time.

GIRL WAS SENT TO THE SHELTER

Mrs. McElhiney returned from Toronto last evening with Rose Anne Eagleton, the fourteen-year-old Peterborough girl who was found at the Union Station, Toronto, a few days ago by Mrs Sweetman of the Travellers' Aid Society.

When asked by Mrs. Sweetman what she was doing in Toronto, alone, the girl stated that she was seking her father. She neither knew his Christian name, place of abode, or where he is employed, yet she was determined to find him. A home has been provided for her at 342 Jarvis street, where she was until Mrs. McElhiney's arrival.

This morning the girl was sent to the Shelter.

This Letter tells its Own Story

J. Lawrence Routly, Esq.,
Branch Manager,
Imperial Life Assurance Company,
Fort William, Ont.

Dear Sir:

I want to thank you and the Imperial Life Assurance Company, which you represent, for the prompt and generous treatment I received in the settling of my husband Thomas Butter's claim.

I wish to express my appreciation of the Automatic Non-Forfeiture clause contained in your policies. Had it not been for this the insurance would have been lost, as Mr. Butters failed to pay his premium in full when it fell due 15th of January last.

I will always recommend your Company to those wanting insurance.

Yours very truly,
I Butters

Hard to Keep Your Stove Clean?

TRY SHINO

SHINO is absolutely the Blackest and Brightest Stove Polish made.

SHINO makes no dust and stays on the longest.

SHINO is Made in Canada.

Mrs. Wiseneighbour Says:

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of 'Eddy's' washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an Indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of Washday."

Mrs. Newlywed says: "I've heard of 'Eddy's' Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibre and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre baked at extreme heat. All in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart. No chance of splinters, wears much longer, looks better and is light to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

Refers to the Picture of the Old "Government House" Which Has Been Presented to the Public Library by His Honour Judge Huycke—Hardship and Disease Thinned Out the Ranks of the Early Settlers to Peterborough

Mr. F. M. Dela Fosse, Librarian, of the Peterborough Public Library, has received from His Honour Judge Huycke, a letter referring to the picture of the old "Government House," which Judge Huycke kindly presented to the Library, and which now hangs in the Reading Room beside the portroit of the Hon. Peter Robinson, the founder of the Peterborough settlement. The matter contained in the letter which The Examiner obtained from Mr. Dela Fosse, is most interesting, and constitutes a valuable record of the early days of Peterborough.

The letter contains the following:

"I have had sent to you for the Public Library of the City, if the officers choose to accept it, a little picture of small intrinsic value, but of much local historical interest. It is, as you see, a picture of "Government House, Peterborough, 1832." This expression means little to most of us now, but in the early days of our community this "House" was of vast interest and importance. Prior to 1825 what is now Peterborough was known as "Scotts Plains," and here and in the whole surrounding country from Rice Lake north could be numbered scarce 500 souls. "Scotts Mill" was the pivot of the little colony.

In 1825 Hon. Peter Robinson brought his celebrated immigration of that year from Ireland, sailing from Cork in May, 1825, and arriving here via Kingston and Cobourg over Rice Lake and up the Otonabee in August of the same year. There were in all 2,069 settlers, but through hardship and disease over 100 of them died en route, or very soon after their arrival. This settlement was really the nucleus of what is now Peterborough City and County, of which Peter Robinson was really the founder, and in honour of whom the place received its name Peterborough. These settlers were all allotted land in the surrounding townships, and nearly all proved most valuable citizens, and their descendants are still with us.

"Government House."

Peter Robinson was the elder brother of Sir John Beverly Robinson, probably the most distinguished and best known of the Chief Justices of Upper Canada. Mr. Robinson immediately set to work to erect buildings for the purpose of the immigration, residences, storehouses, and offices, all of logs and situate mostly east of what is now Water Street, and opposite the Market Square. The fifth one erected was the largest and most pretentious of all, and was long known as "Government House," and was first used as the residence of Mr. Robinson and his chief associates and for a short time of Vice Royalty itself. It is of this house I send you a picture, it being a copy of probably the only picture extant of this historical landmark. Let me give a brief description, the only authentic one I can find. I quote from Pooles Early Settlement of Peterborough. He says, Page 15:

"Built of logs, it was 40 feet long by about 20 feet wide. It stood on the eastern side of the lot now occupied by the Bank of Montreal (now the Peterborough Club, S.E. corner of Simcoe and Water Streets), about 30 feet from the former and 40 from the latter, very near the southern end of the brick stable now belonging to Thos. Dennison. It fronted toward the south with a door near the centre of the building, partly concealed by a wooden porch in front. There were two windows in the front, and three in the rear. The interior was divided into three rooms, of nearly equal size, by two partitions of logs, erected with the walls. Into the middle of these the front door opened, and here was the chief reception room from which doors opened into the other apartments on either hand. The western room was devoted to the purposes of the kitchen, while Mr. Robinson slept in the eastern apartment, which also contained sundry books, papers and maps. The logs, both of walls and partitions, were hewed to a level surface in the interior, and the interstices, both within and without, carefully secured with "chinks" and mortar. A considerable portion of the ground, extending across and north of Simcoe Street, was fenced in as a garden, etc., etc."

A Gubernatorial Visit

To this house and its kindly occupants came the settlers with their wants and their complaints, both of which were doubtless very numerous. It is stated they always met a kindly reception and such assistance as could possibly be given.

But why was it called "Government House?" Perhaps to some extent because it was the seat of a local government, the kindly despotism of Mr. Robinson, but chiefly because it was visited and occupied by a real Governor, His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, which visit took place in the winter of 1826, a year after its erection. This was absolutely the first gubernatorial visit to Peterborough. His Excellency was accompanied by the brilliant but eccentric Col. Talbot, founder of the Talbot settlement in Western Canada, soldier and settler, courtier and pioneer, diplomat and despot, known almost equally well in the social circles of London and Paris and in the western wilds of Upper Canada. With him were Sir John B. Robinson, Chief Justice above referred to, George O. Bethune, Hon. Escehene Burnham and many others. The party came from Cobourg out, over the plains, across Rice Lake, and up the Otonabee.

The central room of "Government House" was used as a reception room. His Excellency seated at the further end, where he held a sort of rude levee. The settlers, in considerable numbers, were duly presented and as duly retired. The usual addresses of welcome, loyalty and appreciation of the high honour conferred by the distinguished visitor were presented and acknowledged. Various compliments were incidentally given to our "Worthy Chief, Mr. Robinson." The Irish representative, one Patrick Barregan, a school teacher, was most effusive in expressions of loyalty. In event of war he promises "that we, when called upon, will to a man follow our brave commanders; not an Irish soul will stay behind; and if we have no better weapons in our hands we will mow them down with our Irish shillalahs. He ends by asking the supply of two wants, clergymen to administer to us the comforts of our holy religion and good schoolmasters to instruct our children." If they had these he promises they will be completely happy. We trust their wants were supplied and their anticipations realized.

House Was Destroyed.

Such then is a brief sketch and description of "Government House, Peterborough," once within hearing, but now all but forgotten even in our own midst. It apparently stood on what is now the residence of Mr. Roland Dunne, and partly on the Peterborough Club property. As the settlement increased the rude little log "Government House" became unused and decayed, and was burned in the early forties. I am credibly informed it met destruction on a certain Hallowe'en, probably the victim of boyish pranks or wicked mischief makers, or both. There is a well defined legend, which I am, however, unable to verify, that Peterborough was named and duly christened in this very old log house at a dinner given by or for Hon. Peter Robinson, our city and county being named after him and in honour of their chief founder.

So much for the house; now a word as to the picture. You will see the one I send you is a copy, not the original. I succeeded in getting temporary possession of the original and Mr. Roy did the rest.

You will notice the name "Mary Sanford" on the copy sent you. That name is not on the original, but Mary Sanford it was who drew it. She was a young girl living in Peterborough, from 1830 to 1833, of a U. E. Loyalist family. She, impressed by the romantic and historic associations of the place, as well as the surrounding natural beauty, made the original pencil sketch, and her girlish hand did its work beautifully, accurately and well. In 1833 she married James Frederick Smith, for fifty years a well-known business man of Toronto. Mary Sanford Smith died in 1846, leaving a son of tender years, now James Frederick Smith, K.C., long one of the most eminent commercial lawyers of Canada. He was for many years the editor of the Ontario Law Reports, succeeding in that capacity the distinguished Christopher Robinson, K.C., of "Beverly House," Toronto, son of Sir John Beverly, referred to, and nephew of the founder of Peterborough.

An Historic Treasure.

Mr. Smith is the owner of the sketch made eighty-three years ago by his mother and she, herself, has been now dead seventy years.

To Mr. Smith of course the picture is priceless, the hand-work of his young mother of so many years ago. Thirty years ago now, the writer was a student in Mr. Smith's office, when a life-long friendship was formed and where, on one side at least, the highest respect, admiration and affection instilled. Learning about his possession of this historic treasure, for so I deem it is, I asked and obtained the loan of it and am asking you to accept this copy for the people of Peterborough, a picture of the city's first public building. I intend also sending a copy to St. John's church, whose turret you see among the trees in the picture.

I trust you will consider this worthy a place in your library or museum, as you may prefer, not for its special intrinsic merit, but because of its supreme historic value, a memento and almost the only one, of the very inception of our city, its enterprising founder and his undaunted pioneers.

Also in memory of that sweet young girl resident of Peterborough nearly a century since, whose gentle hand, long since turned into dust, preserved for us the memory and appearance of the outstanding feature of earliest Peterborough. Truly she wrought more wisely and enduringly than she knew."

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The British steamer Parisian is aground near the mouth of the Mississippi river, with 1,500 mules and over 1,000,000 pounds of supplies aboard.

A car of lumber, which was wrecked on the Grand Trunk Railway west of Rockwood yesterday morning, caused a bad dislocation of the train service.

On account of the scarcity of kerosene the town administration of Luckenwalde, in Germany, has decided to install electricity in houses free of charge, according to the Overseas News Agency.

Recently there has been extensive distribution of anti-Japanese literature in Shanghai. Numerous attacks have been made on individual Japanese, and some Japanese shops have been forced to close temporarily.

England's Queen Mother Alexandra has written an autograph letter to Mrs. Whitelaw Reid in London expressing gratitude for the aid given by the American Red Cross in caring for sick and wounded British soldiers and sailors.

A financial report issued in London yesterday by the American commission for relief in Belgium shows that foodstuffs of a total value of $20,000,000 have been delivered in Belgium since the inception of the commission's work.

It was announced yesterday that Western University of London, Ont., has decided to equip a full hospital unit for service overseas with the Canadian troops, and offer it to the Dominion Government, as has been done by other educational institutions.

Kilborn Sent To Trial.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., March 27.—After hearing the evidence for the crown, Police Magistrate Deacon yesterday committed for trial James G. Kilborn, for the murder of Mrs. Jas. White. The trial is fixed for the spring sessions of the High Court, commencing on Tuesday next, and Mr. Justice Meredith will be on the bench. It is said that T. C. Robinette of Toronto will be the counsel for the defence.

Vessel Sunk Off Boulogne.

LONDON, March 27.—The British steamer Delmira has been torpedoed by a German submarine off Boulogne, in the English Channel. The members of the crew were given ten minutes in which to leave the vessel. Subsequently they landed on the Isle of Wight, going later to Portsmouth.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Being in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

His Worship Mayor Buller is more than satisfied with the results achieved by the Hydro Radial deputation that waited upon Premier Hearst yesterday.

An Aftermath.

Following the meeting with the Premier a meeting of the eastern representatives was called in the Railway committee room. It was decided to call a district meeting in Belleville at an early date.

Two Absentees.

The entire City Council was present at the Hydro-Radial meeting with the exception of Aldermen Dobbin and Saunders. The latter was in Belleville in connection with the Patriotic Fund campaign.

The Bye-Election.

This afternoon His Worship Mayor Buller will deal with the matter of authorizing the issuing of a writ calling for a bye-election in the north ward to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Ald. Johnston.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. A. Dowie has been selected as City Auditor of Hamilton. Dowie is a Hamilton man.

Awarded Damages.

Mrs. Minnie Rokat, of Orillia, was awarded a verdict of $2,000 against the City of St. Thomas for the loss of an arm in a mangle at the Amasa Wood Hospital laundry, where she was employed.

Unhappy Mayor.

After L. D. Taylor had been elected mayor twice and unseated once, Joe Martin, one of the first defeated candidates announced that his law office was preparing a petition for the unseating of Mr. Taylor again, on the grounds of alleging faulty qualification.

Economy for the City.

Mayor Walters, of Hamilton, has adopted a policy of paying his own expenses on any trip that he may take on the city's business.

City's Appeal Set Over For Two Weeks

In Toronto yesterday Mr. G. N. Gordon arranged for a two weeks' postponement of the hearing of the city's appeal against the award of the Arbitration Board for the Peterborough Light & Power Company's plant.

SATISFACTORY CONDITIONS REPORTED BY MERCHANTS

Three merchants told the Examiner today that they are finding business conditions quite favourable. While the volume of business was scarcely up to last year's mark, the present demand is being met under new conditions that practically equalize the trade for the two seasons. With any kind of loosening up during the Spring by those who are in a position to do so business should be satisfactory. If building and other labour activities are "as usual" this season there will be little cause for depression. In a recent issue of the Canadian Grocer a large Montreal wholesale grocery firm reported their January sales 13 per cent. better, and the February sales 25 per cent. better than in the corresponding months last year. Those who howled last Fall about the winter siege are noticeably quiet, and if the same efforts could be used to generate confidence a great deal more might be accomplished.

The "Drum Major" A Splendid Treat

Will Be Given by Orpheus Society on Easter Monday and Tuesday

The presentation of the charming and popular musical comedy to be given by the Orpheus Society, promises to be a splendid treat for the people of Peterborough. The Operetta is full of catchy solos and choruses, dances, etc. The libretto deals with the stirring times of recruiting in the early days of the French Empire, under Napoleon, and the martial atmosphere pervading the whole making it is most appropriate for the present time.

The caste is as follows: "Clarice," Miss Lettie Drepe, the prettiest girl in Paris; "Sergeant Lercux" of the French Army, Mr. Harold Lee; "Jean," a musical genius, Mr. E. Hanrahan; "Babette," Mrs. A. A. Perrin; his adoring sweetheart; Recruits—Messrs. F. Hartshorn, P. Naish and Norman Laing; "Antoinette," "Suzanne," "Jacqueline," village beauties, Mrs. J. Lock, Miss Helen Lytle and Ruby Quartermaine; "Marcel," a prominent Orator of the Day, Mr. Donald Shook. The dances under the direction of Miss Bickerstaeth and the Operetta by permission of J. Fischer & Bros., New York, under the direction of J. Edward Fisher.

BIRTH.

MEHARRY.— At Peterborough, on Sunday, March 21st, to Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Meharry, High Street, a son.

DIED.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Gun Club was held last evening at the Empress Hotel. The meeting was well attended and the following officers elected for the ensuing year:

Hon. President—Mr. O. E. McGaw, Toronto.
President—L. Hall.
Vice-Pres.—Dr. Gowan.
Captain—C. Graham.
Sec.-Treas.—C. Wood.

The secretary's report showed a substantial balance to the credit of the club, after a heavy expenditure last year in building a very comfortable club house. All arrangements were made for the shooting during the coming season. Several prizes will be competed for, including the two silver cups presented by Mr. O. E. McGaw of Toronto. A prize from the Peterborough Hardware Co., the Kingan Hardware Co., the Morgan Hardware and the Club, and probably others. These prizes will be competed for under the same conditions as last year.

The regular shoots will be held on the first, third and fourth Fridays of the months of May, June, July and August.

Members competing for the prizes will shoot at fifty birds each month, 25 on the first and 25 on the third Friday. However, should a member be unable to attend on one of these days, his score on the fourth Friday may be recorded. The first practice shoot will be held in the near future, when the members will be notified.

The Club is affiliated with the Trent Valley Trap-shooters' League, composed of the following clubs: Cobourg, Belleville, Stirling, Campbellford and Peterborough, and some friendly shoots are looked for with these clubs during the summer.

Nick Carter Is Dead In England

Famous Lacrosse Player Was Member of First Contingent

TORONTO, March 27.— Announcement of the death of Albert G. ("Nick") Carter, in England yesterday, was received by cable here last night. Deceased was a victim of spinal meningitis. He was a member of the first overseas contingent from Canada and was stricken with the dread disease before the departure of the Canadians from Salisbury Plain. Carter enlisted at Vancouver.

The late Albert G. Carter earned a reputation as a lacrosse player in the old C.L.A., in which he played with various teams. Some few years ago he made his professional debut with a local team and became known as one of the best fielders in the game. He was with both Tecumsehs and Torontos. When the professional game became popular on the Pacific coast three years ago the joined the Vancouver team and had made that city his residence since that time.

Central School Elect Officers

For the Baseball Team—Representatives to the Public School League

The officers for the Central school baseball team were elected at a meeting that was held yesterday evening. They are as follows:

Hon. President—Mr. B. F. Ackerman.
Vice-President—Mr. G. N. Gordon.
President—Mr. R. F. Downey.
Vice-President—Miss Armstrong.
Secretary-Treas.—Mr. Earl Ward.
Manager—Mr. F. E. Kerr.
Representatives to the Public School League—Messrs. Downey and Kerr.
Mascots— R. Cherrett, H. Frost, E. Ward.

"Mamma," exclaimed the little girl, in horrified tones, "please speak to brother Emerson. He's been playing with those common little boys round the corner again, and h's using dreadful language."

"What's he saying?" asks mamma. "He's splitting one infinitive after another!"

George Wiltse —Better known as "Hooks" for years a member of the New York Giants' pitching staff, who has been appointed manager of the Jersey City team of the International League.

Semi-Finals In English Cup Tie

Will Be Played To-day—All Other Games Pale into Insignificance

All games in England pale before the cup tie semi-finals to-day. Everton and Chelsea meet on the ground of Aston Villa at Birmingham and Sheffield United meet Bolton Wanderers at Ewood Park, Blackburn. Extra time will have to be played if necessary. Both games promise to be of a most interesting nature, and it is difficult to forecast the winners. Prospects are good for Everton and Sheffield United to play the final.

Their Records.

ROONEY WITH CURLY BLOUNT

YOUNGSTOWN, March 25.— Manager Curly Blount, of the local ball club, announced this morning that he had received a signed contract from Pitcher Duffy, let out by the Pittsburg Pirates, and had favourable word from Frank Rooney, a first baseman and outfielder who adorned the Peterborough club of the Canadian circuit last season. Blount expects to signs several other men within the next few days.

Police Court

Leo. Phelan would not work and yesterday morning we came downstairs late, and becoming angered at his mother, he threatened her with a stick. His step-father is ill at home and the mother cannot do anything with Leo.

He appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning on a charge of disorderly conduct, and was given a severe lecture, and kindly advice to mend his ways before it was too late. He was let down with a fine of $2.00 this morning, but if he appears before His Worship again he has the rpomise of a jail sentence.

A man named Grant was creating a disturbance at 12:25 a.m. to-day. He was fined $2.00 and costs by Magistrate Dumble this morning, amounting in all to $5.75.

Shells, Pave and Coffee Mixed For War Riders

Motor Cycle of London publishes some interesting experiences of Corporal D. M. Brown, a dispatch rider, who has been to his home for a short furlough at Douglas, Isle of Man.

There seems to be considerable misapprehension as to what exactly the work of a dispatch rider consists of," he writes, and many times, as we have sat in our billets, we have laughed at some of the amusing experiences of the motor cyclist dispatch riders which have been sent to the press. Let me make it plain from the outset that I have never yet shot any Uhlans—in fact the only time I have used my revolver has been to shoot game which has provided a tasty meal for our squad.

"The work of a dispatch rider is, as the name indicates, that of delivering orders from headquarters to the various brigades, divisions, or units of the particular army to which he is attached. In the town where we are at present our billets are exactly facing the house in which the headquarters are situated. Here are the staff offices, record offices, post and telegraphic offices, offices for the supply of fod and ammunition, the organization of which it is impassible to describe during my short stay in the island.

"We are in charge of Lieut. Cadman, and in my party there are three riders—Boyton, Davies and myself. They are the only people with me who know the island. We take it in turn, delivering dispatches, and on some days we are hard at work from early morning to the last thing at night. Orders come across to our billets to send a dispatch rider across to the headquarters. We are there handed a dispatch to deliver to a certain division, the whereabouts of wihch we ascertain from the Record Office. The dispatches are contained in a sealed envelope, and it is necessary on its delivery to the officers to whom we are sent for them to acknowledge its receipt in writing.

"We are timed as we leave, and report ourselves immediately on our return. Most of our journeys are short—anything about 10 kilometers. The longest journey I have had was some little time ago, when I was given a dispatch to deliver to the headquarters of the Indian Army, then situated at Chartres, not far from Orleans, some 300 miles away. I was five days on this journey and enjoyed it immensely. Although I was supposed to obtain billets at the various towns at which I had to stop by reporting myself to the Maire, as I had a considerable amount of money at the time, I took the opportunity of doing myself well by stopping at the very best hotels I could find. I thought it just as well to have a few of the comforts of civilisation when the opportunity occurred.

"With the exception of this journey I have been almost entirely in a line from Arras north to the sea coast. I have delivered dispatches to the Indian Army, the French Army, and the Belgian Army, and, of course, to the First Army, which is under the command of Sir Douglas Haig, and I have been lucky enough to have always succeeded in delivering my dispatches promptly and without trouble.

"The roads over which we have to travel just now are particularly bad. In fact, it is quite impossible to describe them so as to give you an idea of the conditions which exist out yonder. Most of the roads in Flanders are what are called paved, that is, they consist of small cobble stones in the centre, and on each side just the plain macadam, which is now a sea of mud anything up to two or three feet in depth.

"The pave has been considerably knocked to pieces, not only by the heavy traffic of the motor waggons, but also by the shell fire. Perhaps the best way to describe it is to say that it is like riding on the top of a drain pipe, and the whole of the time skidding from one side to the other. It is excellent training for reliability trials.

"Dispatch riders have perhaps the most unique and fascinating work at the front. At the present moment I know the wheerabouts of practically every regiment we have at the front. I know the shortest cuts to them; and, in addition to this, at one time and another, I have seen every department of the British Army at work.

"Some days I am sent with dispatches to deliver to the artillery, and this is one of the journeys which is most interesting. Unless you know the exact whereabouts of our batteries, you would pass tem by on the road. To protect them from being seen from above by the enemies' aeroplanes, the guns are covered by trees, and in the distance look more like an old hedge or a haystack. It may be that the artillery are to shell the German position some half a dozen miles away.

"First of all aviators are dispatched to ascertain the exact position of the enemy. It is thrilling to see the bravery of our aviators, especially when high up in the air, their machines rocking with the explosions of shrapnel. On their return, having made their report to their commander, I am probably dispatched to the artillery unit with full particulars of the range, and told to remain with the artillery in case they should wish to communicate with the Aviation Division or the headquarters. Having reported myself to the officer in command, I may have to stand a couple of hours, or the whole day, watching the artillery at work. Our artillery officers always treat us very well, and insist upon taking us to their mess when we arrive.

"Dispatch riding at night is very dangerous, because of the large number of sentries on the roads. You don't always see them until you are stopped by a man with a rifle pointed at your head. They examine your papers, and this might happen dozens of times in a mile, so you have no time to think of anything but the job you are on. It is difficult to pass the Indian sentries. They never smile and as you are quite unable to understand their language, you do not know whether they are satisfied or not.

"When you pass a French sentry, he cries out 'Vive l'Angleterre!' and immediately wants to make a fuss of you, which at times is disconcerting. Every time you bring a dispatch to the French Army they insist upon feeding you with coffee and rolls, and after about half a dozen journeys a day one has had quite sufficient coffee and rolls to do one any good.

"In conclusion, I think things out there are going very well, but not for the Germans. I would not like to prophesy when the war will finish, as I can see no diminution in the strength of the Germans, nor in their ammunition or equipment; but when sprig comes things will begin to hustle and we will be able to make considerable progress. We could advance any day now but for the difficulties of feeding and supplying the army, owing to the awful condition of the roads."

DODGE BROTHERS MOTOR CAR

You are almost sure to ask yourself—how is it possible to incorporate such quality at so moderate a price?

The equipment of the car speaks for itself; Timken bearings throughout; the S. R. O. ball bearings in clutch and transmission; the full floating rear axle; the 30-35 horse-power, four-cylinder motor; the real leather upholstery and natural curled hair filling; the chrome Vanadium steel unit, chain-driven starter-generator; the Eisemann waterproof magneto; the fact that in direct drive no transmission gears are engaged or in motion; the almost exclusive use of drop forgings and drawn work; the perfect streamline body; the specially designed oval fenders; the one-man type top—all these are recognizable as features beyond betterment.

The Wheelbase is 110 inches

ISSUING BREAD TICKETS

VIENNA, March 27.—A government order issued to-day regulates the consumption of bread, flour and all foodstuffs. Following the action of German authorities bread tickets will be issued.

LIVERPOOL, March 27.—The White Star liner, Arabic, New York to Liverpool, was chased by a German submarine in the Irish Sea, her passengers reported upon their arrival here to-day. For thirty miles the German vainly endeavoured to get close enough to shoot a torpedo. The Arabic shot away from the Germans with a burst of speed that left the submarine in the rear.

American passengers on board the Arabic laughed at the thrilling chase. They crowded the rails, they said, and watched the German shoot over the surface of the water, sending showers of spray. Once the Arabic put on full speed she was never in danger, drawing away from the submarine with comparative ease. The submarine abandoned the chase several miles off the mouth of the Mersey.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—Whenever the Prinz Eitel Frederich's commander decides to risk running the gauntlet, it is declared there will be nothing to interfere with him leaving Newport News. The officials are now beginning to believe that after all the German cruiser may intend to attempt an escape. That she could successfully make a run through the capes and out to the open sea is doubted here. At least four allied warships are waiting for her, including the Canadian cruiser Niobe.

BEAUTIFUL BUILDING LOTS.

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful building lots on Benson, Geraldine and O'Carroll Avenues. This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and ten minutes' walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light and sewer services are installed, the property being already completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle south-easterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the city, and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries. The air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees. Two handsome residences are already under construction on this property and several more will be erected this season and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home there are certainly no lots in the city that offer equal advantages. Copies of registered plan No. 149, which covers this property, may be seen, and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell & Co., C. J. Carroll & Co.; also at the office of the owner, Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, Ontario Land Surveyor, 295 George Street. 'Phone 888. d.s.t.f.-73

OVER THREE HUNDRED BOYS AT BOYS' DEPARTMENT BANQUET

Last Night in the Y.M.C.A. Gymnasium—Addressed by Mr. Ivor Brock.

CHURCH PARADE

The annual Boys' Banquet, in connection with the Boys' Department at the Young Men's Christian Association last night, was an event which will be remembered by the boys for some time as one where there was an abundance of good things to eat and lots of entertainment. Seldom has there been seen a larger number of youngsters entertained more royally in Peterborough, and seldom has a like number sat to the festive board in the city. There were over three hundred boys fed, and judging by the tables before they started and when they were through, they went with the fixed idea that the members of the Mother's Club should not have to take anything home in the line of eatables if they could help it. Every boy had all he could eat, but left nothing in front of him but the dishes and crumbs.

The Boys' Banquet has been an annual affair ever since the opening of the local branch of the Association, and it is becoming, if possible, more popular every year. At least every year there in an increase in membership to chronicle, this year twenty-eight being added to the list over and above those lost from various ways. And they are going after more, and next year hope to reverse the figures and make the increase eighty-two over this year.

The gymnasium was appropriately decorated for the occasion with flags and bunting, and three tables stretched the length of the hall around which the boys gathered, while across the end was another table for the guests of honour, among whom were Chief D. Thompson, J. J. Turner, Jr.; J. J. Howden, Ivor Brock, Rev. Jas. Rollins, Rev. Canon Davidson, Rev. J. R. Webb, Rev. Chas. G. Smith, of Belleville; J. Connal and Jos. Wearing. Mr. Mel. McCarroll, one of the Senior Leader's Corp, ably performed the duties devolving upon him as chairman, having the boys well in hand at all times. Considerable latitude is always allowed at the boys' entertainments for the exhuberance of youth, but the behaviour last night was certainly exemplary. It took a whistle in the possession of the chairman to get above the voices at times on occasions of applause, but the sounding of the whistle always ensured attention.

The speaker of the evening was Mr. Ivor Brock, Manager of the Brinton Carpet Company, and of his popularity in the Boys' Department there was no doubt when he was called upon to address them. He has told them at other times about cities in England, Switzerland and other countries of Europe, but his subject last night was "The Road to a City," and the name of the city was "Win."

The toasts of the evening were not very numerous, and they were ably handled by members of the Boys' Department. The first toast on the list, "To the King," was honoured by the singing of the National Anthem. That to the Y.M.C.A. was proposed by A. H. Austin. He had some interesting information about the work of the local Association, and reviewed the work in the Department for the past year. W. Adams, who responded, referred to the work of the Association from a National standpoint, tracing it from its inception as a Young Men's Christian Association. The toast to "The Ladies" was proposed and responded by R. Stevenson and C. Elliott, who did justice to the members of the Mother's Club and Ladies' Auxiliary, who looked after the providing for the various banquets in connection with the Association.

Rev. Chas. G. Smith, of Belleville, who is in the city in connection with special services being held in the Murray Street Baptist Church during this week, was called upon during the evening and he made friends with the boys with his stories and his invitation to everyone there to call upon the Y.M.C.A. if ever in Belleville but, said he did not know how he would handle them if they all went at once.

Boys' Secretary Galley informed the boys that there would be another Summer Camp this year, and cautioned them to save their money in anticipation. He referred to the invitation to all mebers of the Boys' Department to attend service at Murray Street Baptist Church next Sunday evening. They are to meet at the Y.M.C.A. and go in a body to the church, where they will be addressed by Rev. Chas. G. Smith, of Belleville, and Rev. J. R. Webb. Every member is specially invited to bring along his chums.

PROBABILITIES.

Moderate to fresh south to west winds, fine and a little milder to-day and on Sunday.

MISSION STUDY CLASS.

The Mission Study Class of the George Street Methodist Church will meet on Monday evening, next, March 29, at 7.30, at the home of Mrs. Wm Hill, 621 Union Street.

REBECCAS, TAKE NOTICE.

A special meeting of Golden Link Lodge will be held on Tuesday evening, March 30th, at 7.30 p.m. for receiving application report and dealing with same. A full attendance is requester. By order of the N. G.

DR. TAIT'S SUCCESS.

Did you ever wonder why it is that people get better satisfaction from The Tait Optical Co., 410 George Street than anywhere else? It is because Dr. Tait has had such a wide and varied experience in different countries where all kinds of different eye defects are met with, and as it is only experience and practice that make perfect, that is why Dr. Tait has become perfect in his profession.

STUNG AGAIN.

Carriage dealers have been stung by buying their carriages out of some foreign country. Now they have to pay 35 per cent. duty, 7 1-2 per cent. war tax, but we were lucky to secure Canada-made carriages, with no duty or war tax on them, which enables us to sell carriages at such a price that has never been offered in the city. See our display before you decide on one. You will benefit by it greatly. Home Furnishing Co.

ADVENTISTS IN WOODMEN HALL

An extremely interesting topic will be considered in Woodmen Hall over Nugent's Drug Store, opposite Cressman's, on Sunday, at 7 p.m. by Elder F. W. Johnston. The topic will be "Nateum's Chariots or the Electric Cars and Locomotives in prophecy." Don't miss this interesting theme. On Tuesday at 8 p.m. the subject will be "Good Friday and the Hot Cross Buns." Was Good Friday intended to commemorate the death of Christ? Sabbath School is held every Saturday at 2 p.m. and preaching at 3 p.m. All are cordially invited. Come with your Bibles.

TO MY MANY FRIENDS.

I wish to thank my many friends who have given me their support and pony votes, and to remind you of the fact there are only three more days to work, as the contest closes on Wednesday, March 31st. If you have any votes now or are about to make a purchase, please go to the pony stores and buy there if possible. As you know I am anxious to win this pony and do not mind working hard for it and desire to assist the merchants who have been so kind to donate it to the boys who work. If you have not promised anyone your votes, kindly 'phone 530 or mark your ballots for me. Thanking you kindly for your votes and assistance.

Yours faithfully,
ROD CAMERON.

Hurling Shells Against the Bosphorus Defences

Enemy Lost Over 50,000 in Twenty Days

ROAR OF HOSTILE GUNS SHAKING CONSTANTINOPLE

Russian Shells Are Falling Within Twelve Miles of the Sultan's Palace—Bombardment Has Been Resumed.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 29.—The roar of hostile guns is shaking Constantinople. Russian shells are falling within twelve miles of the Sultan's palace. For the first time in history Islam's capital has been bombarded from the air. The despatches from Petrograd and from the Balkan points to-day reported the Russian fleet again hurling shells against the Bosphorus defences. The bombardment was resumed last evening. Russian aviators sped along the Bosphorus and dropped several bombs upon Pera, the residential section of the Ottoman capital. Part of the population is reported to have fled to the interior in a panic.

An official statement from Constantinople, evidently delayed in transmission, reached here early to-day. It was filed shortly after noon yesterday, and dealt only with the morning's operations.

"Early on Sunday morning Russian warships shelled our gaurdships at the Bosphorus at long range without doing any extensive damage," said the Turkish war office. "The bombardment lasted but a short time, and the enemy's squadron then steamed out of sight."

A four masted Turkish ship which fled toward the Bosphorus when the Russian fleet approached, was sunk four miles from the Black Sea entrance, the Russian admiralty announced to-day.

Several Russian shells struck her almost simultaneously and she caught fire. While the shells were still raining at her she was shaken by an explosion, keeled over and went down. Her crew could be seen struggling in the water. Several boats put out from the Russian cruiser but were subjected to a terrific fire from the Bosphorus batteries and were forced to withdraw, leaving the Turkish sailors to perish.

DAMAGED THEIR OWN BOATS

PETROGRAD, March 29.—By blundering night attacks, the Germans in the Baltic have damaged eight of their own torpedo boats, according to an official statement given out here to-day, regarding naval operations in the Baltic, since the beginning of the war.

For Young German Minds

Tales of Pirate Submarines Issued For Consumption at Home

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

On the torpedo-tube of the U21 is now the inscription: "Through a shot from this tube, on August 9th, 1914, the Captain sank the English cruiser Pathfinder."

Of the Pathfinder, Lieut.-Commander von Hersing (Iron Cross) said: "She wanted to enter the Firth of Forth, and I lay across her course and sank her. The English destroyer pursued me, but then one naturally dives".

Of the Irish Sea exploits, Gottberg writes: 'Soon after January 20 U 21 put to sea."

Later Hersing was lying in waiting before Liverpool, Gottberg's story of the sinking of the Ben Cruachan would make it appear that the submarine's coxswain took the merchant captain's expression general cargo" to mean that the Ben Cruchan had a military general on board.

It is not clear whether this is German wit or German stupidity.

While the Ben Cruachan's boats were still in sight the Linda was sunk Then a coal steamer appeared and Hersing waited for her; but (writes Gottberg ingloriously) wireless had sent an echo of the thunderous explosion on the Ben Cruachan into every office of British shipowners, and Hersing waited in vain for days for new booty. John Bull was clever, though a broken man, and had ordered to stoppage of shipping in the Irish Sea!"

From Liverpool Bay Hersing cruised off into the Irish Sea, but was only able to fire at an airship-shed (position in or on the Irish Sea not stated). A neighbouring fort shelled the submarine, which disappeared under the water. And so home.

"The Canadians never budge" says General Alderson and the boys of the 57th are helping to make the statement good in the muddy trenches. You can help by taking their places in the ranks at home. Get in to-morrow night.

WAS REQUESTED TO SIGN AGREEMENT

That He Would Not Take Action Against Military or Civil Authorities—A Lindsay Episode

Mr. George Livingston, a commercial traveller, who has had an unfortunate experience in Lindsay last week, has returned to Toronto. He was born in Berlin, Germany, but has been twenty-six years in Canada and has been a naturalized citizen for fifteen years. Arriving in Lindsay on Wednesday night last he called on several business men. Next morning he was arrested on the street by two military police and taken before Colonel Fee, military commander, and in spite of his protests and the showing of his naturalization papers, was held over night in Lindsay jail.

He finally secured assistance and next morning the Acting County Crown Attorney ordered his release, at the same time expressing his regret over the mistake. Mr. Livingstone was also requested to sign an agreement that he would not take legal action against the military or civil authorities concerned in his arrest.

"As a British citizen I think a gross injustice was done me," says Mr. Livingstone. "I was refused the right of a hearing by the civil authorities."

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR COL. FARQUHAR

SPECIAL CABLE:

LONDON, March 29—A memorial service for Lieut.-Col. Farquhar, commander of the Princess Patricias, who was killed at St. Eloi last week, and buried in Voormezeele churchyard, was held at St Mary's, Bryanston Square, Saturday. Canon Shepherd, assisted by Rev. Mr. Percival, Priest-in-ordinary to the King, officiated. The Duke of Connaught was represented by Major Malcolm Murray, and the Duchess by Sir Donald Lane. Sir George Perley represented the Canadian Government. Among others present were Lady Perley, Lady Minto, Lady Hamilton, and about thirty officers and men of the Princess Patricia Regiment.

Pat Again.

Three men were brought up in a factory for coming late.

Master—"Excuse, Sandy?"

"I had to mind the baby."

"Yours, Henry?"

"Had a cold, sir."

"Now, Pat, yours?"

"Sure, yer honour, some one took the doorstep away and we couldn't get out."

MAN DIES AT THE AGE OF 106

Passed Away Suddenly—Was Long a Farmer

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BELLEVILLE, March 28.—Matthew Sweltzer, perhaps the oldest resident of this portion of Ontario, died yesterday morning in Thurlow at the great age of 106 years, seven months and eleven days. He was born in Camden East, and followed farming. One year ago he came to Thurlow. He leaves his aged wife, living in the township of Lake. The body has been sent to Camden East for burial.

On instructions from the Crown Attorney an inquest has been opened, as Sweltzer died rather suddenly. His hands had been frost-bitten, it is said, as a result of his getting out of the Refuge, where his friends maintained him, one one occasion during the winter.

GARDENING WILL PROLONG LIFE

Franklin Newhall Tells How to Live Long

Wish to live long? Franklin Newhall says he has the correct recipe. Here it is:

Sleep from six to eight hours at night.

Chop down a tree or two for firewood each day.

Mow with a scythe.

Newhall, who is ninety-one, is contesting court action brought by his son for the appointment of a conservator for his $70,000 estate. He was on the witness stand before Judge Gregg in the Probate Court, Chicago.

"I cut down trees and chop them up for firewood," he said. "That is the way I exercise".

"How long have you indulged in this form of exercise?" asked the court.

"For fifty years or more," he replied. "I have other exercises, too. In the summer I mow with a scythe and tend the garden. I generally sleep from six to eight hours at night.

HAVE FOUND NO TRACE OF SUBMARINE

HONOLULU, March 29.—Three days' search for the lost United States submarine F.4 has resulted only in unfulfilled hopes. Divers Agraz and Evans have gone down the two cables thought to have been attached to the submarine and have found that the heavy body of an old anchor, probably that lost by the battleship Oregon. To-day sweeping operations to locate the missing craft will be recommenced.

Agraz, who went down the cable attached to the anchoro, wore only a helmet.

Diver Agraz' descent to a depth of 215 feet is said to be a naval record.

11,000 GERMANS FOUND DEAD IN THE TRENCHES

Won by the French in the Fighting in the Champagne Country--Enemy's Wastage Has Been Two to One of the Allied Troops.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

CHALONS-SUR-MARNE, France, March 29.—Eleven thousand German dead have been taken from the trenches won by the French during the twenty days of fighting in the Champagne country. The German losses in killed, in prisoners and in wounded are estimated by the French military authorities at fifty thousand. The German wastage they say has been two to one compared with the French losses, because the Germans would try to regain the lost ground by counter-attacks, repeated again and again with obstinate courage.

It was in these counter-assaults, supported by relatively inadequate artillery and what the French officers assert was inadequate morale, against the allied troops, that so many German soldiers have fallen. The graves in which they are buried by fifties and by hundreds are thick up on a narrow front of some fifteen miles.

For nearly a month now the French, their officers declare, by the superiority of their artillery of both large and small calibre, and by a certain irresistible spirit, have day by day gained ground, sometimes a few hundred yards of trenches; on other days a mile of frontage, and from three to five hundred miles deep.

The Germans are bringing up new contingents steadily. They have had in action on this segment of the fighting lines during March five army corps or about 200,000 men. Yet, on the evening of every day, the French have held somewhat more of the field than they did the evening before.

The Associated Press correspondent has been over the ground and found that this is what has taken place: The French artillery, numerous and concentrated at times, subdues the German guns and tears up parts of the German trenches by sustained shell fire. Then at a moment signalled by telephone, the guns cease fire, and the men in the trenches with reserves crowded into the approaches, jump out and makes a quick run for the trenches opposite. Then body to body fighting finishes the attack.

Meantime a barrier of bursting shells behind the German front line, prevents reserves from coming up. This is continued until the captured trenches are put into condition to resist attacks. The assaults sometimes are unsuccessful but the results from day to day apparently have been gains for the French.

The correspondent has been able to see for himself the ground gained by the French and to compare the positions occupied months ago with those held to-day. The French commanders who find the courage and confidence of their troops mounting with each success, express the opinion that the Germans have been somewhat disheartened by feeling that French attacks are successful, and that their counter attacks, delivered with admirable pluck, under the circumstances have been useless.

A GREAT PERFORMANCE BY AN OVERLAND.

What is declared to be the most strenuous, hill-climbing feat ever performed by a motor car in the south west is a trip made by an Overland Model 81 touring car to the "Hole-in-th-Rock" near Phoenix, Arizona.

Inlieu of a road up the steep cliff, the car was forced to push its way up an incline of thirty per cent. over a loose gravel trail. There were two bad turns with the path on the bare face of the cliff. This necessitated slowing down to a speed little faster than a walk, eliminating any advantage which might have been gained from a flying start. Consequently the car was forced to make the climb entirely on its own pulling power.

The "Hole-in-the-Rock" has always been said to be inaccessible for vehicles. So far as is known, the Overland is the only motor car which ever successfully negotiated the climb.

A remarkable feature of the test is that the car was equipped with smooth tread tires and no chains were used.

Natives of Peru use a boat made entirely of reds and straw, even the sail consisting of straw matting.

159 Men From First Contingent Returning Home

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 29.—A party of 159 men from the first contingent sailed on the Metagama Saturday for Canada in charge of Major Guy Marriott, of the 9th Battalion, with Lieut. Mitchell, of the Record Office, as adjutant. For the most part the men have been found physically unfit, while there is an element of undesirables. Col. Frank Reid, with assistant officers, has been detailed to begin a vigorous weeding out process, as improved conditions at Shorncliffe lend themselves to the maintenance of stricter discipline. In fairness to the first contingent it is only just to point out that numbers of men have suffered physical deterioration through the hardships endured at Salisbury Plain.

The Princess Patricias who have just entered the Queen's Canadian Hospital from the front include William Welch, Edward Simpson, Sergt. Henry Leach, Eustace King and Alexander Genois. Genois is the second French-Canadian patient received. Fred Bullock and Lieut. John B. Neale, and Fred Davis, of the 3rd Battalion, were also received, besides Ernest Honour, 2nd Battalion; Henry Charles, 3rd Brigade, C.F.A.; William Turner, 14th Battalion; J. Rattew, 12th Battalion; Henry Green, 13th Battalion, and Walter Jones, 15th Battalion. Earl Grey visited the Queen's Hospital yesterday accompanied by Col. Hendry, who motored down with McLaren Brown. Earl Grey inspected the hospital arrangements in detail, expressing admiration. He also talked with the Patricias men, whose praise of the late colonel was uttered without knowledge that Col. Farquhar was a cousin of Earl Grey.

RAN OVER SUBMARINE

LONDON, March 29.—The captain of the steamship Lizzie, which arrived at Llanelly, Wales, Saturday afternoon, stated that he was close by when the British steamer Delmira was torpedoed Thursday by a submarine in the English Channel. He said that the submarine proved to be the U-37. The submarine was some distance ahead of the Lizzie, which ran over it at full speed. The German then disappeared, and from oil seen on the surface of the water the captain concluded that the under-water boat was either seriously damaged or sunk.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortsend, B. C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

By Frank Froest

Foyle banged his fist viciously on his desk. "There-! We're not the only people who have made blunders to-day, Green. Look at that. Wire to them a full description of this woman Petrovska, and tell 'em to detain her if they come across her. We charge her with administering a noxious drug, and that'll hold her safe until we get the business cleared up. If she's trying to slip out of the country, they're pretty safe to get her in one of the liners. Wire over our men at Liverpool to the same effect."

Green slipped away. In a little he returned with a slip of paper in his hand. "Wire's gone to Liverpool. I've drafted this out for Mr. Jerrold, if you'll just look at it. I promised him he should know anything there was to tell."

The sheet of paper read:

"In connection with the investigation into the murder of Mr. Robert Grell, Superintendent Heldon Foyle, accompanied by Chief Detective Inspector Green, Divisional Detective-Inspector Wrington and other detectives examined the body of a man found in the river, whom it was supposed might be the man Goldenburg, for whom search is being made. The police are of the opinion that the drowned man is not Goldenburg."

"Don't you think he'll discover that to be a deliberate lie, Mr. Green?"

"Well," said Green doggedly, "we can't tell him what has happened, and we've got to satisfy him somehow. I promised to let him know something, and it's true that a body has been found. I asked Wrington. And it's true that it's not Goldenburg."

"Oh, all right, let it go. You'd better arrange the laundry inquiry first thing in the morning. Now let me alone. I want to think."

CHAPTER XXXV.

Sir Hilary Thornton had come to Heldon Foyle's stocktaking. The superintendent, with a mass of papers on the desk in front of him, talked swiftly, now and again referring to the typewritten idex of reports and statements in order to verify some point. The Assistant Commissioner occasionally interpolated some question, but for the most part he remained gravely silent. Foyle recapitulated the events of the preceding day.

"It was sheer foolishness, Sir Hilary," he admitted bitterly. "If we hadn't blundered Grell would have been in our hands now. As it is, we have to begin the search for him all over again."

Through the open window came the rumble of a motor-omnibus used by the police to test applicants for licenses. Thornton swung the window close.

"You still think that Grell had a hand in it?"

"I'm never positive, Sir Hilary, when it is a question of circumstantial evidence. But there can be no question that if he is not guilty himself he knows who is. I am so certain that I had a schedule of witnesses made out for the Treasury. Here they are."

He selected a sheet of paper and passed it to the other. Thornton read it and handed it back without comment.

"There are gaps in it, of course," went on Foyle. "As a matter of evidence, though, practically all we want is to identify the finger-prints. They of themselves would determine the investigation. But we can't tell whether they are Grell's or not until we get hold of him. We've identified the linen found in the bag on the barge as having been bought for Grell, but there is no name or initials on the bag itself. I have not yet heard from Wrington. He may have something further to report. About Goldenburg. I got Pinkerton's to look into his career in America. They have discovered that five years ago he was in San Francisco for three months, and at that time he was apparently well supplied with money. Grell arrived there a month before he left, and they left the city within a day of each other."

"A coincidence."

"It may be or may not. Grell's movements were pretty well chronicled in the American Press at that time, and it is at any rate conceivable that Goldenburg went there with the express intention of meeting him. More than that, Grell was staying at the Waldorf Astoria in New York two years ago. Goldenburg went straight there from India—which he had made too hot to hold him —stayed at the same hotel, and left within three days for Cape Town. Why should he go to Cape Town via New York? I may be right or wrong in the opinion I have formed, but at any rate we have established a point of contact between the two men."

"There is something in that," agreed Sir Hilary, with a jerky nod of the head.

"More than that, on the New York visit Goldenburg was accompanied by a woman whose description in every particular corresponds with that of Princess Petrovska—though she called herself the Hon. Katherine Bolton. There is material enough in that information, Sir Hilary, to draw a number of conclusions from. At any rate, they go to confirm my opinions at present. I know very well that there is sometimes smoke without fire, but my experience is that you can usually safely lay odds that there is a fire somewhere when you do see smoke."

The elliptic form of speech was sometimes adopted by Heldon Foyle in discussing affairs with one whose alertness of brain he could depend upon. Thornton twisted his grey moustache and his eye twinkled appreciatively.

"That's all right," he said. "But how do you account for Grell finding people ready to his hand in London to help him disappear at the very moment he needs them? There are several people mixed up in it, we know; but how is it that they are all loyal to him? We know that criminals will not keep faith with each other unless there is some strong inducement. How do you account for it?"

"There may be a dozen reasons. Purely as an hypothesis, Grell may have a hold on these people by threatening them with exposure for some crime they have committed. Self-interest is the finest incentive I know to silence."

"All the same, it's queer," said Sir Hilary, with a little frown. "What do you propose to do?"

Heldon Foyle's lips became dogged. "Break 'em up piecemeal as we lay our hands on 'em now. We've got one —the man we roped in with Red Ike. He's as tight as an oyster; but while we've got him he can't do anything to help his pals. Then there's the Princess. She's as slippery as an eel; but if the Liverpool people can get hold of her we may reckon she'll be kept safe for a few weeks on the charge of drugging Blake. Then there's Ivan Abramovitch. We may be able to lay our fingers on him. If there's any more in this business I don't know 'em; but every one of the gang we take means so much less help for Grell."

"Western Union," muttered the superintendent. "This may be something else from Pinkerton's, Sir Hilary. Don't go yet." And, tearing open the envelope, he crossed the room and pulled down a code-book. In a little he had deciphered the cable: "We're getting closer," he said. "Pinkerton's have got hold of Billy the Scribe,' who identified the photograph of the dagger with which the murder was committed as one that he believes was in the possession of Henry Goldenburg when he last saw him. That may be fancy or invention, or it may be important. Hello! what is it?"

It was Green who had interrupted the conference. "Lady Eileen Meredith, sir—Machin reports that she left her home at five this morning, walked to Charing Cross Station, bought a copy of the Daily Wire, looked hurriedly through it, and then worked out something on a small notebook. Then she returned home, and came out again in half an hour's time and went to Waterloo Bridge floating station. There she asked to see one of the detective branch, and they referred her to headquarters at Wapping after nine this morning. Machin says he had no chance to telephone through before. She has not gone to Wapping," he added, as he saw the eyes of his chief seek the clock. "She went straight back home and has not come out since."

A low whistle came from between Foyle's teeth and his eyes met Thornton. "She knew the advertisement was to appear in the Daily Wire, and she got up early to warn Grell that we know, in case he should give an address. She did not discover a little paragraph of Mr. Green's invention till after she returned home, and then her curiosity was stirred, and she hoped by going to Waterloo, to find a subordinate detective whom she might pump. What do you think, Green?"

Sir Hilary Thornton strode to the door, returning the greeting of Wrington, whom he passed as he retired. The river man was evidently pleased with himself. Foyle took a place in front of the fire and waited.

"Had a cold night?" he queried.

"Been too busy to think about it, sir," he chuckled. "We discovered that the owners of the barge engaged the man who gave the name of Floyd on the written recommendation of a firm of steamship agents—that, by the way, was forged, for the agents deny all knowledge of the man. He was supposed to be an American sailor. Once or twice he has been visited on the boat by a couple of men who pulled up in a dinghy hired from Blackfriars. The regular waterman hardly ever caught a glimpse of him— he never showed himself by day. This morning a letter was sent aboard addressed to James Floyd, Esq. I never opened it, thinking perhaps you might prefer to do so. We searched the barge from end to end, and Jones is outside with a bag of different things you might like to see. What I thought most important, however, was this."

He dipped his hand in his jacket pocket and withdrawing a small package wrapped in newspaper, carefully unfolded it. Something fell with a tingle on Foyle's desk.

"By the living jingo!" ejaculated Green. "It's the sheath of the dagger!"

The superintendent picked up the thing—a small sheath of bright steel with, on the outside, a screw manipulating a catch by which it might be fastened to a belt. He handled it delicately from the ends.

"I believe you're right," he said. "Now, what about the letter?"

GOING MAD FROM THE TERRIFIC PAIN

Prominent Merchant Thinks His Life Was Saved By "Fruit-a-tives".

DRYDALE, ONT., JUNE 15th, 1913.

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the back of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to Inflammation of the Brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives", and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness".

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic" is a favourite expression where Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

SHELLING AT LONG RANGE.

LONDON, March 27. — The situation in the Dardanelles, so far as is known, remains unchanged. The Admiralty has vouchsafed no confirmation of the report that the super-Dreadnought Queen Elizabeth and other ships, among them the battleship Triumph, which recently bombarded Smyrna, have entered the straits.

Reports from allied sources are to the effect that German officers are leaving Constantinople and that the situation in the Ottoman capital is gloomy; but there is nothing official to show that the Turks are discouraged over the outlook.

"Owing to the damage caused by the shore torpedo tubes in the Dardanelles," says The Daily Mail's Athens' correspondent, "the allied admirals in a council of war have decided to designate certain warships to fire at the forts at long range.

"Officers of the allied fleet declare to the correspondents that the forcing of the straits at all costs is certain."

D & A CORSETS

"D & A" or "La Diva" Corsets retailing at $2.50 are equal in style, material and workmanship to imported corsets costing $3.50 to $5.00; the duty and extra profit—for which you get nothing, explains the difference.

Quite aside from your natural wish to encourage Canadian workmen, it is worth your while, for the saving it involves—to buy a "D & A" or a "La Diva" Corset.

The best time to clean the range is after the fire is laid, but before it is lighted.

Wash the top of the range with warm soap-suds, wipe dry, and with a dauber apply a mixture of powdered graphite and soapy water to all parts not highly polished. Stove polishes have graphite as a basis.

Rub to a dull finish with the blacking brush, then light the fire, and as the iron becomes warm polish every part of the iron with a stove mitten. No blackening will rub off on the cooking utensils if the work has been well done. During the day keep the top of the range clean by rubbing with soft paper.

If any of the parts of the range are unfortunately of nickel, these should be polished when cold by covering with a whiting mixture, leaving it on till it is dry, and then polishing with a soft cloth.

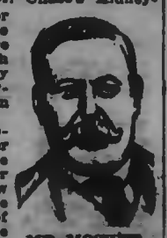
Brass trimmings are best cleaned with a mixture of rottenstone and oil, or the oil may be placed on the cloth and then dipped in the powder. This polish gives a soft yellow color which is very lasting. The brass polishes in the market have oil and rottenstone as a basis, but usually contain either an acid or an acid salt which acts on the surface of the metal. Their use should be followed by polishing with whiting.—University of Wisconsin.

According to a French investigator the chance of mistake in identification by means of finger prints is about one in 17,000,000,000.

Was Troubled for Years With Kidney Disease

And This Treatment Cured Me—This Statement Endorsed By a Baptist Minister.

The great majority of people are familiar with the extraordinary curative powers of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. But for the benefit of those who are not we continue to publish from day to day reports from persons who have been actually cured.



MR. MOSHER.

The case described in this letter was an extreme one, and the writer was in a very low condition when he began the use of these pills. The cure was so marked that Mr. Mosher's pastor did not hesitate to vouch for his statement.

By their unique combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure in complicated cases which defy the action of ordinary kidney medicines.

Mr. W. H. Mosher, Brockville, Ont., writes:—"I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and firmly believe there is no medicine to equal them. I was troubled for years with kidney disease, and this treatment has cured me. When I began the use of these pills I could only walk from my bed to a chair. Now I can go to the field and work like any other man. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are an excellent medicine."

By awakening the action of liver, kidneys and bowels Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure Constipation, Headaches, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney Disease, Liver Complaint and Backache. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

ONE AGAINST MANY

What Happened When the Irish Policeman Thought Green Was Red.

By HAROLD CARTER.

To be put back on patrol duty after fourteen years of steady desk work, and when one is approaching forty and conscious of an increasing girth, is enough to distress any ordinarily constituted policeman. Dennis Flaherty was no exception to the rule. He told his wife the news at dinner.

"They haven't got a grudge against you, Dennis?" she asked, fearful as all women are at the thought that their husband's positions are insecure.

"No, it's Commissioner Everett, bad luck to him," said Dennis. "Nineteen of us, Nora, woman, turned out of our berths and set to pound the sidewalks. The only comfort is them reformers never lasts long. No, them reformers ain't what I'd call stayers," he continued, sipping his tea with melancholy satisfaction.

"Stop That!"

"But, Dennis, maybe you'll be set upon by them strikers," suggested Nora, remembering the days when she had lain awake at night with-mental images of her husband being waylaid by criminals, and trembling at every ring of the door bell.

"It ain't them guys I'm scared of," retorted her husband. "It's me corns. Sidewalks is hard on corns—and a reformer in the street paving department, bad luck to the pair of 'em."

"But, Dennis," suggested his wife, hopefully, "didn't the doctor say your eyes wasn't fit for patrol duty and you'd have to do desk duty instead?"

"That was Doc Flanagan, as good a Cork man as ever breathed. The new doc's a Scotchman. I saw him yestiday. I says to him my eyes isn't what they used to be. 'All the more reason for you to give up desk work, Flaherty,' he answered. 'Your eyes is as sound as the ace of spades,' he says to me, after he'd put me through my paces. So I guess it's the sidewalks for me, Nora."

Ever since Patrolman Flaherty, in his earliest days, had walked into a dynamite explosion, averring that he had not seen the red danger flag, he had believed that his eyes were bad. True, they served him well enough at desk duty. But Doctor Flanagan had known Flaherty in the old country, and a word from him had brought about the transfer. Now Flaherty was condemned to pound the sidewalks, at the instance of the unsympathetic and reforming police commissioner, and there was no redress.

However, he minded less than Nora. In spite of his ample girth he considered himself well able to defend the majesty of the law against the strikers, who, with flags flying and bands playing, paraded the business section of the town daily. There were not enough police to preserve order. Citizens had been sworn in on special duty, and conflicts were frequent.

"If I can't do desk work I'll show 'em they've got the best cop in town down at the quay, Nora," he said to his wife at the end of the first day.

The Quay was the name locally given to the bridge which crossed the river between two factory districts. The strikers had constantly endeavored to cross it in parade, but each time they had been repelled. However, on the morrow, as they had publicly advertised, they meant to march over the bridge in a grand procession to the city hall. And this the mayor had sworn they should not do.

"There'll be nigh on a hundred of us, Nora," answered Flaherty. "I guess I can take care of meself, woman."

He felt prouder than ever of his uniform on the next day when, standing in a platoon with his comrades, he watched the mob forming in the lower section of the town. There was the sound of distant music. Flaherty started and frowned. Why, this was marriage. The band was playing "The Wearing of the Green."

Flaherty gripped his club tighter. He looked at the lieutenant in charge. He had ordered the men to disperse to their own posts. Did he not know, man, that an attack was imminent? This was Flaherty's post, here on the bridge. The platoon was dispersing. Discipline forbade Flaherty to ask questions. He was left alone. He gripped his club more tightly. If he was to be made the sacrifice on account of a foolish order he would show them what he could do. His feet were paining him furiously and the blood rushed to his head. He was quite alone now.

"I'll teach 'em, the dogs, playing that tune!" he muttered. The crowd had gathered into a well-organized detachment and started toward the bridge. In front of it marched two men, each carrying a huge red flag. Flaherty looked round. Was nobody going to stop them? All he could see was the lieutenant's coat disappearing round the corner of the block.

On they came, toward the center of the bridge, where Flaherty stood. The music sounded loudly, the flags waved, cheers and yells came from the throats of thousands. The sidewalks were lined with spectators. A faintness overcame Dennis. Had the mayor actually forbidden this procession or was he dreaming? But a good cop never pauses to examine his metaphysical condition. He strode forward with uplifted club.

"Stop that!" he yelled. "Stop right there, boys. The first man that sets his foot forward, I'll bate his brains out."

The old Irish accent had come back in full force with his excitement. Dennis saw the men with the flags halt irresolutely. The crowd surged backward and forward, and then, at a word of command from its leaders, advanced again. The men with the flags smiled coolly and contemptuously. Dennis felt his wrath overcome his reason. He sprang forward and began clubbing right and left. He seized the nearest flag. The mob beat against him like an invading sea. A thousand voices clamored for his blood. The flag was wrenched out of his hand. He seized the staff again, struck right and left, was beaten to his knees, staggered under the terrific blows that were showered upon him; then the mob surged forward over his prostrate body.

"Flaherty, the Cap's waiting to see you," said the man who was bathing his forehead.

Dennis opened his eyes. The swimming room was the district police quarters. Then this battered, aching man on the cot must be himself, Dennis Flaherty. But he had done his duty. He rose to his feet and staggered into the captain's room—to confront not the captain alone, but the police commissioner.

"Drunk and ran amuck right into the midst of them, commissioner," he heard the captain saying.

"You are accused of attacking the parade of Loyal American Hibernians, Flaherty," said his captain. "Also of attempting to purloin one flag, the property of the organization. What have you to say?"

"Red flag!" snorted the commissioner. 'Since when has the red flag been the symbol of Ireland's glory, my man? That flag was as green as the emerald grass of Ireland."

"'Twas as red as—as that!" cried Dennis, pointing to a tattered emblem in a corner of the room.

'Begorra, that's the very flag!" yelled the captain. "He's drunk still, Commissioner."

"I think this is a case for Dr McDermott," said the commissioner smiling. "It's all right, my man," he added. "You can go home on sick leave now. I think, Captain, if McDermott agrees with my diagnosis, I may revoke my order concerning desk duty in this special instance."

"You see, Nora," explained her husband afterward, "with every Irishman in town hungering for me blood—why, they thought a whole cop at the typewriter was better than twinty pieces of one making work for the street paving commissioner."

Could Hardly Straighten Up For The Pain in Her Back.

Many women suffer from an excruciating pain in the back. They are not even able to look after the common duties of their housework, and cannot even walk at times.

The whole trouble is that the kidneys have become affected, and when the kidneys get "out of kilter" the whole system becomes deranged. On the first sign of a weak, lame, aching back you should not neglect it, for if you do, you may be sure that some serious kidney trouble will follow.

What you want is a kidney medicine, for kidneys only. This you will find in Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's Kidney Pills know nothing but kidney disorders, because they're made for kidneys only.

Mrs. George Craigie, Rose Valley, P.E.I., writes: "I am writing to tell you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills did for me. I was suffering with a lame back, and for several days I could hardly straighten up for the pain. I had used quite a lot of other kind of pills, but received no relief. Just then my sister told me about what "Doan's" had done for her, so I decided to try them. I used three boxes and I am completely cured. I do not hesitate to recommend them to all."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c a box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Origin of Iron Cross

The Iron Cross is a Prussian military decoration. It owes its inception to Frederick William III., who, in 1813, bestowed it as a reward for eminent service in the war against Napoleon. The Cross, which is of the Maltese shape, is made of iron edged with silver.

JELLICOE INSISTED UPON GOOD GUNNERY

Would Have Nothing But Very Best Instruments and Result Was Excellent Marksmanship

Much has been said about the improvement of good shooting in the British navy, and in this connection considerable praise is due to Admiral Sir John Jellicoe. Without his help—so a writer in The United Service Journal once remarked—the good work fostered by Admiral Sir Percy Scott would have been severely handicapped—in fact, impossible; for the then director of naval ordnance proved himself a man of original thought and prompt action and one of the most capable gunnery experts in the Royal Navy.

During the time he was in command of the Drake he turned it into one of the best shooting ships in the navy, and while he was at the Admiralty as Director of Naval Ordnance Captain Jellicoe did all that was possible to insure the guns mounted in ships in the first fighting line being fitted with the most up-to-date day and night sights, as well as to install a fire control set of instruments in each ship for "spotting" and controlling at long range shooting. The fittings of the guns and ordinary appliances generally were also greatly improved during the tenure of his appointment.

His selection for the supreme command of the home fleet was in itself something of a romance. He had no small share in shaping the instrument of which he was given command, and his chief of staff, who was, of course, chosen by himself, is another distinguished officer, who happens to be his brother-in-law. Sir John Jellicoe and Rear-Admiral Madden served together at the Admiralty on more than one occasion, both indeed having been sea lords, and they both married daughters of Sir Charles Cayzer.

A Man to Command

In appearance Sir John is small of stature, but a man in every sense of the word. He has an iron nerve, notwithstanding one or two terrible experiences which would have shattered and really did shatter the nerves and health of others associated with him.

One who knows him well said: "A man below middle height, alert, confident in himself; not the confidence of the oversure, but that of a real leader of men, a man whose features would have been unpleasantly hard but for a lurking humor of the eyes, and for certain humorous lines about the mouth that on occasions could take the likeness of a steel trap; a man to trust instinctively and one to like from the beginning."

He is a clean shaven, keen eyed man of the sea, alert, vigorous and decisive. There is nothing spectacular about his idea of warfare. Strike, strike hard, and strike again, has always been his plan of campaign, and he has known more than once what it is to be face to face with death.

An insight into his character and indomitable courage is to be found in a reference to him by one who was with him when he was wounded—it was thought mortally—during the disastrous retirement on Tientsin. "I was with him as he lay in an angle of a fallen house where we had placed him to be out of the reach of the Chinese fire, and I recall the steadfast courage of the man when he knew that he had but the very slenderest hope of life. It was practically impossible that he could recover, said the flagship's doctor, but Jellicoe's indomitable pluck was a factor that had still to be reckoned with. As soon as he could be safely moved we placed him in a small native boat in charge of his own coxswain.

Wanted the Stern Fact

"It was the next day, as I remember, that the latter came with a message that Captain Jellicoe would like to see me in the boat. Of course, I went down immediately and found him suffering severe pain from his wound, pain made worse by the utter misery of the surroundings and by the uncertainty of everything.

"He wanted to know what I thought of things. Foolishly, perhaps, I tried to make the best of them, and told him that I thought we were doing very well and that there was no doubt at all of our ability to cut our way back to Tientsin, or even to the coast, supposing the foreign settlements to have fallen. I don't think I shall ever forget the contemptuous flash of the eyes he turned on me or the impatient remark: 'Tell me the truth, don't lie.'

"I had thought to lessen the anxiety I knew he must have been feeling, but if I had known him as I learned to later on I should have told him the plain truth straight out. He thanked me and, indicating his wounded shoulder with his eyes, remarked, 'Hard luck, just now.' That was all, but it was characteristic of the man himself."

LAWS OF BLOCKADE

Declaring One and Making it Effective Different Matters

Germany, of course, is quite within her rights in endeavoring to cut off Britain's food supplies by blockading. For one country at war with another to close ports, harbors, or lines of coast with ships or troops, and thus prevent entrance of provisions, ammunition, or reinforcements, has been recognized as quite legitimate warfare, when carried out according to the rules of international law, since the Dutch introduced the practice as far back as 1584.

Cadiz was blockaded by Lord St. Vincent for two years at the end of the eighteenth century. Britain blockaded the Elbe in 1803, while the Baltic was successfully blockaded by Denmark in 1848-9, and again in 1864.

In all these blockades, however, the belligerents carried on their warfare strictly according to the international laws, respecting the rights of neutrals and carrying the prize ships and their crews back to port. The sinking of merchant ships without warning, in the manner in which Germany has done, was always regarded as an act of piracy.

Won Coveted French Honor

Private A. V. Sworn, R.A.M.C., was only seventeen years old when he won the Legion of Honor, and is the youngest soldier on whom the decoration has been bestowed. It was awarded to him for saving a French officer under fire.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, March 26.—Assertions that the Turks had disagreed with the Germans and that Roumania and Bulgaria were about to take a hand in the war put the wheat market today under a good deal of selling pressure. As a result, prices closed weak at 1 7-8c to 2 7-8c decline. Other losses for the day were 5-8c to 3-4c and oats 3-8c to 5-8c. Provisions gained 10c to 20c.

Auspicious conditions for the domestic crop were influential as a means of keeping sentiment adverse to the bulls. Besides, cash and export demand was slow, both here and all the seaboard.

A further source of discouragement to holders was a report that Russia was preparing to ship 200,000 tons of wheat from Vladivostok.

Aggressive selling by pit speculators forced down corn. Wheat weakness formed the chief incentive, but in addition eastern demand was poor and Argentine prices at a sharp decline.

Oats sagged with corn and wheat. The best buying was attributed to shorts.

Despite some wavering at the outset provisions finally took the upgrade. Packers and other recent sellers were conspicuous in the purchasing, but carried the market higher.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, March 26.—Wheat futures opened ½c to 1⅛c lower, oats ⅛c lower and flax unchanged to 1⅛c down. The Liverpool market was easier and with peace rumors afloat the local market was weak generally.

Up to noon today the range in wheat prices was 1½c to 2⅛c under yesterday's close. Closing prices were 2c to 2⅛c lower for the day. Cash demand was quiet for all grades and there were few offerings. A light business in export was reported.

Inspections Thursday were 279 cars, as against 369 last year, and in sight today 269 cars.

BACK FROM THE FIRING LINE

First Aid to the Wounded.

LONDON, March 29.—At almost every station on the railroads you will see men shattered and wrecked for life, men who must face the future horribly mutilated, and yet they accept their fate without a murmur of complaint or bitterness. It is the same in England, in France and, I suppose, in Russia, that all soldiers are bearing their sufferings with the greatest of fortitude.

The best aid these men have is within themselves. The human body will best resist infection from bullets when it is healthy, strong, active and with all of its functions fully alive and working. The best aid to this condition is a vegetable tonic and alterative that will first put the stomach and blood right, for these are dependent on one another. Good stomach means good blood, and likewise good blood means good stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery helps the stomach to do its work naturally and properly, stimulates the liver. The system is freed from poisons. The blood is purified. Every organ is rejuvenated. This "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce, is free from alcohol or narcotics. It is made from the roots and barks of American forest plants with triple refined glycerine, and is the best blood purifier, because it banishes from the blood all poison and impure matter. It dissolves impure deposits and carries them out, as it does all impurities through the bowels, kidneys and skin. If you have indigestion, sluggish liver, catarrh, unsteady nerves, or a pimply skin, get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to-day and start at once to replace your impure blood with the kind that puts energy and ambition into you and brings back youth and vigor.—Adv.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

SLEEPIN' ON THE FLOOR.

Sometimes, when we gits company
An' all the beds is full,
Our ma she says to Jim an' me,
W'en we gits home fr'm school:
"You boys can't have y'r room t'night,
But that don't make us sore,
'Cause then we know she'll make us up
A nice bed on the floor.

She makes it in th' parler,
With the bricky-brack an' all,
An' we c'n lay an' rubber
At th' pict'ers on the wall,
An' we p'tends we're emmygrants
A-campin' in th' wil's,
An, has t' keep th' light turned up
T' scare the annymiles.

It's better'n any reg'lar bed,
'Cause it don't squeak n' shake,
An' w'en yer turnin' summersets
They ain't no springs t' break,
Y' never haf t' keep no track
'Bout which is foot an' head,
B'sides, no matter whut y' do,
Y' can't fall out o' bed.

W'en I grow up of I'm ez rich
Ez ol' John Rockybilt,
I won't hev no beds in my house,
But I'll jes' take a quilt
An' big, fat pillers, like my ma's—
Er as much ez three er four—
An' hev the biggest kind o' fun
A-sleepin' on th' floor.

FACTS ABOUT EGYPT

Thanks to Britain the Country is Prosperous as Never Before

Excluding the provinces reconquered in the Soudan, Egypt has an area of 400,000 square miles, just about equal to the area of the Province of Ontario; but only fourteen thousand of the four hundred thousand square miles of Egyptian territory are settled. And yet on that comparatively small area there is a population of twelve millions. The settled portion of Egypt is only one half the extent of New Brunswick, but its population is about one-third greater, than the population of all Canada.

For almost the third of a century Egypt practically enjoyed British rule, the fruits of which are now being enjoyed by the people of the Ancient Land. Taxation has been reduced, law and order maintained, justice administered, industries fostered, great public works constructed, and a general uplift of the people brought about. Since the blighting effects of Turkish oppression and corruption have been removed, the people of Egypt have enjoyed in peace the fruits of their labor. The greater part of these fruits are agricultural, for fully two-thirds of the population are on the land—the fellaheen, or small cultivators. A cleverly devised scheme of financial assistance enables these cultivators to improve their condition. They receive advances from the Agricultural Bank up to the equivalent of about $1,500, the loan being limited to fifty per cent. of the selling value of the land. To this policy is due to a large extent the development in recent years of the country's commerce and industry, and a steadily increasing prosperity.

The cultivated area can never be extended beyond the region capable of being watered by the Nile, but this region has been enlarged by irrigation systems that are wonders of engineering skill and workmanship—blessings conferred upon Egypt by her British governors.

There are 1,500 miles of state-owned railways, and 500 of light agricultural railways owned by companies. The products of the temperate zone and of the sub-tropics flourish in Egypt, for she produces cotton and sugar as well as wheat and other cereals.

Apart from the commercial advantages accruing from the possession (and now the ownership as well) of Egypt, the holding of the country is of great importance to Britain, because it controls the Suez Canal, an essential part of Britain's shortest route to India. Egypt's principal city, Cairo, has a population of 660,000 being, therefore, somewhat larger than Montreal, while the second city, Alexandria, has a population of almost four hundred thousand.

The Belgium Indemnities

The intentions of the Germans toward the Belgians will not be interpreted from the "scraps of paper" with which they are inundating America. If they intend to let millions perish for want of food and fuel, their actions are corroborations of their policy far more emphatic than these assiduous disclaimers and professions of a righteous purpose that come in every mail. Of what use is it to preach an exalted idealism and to speak of the heritage of Goethe, Kant, and Beethoven, when from a land reduced to destitution by Germany's own deed of shame the German treasury requires an inordinate and impossible indemnity?—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

Crossing Africa in Motorboat.

Lieutenant Grats of the German army has succeeded in crossing Africa in a motorboat. The most important geographical result of the enterprise appears to be the discovery that there is a continuous waterway from the source of the Zambesi, in northern Rhodesia, to the River Kongo, which is thus proved to be the longest river in Africa. In 1909 the same official crossed Africa in a motorcar.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Grey, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural colour and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or grey; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is muasy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

ARGUMENT FOR NEW TRIAL IN BECKER MURDER CASE

ALBANY, March 26—Another effort to save the life of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, who is under sentence of death for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal, was made before the Court of Appeals today. Martin T. Manton, Becker's attorney, asked the Court to reverse the judgment of conviction resulting from the second trial and to give one more chance to Becker to defend himself before a jury.

During the three-hour argument Mrs. Becker, wife of the condemned man, sat in the courtroom and took frequent notes of the proceedings. Beside her sat her brother, J. T. Lynch. The case will be continued tomorrow.

Manton attacked the testimony of James Marshall, a negro witness at the second trial, who came into prominence recently by reason of conflicting affidavits he made concerning what he knew of the homicide.

Marshall Testimony Attacked.

"Marshall lied at the second trial," Manton said. "He testified then that he saw Becker conferring with Rose, Schepps and Webber before the murder, but he was not produced at the first trial. A short time ago he gave an affidavit in Philadelphia that his testimony was false. He virtually substantiated that affidavit before me But still later he repudiated both of these affidavits. How can this court place credence on the story of such a witness?"

Charles B. Plitt, Jr., Becker's "press agent," was characterised by Manion as a "lunatic and a perjurer, if one person can be both." Manton asked the Court not to consider his testimony seriously.

Plitt, who did not testify at the first trial ,testified during the second that Becker had told him to be in the vicinity of Times Square on the night of the murder as something might happen.

The refusal of the trial court to admit the alleged confession of "Dago Frank" Cirofici, made in his cell in Sing Sing prison a few hours before he and three other gunmen were electrocuted was held to be a reversible error by Manton. He also contended the second trial "was staged in an atmosphere hostile ot Becker."

"A feature of this case which throughout a perusal of the record strikes one with irresistible force is that if every reference to Becker were eliminated the crime of murder would still be in every essential complete. Becker is not essential to its inception, its progress or its consummation. The offense is complete in every detail without him. Proof of his participation is in no sense an essential element, but the evidence incriminating him is superimposed upon an already completed structure."

"It is the contention of the defense that the evidence affirmatively shows this crime was planned long before relations between Rosenthal and Becker became strained; that the crime was committed not by the procurement of this defendant or with his knowledge, but by his accusers, the informers, for personal reasons and motives of their own.

"We also contend that the idea of implicating Becker occurred only when the course of the investigation into the murder made it certain that the participation of the real culprits had been discovered by the authorities and there was a chance of escape if the newspaper clamour for the incrimination of a high official could be gratified."

Taylor Submits Brief.

Taylor's brief, which he submitted to-day and from which he will argue to-morrow, read in part:

"It goes without saying that the testimony in the case proves murder with premeditated design. Why there was delay seems to be sufficiently explained by Jack Rose's own testimony to his 'stalling.' He threw every obstacle in the way. In view of Rose's lack of initiative Becker put Webber in charge, and Webber was the one who did the final act of locating Rosenthal and directing the gunmen where to go and shoot him."

Because Judge Seabury, who since has become a member of the Court of Appeals, presided at the second trial of Becker and sentenced him, he will take no part in the appeal. The judges participating are Bartlett, Hogan, Collin, Hiscock, Chase, Cuddeback and Cardozo.

To Remove First Signs of Old Age

"The infallible first sign of age is the sagging cheek muscles," says Mme. Cavalieri, whose fame as a beauty culturist is scarcely less than that of a singer. "These are more difficult and serious to treat than wrinkles," she continues. "The sagging muscles indicate they have grown too weak to remain in place; they must be assisted, strengthened."

The best way to strengthen them is by using a wash lotion made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hasel. This creates a freer circulation to the parts, besides causing muscles and skin to contract. Saxolite, procurable at every drug store, has long been known by complexion specialists to possess remarkable tonic and astringent properties, valuable in treating flabby tissue and wrinkles.

PRAYER-BOOK SAVED LIFE

It Will Now be Preserved For All Time on Church Wall

A petition was presented to the Consistory Court of London, England, by the vicar and church wardens of St. George's, Old Brentford, asking for a faculty to authorize the fixing of an oak box with a plate glass front, on the wall of the church, to hold a prayer-book and the leather bag in which it was kept in the pocket of Drummer George Charles Edward Court, and the bullet by which it was struck at the Battle of the Marne.

When Drummer Court, who belongs to the First Middlesex Regiment, was leaving for the front, his fiancée, on bidding him good-bye, gave him a small prayer-book, and asked him to carry it in his left breast pocket. At the Battle of the Marne Drummer Court, finding that the prayer-book seemed to press too heavily on the clasp of his braces, transferred it to his left trousers pocket.

Shortly afterwards a shrapnel shell burst near, killing six men and wounding fourteen. Drummer Court, who was unhurt, afterwards discovered a hole in his trousers, and found that the ivory back of the prayer-book was torn, while at the bottom of a little leather bag, in which the prayer-book was kept, lay a bullet.

As a thank-offering for his preservation, the drummer desired to present the prayer-book, together with the damaged leather bag and the bullet, to be kept in St. George's Church, Old Brentford, for all time. The permission the faculty asked for was granted.

IF MEALS HIT BACK AND STOMACH SOURS

"Pape's Diapepsin" ends stomach misery, indigestion in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn, fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula, plainly printed on these fifty-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin, then you will understand why dyspeptic troubles of all kinds must go, and why they relieve sour, out-of-order stomachs or indigestion in five minutes. "Pape's Diapepsin" is harmless; tastes like candy, though each dose will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you eat; besides, it makes you go to the table with a healthy appetite; but what will please you most, is that you will feel that your stomach and intestines are clean and fresh, and you will not need to resort to laxatives or liver pills for biliousness or constipation.

This city will have many "Pape's Diapepsin" cranks, as some people will call them, but you will be enthusiastic about this splendid stomach preparation, too, if you ever take it for indigestion, gases, heartburn, sourness, dyspepcia, or any stomach misery.

Get some now, this minute, and rid yourself of stomach trouble and indigestion in five minutes.

FRENCH GAIN FRESH GROUND IN ALSACE

Pirates Sink A Passenger Liner

FRESH GAINS MADE BY THE FRENCH IN ALSACE REGION ARE IMPORTANT

Their Guns Have Been Mounted on the Heights and Command the Lower Levels for Some Miles Around---Prisoners Captured Include Six Officers---Germans Drive French From Trenches at Eparges.

GERMAN POST BLOWN UP BY ARTILLERY

(Special Cable to The Examiner.)

PARIS, March 29.—French official.—The French troops have won a fresh victory over the Germans in the fighting over the snowy slopes of Harmannswellerkopf in Alsace, according to the despatches received here to-day. They have driven the Germans from the positions they still held near the principal heights, capturing six officers, 387 unwounded men, and a number of German wounded who were abandoned when the enemy fled down the hillsides. New gains in this region are of decided importance. The French guns mounted on the heights now command the lower levels for several miles. The Germans, it is officially admitted, have made some progress near Eparges, south east of Verdun. Their infantry charges have driven the French from portions of trenches occupied by the French on Saturday. Near Ypres the allies artillery blew up a German post. From Rheims to the sea coast there is a lull in the fighting.

TO ATTACK AEROPLANES

THE HAGUE, March 29.—Herr Hoogstraen, a noted Delft bird trainer, to-day solemnly assured a newspaper correspondent that he is training a flock if pelicans to attack military aeroplanes. "The experiments have been proceeding ever since the war broke out," said Herr Hoogsteaen. "The pellcans fear a German taube no more than a fish. They are exceptionally clever with their sharp, pointed beaks, and they will constitute a real menace to air pilots."

PARIS, March 29.—Austria has made a definite offer to cede to Italy a portion of Trent at the close of the war, the Peit Parisien's Rome correspondent says he has been informed. He adds that the proposal was made on Thursday and that the Italian government deferred its reply.

LONDON, March 29.—The Times' Petrograd corespondent says the Austrian reinforcements arrived too late to prevent the Russians from securing comamnd of the roads into Hungary. The correspondent adds that General Field Marshall Von Hindenburg apparently has disposed of the eighth, ninth and tenth armies in a manner calculated to enable him to retain the defensive until larger forces or favorable circumstances warrant the resumption of offensive.

FISHGUARD, March 29.—The Liverpool steamer Aquila was torpedoed off Bishop's early to-day. Her captain and crew of 22 were landed here.

LONDON, March 29.—While the Russian fleet was hammering away at the Eastern defences of Constantinople, the Anglo-French squadrons at the Dardanelles continued their operations. During Sunday's bombardment, the batteries of Kalia Bahr, near Kalid Bahr, were completely silenced, according to the despatches from Tenedos Island, and several new Turkish shore guns, recently mounted, were put out of action. The indirect bombardment of Kilid Bahr from the Gulf of Saros has been resumed. From the heights around Constantinople the Turkish people undoubtedly can glimpse the operations but a few miles away. The boom of Russian guns can be heard distinctly in the heart of the capital. The Russian attack was deliberately planned to strike terror into the hearts of the Turks, it was reported here, and not as an important military operation.

VON KLUCK WOUNDED

BERLIN, via wireless, March 29.—General Von Kluck, the noted German army commander, has been slightly wounded. While inspecting an advanced position of his army he was struck by bits of shrapnel, the war office announced this afternoon, but his condition is satisfactory. Since the German retirement from Paris, General Von Kluck has been in command of the German operations on the north bank of the Aisne near Soissons.

BETTING ON THE OUTCOME

LONDON, March 29.—Betting on the outcome of the war through Lloyds' Exchange is to-lay as follows: That the war will end before May 1, 1915, 3 to 1 against; before June 1, 2 to 1 against, before September 1, even money; before December 1, 10 to 1 on; before March 1, 1916, 15 to 1 one; that Germany will take Paris, 25 to 1 against; that Germany will take Warsaw, 5 to 1 against.

BIG MILITARY EXPENDITURES

OTTAWA, March 29.—In the House of Commons to-day, Hon. Mr. Hazen, the Minister of Marine, said that since the war broke out the naval expenditure has amounted to $3,791,690. He estimated an additional expenditure of $3,000,000 for the year commencing April 1st. An estimate for military expenditure under the war vote was then presented to the House by General Hughes. It was proposed during the year to spend ninety-five millions, the chief items being as follows: Pay for men, $45,000,000; rations, $7,000,000; transportation, $18,000,000; rifles, $3,000,000; stores and equipments, $15,000,000; artillery, 3,000,000; and remounts, $2,000,000.

RUBBERS ISSUED

The Boots Supplied 8th C. M. R. Won't Keep Out Water Report Boys Who Have Been Sent Back From Ottawa

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Twelve members of B squadron of the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles were iven their discharge on Saturday on account of slight physical defects. Ten of the boys, who were from Peterborough, returned to the city yesterday morning from Ottawa, naturally disappointed, althouhg they realized that with the regiment away over strength some of them had to go. In order to decide who should be rejected a medical board sat op the doubtful cases and outside physicians were called in to assist. The other 135 from Peterborough passed the final medical examinations. The boys who returned say that the boots issued to the men are apparently no better than those given the first and second contingents. Although they were only issued three weeks ago they are in bad shape, leak badly so that they have to be constantly "dubbed," and were in fact so poor a protection against wet and mud that rubbers have been issued for use on wet days.

Another squad of recruits for the 26th Battery will leave for Kingston to-morrow morning in charge of Sergt. Hetherington. The battery is nearly at strength and recruiting will stop in a day or two. The battery will be made up mostly of Peterborough and Toronto men, the Toronto University having contributed a detachment which leaves for Kingston on Wednesday. Major G. R. Hall of Peterborough, is in command of the battery.

Quartermaster Sergt. Edwards of the 57th Regiment, will leave for Belleville on Thursday. He has accepted the appointment of pioneer sergeant in the 30th Battalion and will go with the third contingent instead of the fourth.

A number of recruits have been accepted for the fourth contingent and there seems no lack of applications although the majority so far have had difficulty in weathering the medical examination.

Twenty-seven of the men sent from Lindsay to the 39th Battalion have been rejected by the medical officer at Belleville and the Post says:

The soldiers who were rejected at Belleville by the medical examiner of the 39th Regiment, and who returned to town last night, are indignant over their rejection. At the armouries this morning it was stated that the men were physically fit, and it was hinted that a medical examiner would be brought from Kingston to verify these contentions, as the men were carefully examined at the time of enlistment.

Mrs. Matthews Won the Prize

Has Highest Score in Points Competition Among Lady Curlers

Miss Dalton of Kingston offered a prise for the highest score in Ontario in a points' competition in ladies' curling. Word has been received that Mrs. T. F. Matthews has won the prize, with a score of 31. This competition included all the ladies' curling clubs in Ontario, so that the winning of the trophy by Mrs. Matthews represents pretty good "sweeping."

PETERBORO' MAN MENTIONED IN THE CASUALTIES

James Bills, Boarded at 176 Sherbrooke St.—Among the Wounded in the 2nd Battalion of First Contingent

LIVED HERE FOUR YEARS

This morning's list of casualties in the first Canadian Contingent includes the name of James Bills of the second battalion among those recently wounded. The announcement is as follows:

Second Battalion (wounded) — Private James Bills. March 19th. Next of kin, Mrs. H. Bills, Attlebury, Worcester, England.

Private Bills resided in Canada about four years previous to August 1914. During the last two years he boarded at the home of Mrs. James Booth, 176 Sherbrooke Street. He was employed as a machinist in the C. G. E. works. When the First Canadian Contingent was being formed, James Bills was among the first to answer the call to military duty. He was not a member of the 57th Regiment.

Mrs. Booth spoke very highly of Pte. Bills and was anxious about the nature of his injury. He and Lance Corporal Fred Stevens boarded together and enlisted in the same contingent.

Spring Scenery Gets Mussed

Some Easter scenery got a rude mussing on George Street this morning when a young lady from Cressman's stepped off a street car, opposite Rink Street, and landed on a passing bicycle. She performed an acrobatic stunt over the handle bars of the bicycle while the cyclist went over her. It looked to some of the spectators as though both were passing over the bars at once, but when all the fluttering was over the young man was picking himself up about four feet away from the unfortunate lady.

A fine new Spring suit and hat looked a little the worse for the encounter, but as far as could be learned there was nothing more hurt than the lady's dignity.

There were no ladies near to be of assistance, but several men from the Matthews' Co. plant who were on their way home at the time of the acciden, gallantly offered their services in whatever manner they were acceptable.

SOME ONE HAS BEEN CUTTING TREES IN CHEMONG PARK LOTS

It is reported from Bridgenorth that a number of trees have disappeared from Chemong Park recently. On the lots owned by Alex. Elliott, J. A. Jobe and Thos. Rutherford, there are trees missing and the fresh cut stumps have been treated to lamp black or paint, in an attempt to conceal the work. The trees have not only been removed from lots, but also from highways through the park and were evidently cut up for firewood. In some cares the limbs and twigs remained where they had been lopped off, and in others they had been carried to older piles.

BAT INTERRUPTED EVENING SERVICE

A bat found its way into the Methodist Church at Bridgenorth last night and caused more or teas interruption until it was caught by one of the members. Attracted by the light, Mr. Bat swooped over the congregation and darted close to the Rev. Ireland's pulpit lamp threatening to run full tilt into it. The minister and congregation ducked as the bat flitted past, but Mr. W. Nicholls caught it in his cap when it rested on a wall.

BYE-ELECTION WILL BE HELD ON APRIL 15TH

To Fill the Vacancy in the North Ward Created by the Retirement of Ald. Johnston—Nominations on April 8th

LIKELY CANDIDATES

Thursday, April 15th, has been set apart as the day upon which the bye-election will be held in the North Ward to fill the vacancy created by the retirement of Alderman W. J. Johnston. Nominations will be held one week earlier, or on April the eighth. Now that the stage has been set the way will be paved for prospective candidates, whose names have been freely juggled around, to come out and declare themselves. The machinery incident to a bye-election has been put in motion, so it remains for the election sharps to get busy and forecast the result.

The following quartette has been named as likely to enter the contest:

Mr. W. S. Dodd.
Mr. G. O. Cameron.
Dr. W. T. Holloway.
Mr. G. H. Duncan.

The last named prospective needs no introduction to the electorate. He has served a number of years in the City Council and has weathered many a municipal election campaign. He met his Waterloo in January last when he was defeated for the Mayoralty by His Worship Mayor Butler. Dr. Holloway contested the North Ward a little over two years ago, and was defeated by ex-Alderman Johnston.

A LETTER OF THANKS

Ex.-Ald. Johnston Expresses His Appreciation of the People's Confidence

To the Ratepayers of the North Ward:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—It would be unworthy of me at this time if I did not in some way convey to you my sincere appreciation of your confidence during the past number of years that I have had the honour of being your representative on the Board of Aldermen. No representative of that Board could have been more honourably dealt with by the mandate of the people than myself, and for this honour I wish to most heartily thank you upon retiring from office.

Speaking honestly and frankly, it was my desire that after serving some ten years as the people's representative I would like to have wound up my municipal career by being Mayor of my old home town that I was born in and lived in all my life, that is if the people so ruled, but unfortunately fate has ordained otherwise for me.

I trust that a more worthy successor will be selected in my place and that the motto and slogan of all our citizens will be onward for a greater Peterborough.

Yours very truly,
W. J. JOHNSTON.

Prize For The Best Kept Lot

Good Progress Made in Connection With the Vacant Garden Scheme

Good progress has been made in connection with the vacant lot garden scheme. Already a number of citizens have offered their vacant lots, and it is anticipated that many more will be secured. It has been decided to award three cash prizes for the best kept lot. A public meeting, under the auspices of the Peterborough Horticultural Society, is called for Wednesday evening, March 31st, at 8 o'clock in the City Council Chambers, to which all who are interested in this scheme are invited.

Mr. Alfred Brown was engaged as caretaker for Victoria and Central Parks this season, his duties to commence as soon as the parks are dry enough to clean up.

BIG AFRICAN LINER SUNK BY TORPEDO

Steamer Falaba Carrying 140 Passengers Falls Victim to Attack From One of Von Tirpitz's Pirates---Eight of Passengers and Crew Drowned---Steamer Aquila is Also Sunk.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 29.—The African liner Falaba, carrying 140 passengers, was topedoed off Milford-Haven on Sunday afternoon, the admiralty announced this afternoon. She is the first big passenger-carrying liner to fall a victim to the German submarine attacks. Eight of her passengers and crew were drowned. The others were landed at Cardiff to-day.

LATER.—Confirmation of the report of the torpedoing of the Falaba reached the admiralty a few minutes after word that the British steamer Aquila had been torpedoed off the southwest coast of Wales. The Aquila was attacked within 50 miles of the spot where the submarine shot her torpedo against the big liner. The Aquila's captain and 22 men of her crew were landed at Fishguard. The admiralty believes that the same submarine torpedoed the Aquila and Falaba, and sent the Vosges to the bottom on Saturday by shell fire. Captain Toft of the Falaba and an unnamed lieutenant were reported among the dead in a message to the Elder Company, owners of the Falaba, this afternoon, although a message signed "Toft" had been received a few hours earlier. Two stewardesses were also drowned. The chief officer was in the water for two and a half hours before he was rescued.

The Falaba was a 4806 ton liner, 380 feet in length, and was built in 1906. She was one of the largest of a fleet of liners engaged in the African trade. The Falaba was owned by the Elder Line of London, and was bound for the west coast of Africa. Shortly after sunrise Captain Toft sighted the periscope of a submarine off Milford. Almost immediately the submarine appeared above the surface and signalled the Falaba to lower her boats. "The passengers or most of them were in the dining room," said one of the survivors. "Orders were given for the boats to be lowered, but before this could be done the submarine shot a torpedo against the ship, striking her engine room. A heavy sea was running and three of the first boats that were put over swamped and their occupants thrown into the water. Meanwhile the submarine was circling around without making any efforts to aid. I saw some of the submarine's crew actually laughing at us. The submarine finally dived and disappeared."

Peterboro' Boy Is Promoted For Bravery

Lance Corp. Arthur Ackerman is Made Sergeant for Showing Great "Spunk" in Getting Rations to the Trenches

LIEUT. MATTHEWS WRITES

n interesting letter has been received from Lieut. Harold S. Matthews, of Peterborouhg, and son of Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Matthews, who is at the front with the Ottawa Battery. The news in regard to the promotion for Arthur Ackerman of the 57th detachment in the 2nd Battalion will be read with interest. He was a Lance Corporal at Valcartier and formerly a sergeant in the 57th. Lieut. Ackerman says:

We are very comfortable in a farmhouse with out guns in position thirty yards from our mess. There is a fairly large city nearby where we can get all sorts of luxuries and in fact our mess is the best we have had yet. Rather remarkable, but the nearer the firing line the more comfortable we are.

This war is past all precedent. Here we are with accurate maps and instruments, telephones and so on, having a pot at the Germans perhaps for an hour or so a day and then amusing ourselves during the remainder. The battery man sits by a stove with his telephone man, takes the observation of his forward observing officer and gives out his orders to his battery in a field nearby.

The forward observing officer is a great job. I have been at it on two different occasions. One position was a haystack about fifty yards to the rear of our own trenches. I spent two days there and on the last day decided to move, it getting too hot for me. The next time I spent 24 hours on the top of a ruined house about 30 yards again in the rear of our own trenches. That was fairly comfortable, rather cold, but as luck would have it that day was the first day of the advance and our artillery did some heavy firing. Accordingly the time passed quickly.

After a turn as F.O.O. (forward observing officer) one rather enjoys the comparative rest at the guns. Of course you are liable to be disturbed at any time. This morning just in the middle of breakfast we had to pop off a few rounds at a German bomb machine.

Some rather interesting experiences happen. There is a village quite close which the Germans have a habit of dropping a shell in now and again. As I was passing through a shell dropped in the middle of the street, tore a hole but wounded no one. Immediately about twenty Canadian soldiers rushed out to get bits of the shell as souvenirs. Then the Germans dropped another right in their midst and got 7 of them.

You know of Ackerman I think (Arthur Ackerman). He was promoted to sergeant the other day because he has shown great spunk in getting rations to the trenches.

(Signed) Harold Matthews.

PATRIOTIC SERVICE

A feature of the Sunday School session at Charlotte Street Methodist Church yesterday afternoon was Patriotic Service, at which His Honour Judge Huycke and Mr. R. F. Downey, B.A., gave patriotic addresses.

A fine musical programme was prepared for the occasion. Mr P. Nelsh gave a vocal solo, "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall," and Miss L. Logan rendered a violin solo 'A Legende' (Bohm). The Sunday School Orchestra also took part.

"True to the King"

The Grear Romantic Musical War Play is the attraction for one night only at the Opera House to-morrow (Tuesday) evening. The play abounds in exciting incidents, and there are some good singers in it, notably Miss Celia Mavis and Mr. Jess Millingham. Mr. Alexander Loftus plays Cape Gerased Pierpoint, the role he enacted all through the principal cities of Great Britain, where the piece met with very great success. Miss Grace Welby, who is the daughter of the celebrated actress, Bertha Welby, is the Rose Pierpoint. The remainder of the cast are all well-known artistes who have been carefully selected for their different parts. The uniforms were supplied by Messrs. Raven, of New York, and handsome scenery has been painted for this production.

The prices have been made to suit the requirements of the times, and will be 75c, 50c and 25c.

The box plan is now open.

THINKING AND ACTING.

The Kingston Standard discusses the question aroused by the statement that Canadians are inclined to be "parochial"—that they do not "think imperially." This, assuming that it is a fact, is accounted for by the fact that Canada has "no voice in the actual government of the affairs of the Empire." Whether or not, and why, Canadians may not "think imperially" is a small matter. Canada acts imperially, and that's the main point. She has responded as promptly and fully to the imperial demand for aid and defence, as if she had a hundred representatives at Westminster, and had a very loud voice in the actual government of the Empire. Canadians may not think imperially in the academic sense, but their sense of oneness with the Empire—oneness in the possession of advantages, and oneness in the sense of responsibility, are a pretty good substitute for an imperial mein of cogitation. The bond between Canada—as well as the other Dominions—and the Empire, is so intimate, the sense of imperial relationship and responsibility is so intimate, and sentimentally interwoven, that action on this responsibility is automatic and unthinking, as far as reasoning why is concerned. The loyalty and cooperation that lead to action are worth any conceivable amount of noisy protestation. The Empire in its hour of stress is much more gratified, much better helped, by sending legions of soldiers to the fighting ranks, than would come from a volume of academ-resolutions, fulsomely asserting our loyalty, unaccompanied by material evidences of sincerity. We, in Canada, have had altogether too much of lip loyalty, whose sincerity has not altogether stood the test—that has not been consistently translated into action. The Standard thinks this war will change our relations to the Empire in regard to our conceptions of the imperial relationship. It will probably do nothing of the kind. This war has only demonstrated the existence of a condition of sentiment that is by no means new. We have gradually come to be so closely associated with the Empire in sentiment and interest, that no new relations have been developed by the war. The war has only demonstrated and made patent the existence of this sentiment. We do not need a perfunctory finger in the imperial pie to bring about the most ample and energetic cooperation of the Dominions, with the rest of the Empire.. That condition already exists, and could not be intensified by any active share taken by the Dominions in the government of the Empire. Good Canadians gladly and fully yield loyalty of action when the interests of the Empire are concerned without bothering their heads with academic questions as to whys and wherefores. One cannot see where there can be any improvement in inter-imperial relations, looking to more intense and practical realization of responsibility ,or more definite and spontaneous action. We have only to live up to what we feel and know to be our duty as we have done and are doing in this crisis. Canada's contribution in men and other assistance in the war springs from a loyal elan, which does not require analysis; its action explains, and justifies its existence. If we only strive to honestly and honourably carry out the details of our action and do our duty in detail, as our soldiers and people have done it in large, the question of Canadians thinking imperially will be absorbed in the fact of Canadians acting imperially.

PATRIOTISM AND PARTIZANSHIP.

Canada is being placed in an unenviable position of inconsistency. We declared a party truce, and irrespective of party divisions unanimously voted 150 million dollars as Canada's financial contribution to waging the war; but in the spending of this money in its administration, it is evident that the most intense partisanship obtains. That this condition is cited cannot be charged to party spleen. Here is the protest of one of the oldest Conservative papers in Canada, the Ottawa Citizen. It says:

Patriotic Canadians are grieved and shocked at the daily exposures—and many scoundrelly crimes against political morality not exposed—of the low and ignoble partizan patronage business. But an even worse crime against British tradition, and the tradition Canada is supposed to follow, is now contemplated and discussed in the lobbies of parliament and the partizan press: namely a general bi-partizan election while the Empire is at war, and Canada's and Britain's sons are dying in the trenches of Flanders for the cause of freedom, right and justice.

The parliamentary probe, represented by the various parliamentary inquiries now in progress in Ottawa, is reaching many a rotten spot—furnishing amazing examples of the way in which the money, provided by non-partizan vote, is being improperly and extravagantly expended—squandered. First we have the revelations in the "boot scandal"—which showed that money was poured out like water for boots that would not keep out water, but were largely useless and a danger to the health and lives of our soldiers. Then we have another case, the placing of huge orders for surgical dressings with a drug-clerk employed by a member of Parliament in sympathy with the government; an order that enabled the M.P.s middleman to make a profit of $9,000 in a few hours at the rate of 28 per cent for merely acting as a go-between—a case of graft so flagrant that restitution of $6,300 of the spoils was demanded and made. Then we have the peoples' money squandered in the purchase of horses for army service in Nova Scotia. A total of 428 horses, some of which were afterwards condemned and sold for $50 each, were bought at an average price of $184.50 each. This price was $10 higher than the highest price paid elsewhere in the Dominion, and was made possible by party influence. Then 1,220 bicycles were bought, and even a large order like this brought no advantage to the government. According to evidence brought out in the investigation, the government paid a higher price for a wholesale order than private individuals had to pay for single machines. The retail price of these micycles was $40; the wholesale price was $24.50, as catalogued, and the maker company would have supplied them by the thousand at $32 each; yet the evidence shows that the government paid $70,250 for bicycles that could have been obtained without the kind offices of the party middleman for $44,490—a clean waste—an unclean "graft"—of $25,770 in the one matter of bicycles. Then we have the scandal of binocular field glasses, which was engineered my party influence. A Liberal jeweller in Ottawa, offered the government 400 glasses at $42 per pair. The offer was not accepted; an officer of the Militia Department told him that being a Grit he was "barred." Then he got the influence of a Conservative and a deal was effected by which glasses offered the government in September at $42 per pair, were bought at $52 and $48 each—and the spoils were divided between the man that was "barred" and the party middleman. It is alarming that we have things like this revealed in every investigation that is being made in the purchase of war supplies. How much will the 150 millions, voted unanimously by Parliament, be milked to furnish profits—no spoils—to party middlemen? Is Canada honestly and honourably giving the assistance to the Empire in the fight for honesty and honour, represented by her vote of money and sending of soldiers? Or are government supporters infected with the spirit of extravagance that has "boosted" the government expenditure in four years from 87 millions to 150 millions, and in the same time increased the public debt by 62 millions?

Keeping Dark Facts as to How Money Is Being Handled

Special to The Examiner:

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS, Toronto, March 27.—In a year when all matters of money and finance are of special interest to the general public, the sensational development in the Public Accounts committee of the Legislature is attracting wide-spread attention and the action of the Government, as represented by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson in over-ruling even a Conservative chairman and blocking enquiry into the real financial condition of the Province, is bringing out protests quite apart from politics including unfavourable comment from the Toronto Telegram, Conservative.

The fight centres around the Provincial Auditor, Hon. Mr. Ferguson said that the Auditor in response to a request from Mr. Rowell, would not be allowed to present certain statements based on his own books. The importance of this is that the Provincial Auditor is different from any other official of the Government from the fact that although he is appointed by the Government he cannot be removed by them but only by a vote of the Legislature. In other words, the Auditor in a special sense is a servant of the whole Legislature and not of the Cabinet.

Mr. Ferguson, therefore, has driven himself into an impossible position.

At any rate, what are the questions which Mr. Rowell was asking and which Mr. Ferguson succeeded in blocking, in spite of the ruling of the Conservative chairman, that Mr. Rowell had the right to ask and have an answer? The first one was to ask the Provincial Auditor what were the total receipts of the Province for the fiscal year minus borrowings. In other words, what is the net revenue of the Province according to the Auditor's own books? Secondly, according to his books, what were the total disbursements of the Province for the fiscal year? There were also a few other questions of a similar nature.

Why is Mr. Hearst, the Prime Minister, and his Government, acting through G. Howard Ferguson, so afraid to have obviously just and important questions answered by the Provincial Auditor? Public suspicion is inevitably aroused that there must be something wrong in the Government's own statement and that it does not coincide with the Auditor's books.

LAYMAN'S LETTER ON THE SECOND COMING

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Sir,—History repeats itself. The doctrine of the second coming of Christ as a great Judge or King laid hold of the early Christians, but the lapse of time chilled their ardour. It revived again at the time of the Reformation and again during the Thirty Years' War, and also during Cromwell's time, but it never was adopted by any large body of Christians since the first and second centuries.

The present war has again revived it.

Those who hold this doctrine must maintain the verbal inspiration of the Bible They are at one with those pious souls who hold that the world was created in six days of twenty-four hours each.

Surely ,Mr Editor, we have passed that stage of development in this twentieth century!

It is true that Christ taught the speedy coming of the outward kingdom, but He had to speak in the style and after the way of thinking of His locality and period, just as the author of Genesis had to speak to his generation

The idea of an outward and material kingdom disappears in the fourth Gospel. To the author of this Gospel the second coming of Christ is unthinkable save in the loving heart. He shows us that every day is a day of judgment, and it is a continuous process whereby evil is separated from the good. The spiritual significance of the coming of Christ in an outward way is that the cause of God will ultimately triumph. The whole earth will, in His own time, be conformed to what He wills. This is a high ideal and man is His chosen minister for the accomplishment of His purpose. The difference between the actual and the ideal should rouse in man a divine discontent to hasten the perfection of earth.

This is the earth purpose of God, and His final spiritual purpose is a spiritual humanity whose destiny is not of this earth.

Ruskin's conception of the judgment should be familiar to every thoughtful person. "Is there but one day of judgment? Why, for us every day is a day of judgment—every day is a Dies Irae, and writes its irrevocable verdict in the flame of its West. Think you that judgment waits till the doors of the grave are opened? It waits at the doors of your houses—it waits at the corners of your streets; we are in the midst of judgment—the insects that we crush are our judges—the moments that we fret away are our judges—the elements that feed us, judge, as they minister—and the pleasures that deceive us, judge as they indulge. Let us, for our lives, do the work of men while we bear the form of them, if indeed, those lives are NOT as a vapor, and do NOT vanish away."

Layman.

The Policy of Direct Purchase And Its Relation to The Grafter's "Grab"

Mr. Powell, the drug clerk who made a large middleman's profit out of the supply of dressings for the Canadian soldiers, has returned $6,000 to the Department of Militia and Defence, declaring that he did not consider it honourable to keep the profit "in view of the policy of the Government in buying direct from the manufacturer." He has done the right thing, but how is it that it was only on Thursday last that he discovered what was right?

It would appear that the policy of the Government "in buying direct from the manufacturer" was not fully or clearly explained even to its own supporters. Mr. Powell was recommended to the Government by Mr. W. F. Garland. Mr. Garland is a druggist living in Ottawa. He is the Parliamentary representative of the County of Carleton, in which Ottawa is situated. He supports the Government. He was in a position to interview members of the Government every day of his life. Yet the impression that he gained was not that the Government insisted upon buying direct from the manufacturer, but that the Government wold not deal direct with an American firm.

From Mr. Garland's statement we must infer that the Government's determination to deal direct with manufacurers had not attained very wide publicity. The confidential friends of the Government did not know about it. It was a State secret. It was not revealed until the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons at Ottawa investigated and discovered the facts. This shows the value of Parliamentary institutions—of a representative, deliberative body acting as a check upon the Government, and giving it good advice.

The investigation by the Parliamentary committees at Ottawa proves that the general impression was not that the Government was bent upon shutting out middlemen and middlemen's profits. The opposite impression had been created—in regard to dressings for wounds, in regard to boots, in regard to bicycles. Profit-seekers said "The war is our chance." They also said "We must stand in with the Government and with the party in power."

The body that has corrected all this is Parliament—the same body that people are always scolding and accusing of talking too much and wasting time It was Parliament, not Government, that forced all these boodling, grafting transactions into the light of day. It was a Parliamentary committee that showed Mr. Powell his duty and made him return the money. The public surely owes a debt to those who brought out these facts. The Government policy may have been virtuous, but if nobody knew about it, and nobody acted upon it, it was not of much practical value. But the Parliamentary Committee actually did and enforced what the Government merely regarded as a pious opinion.

It is with the utmost astonishment that we find one of our contemporaries praising the Government, and at the same time, denouncing as muck-rakers and scandal-mongers those Parliamentarians who translated the Government's theories into action. In theory the Government was opposed to rake-offs, but in practice it permitted rake-offs. The Parliamentary committee exposed the rake-offs, and compelled one of the recipients to return six thousand dollars to the public treasury! Should we not praise the Parliamentary Committee for its patriotic vigilance?

By the way, the word muck-rakers is misused. The muck-raker in the Pilgrim's Progress was not an investigator or a reformer. His eyes were fixed upon the ground because he was looking for profit. He was a grafter. It is to the grafter that the opprobrious epithet "muck-raker" ought to be applied—not to the investigator and the reformer. — Toronto Star.

Russia's Strength Untouched.

AMSTERDAM, March 29. — Prof. Vogt, a well-known German authority on Russian affairs, warns Germany in The Vorwaerts that "It will take a long time, great energy and patience and many victories to gain headway against this new Russia."

Answering the frequently heard questions as to how long Russia can fight, Prof. Vogt says: "Russia's offensive powers have hardly been touched. Her staying powers are enormous. Her army has done magnificent work, while the Russian financial and economic position has seldom been better."

Kaiser as Peace Lord.

NEW YORK, March 29.—A World special from The Hague says that the Kaiser, at the German army headquarters a few days ago, expressed himself as follows:

"I did not want to have this awful war. My greatest desire has always been that I might be permitted to end my life without having to face a war on the part of Germany. I certainly have shown that in every act of mine in the 26 years of my reign. I have proved that I did not wish to bring on this or any other war."

Italy Mobilizing.

ROME, March 29.—Reports that a general mobilization order had been drafted and awaited only the signature of King Victor Emanuel were circulated in official circles of Rome Saturday. The reports were accepted as true by the interventionist press, which predicted that Italy and Roumania would enter the war simultaneously on the side o the allies.

"This will be the final phase of the war," says one newspaper. "Germany and Austria will be unable to stand against the pressure of Italian and Roumanian interference. Italy will come into her own."

RUSSIAN PROGRESS INTO HUNGARY NOW UNCHECKED

Muscovite Armies Are Now Well Over the Boundary Line Into Hungary and Are Taking Large Numbers of Prisoners

LONDON, March 29. — The Russians are sweeping across the Carpathians, the Austrians in full retreat. In Bukowina the fighting is more furious, many of the enemy being swept away in the swift waters of the flooded Pruth.

An unofficial despatch from Petrograd says:

Reinforced and stimulated by the prestige of victory, the forces of the Czar have swept the Austrians ahead of them since March 22, until they have advanced 28 miles south and east of the Dukla Pass into the Hungarian county of Safos, and south of a line between Lupkow Pass and Usok they have gained sixteen miles.

The London Daily Telegraph's Petrograd correspondent says:

In the passage through the Carpathian hills substantial progress has been made by the Russians in the direction of Bartfeld and Osernowitz, also in the region of Baligrod and Lutowiska.

It is obvious from the number of captives made during the past fortnight that the Austrian army is rapidly wearing away, and that the process is now one of disintegration rather than of attrition. During the last two weeks captures of Austrians, apart from those taken upon the capitulation of Permysl, have averaged at least 3,000 daily.

The Morning Post correspondent at Petrograd cables:

The Russian advance in the Carpathians is along a sixty-mile front, between the region of Bartfeld and Baligrod. The Austrians are in retreat, wasting the country as they retire. The village of Zboro, which before leaving they set afire, is only six miles north of Bartfeld, the railway of a single line, which twenty-five miles farther south joins the main line for Budapest.

The Morning Post correspondent at Bucharest cables:

The battles in Bukowina are assuming a more violent character. From 10 o'clock yesterday morning to one o'clock an artillery duel raged over the plains of Mahala and Racazcas, between Ostritza and Bojan. The waters of the Pruth are carrying away the bodies of soldiers who attempted to cross. The Russians will wait for the Pruth to subside before initiating operations against Czernowitz. The population of Bukowina suffers so much from hunger and continual change of regime that a revolution is feared.

Gen. Kusmanek, the captured Austrian commander of Permysl, has arrived at Kieff. His relations with his captors are courteous, and he converses with them in French.

The activity of the Russian Grodno army prevents Von Hindenburg from developing definite action. His forces in the north, his eighth, ninth and tenth armies, have been replenished, but the quality of the new infantry is a great disappointment to the German staff. According to the disposition of his troops, he evidently intends to undertake shock tactics from the North Poland frontier, but days pass without any serious battle. Possibly the Germans will content themselves with attempting to protect East Prussia while the spring crops are being sowed.

According to information from Sebastopol, the Turkish cruiser Breslau has been irreparably damaged by a mine in the Black Sea at the entrance to the Bosphorus. Her wireless installation has been transferred to the Hamidieh.

What Becomes of the Holes in Postage Stamps

Apparently Ridiculous Question Produces Answer of Considerable Interest and Some Value—$10,000 Was Paid to the Man Who Originated the Idea of Perforating Postage Stamp Sheets

What becomes of the holes in a sheet of postage stamps? Sounds like a silly question, doesn't it? But wait a minute.

On a concrete platform outside the United States Bureau of Engraving and Printing in Washington a few days ago some barrels were being "headed up." They were filled with queer looking stuff which anybody might well have been at a loss to identify. It certainly wasn't a mineral; it didn't look like a chemical. Many colours—red, blue, green and yellow—seemed to be mixed in the small particles of which it was composed.

"What on earth is it? asked a curious passerby, pausing to take a look.

"Just holes in postage stamps," replied the man with the hammer. Then, in explanation, he grabbed out a handful of the stuff and showed that it was composed of tiny disks of paper, some red, some yellow, some blue, some green. Others were of yet other colours.

Nine Barrels a Week.

It appears that the material in question is a by-product of the machines through which the sheets of postage stamps go to be perforated. As the little holes are punched out of them the tiny paper disks fall into baskets beneath, which later on are emptied into barrels. Every week-day in the year the Bureau of Engraving turns out in this way a barrel and a half of "holes." This means nine barrels a week, or 468 barrels in a twelvemonth.

How many holes go to make a barrel full? Nobody ever took the trouble to count, but it may be reckoned approximately without much difficulty. The bureau prints in a year 12,000,000,000 postage stamps. Allowing for the fact that a row of perforations serves for the stamps on both sides of it, there are twenty-one of them for each stamp. This would mean a total of 252,000,000,000 holes made by the machines. With a total output of 468 barrels of holes for the twelvemonth, it is obvious that the contents of each barrel would amount to about 538,461,538 holes.

Equal Stars in Number.

Astronomers say that there are in the universe not fewer than 500 billion stars and not more than 1,000 billion, the exact number being somewhere between the two. It appears then that the Bureau of Engraving in a period between two and four years turns out enough holes in postage stamps to equal the number of the stars.

Formerly the spoiled stamps were boiled to a pulp, like the old paper money, in a tank with water and a cids. But, whereas the paper money pulp was sold, as is still the custom, for paper stock, being derived originally from the linen rags, the stamps, of woodpulp paper, went into the sewer, being not worth saving.

As for the hole in a postage stamp it seems to be a very trifling thing, yet, as a matter of fact, it represents an extremely important invention. When stamps were first used they had to be cut apart with scissors, which was highly inconvenient. It is said that $10,000 was paid to the man who originated the idea of perforating the sheets, for the privilege of using it.

ALLEGED SPY WAS RELEASED

On the Order of the Crown Attorney—Another Mix-up in Lindsay

LINDSAY, March 27.— Mr. George Livingston, the Toronto traveller, arrested on Wednesday, after being detained in the county jail over night, was released on the order of the Acting Crown Attorney.

Livingstone, it will be remembered, was arrested by the military police on Wednesday morning as an alien, and on coming before Lieut.-Col. Fee for interrogation was held on instructions from Col. Hemming, of Kingston until sent under escort to Fort Henry.

After his examination Livingstone was handed over to Chief Short, but that officer claimed he had no authority to hold the man as his arrest was not made at the instigation of the civil authorities, and he knew nothing about the accused. The Chief agreed, however, to escort the man to the jail, but further than that the case was out of his hands.

At the time of the war Livingstone was representing the Austrian firm of Foss & Leowenstein Limited, of Prague, Austria. This firm in which Livingstone, along with prominent Toronto men are interested, manufactures high grade shirts, collars and cuffs. Its headquarters is Prague, Austria, but it has a subsidiary branch in Toronto, with offices 10 Leader Lane. Owing to the fact that Austria had allied itself with Germany, this firm's business fell behind, and Livingstone then handled Milne & Co's lines, some of which he had with him while in Lindsay.

FURTHER ESTIMATES

Items Amounting to $4,364,541 Brought Down at Ottawa

OTTAWA, March 29.—The supplementary estimates submitted to the House by the Finance Minister Saturday call for an expenditure of $4,364,541. A further appropriation of $129,190 is asked for militia and defence, $350,000 for the Hudson Bay Railway, $50,000 for motor service to patrol the northern waters of Canada, and $10,000 additional to fight a smallpox epidemic among the Indians.

The House considered a minor amendment to the War Revenue Bill to prevent vexatious prosecutions by eliminating the portion under which any person might take proceedings to impose the penalties provided by the act. In reference to the placing of an additional stamp on international letters on which the maximum charge under the convention was five cents, Mr. White stated the Postoffice Department had communicated with the International Bureau at Berne, and ascertained that such letters could not be subject to an additional charge. The bill passed as amended.

Submarine U21 Now British

LONDON, March 29. — It now transpires that the famous submarine U-21, the officers of which were personally decorated with iron crosses by the Kaiser, has become part of the British navy.

Sunk off the west coast somewhere near Fleetwood, about the middle of February, the U-21 was raised and taken into Barrow-in-Furness.

She was very slightly damaged, although the cause of disablement cannot be ascertained. In fact, the whole affair is shrouded in mystery, and has been one of the most closely guarded of naval secrets.

Slight repairs were made, and in a very short time the U-21 was again at sea, headed for home waters, but manned by a British crew. Little credence was given to the stories circulated regarding her fate, but in the absence of all news regarding her whereabouts she just dropped from notice and her exploits were forgotten.

Had it been possible to effect the repairs before her loss could be learned by the German authorities a hare-brained venture was actually contemplated by some junior British officers. It was nothing less than a plan to sail the U-21 straight into Cuxhaven or some equally important German base, and before being discovered as an enemy craft to torpedo every German war vessel within range.

The time elapsing between her last report to the German Admiralty and her readiness for departure after being raised and repaired made this plan impracticable, and the German authorities are now preparing to admit her loss.

A despatch from Rotterdam says: "The mail packet Brussels reports that she sank a large German submarine off the Holland coast yesterday afternoon."

CONEYBEARE IS STILL AT LARGE

Much Wanted Man Walked to and Purchased a Ticket For Toronto

LINDSAY, March 27.—Howard Coneybeare, head driver for the Canadian Express Company, who is alleged to have absconded with $3,000 of the company's money, is still numbered among the missing. Special men have been working on the case since Wednesday last, but with very little result, beyond clearing up rumours and following up bogus clues. These special men are working in various directions, and it is thought that it will not be many more hours before some definite clue is trailed with good results.

The authorities have learned that Coneybeare entered the C.P.R. station at Janetville on Tuesday and after shaking hands with the agent, Russell McGill, whom he was well acquainted with, purchased a single ticket for Toronto. No questions were asked and Coneybeare boarded the afternoon train for the Queen City. He had apparently walked to Janetville on the tracks to avoid suspicion.

Information in Regard to War Tax on Letters

A war tax of one cent has been imposed on each letter and postcard mailed in Canada for delivery in Canada, the United States or Mexico, and on each letter mailed in Canada for delivery in the United Kingdom and British possessions generally, and wherever the two cent rate applies, to become effective on and from the 15th April, 1915.

This war tax is to be prepaid by the senders by means of a war stamp for sale by postmasters and other postage stamp vendors.

Wherever possible, stamps on which the words "War Tax" have been printed should be used for prepayment of the war tax, but should ordinary postage stamps be used for this purpose, they will be accepted.

This war stamp or additional stamp for war purposes should be affixed to the upper right hand portion of the address side of the envelope or post card, close to the regular postage so that it may be readily cancelled at the same time as the postage.

In the event of failure on the part of the sender through over-sight or negligence to prepay the war tax on each letter or postcard above specified, such a letter or postcard will be sent immediately to the nearest branch dead letter office.

It is essential that postage on all classes of mail matter should be prepaid by means of ordinary postage stamps. The war tax stamp will not be accepted in any case for the prepayment of postage.

Much Rather.

When the author of "Peter Pan" addressed an audience of one thousand girls at Smith College during his American tour a friend asked him how he had found the experience.

"Well," replied he, "to tell you the truth, I'd much rather talk one thousand times to one girl than talk one time to a thousand girls."

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

His Worship Mayor Buller has been invited to send two delegates to the Ninth International Purity Congress, which is to be held in San Francisco, July 18-24, 1915. The Congress has for its object the suppression of public vice and the promotion of personal and social purity.

The Spring Campaign.

Sanitary Inspector Spence is preparing for his spring campaign, which concerns every citizen who has a back-yard or alley that may be in need of a clean-up. Drastic measures may have to be adopted respecting people who ignore the regulations laid down by the Health Department.

Holes Have Filled Up.

The holes that were bored in the floor of the Hunter street bridge for the purpose of draining the water off have filled up with dirt so that they are likely to be of little use when the next wet spell arrives.

Traffic Regulations.

The same bridge is suffering from repeated violation of the traffic regulations which are respected only when an officer is in sight. Vehicular traffic is not supposed to travel faster than an ordinary walking pace.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. William Webster, a pioneer of Middlesex County, and formerly a member of the County Council, died in his 81st year.

A Mayoralty Assignment.

Mayor Walters and Mr. George S. Coppley, trustees of the fund being raised in Hamilton for the soldiers at the front from that city, have been authorized to forward $2,000 to buy comforts.

Belleville Campaign.

The campaign in Belleville to raise $30,000 for the Canadian Patriotic Fund is expected to net $40,000. Already over $35,000 has been secured.

Calgary's Bond Sale.

The sale of $2,000,000 worth of City of Calgary debentures, which the city is marketing through the Molsons Bank, is now completed, except for a few details.

Deputy-Reeve Resigned.

At a special meeting of the Galt Town Council the resignation of First Deputy-Reeve Burgess was accepted.

Contest in Brockville.

A. E. Fitton, recently unseated as member of the Town Council for the North Ward, will be opposed by W. E. Throop at the bye-election next Monday.

The 57th Regiment is represented in the trenches at the front, in the training camp at England, and in the mobilization camps at Ottawa, Belleville and Kingston. Old boys of the 57th are everywhere in the Canadian Contingents, and Peterborough young men must keep the flag flying at home and the Regiment up to strength. To-morrow night is the time to join.

PREMIER MUST DECLARE POLICY

Says Sir Adam Beck—Is Satisfied With Answer Given to Influential Hydro-Radial Deputation

Sir Adam Beck issued a statement regarding the municipal deputation of 2,000 which waited on Premier Hearst Friday, asking a $3,500 per mile subsidy. He emphasized the opinion that the Ontario Government must declare its policy upon the question, particularly in view of the fact that nine municipalities to the northeast of Toronto had signed contracts with the Provincial Hydro Commission for the construction of a radial line.

Sir Adam said that the Government would make pronouncement. "It was a very large and influential deputation," said Sir Adam. "It was twofold in its significance. Not only was the Government asked to approve of the extension, but it was an expression by the municipalities of their appreciation of the Hydro power scheme. It was proof of a marked success that had crowned the Hydro efforts. As to the attitude of the Government, it could not have been otherwise owing to the short notice given, and to the condition of the financial world. We had no intention of desire to exact money immediately, but desired a declaration of policy. As I have said, I think we shall have it."

There were 42 more men at the parade of the 57th Regiment last week than the week before. 100 more are wanted to-morrow night.

Just Arrived! Clever Waist Styles For Easter Portraying Mode's Latest Decree

THEY'RE "JUST IN" and certain to win the admiration of milady who is on the qui vive for "something new" and "something a little different" in Waists.

The styles are simply adorable; many of the models feature the new box pleated effect, this gives a very smart and becoming appearance; others show a tendency towards the military trend. Low and High Convertible Collars are equally smart and modish. Gold button trimmings are featured very strongly.

The choice of materials is almost unlimited, there are Crepe-de-Chines, Georgette Crepes, Radiums, Cotton and Silk Coloured Voiles, Organdies and Wash Silks.

SPECIAL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES ST. JAMES' METHODIST CHURCH

Rev. John Garbutt, of Cobourg, Delivers an Inspiring Message

The sixth anniversary of the founding of St. James' Methodist Church is now being observed. Both services yesterday were in charge of Rev. John Garbutt, President of the Bay of Quinte Conference, Cobourg, who delighted the large congregations that gathered to hear him.

In the morning he based his remarks on the twelfth chapter of Isaiah: "A joyful thanksgiving of the faithful for the mercies of God," one of the most beautiful songs of praise to Almighty God; one of the choicest, and most expressive songs in the Word of God.

There are only six verses in the song, yet every verse grows in intensity.

"And in that day thou shalt say, O Lord, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me." The experience of a man in his sinfulness.

"Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation."

"Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation."

"In that day," when the soul finds God, when the human comes into contact with the divine, when man has found the way of life, he "calls upon His name and declares His doings unto the people, makes mention that His name is exalted."

Sing unto the Lord: for He hath done excellent things: this is known in all the earth."

The Church to-day needs the re-establishment of the living spirit with the Spirit of God. There is a grave danger of putting material things in place of the spiritual in this ultra-materialistic age, an age when men live the material life, when they allow the material to take the place of things spiritual.

There is only one cure: we must seek the face of God; we must bring ourselves into the right relationship with God. Spiritual growth is infinitely more valuable than material growth. This is true not only with people but in the case of the Church it is particularly so.

He is the greatest man who brings men nearest to God.

It matters not where he labour, if he has received the revelation. Revelation is more than reformation; the vision is more than the effort; men work with a will where there is an end.

He is great who has discovered God for himself and is able to impart Him to others.

Scientists in their wonderful researches say: "We have asked God a question, let us await the answer."

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth His handywork." Thoughtful minds everywhere are impressed with the magnitude and the majesty of the world about us. It is not surprising that men try to make this world their god.

Dr. Dellinger, the famous scientist, who, with his microscipe, discovered worlds that the ordinary man is ignorant of, aroused the impatience of Ruskin; but Ruskin, before he passed away, paid a glowing tribute to this man and the wonders he had unfolded.

Historians take facts and co-relate them, showing us how one great movement evolves from another. It is a great gift to be able to look into the facts of history and see unmistakable signs of progress, see the spiritual animating men, see the hand of God guiding always. It is a wonderful gift for a man to be able to hear the voice of God and declare it to his fellowmen.

"Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation." Israel had been a wonderful delivery. God had led His people out of bondage in Egypt through the wilderness and they thirsted. God commanded Moses to take his rod and smite the rock. Water gushed forth and saved the lives of the people.

In like manner God had saved the nation's life through many generations, and had, as well, satisfied their spiritual thirst. Hence this beautiful song of thanksgiving.

The Hebrews knew the significance of this song, for, at their great Feast of Tabernacles, the priest went down to the pool of Silsam and brought up water which he poured on the altar, while the people chanted its words. They took a ceremony and spiritualized it. In Russia the Greek Church symbolizes "the word made flesh," by the priest selecting two men, or two women, and placing the Bible on their bowed shoulders, and then reading the message.

"Behold God is my salvation, therefore, with joy draw water out of the wells of salvation." God is the fountain of salvation. We know how the air becomes changed with vapour, descends in the form of rain or snow, according to the temperature; how it becomes purified by contact with the earth; how the water under the earth comes up bubbling into the wells; into the springs. "Behold God is my salvation."

A part cannot equal the whole, therefore God is greater than we are. We, with our finite minds, are not able to understand what God is; but while we may not be able to understand everything, we understand sufficiently to know Him through personal experience.

We cannot explain God any more than we can explain the mystery of life, yet on every hand we have manifestations of it; even the tiniest blade of grass, has life.

"God is mine, and I am His." God has placed a thirst in the human soul, which He alone can quench.

The use of the word "thirst" is most expressive. We, in this country, can never know what real thirst is, with springs and streams on every hand. Stevens, the great war correspondent, in writing of his experiences with Kitchener in Soudan, describes thirst in a very graphic manner: In the morning the sun comes up quickly and sheds a heavy glare all day long. The dust which rises from the marching of men and animals clogs the throat, and no one dare quench his burning thirst until the sun has gone down in the West and the cool breezes have begun to blow.

"My soul thirsteth for God." God is our well of salvation, our satisfying portion.

How may we bring ourselves into contact with God?

Some people are miserable in this world though they have plenty of money to satisfy their wants, while other people are perfectly satisfied without it. Some folks are miserable in good health, while those in sickness are sometimes extremely happy. It is not in the things possessed, but in the person.

This was indellibly impressed on the speaker during his early days in the ministry. An old lady in Markham had been a victim of paralysis for over twenty years. Her condition excited his pity, and on his first visit he was determined to convey to her his heartfelt sympathy. Accordingly he spoke his words of comfort. She listened patiently. At the close she said: "You are all wrong; I am just as happy now as I ever was." He never doubted who got the most help out of that visit. She taught him a wonderful lesson.

How can we get near to God?

The woman of Samaria said to our Saviour: "The well is deep and Thou hast nothing to draw with." God seems to be so very far away. "He that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out."

The answer is all summed up in one word "Faith." Faith gives greater trouble than any other of the great words. Prayer is asking in sincerity. Faith means the going out of self after God, a confidence in God.

Faith sometimes signifies an opinion, the proper interpretation is an "act." By way of illustration: before us is a well one hundred feet deep. Two men stand beside the windlass, about to descend into the well. One expresses his belief that the rope is well made, that there are no bad places in it. While he is saying this he is standing on the ground. With him it is simply an opinion. The other man has the same opinion but he swings out and trusts his life to the rope. That is "Faith." Jesus Christ is the God given Saviour of man. As soon as we come to Jesus, who bridges the chasm between us and God, and can say "He is my Saviour," then our faith becomes our act: we throw ourselves upon Him. There is no other way.

"Cry out and shout" with joy.

The Church to-day seems to be afraid to express itself. In days gone by we used to have the good old saints who were very responsive in their worship. It was a habit grown out of great and glorious experiences. We seem to be afraid these days. There is such a thing as joy: joy of sins forgiven, when men are turned from their sinful ways to ways of truth and righteousness.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come yet to the waters." He that believeth in Me shall never thirst."

"Whosoever will may come." In other words: There is a God to satisfy every thirsty soul.

"Jesus, thou Joy of loving hearts!
Thou Fount of life, thou Light of men!
From the best bliss that earth imparts,
We turn unfilled to Thee again."

A DOUBLE-HEADER AT MURRAY STREET BAPTIST CHURCH

Rev. Mr. Webb's Message to "Y" Boys an Inspiration--Rev. Mr. Smith's Address on "Innocent" a Literary Treat

The evening service at the Murray Street Baptist church was of a special nature. The boys of the Young Men's Christian Association were the guests of the congregation, and thoroughly enjoyed the programme presented for their edification.

The choir was in splendid form and delighted the large audience with their well rendered selections. Their number was augmented by two visiting soloists, Miss Evelyn Adam, formerly of Belleville, who sang 'Son of My Soul,' and Mr. Walton of the Bank of Toronto, who rendered "Kipling's Recessional."

The Rev. Mr. Webb's welcome to the boys was one they will not soon forget, and his brief remarks breathed inspiration from beginning to end.

The address of the evening was given by Rev. C. G. Smith of Belleville, who based his sermon on Marie Correlli's book, "Innocent," and for over half an hour held his hearers spellbound, as they listened to his lucid interpretation of that remarkable work. It was a literary treat such as is seldom enjoyed by a Peterborough assembly, and was rendered all the more enjoyable by the occasional flashes of humour which punctuated it.

The pastor based his few words on Paul's exhortation to the Romans, found in the twelfth chapter: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies as living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." And continuing, he admonishes them to be "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

Some people seem to have an idea that a Christian boy is necessarily a laggard, careless in his studies, and indifferent to his business opportunities. According to Paul this is a wrong conception. It matters not whether a boy sells papers, works in factory or office, or attends school, he must not be slothful if he would please God. He must be alive, awake, with strong blood flowing through his veins, and with a pleasing intelligence in his eye. In "David Copperfield," appeared a character, Micawker, who was always waiting for something to turn up. Dickens represented him as a lazy man with fingers out of gloves, boots worn, clothes frayed and torn, the remains of a one-time respectability, hanging around, instead of getting out and making something turn up.

A boy must possess temper, preferably the good kind; in other words, he must have spirit, fervent, heated, active, boiling. The speaker said it did his heart good to listen to the boys last Friday night at their banquet as they howled (boiled over) their enthusiastic appreciation of the good things set before them. He believed that God was pleased when a boy manifested a fervency of spirit either in his work or his play.

The Lord taught us that we must serve each other; be kind to those who need it, and sympathetic to those who are down. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." In serving our fellowmen we are serving Him.

The Rev. Mr. Smith, by way of introduction, paid a tribute to the work of the Young Men's Christian Association. He was delighted beyond measure to receive an invitation through Mr. Webb to be present at the boy's banquet last Friday night. One thing that puzzled him was how the boys got away with so much food. He was sure they had not been able to eat anything since. And to-night, he had hoped to be free, but Mr. Webb insisted on a double-header, all for the price of single admission.

He chose as his text, Acts, 8:37. "And the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God."

In connection with the rite of baptism there is only one question: Do you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ with all thy heart? And one, test, as found in Mark 16:16, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The Lord did not ask for the material life or material intellect. The terms, adult baptism, infant baptism, were misleading. What does it matter about the age? A man might be as old as Methuselah and if he lay and soaked all night his sins would not be washed away. All Protestant churches are one in the rite of baptism, whether by sprinkling, pouring or plunging. They believe, however, that baptism in itself is not essential to salvation; that comes through the blood of Jesus Christ, which cleanses us from all sin.

The Roman church claims that unless a child is baptised it will be forever lost. Christ said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Think you, He would cast them out if no priestly hand had been laid upon their brow? Instead, the speaker felt sure they were "Safe in the Arms of Jesus." This doctrine of baptismal regeneration had made infidels of Herme, Voltaire and Ingersoll.

Marie Correlli, in her book "Innocent, Her Fancy, His Fact," sought to place these questions of rites and ceremonies where they belong. When a novelist assumes the role of a preacher and gives her views on questions of philosophy, they must be judged according to the standards as set forth in the Bible. The influence of a popular novelist is far reaching; the pulpit reaches its thousands, but the novel reaches its tens of thousands.

Miss Correlli, of Stratford-on-Avon, is a most remarkable personage. For the last quarter of a century she has been turning out books, for which she receives $25,000 apiece, plus a liberal royalty. She declares that it is not her design to write simply stories of love, to entertain, tease or please, but to give her views to the world. She is a woman to be reckoned with. It is a perilous thing to disagree with Marie Correlli, as Andrew Carnegie found out to his sorrow.

She is a believer, though, sometimes she entertains some artistic fancies. She seems to have a leaning towards transmigration of souls, or the continuation of a single personage through several lives, the trend being ever upward. She believes that God is everywhere; also that life is absolutely independent of material conditions; that life is not the body, it is the soul; that death is only a change in the mode of existence, merging with God. She denies that she is a Christian Scientist, but puts mind above matter.

She was once asked why she had never married. She replied that she had three personalities under her roof: a dog that growled all morning, a parrot that swore all afternoon, and a cat that stayed out all night (what more could she want.)

In the majority of her books she prefers the ending with the coffin, the shroud and the grave, to the trousseau, the preacher and the wedding bells. She maintains it is truer to life; any other ending would be false to life, false to love, and false to the tragedy of existence.

In her book "Innocent" her message is that life is independent of material conditions; we must beware of injuring the body, and fear him who seeks to cast body and soul into hell; that salvation comes through Christ, regardless of rites or ceremonies; that we must not place any impediment on the soul coming to Christ; all other acts are acts of the free will; we shall know the truth and the truth shall make us free.

Space will not permit more than a brief reference to the synopsis of the story as given by Mr. Smith. To be appreciated fully it must be read.

"Innocent" is the name given to a little baby girl who was left mysteriously one night on Briar Farm, in Devon, the home of Farmer Jocelyn, a bachelor. Scandal mongers got busy and, of course, concluded that his chickens had come home to roost. He was one of those rare individuals who had a heart, he never repudiated their statements, never attempted to defend his good name, and Innocent grew up unaware that he was not her "dear old Dad."

In the course of time she became a great student of French literature, and developed into a famous writer.

One day farmer Jocelyn falls dead; the truth comes out; the farm is left to its real heir, and Innocent discovers that she is nothing but a poor waif. Later she meets her real mother, with whom she had a painful interview, and departs for London, there to make a name for herself. Here she meets a French artist, Amadis de Jocelyn, who woos her, awakens within her heart that saprk of true love, and then by indifference kills that love, ruins her soul, (but not her body.)

One stormy night she wandered back to Briar Farm, the home of her youth, where her old lover, "Robin," had watched and waited for many a day. In the morning she was found dead in her room.

Miss Correlli is a stylist of no mean power. Mr. Smith quoted a few paragraphs to illustrate her marvellous powers of description. One a morning scene in Devon, another a description of two kinds of love, and the third a quotation, affirming that the seduction of a soul is worse than the seduction of the body. In the middle of the book, in the death scene of Farmer Jocelyn, she gives an illuminating conversation which the local clergyman had with Innocent. He was one of those ministers who seemed to have the unfortunate faculty of rubbing salt into the gaping wound of one's sorrow.

Miss Correlli is consistent all the way through and puts all forms and ceremonies where they belong.

UNSOLICITED PRAISE FOR THE DODGE CAR

Valued, because entirely unsolicited, is a recent letter received by Dodge Brothers from a Judge of the Supreme Court, State of Missouri, who recently purchased a Dodge Brothers' car. "I have been using my car every suitable day since its arrival, and I find it to be in every respect a unit of perfect mechanism and great power. The environs of this city are hilly and have furnished a thorough test as well as demonstration of the power and capacity of your car. It has been a delight to me every day I have ridden in it, and in my judgment is incorparably the best value which has been offered to the public."

There are many old members of the 57th in the City. Some have come back to help along the good work. There is room and a welcome for the others. Don't say "I've done my share of it." This is war time and you are needed now. Drop around to-morrow night.

County Temperance League Disappointed With Measure

Send Resolution to Premier Hearst to This Effect—Several of City's Churches Are Not Exactly Elated With the Proposed Reforms

At a meeting of the City Temperance League on Friday the following important resolutions were passed:

Hon. Walter Scott, Parliament Buildings, Regina, Sask.

Dear Sir,—It gives us great pleasure to advise you that at a meeting of the officers of our League, held Friday afternoon, March 26th, a resolution was passed expressing the hearty appreciation of our League of the action taken by your government in reference to the abolition of the liquor traffic in the Province of Saskatchewan during the period of the war and not to be renewed at its termination without the consent of the people. The view was expressed that while Saskatchewan will derive the greatest benefit from this measure its beneficial effects will be felt all over the continent and particularly in the other Provinces of Canada, inasmuch as it is a forward measure, abreast of the temperance sentiment of the day and therefore an encouraging example for all believers in temperance elsewhere throughout the Dominion.

In future years when other Provinces have followed the example set by our government we feel that your government will stand in the honour roll of the country for the actions taken at this time.

Signed on behalf of the League:

H. B Cowan,
President.
A. S. Cunningham,
Secretary.

To the Ontario Premier.

Hon. W. H. Hearst, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—At a meeting of the officers of our League, held Friday afternoon, March 26, a resolution was passed requesting us to advise you of the bitter disappointment of the members of the League in the small measure of temperance reform that your government proposes to enact at the present session of the Legislature. In view of the strong expressions of sympathy at the time of the recent provincial election as well as by the Conservative party press and members of the party on the public platform, it was confidently expected that your Government would take an advance stand on behalf of temperance at this session of the Legislature. This belief was strengthened after the outbreak of the war in Europe when Russia enacted national prohibition, France abolished the consumption of absinth and, recently, by the action of the government of the Province of Saskatchewan, in announcing its intention to enact Provincial prohibition.

These circumstances have led believers in temperance to hope and expect that your government would take an equally progressive stand during the period of the war at least.

We regret also that no mention is made in the announcement by your government of any intention to remove or reduce the three-fifths handicap, to separate bars from hotels, to grant any measure towards the prohibition of the traffic.

Signed on behalf of the League,

H. B. Cowan,
President.
A. S Cunningham,
Secretary.

Churches Interested.

A number of the local churches have considered the Ontario Legislature's temperance measures, as the recent enactment has been termed. The Quarterly Board of Charlotte Street Methodist Church passed a resolution yesterday expressing to the Government their disappointment at the meagreness of the recent legislation. The George Street Methodist Board appointed a committee composed of Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Dumble, Mr. Might and Mr. Brownacombe, who are to draft this afternoon a resolution embodying the sentiment of the Board. The Church has a large number of earnest temeperance workers who are anxious for temperance advancement.

A report from St. Paul's Church will be brought in to-night.

Police Have Been Notified

To be on the Lookout for Samuel Clarke—A Reward of $10 is Offered

The police have received a notice from Chief Royce of Port Hope, asking them to be on the lookout for one Samuel Clarke, who is missing from his home near Baltimore, Ont., since March 11th.

Persons giving information as to his whereabouts will receive the reward of $10.

Clarke is aged 33 years; 5 ft. 7 in. in height; weight from 135 to 150 lbs.; clean shaven, fair complexion, generally wears glasses. Dressed in very plain clothes—dark grey tweed—had striped overalls and wore lumbermen's rubbers and socks. Of a melancholy disposition. May be engaged with a farmer.

The call is out for the Fourth Contingent. That means more men from the 57th Regiment. Better help along by joining the Rangers to-morrow night.

SOME QUESTIONS FOR THE POST

Please Tell Us How Many Lindsay Men Were Included in the 715

The Lindsay Post says that the people of Peterborough are sore because the militia authorities selected Lindsay as an important recruiting and training centre. The Post seems to have missed the point altogether. The complaint is that while Major-General Hughes tells the Mayor of Winnipeg to keep his eyes on the firing line, he allows over 700 soldiers to be dumped into Lindsay for the benefit of the "business establishments." There was no objection to Lindsay raising as many men as she desired in her own territory. Had the authorities confined their activities to that there would have been no overcrowding in the Armouries. But they went outside of their territory, in fact outside of the third military division, went to Toronto, in the second division, and brought down car loads of recruits. It has never been claimed that orders for this course were issued from Kingston. Who then issued the orders? Did Major-General Hughes? Or did the people of Lindsay act on their own initiative? And is the Government to allow them to continue bringing in men from the second division?

Will the Lindsay Post please tell us how many members of the recruits in Lindsay were residents of Lindsay? How many were members of the 45th Regiment? Why was not the list of the names and addresses of the men going to Belleville published? Was it because it would have shown only a handful of Lindsay names in the list? Also will the Post please tell us why the Lindsay papers refrained from publishing anything about the escapades of the men while quartered there?

As a matter of fact there are but comparatively few Lindsay men in the bunch. The Post knows that as well as everyone else in the division. There might not have been much objection to Lindsay bringing in enough men to fill up the complement she was asked for, but to start up a training camp in the third division composed of second division men was introducing new tactics. An explanation in the House from Major General Hughes should make interesting reading.

Police Court

Charged with being drunk in a public place on Saturday, a local man was fined $2 by Magistrate Dumble this morning.

Magistrate Dumble was called upon to settle another family row this morning. A father of eight children, the oldest of which was fifteen years, went home drunk on the 27th inst. and assaulted his wife.

His Worship gave the offender a severe lecture on the error of his ways, and reserved judgment for one month.

Mrs Borden, through life, enjoyed remarkable health until two years ago, when she was stricken with paralysis.

Final Rehearsal of "Crucifixion"

The final rehearsal of Stainer's "Crucifixion" was held in St. John's Church last night after evensong, directed by Mr. R. J. Devey. Many members of All Saints' choir are assisting at this presentation on Good Friday next. It may be of interest to recall that this will be the tenth production in St. John's, but the work has been given three times in All Saints, and once each in Norwood and Lakefield, making fifteen in all. Of the choristers who took part in the first presentation, those remaining in the choir are Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Devey, Mr. H. W. Morphet and Mr. George Brown. The soloists then were Mr. Morphet, Mrs. Fred Clarke and Mr. Halpany.

Presentations are to be given in Toronto all this week by different choirs, some of which are: St. James' Cathedral; St. Paul's, Bloor Street; Bond Street Church and St. Mary Magdalene.

Dr. Ham, of St. James', has presented the work more times than any other organist in Toronto, generally on Holy Thursday, admission to which is by special ticket.

Meeting of East City Total Abstinence Society

A regular meeting of the Total Abstinence Society of the Church of the Immaculate Conception was held yesterday afternoon in their hall on Mark street. Rev. Father McCarthy, curate to Rev. Dean McColl, addressed the meeting. He said that each member should consider himself a committee of one to do everything in his power to advance total abstinence and especially to help one another and secure new members.

Growing Flowers

A Suggestion to Householders That More Attention be Given to Flowers This Summer

The campaign to increase production this year emphasizes the fact that the great majority of householders have overlooked the serviceable employment of a considerable area, in the aggregate, of unoccupied land. It is also evident that householders have not availed themselves of the opportunities for beautifying their homes and their premises by the growing of flowers. This subject is not mentioned for the purpose of diverting or dissipating the interest that has been awakened in the production of vegetables, but merely to indicate what the average householder can achieve with little effort, and at a small cost. As an example of what may be accomplished even in a small way, there may be cited the success which a citizen had with gladioli last year. He bordered a path in his garden with these bulbs, planted toward the end of April. He even grew them among his cabbages. They required but little attention, but this was amply repaid by their glorious bloom in late summer and up to the first frosts. The gladiolus makes a particularly beautiful flower when cut and placed in a vase. They can be obtained in numerous colours, and have a special value as cut flowers. There is merely an indication of what may be done. It is not suggested that gladoli should be hidden away in a back garden. The point is that an abundance of beautiful gladioli blooms were obtained with very little trouble. Those who are without the adanvantages of a greenhouse often start their seeds in the house. Asters lend themselves to this plan, and with attention considerable success may be attained.

In this case, select a shallow box about two or three inches deep. Cover the bottom to the depth of two inches with what florists call drainage. Any thing like oyster shells or broken crockery will answer. This drainage serves to take away all surplus water. On top of this place one and one-half inches of good sandy loam. Use about one-third loam and two-thirds sand. Smooth it over nicely and then sow the various seds in rows.

Then cover very slightly with soil rubbed between the hands. Next cover the box with glass and keep shaded with paper until the seeds show signs of sprouting, which will take, with many seeds, (if fresh) from a week to ten days.

Moderately Damp.

Keep your seed box moderately damp and remove the glass for a short time every morning to allow the box to, in a measure, dry out, and when replacing the glass turn he dry side down.

After the seeds germinate the paper shading can be removed, and after the seed has grown somewhat you can dispense with the glass covering.

To start seeds in the house the box should be placed in a light, sunny window of a fairly warm room, with a temperature of about 60 degrees during the day, and not much below 50 at night.

As soon as the little plants are well started the box should be taken to a cool upsairs room. In this situation they will harden off, when they should be transplanted into another box or into pots, planting several in each pot.

Care After Transplanting.

Be sure to keep them damp and shaded for a few days after transplanting. After they are well rooted give them air on all days that the weather is suitable.

After this care should be taken with the little plants that they do not on the alert to avoid the cause, which is too much water.

Then, on the other hand, never give too little water. Pliable seedlings that are allowed to become so dry that they will wilt down, when watered, freshen up and then at once take to damping.

It requires constant care and watchfulness to grow plants from seed in the window, but it can be done.

TURNBULLS

THE WORLD OF SPORT

COLLEGIATE AND MAPLE LEAFS WERE WINNERS SATURDAY

Before the largest crowd of the season, the Collegiate basketball team succeeded in beating the Hustlers, while the Maple Leafs handed the same pill to the Beavers.

Both games were featured by low scores, neither of the teams seeming to have their eyes on the basket. In the Collegiate-Hustler game the two teams were tied for first place in the B division, so that both teams were nervous as to the outcome. This probably accounts for the low scores. Every man was watching his man through cat's eyes to see that he didn't score.

For the first half the Collegiate only scored one point, while the Hustlers got six. But in the second half the Collegiate started on an ascent, both Jobbitt and Canniff getting the point columns working and crawled up on Capt. Heaslip's quintette, but it was only in the last thirty seconds of play that they caged the winning basket, making the final score, Collegiate 11, Hustlers 10.

In the Maple Leaf-Beaver game, the Maple Leafs, who in the past games have failed to get really started until the second half, got off to a flying start right with the whistle, and didn't slacken their stride. In fact they set a pace that Capt. Dobbin's Beavers couldn't catch up with at any stage in the game. Horsfield was the star performer of the game, scoring 12 out of the 14 points scored by his team. The first half ended 8—4 in favour of the Maple Leafs, while the final score was Maple Leafs 14, Beavers 6.

Line ups:

Maple Leafs—Dunsford, Cowan, Ellis, Horsfield, Richardson.

Beavers — Lees, Thackeray, Gilchrist, Dobbin.

Referee, Best; timer, Carruthers; scorer, Lang.

Collegiate—Stuart, Jobbitt, Canniff, Eastwood, Lewis.

Hustlers—Lang, Carruthers, Jones, Lewis, Heaslip.

Referee, Dobbin; scorer, Thackeray; timer, Lees.

BIG FIGHT WILL TAKE PLACE MONDAY

HAVANA, March 28.—The fight for the championship of the world between Jack Johnson and Jess Willard has been postponed until Monday, April 5. President Menocal of Cuba objected to the staging of the combat on Easter Sunday, and, rather than clash with the authorities, the promoters put over the date 24 hours. The men will enter the ring at noon on Monday.

Both Jack Johnson and Jess Willard were at the race track this afternoon, and were introduced to the crowd from the same platform. Their receptions were only lukewarm.

During the afternoon Johnson worked out twelve rounds before 1,500 spectators. At the Willard camp the cowboy went throuhg three rounds with his sparring partners, Hemphill, Monaghan and Savage.

President Menocal and his family visited the Willard camp and watched the workout. The President made a speech, in which he announced that fight day would be Monday, a legal holiday.

The ticket sale continues small. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt to-day reserved three boxes, and Edward Swift, Edward Morris and Ira Morris, the Chicago packers, reserved one each.

FAILURE FOR LEAGUE SAYS EDDIE LINNEBORN

Slices in salaries of the Canadian League ball players may spell the doom of the Canuck organisation, according to Eddie Linneborn, second sacker of the London Club last year.

Linneborn declared that he had no desire to return to the Canuck league this season, and from what he had learned of other players during the winter months, very few are satisfied with their berths. He attributed the feeling of displeasure to the excessive cuts in salaries throughout the league.

Many of the London players refused to consider the contracts sent them for the coming season. Most of them, entirely ignored them and tore them up after glancing over the salary question. "While I was in Detroit on a two weeks' trip," said Eddie, "I met Steiger and a number of others. They all told me they had torn up their contracts. I don't know what will become of the league if the club owners persist in such cuts."

ERIE FRANCHISE IS TRANSFERRED TO GUELPH

GUELPH, March 28—It is now certain that Guelph will be the sixth city in the Canadian League in 1915. The deal whereby the Erie franchise is transferred to this City at once was consummated Saturday, when Geo H. O'Neil, the owner of the franchise, accepted the offer of James B. Reynolds, proprietor of the King Edward Hotel of this city, who becomes the sole owner of the team. Negotiations have been in progress for some time, and the only thing which has caused the deal to hang fire was the price. O'Neil wanted $2,500 for the franchise, which would include some eight players, but in this list of players were several such as Jack Fryer and Leo Wiltse, who were suspended, and others who were not considered good enough for the team. Later another offer was made of $1,500 with no players at all, and this is the deal which was completed Saturday, the only exception being that one player, "Lefty" Dorbeck, comes to Guelph. O'Neill wanted to turn over "Pete" Behan also, but he was considered too high salaried for this year.

Mr. Reynolds has signed "Knotty" Lee as manager of the team, and he has been at work for the past week signing up some players. He has now about eight signed contracts, and is confident that he has some very promising material in the lot. He has been promised all the surplus players from the Toronto International League team, and when the season opens it can be depended upon that "Knotty" will have a trong team on hand to uphold the honour of the Royal City in the hall field.

In talking over the team, Mr. Reynolds recognises that this year may be a hard one on account of the war, but he looks for the loyal support of the fans of the city in his undertaking, and no doubt he will receive the same. He is a sportsman in every sense of the word, and must be given credit for once more placing Guelph on the baseball map of Ontario. It is Mr. Reynolds' intention to at once form a company of gentlemen who will be associated with him in his venture.

SUGGESTS LAWN TENNIS LEAGUE IN DISTRICT

Mr. Chas. H. Reid, a former Peterborough boy, now living in Simcoe, Ont., sends the Examiner some interesting information concerning the Western Ontario Lawn Tennis Association, of which he is president, and suggests that a similar organization might be formed in this district, with Peterborough as the centre. The Western Ontario Lawn Tennis Association was organised about a year ago, and last year had a membership of more than twenty clubs. Groupings were made after the manner of the Ontario Hockey Association, and the final game played off at London for a trophy offered by the London Free Press. The trophy was won by the Sarnia Club, and will be offered for competition again this season.

LACROSSE IN MILLBROOK

The Examiner is in receipt of a letter from L. C. Russell of Millbrook enquiring as to the prospects of a Trent Valley Lacrosse League this season. Mr. Russell says that Millbrook will likely have a team this summer and would like to get into a Trent Valley League if one is formed. With most of the teams playing in the Ontario Association there is little chance for a Trent Valley League.

That it is more easily cleaned is the claim of the English inventor of a work with thines diamond shaped in section instead of flat.

Death is Announced of Marty Walsh

Famous Rugby and Hockey Player Passes Away at Gravenhurst

OTTAWA, March 29.—News was received here of the death at the Cottage Hospital, Gravenhurst, of Marty Walsh, who for several years was very prominent in football and hockey. Walsh arrived at Gravenhurst last January, after being laid up for some time near Edmonton, where he was employed on the Canadian Northern. His condition grew worse, and on Friday he took a bad turn, which resulted in his death about 11.30 Saturday night. The remains will be taken to Kingston, where the funeral will be held Wednesday morning. It will be in charge of Messrs. J. J. Harty and J. Sutherland, trustee of the Walsh Fund.

The late Marty Walsh played on the Queen's football team, which won the Intercollegiate championship in 1904, and on the Queen's hockey team which won out in the University series in 1905, and also with the Frontenacs. He made his professional hockey debut at the Soo in 1907, and came to Ottawa in 1908. He played on Stanley Cup teams in 1909 and 1911, and was also with the Ottawas in 1910 and 1912. He went west in the summer of 1913. Walsh was 30 years of age. He led the N. H. A. in goal scoring for several seasons, and was one of the most popular players that ever figured on the Ottawa team. Walsh was offered $3,500 for two years' services with the Renfrew Club in 1910, but he refused and decided to stay with Ottawa, after which Kegr and Lake also returned their Renfrew contracts. About $400 was realized through subscription with a view to securing expert treatment for the unfortunate hockeyist, but the disease had gained too much headway, and nothing could be done.

Only 1350 Prisoners

PETROGRAD, March 29. —(Via London.)—The following supplementary official statement was issued last night:

"The German press asserts that the garrison of Permysl did not exceed 25,000 men; that the supplies would have lasted a long time if the garrison had not been compelled to share its scanty rations with an enormous number of Russian prisoners captured during the course of sorties; that the fall of Permysl has no military importance, and that the Russians have destroyed 300 towns and villages in Galicia, of which 250 were razed to the ground.

"All such assertions are malicious inventions. We captured at Permysl an army of about 125,000. Its detailed composition and the names of the leaders will be published immediately they are compiled. The Russians whom we liberated at Permysl numbered only 1,350, most of them wounded.

"The importance the enemy attached to Permysl may be judged by the innumerable sacrifices made in attempts to relieve the garrison, dating back to November. No town or village in Galicia was destroyed or razed.

Grays After Pitcher Buck O'Brien.

Brockton, March 25.— Thomas F. (Buck) O'Brien, formerly pitcher of the Red Sox, has been asked by Manager Dave Shean of the Providence club, International league, to name his terms. O'Brien was released last week by Memphis of the Southern league.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—No doubt you will readily forgive me for requesting space in your columns once again.

I wish to express my humble opinion on a subject of wide and national importance. I have attended meetings of societies in this town, and heard an earnest appeal read, asking for assistance for our soldiers who are at the front, in clothing, etc. The appeal made, is through the Peterborough Progressive Society. No doubt there are women of all ranks working in this Society, and are trying their utmost to do their part for the cause of the Empire, and to carry on that noble work of supplying necessities of comfort to our soldiers at the front. What is to be done to help this Society to pursue their vocation until the cessation of this great war? Have we all thought of the horrors of war. For instance, here in this bright sunny Ontario town the peaceful industry and all else goes on just the same as ever. Conceive for a moment a change in the situation, the streets once thronged with peaceful citizens, is now consumed by the ravages of an invading enemy, and our business houses and homes, given up to the slaughter and massacre of the foe. Nothing but blood, ruin and famine followed with the steps of desolation. This is just what has happened in Belgium, and now taking place in France. What a scene, then, must the field of battle present to us, where men in thousands are massacring one another, with no personal quarrel with each other, and thousands are left on the field without any assistance and pity. Their wounds exposed to the piercing air, amid the trampling of horses, and insults of the enraged foe. If they are conveyed off the field, they may be placed in ill-prepared hospitals, far from their native lands, no well-known voice of a sister or mother is near them, to soothe their pain and distress. Contagion and disease, carries many to their death, no friendly tear is shed, and they are swept into a "Soldier Grave" unnoticed and unnumbered. Since the commencement of hostilities it can reasonably be said that close upon two million of our fellow creatures have fallen a sacrifice in defence of their country. Each one of these two million deaths have pierced the heart of a wife, brother, sister, or mother, or father, all of which adds further to the reflections of complicated distress, caused by war. More can be said about this gift of horror, but space prevents it. Then what is going to be done, to stir the people into action, by assisting in the "noble work" which must be carried on to preserve our national honour. Could it be possible for the Mayor and his Council to arrange for a massed band concert to be performed and the proceeds to be handed over to the Society for the use of their discretion in procuring the necessary comforts so badly in need of at the front and in the hospitals. I would suggest that the fair sex of this city, sell the tickets on the city streets, a suitable badge could be worn by these ladies, procured for this purpose. Surely everyone would be inspired to support a cause which is their duty and common task, in defence of their homes and country. I, for one, am willing to do my share. Let us all go and do likewise. I am, sir,

Your King and Country need you at the Armouries to-morrow night.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF HOSPITAL SUPPLIES

Miss Lillian Pearse, of the Peterborough Progressive Club, has received the following acknowledgement of the receipt of hospital supplies sent by the club to the Canadian Military hospital at Shorncliffe. The letter is from Lt. Col. Donald Armour, surgeon-in-chief of the hospital, and was written on March 17. It will be of special interest to the members of the Club, as follows:

My Dear Miss Pearse,—It is difficult for me to find words to express adequately to the members of the Peterborough Progressive Club my warm appreciation of their generous contribution to our hospital supplies contained in the two boxes and sack received this week. I can assure them that the contents will prove of the very greatest service and go far to add to the comfort and well-being of our brave soldiers when under our care.

Will you convey to your associates my very warm thanks for their kind efforts on our behalf in our work at the hospital.

Sincerely yours,
DONALD ARMOUR.

East City Boy's Hand Severely Cut By Glass

Roland Clancy, son of Simon Clancy, blacksmith of East City, met with a serious accident yesterday about noon. With a number of boys he was crossing the trestle in the rear of the old McAllister mill. In some manner he fell and came in contact with a piece of glass, severely cutting his right hand. He was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, where the wound was closed. It is expected that it will be some time before he will be able to use his hand freely.

SCOUT NEWS.

There will be an important meeting of the patrol leaders and corporals to-night (Monday) at 8 o'clock sharp, in the armouries. This is a very important meeting so all are asked to attend. Any person finding a brass bugle mouthpiece will confer a favour to the Boy Scouts by returning same to 249 Aylmer Street or to this office. It was lost between Charlotte Street and the armouries about a week ago.

There should be a new man in the ranks of the 57th for every man that goes to the front. The Rangers' men are joining the Fourth Contingent now. That leaves a place for you, join to-morrow night.

VOTE FOR PERCY HARRISON.

To the inhabitants of Peterborough and district, who may have, or get any of the Pony Votes at the several stores in Peterborough, as I am in the running, and may possibly win the handsome prize given, I would be extremely thankful if you would give or save them for me, as I am outside the Empire Picture Show nightly, or if they would drop me a card to 739 George St., or 'Phone 142.

P.S.—I am deeply thankful for the several friends who have so generously given me votes during the contest.
6d-69 PERCY HARRISON.

STUNG AGAIN.

Carriage dealers have been stung by buying their carriages out of some foreign country. Now they have to pay 35 per cent. duty, 7 1-2 per cent. war tax, but we were lucky to secure Canada-made carriages, with no duty or war tax on them, which enables us to sell carriages at such a price that has never been offered in the city. See our display before you decide on one. You will benefit by it greatly. Home Furnishing Co.

TO MY MANY FRIENDS.

I wish to thank my many friends who have given me their support and pony votes, and to remind you of the fact there are only three more days to work, as the contest closes on Wednesday, March 31st. If you have any votes now or are about to make a purchase, please go to the pony stores and buy there if possible. As you know I am anxious to win this pony and do not mind working hard for it and desire to assist the merchants who have been so kind to donate it to the boys who work. If you have not promised anyone your votes, kindly 'phone 530 or mark your ballots for me. Thanking you kindly for your votes and assistance.

Yours faithfully,
ROD CAMERON.

In connection with a report in Saturday's issue of the Boys' Department Banquet, held in the Y.M.C.A. parlours on Friday evening, it was stated in error that the Mothers' Club provided the banquet. The members of the Ladies' Auxiliary were in charge. They have provided an annual banquet for the boys for eighteen years.

WEEKLY PRACTICE

The weekly practice of the "Banner of St. George" (Elgar) by the Peterborough Choral Society will be held in the Collegiate Hall to-night (Monday) at 8 p.m. instead of Tuesday, on account of the performance of "The Holy City. All members are asked to be present as promptly on time as possible.

THE QUAKER GIRL.

"The Quaker Girl" with its tuneful music and brisk comedy pleased two good-sized audiences at the Grand Opera House on Saturday. The presenting company was fully up to the standard of the splendid cast seen here before, in fact many of the principals were the same. The delightful music has lost none of its charm, and was splendidly rendered by both pricipals and chorus. "Come to the Ball," sung this year as last by Phil. Moore was perhaps the most enjoyable, but "Tony from America," "Take a Step," "When the Right Girl Comes Along," and the other favourites were well received.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fitzgerald spent the week-end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Sanderson, Chemong Road.

On Friday a kitchen shower was given in honour of Miss Lillian Fisher, Water Street, at the home of Miss Bella Elliott, Manning avenue. There was a large turnout of her friends and the many appropriate gifts presented indicated the esteem in which she is held.

Want Ex.-Ald. Langford In North Ward Vacancy

Several North Ward citizens have suggested that ex-Alderman Langford be returned unopposed for the vacancy caused by Alderman Johnston's retirement. They point out that Mr. Langford had had considerable experience, that he is acquainted with the needs of the ward, and while in Council showed himself a careful and constructive representative.

OBITUARY

DEATH OF INFANT.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Perdue, Ennismore, will regret to learn of the death of their infant son, Simon Joseph, who died this morning.

The funeral took place this afternoon to St. Martin's cemetery.

MRS. ALBERT FRANKS.

Mamie Sullivan, wife of Mr. Albert Franks, of Emily Township, passed away at an early hour yesterday morning in St. Joseph's Hospital at the age of 38 years.

She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband and an infant child.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock from the family residence, Emily, north of Bates' Church, to Omemee cemetery. Rev. Mr. James, of the Church of England, Omemee, will conduct the service.

Meeting of the W.C.T.U.

Interesting Address on Franchise by Mrs. Shield

The Women's Christian Temperance Union held a large and very enthusiastic meeting last Friday afternoon in the Y.W.C.A.

The President, Mrs. Whalley, was in the chair.

Mrs. Kennet, superintendent of "Little White Ribbonera," reported a membership of 12 since last meeting.

The petitions sent by the W.C.T.U. of Canada, to do away with the wet canteen among our Canadian soldier boys at the front will be presented this week to the wives and mothers of Peterborough to sign.

Mrs. Shield, superintendent of Women's Enfranchisement, took charge of the educational programme. She gave a very interesting paper on franchise. One of the most encouraging things about life for women is the increase in the women's organisations throughout the country. This speaks of a new and broader life for women, for when women organise there is always something doing that is going to make life better for the community. Besides the church organizations and the W.C.T.U., there are National Council of Women, Daughters of the Empire, Liberal and Conservative Women's Clubs and many others. Then we have Political Equality Leagues and Women's Suffrage Associations that are working solely for the franchise for women. A great number of the states have women suffrage, and, largely due to women's votes, many have gone dry. As yet not one province in the Dominion of Canada has granted parliamentary franchise to women. This, perhaps, is due to the fact that our women have not been very anxious, or at least have not shown that they desire the franchise. It may be that some are afrair that if women were enfranchised, the home would be broken up, the children neglected, that there would be political quarrels between husband and wife, and that women would become unwomanly, but we have not learned that any disastrous thing has taken place in those states and countries where women have voted for years.

It has been frequently said that woman's place is in the home, and so it is, and out of the home too, wherever she is called, as wife and mother, to guard those she loves and to improve conditions for them. The ballot puts power in woman's hand, so that she may make her influence felt. Then, too, power brings respect. Responsibility develops character. If women are given the responsibility of citizenship they will measure up to it and fit themselves for it.

It was decided to hold a parlour meeting at the home of Mrs. Whalley, Engleburn Avenue, on Thursday afternoon, April the 8th, to hear the reports of the Dominion Alliance Convention.

"THE HOLY CITY"

The "Holy City," which is to be rendered by the combined choirs of George Street Methodist and St. Paul's Presbyterian Churches tomorrow (Tuesday) evening in George Street Church, will undoubtedly be one of the finest choral efforts ever put forward in this city. Both choirs have been holding two practices a week ever since December, and the result of this long and faithful work will be evident to all in the splendid rendering which may be confidently looked for of the various choruses. The fine pianissimos in the unaccompanied choruses, "For God so loved the world" and "The Fining Pot is for Silver," form a striking contrast to the massive and majestic effects obtained in such choruses as "Thine is the kingdom" and the "Amen Chorus." The solos, duets, quartettes, etc., are all in most capable hands, and from beginning to end this fine work will receive a magnificent rendering by this choir of 85 voices.

The work is being given under the direction of Mr. John Allan and Mr. J. H. Renwick, with Miss Pearl McKee at the piano.

Will ticket-holders endeavour to be seated by 7.45 in order to be sure of securing a seat. Late comers will not be allowed to enter during the progress of any number.

Was Troubled With Eczema,

Would Nearly Yell With Pain.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS CURED HIM.

Mr. R. J. Swales, Harriston, Ont., writes: "I have been a great sufferer with eczema. I tried all kinds of salves, but they did me no good. Sometimes I would nearly yell with the pain, and would pass little white worms. I was told to get at the blood, so I used four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters, and it has made a complete cure."

All skin diseases such as eczema or salt rheum, itching or burning rashes, boils, pimples, eruptions, ulcers, etc., are all caused by the blood becoming impoverished, and while not usually attended with any fatal results, may sooner or later develop into some serious blood trouble, and the entire system become affected.

This valuable preparation has been on the market for the last forty years, so you do not make any experiment when you give it a trial.

MR. BURNHAM ON THE NAVY

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, March 29—During the discussion of the War Appropriation Act in the House of Commons this morning, J. H. Burnham, Conservative, of West Peterborough, was responsible for some interesting observations in regard to the probable future of naval developments in Canada. He severely criticised the Government for allowing itself to be forced by the Opposition to make increased naval expenditures, declaring that the sooner the Government got to the counry and knocked out the Canadian naval idea the better.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier touched lightly on the remarks of the member for Peterborough and said that the time was coming when the choice would have to be made between the Canadian navy and a policy of contribution.

Mr. Burnham, during the course of his remarks which followed an explanation by the minister of naval affairs on naval expenditures, since the outbreak of the war, said that he was sorry that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his lieutenants were agitating an adjournment in the direction of the establishment of a Canadian navy He was sorry to see the Government allowing itself to take the steps it had in this direction. He said that it was absurd for a country like Canada to dream of abolishing a navy at present. Eight million people proposed to blow themselves up like a frog on a table with an immense expenditure. The idea of a Canadian navy was popular on the two coasts, but he was convinced that the people in the middle of Canada were against it.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier thanked the Member for Peterborough for stating that the Government had acted on the advice of the Opposition. He said that the Government is submitting to the views of those who sit on his side of the House and that if they went to the country they might be knocked down.

"I believe so, too," remarked Mr. Burnham

Sir Wilfrid asked Mr. Burnham if he believed that a country with two long coast lines should be without a navy.

"Not indefinitely," said Mr. Burnham.

Warne's Drug Store Benefits By New Business Idea

Exclusive Agents for Well Known Known Line

In all lines of business old ideas are giving place to new, and modern efficiency is showing better ways of selling goods.

Almost everyone is familiar with the famous Nyal's Family Remedies and Toilet preparations and has been accustomed to seeing them in almost every drug store and almost every family medicine cupboard.

Very recently the Company have made a far-reaching change in their plan of doing business. In the future Nyal preparations will only be obtainable through selected drug store agencies who are shareholders in the company.

It is a proven fact that agents, selected because of their ability and business standing and more intimately connected with the manufacturers are able to market goods more economically and at the same time give better service to the buying public. Much of the friction of competitive business methods is eliminated, and the public benefits therefrom.

Mr. Warne is to be congratulated on securing the Nyal Agency in our town and will in the future make these preparations a more prominent feature of his business.

GERMANY AS EUROPE'S BRAIN

She Alone Holds Secret of Culture says Leipsic Professor.

PARIS, March 30.—The Echo de Paris prints an interview obtained by the Spanish writer, Senor Ibero, with Professor Wilhelm Ostwald of the University of Leipsic, in which the professor says:

"Before 1870 Germany did not possess a uniform organization. Prince Bismarck's work in abolishing the German Confederation, with its individualism, has given Germany the power which she has to-day. England has succeeded by the theory of European equilibrium in maintaining the rest of Europe in a state of inferiority in order to extend her naval supremacy everywhere. England thus has put Europe into the position of the old Germanic Confederation.

"European individualism must be abolished, an organized Europe must be created, and a central organ must be formed to act as Europe's brain. This organ must be Germany, as alone possessing the secret of culture combined with organization."

New Exploits of Russian Fleet Rouse Enthusiasm

BOSPHORUS BOMBARDED BY RUSSIAN WARSHIPS

Turkish Forts at the Entrance Are Heavily Shelled —Black Sea is Now Cleared

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 30.—The Daily News has the following from Petrograd:

The absolute clearance of the enemy's ships from the Black Sea has been promptly followed by a close bombardment of the Turkish defences on the European and Asiatic shores at the mouth of the Bosphorus. The news of the sound of Russian cannon echoing through the streets of Constantinople on Palm Sunday has awakened great joy in Russia.

It is known the Black Sea fleet was recently engaged in vigorous preparatory work. The Asiatic coast has been searched for mine-layers and several sunk, while all the Turkish transports were either destroyed or captured. The Breslau, in its flight back to the Bosphorus, struck a Turkish mine near the coast and was disabled beyond repair. The Hamidieh was the last fighting ship to venture into the open sea.

VIGOROUS RUSSIAN ATTACK.

The Russians, at dawn yesterday, it is officially announced, began shelling the forts spread over a distance of four or five miles on each side of the Bosphorus, aviators registering the effect of fire, and disposition of the Turkish batteries. Only a few torpedo boats attempted to emerge into the sea, but they were quickly driven beyond range into the channel. Russian shells were dropped accurately over a wide radius, causing much destruction. The bombardment will continue.

It is known the Turks are poorly supplied at the northern end of the Bosphorus with engineering personnel and equipment. Besides, they are anxious as to the number of shells for the guns. It scarcely is likely the Germans can spare any effective talent from the Dardanelles.

Von der Goltz' journey to Berlin is connected here with the crisis closing round Constantinople. He insists the Turks should devote their entire strength to defending the capital. General Leman Von Sanders continues to issue orders for the continuation of the campaign in the Caucasus and Syria. Goltz hopes to persuade the Kaiser to overrule Sanders. Moreover, powerful influences in Turkey are in favour of an attempt to sound the allies as to the possibility of a separate peace. It is believed this party is negotiating with Djemal Pasha to try negotiations.

THE ADMIRALTY STATEMENT.

Following is the official report of the Russian Admiralty on the attack on the Bosphorus:

"The Russian Black Sea fleet on Sunday bombarded the outside forts and batteries of the Bosphorus on both sides of the straits.

"The Bosphorus is a narrow passage which conects the Black Sea with the Sea of Marmora. Constantinople stands on its west side at its outlet and partly on the Sea of Marmora.

According to observations made from ships and hydroplanes, our shells fell with exactitude. Russian aviators flying above the Bosphorus batteries, carried out successful reconnaissances and dropped bombs with success.

"A heavy artillery fire was poured on the aviators by the enemy, without success.

"The enemy's torpedo boats tried to come out, but were driven back into the straits by the fire of our guns.

"A large hostile four-masted ship trying to get into the Bosphorus from the sea was bombarded by us. She finally heeled over and blew up."

Premysl Garrison Lived 134 Days On 86 Days' Food

Special Cable to The Examiner:

General Headquarters of the Austrian Army, March 27.—The Austrian argrison of Przemysl subsisted for 134 days on provisions designed to last for 86 days.

Przemysl originally was provisioned for the extreme limit which it was thought a modern fortress was capable of holding out, but the Austrian forces, whose supply trains failed to reach them, drew on the fortress for large supplies of rations and the great numbers of wounded in the battles in the vicinity and the soldiers stricken down by cholera and other diseases could be sent nowhere else. They consumed practically all these stores.

When the Russian steam roller was unexpectedly set in motion again, driving Field Marshal von Hindenburg westward from the neighbourhood of Warsaw and the Austrians from Przemysl, provisions had been coming in for the Galician fortress for only ten days. This gave the defenders rations for eighty days.

The final sortie of the garrison was a last act of defiance rather than a serious attempt to break through the Russian line, which was virtually impossible for the hunger-weakened force.

CANADIA NDIES IN FRANCE.

He was Chief of the Information Bureau, at Paris.

LONDON, March 30 — Mr. Paul Wiallard, formerly of Montreal, and chief of the Canadian Information Bureau at Paris, died yesterday at the French capital. The bureau was closed shortly after the outbreak of the war, when a bomb wrecked the building. Mr. Obed Smith, the Canadian Immigration Commissioner, has arranged for the transportation of the body to Montreal. Mrs. Wiallard, the widow, will be a passenger on the same vessel.

SUES FOR $9,500 AS ALIMONY FOR 24 YEARS

NEW YORK, March 29—Alimony for $9,500, declared to be the total due for twenty-four years, under a decree of separation, is asked for by Mrs. Ada M. Roe in an application to Supreme Court Justice Scudder at Mineola.

Mrs. Roe, who now lives in Washington, says the decree, granted in 1891, awarded her $400 a year, but that her husband, a lawyer, living near Hempstead, never made one payment to her.

It is asserted that after the granting of the decree Roe took their two children and fled from New York State. His wife later obtained possession of them by habeas corpus proceedings.

Roe, in answering his wife's application, says she has slumbered on her rights; that she is not permitted under the law to ask for alimony after twenty years have expired from the granting of a decree of separation.

He says his wife willingly agreed to let him take the children, and that he educated the two sons at his expense. She has never demanded alimony from him, he says, and therefore he has never paid her any.

Roe is sixty-seven years old and his wife fifty-eight.

Sharks From Hydro-Electric Radial Rails

Said the Mayor of Chatham to the Mayor of Peterboro' "We'll be Neighbours When Hydro-Electric Radials Are An Accomplished Fact"

BACK TO THE FARM

(Toronto Telegram.)

Clear the track, they're coming!

Hydro Radial, Rah! rah!! rah!!! and then some.

It's Hydro-Electric Radials that will take the people back to the land.

Hydro-Electric radials will keep the boys and girls on the farm— but not too much.

The pipers of Chatham filled the air space above the assembled multitude with their weird strains.

You can't bring the land to the people, but Hydro-Electric Radials will bring the people to the land.

Controller F. S. Spence, representing the city, made a happy speech, which had the additional avantage of being short.

"Whose that tall fellow with the curly hair?" asked a back country delegate. "Tommy Church," was the reply. "Mayor Church," corrected a bystander.

Hydro Radials will bring the producer and consumer bang up against each other.

When the Hydro Radial cars get going the high cost of living will have to get off the tracks.

Chairman Mayor Church put the kibosh on long speeches when he announced a two-minute limit.

Hydro-Electric Radials will be the tie that will bind rural and urban Ontario into one prosperous whole.

Col. Sir Adam Beck's Hydro-Electric Radial Brigade invaded the Parliament Buildings over 1,000 strong.

The people usually get what they want and they made it clear Friday that they want Hydro-Electric Radials.

Hydro Radials will put dozens of Ontario towns on the map that are now obscured for lack of railway facilities.

Apples won't be left to rot on the round when Hydro Radials are there to carry them to those who need them.

Said the Mayor of Chatham to the Mayor of Peterborough: "We'll be neighbours when Hydro-Electric Radials are an accomplished fact."

When the farm and the city home are linked together by Hydro Radials there is little chance for the middleman to get in between.

GERMANY IS NOW "AT THE END OF HER STRING"

So London Press Declares in Commenting on Sinking of Passenger Ships—Horror of Nation Expressed.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 30.—England's horror over the torpedoing of the steamers Falaba and Aguila, with loss of life now estimated at 144, gave way to-day to grave concern for the safety of other big passenger-carrying liners about to enter the German war zone. Representatives of big shipping companies besieged the Admiralty offices early to-day. They were assured that most extraordinary precautions have been taken to protect trans-Atlantic liners from New York from submarine attacks during their passage through the Irish Sea.

All night crowds thronged about the offices of the Elder Line here, inquiring for relatives aboard the liner Falaba. Early to-day the officers of the Eller Line admitted they had practically abandoned hope for 110 passengers and crew of the Falaba, still missing.

The Admiralty still reported 23 of the Aguila's crew and three passengers missing. Many bodies have already been found.

The London Press to-day expressed the horror of the nation over the sinking of the Falaba and Aguila with heavy loss of life to non-combatants. Particularly they dwelt upon the maiming of women passengers by gun fire. Between the lines was conveyed a warning that now that the big passenger carrying steamer actually had been sunk by a German torpedo, other liners may expect to meet the same fate. Without exception London papers to-day declared that the torpedoing of the Falaba, with its helpless passengers and the attack upon the Aguila was "a savage massacre." At the same time they united in the declaration that Germany is now "at the end of her strings."

Inspection of Prison Camps.

BERLIN, via The Hague, March 30.— Germany has agreed to throw open her military prison camps for an inspection by the United States' Commission. Ambassador Gerard made this announcement to-day. Britain is understood to have accepted the same offer, and trips of inspection are to begin immediately. Ten Americans will constitute the Commission, under terms of agreement. The Commission will be permitted to make a thorough inspection of every prison camp in Germany and Britain.

Acreage Increase Will Average Forty Per Cent.

C. N. R. Officials Report on the Activity of the Farmers in the Prairie Provinces—The Older Settled Parts Show a Gratifying Increase

Officials of the Canadian Northern recently finished a survey of fall ploughing along the lines of the company in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The figures indicate that the increased acreage may be averaged at forty per cent. They show a total acreage ploughed last fall of 6,181,376 acres. This is an increase of 1,766,108 acres over the preceding year. Figured at 21.38 bushels to the acre—the flat average of the yield in western provinces in 1914 for wheat, oats and barley—the grain yield from fall-ploughed lands along the Canadian Northern in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta would be 132,157,818.88 bushels. On the yield basis of last year the increased acreage would produce 37,759,389.04 bushels. But 1914 was an off year for grain production in the West, and that average will probably be exceeded in 1915.

The largest acreage for any one station was reported from Star City, in the black loam district in Northern Saskachewan. It was given as 110,000 and the increase over last year was 40 per cent. Naisberry, close to Star City, reported 75,000 acres. Melfort, nearby on the same line, claimed an increase of 100 per cent. Rosthern reported an increase of 300 per cent. over last year. Duck Lake's 50,000 acres is an increase of 75 per cent. To the north, Hafford, on the new line connecting the cities of Prince Albert and North Battleford, reported 72,000 acres, an arear 95 per cent. greater than in 1913. To the south, in Saskatchewan, Delisle, on the Saskatoon-Calgary line, reported 88,000 acres, which is an increase of 30 per cent. Marshall, on the main line toward the Alberta boundary, returned 50,000 acres.

In Alberta the town of Hanna reported 40,000 acres, an increase of 20 per cent. Stettler, in the central portion of the province, gave 30,000, an increase of 20 per cent. Craigmyle, close to Calgary, reported 40,000 acres, and Delia, the next station, 47,000, which is an increase of 200 per cent. Two towns on the same line, closer to to the Saskatchewan-Alberta line—Cereal and Chinook—report 15,000 acres each. In the former the increase is given at 1,400 per cent., while at the latter place there was no fall ploughing done in 1913.

Even in the older settled parts of the West, there are gratifying increases. At Morris, in Manitoba, the acreage is given at 30,000, and the increase 35 per cent. At Gladstone, there are 20,000 acres which represent a 25 per cent. increase. At Spirling, in the Carman sub-division, the agent reports 40,000, which is an increase of 15 per cent.

At Dunrea, in the Hartney district, the figures jump to 70,000, which represents an increase of 70 per cent. Kipling reports 75,000, an increase of 90 per cent. As these are the conspicuous returns only, it is apparent that Canada is doing her allotted part of the task which is at present confronting the Empire.

Canadian Losses Number 268

Fully Half Sustained by Princess Patricias

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, March 30.—Since the Canadian troops went abroad there have been 268 deaths in the ranks. This includes those who died at Salisbury Plain or elsewhere, who have been killed in action, or who have died from wounds sustained in action. The Princess Patricia's list of casualties is counted as part of the regular division.

No separate check has been kept of the Princess Patricia losses, but yesterday's heavy casualty list taken in conjunction with those which have preceded it show that fully half of the total losses have been sustained in the ranks of this regiment. From the first it has been subjected to fighting of the severest character and in the face of constant losses has maintained its steadiness under fire.

For the whole Canadian division the number of wounded at hospitals in France and England is around a hundred and is growing.

LOST SUBMARINE IS LOCATED

HONOLULU, March 30.—Hope of raising the United States submarine F-4 submerged outside the harbour since Thursday morning was again revived during the night when vessels engaged in the rescue work reported that they had finally located the missing craft in which 21 persons are believed to have perished.

Heroic attempts of the last 48 hours to bring to the surface from a great dept an object that appeared to be the submarine, resulted in the discovery by two divers, that it was nothing but an old anchor. The divers went to a depth of 215 feet but failed to find any trace of the F-4.

Refusing to be disheartened by this discovery, hundreds of rescue workers, although tired of their long work and without sleep for many hours, redoubled their efforts when another body believed to be the F-4 was located. Portions of a vessel's upper structure have been brought to the surface by the grappling apparatus of the various boats and it is this which makes the rescuers confident they are from the F-4.

The last remote hope that any of the submarine F-4's crew might be alive has been abandoned by the Navy Department, and yesterday Acting Secretary Blue ordered Rear-Admiral Moore, commanding the Honolulu Naval Station to report the exact location of the sunken boat and the depth at which she lies, so that the department may estimate the probability of salvaging the hull and recovering the bodies of her commander and crew.

Don't Let Your Skin Absorb Dirt

Many women think their complexions are clean when their skin still contains dust and grime in all its pores. To demonstrate your need of some other cleanser besides soap and water, make a test of Nyal's Face Cream. Get a 25c or 50c jar and their Free Booklet entitled "Your Complexion" telling how to apply it with proper methods of massage. Wash your face thoroughly and then apply the Cream. After properly working it in wipe your face with a clean soft white cloth and see how soiled the cloth is with the accumulations of grime that have sunk into the pores. How refreshed, soft, clean and delicately fragrant your complexion now is. How free from irritation.

Nyal's Face Cream is greaseless, oxygenated and refreshing, leaving no shine. Nyal's Face Cream Soap is a delightful preliminary cleanser. 11lc

All Nyal preparations are justly famous and none more so than Nyal's Face Cream which we unhesitatingly recommend. Call or telephone us for your copy of this book which contains most valuable information.

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Frocst

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The motive of the actions taken that day by Eileen Meredith had been accurately diagnosed by Heldon Foyle. She had returned to her home after her visit to the police at Waterloo Bridge in a state of the keenest uncertainty. Not for an instant did she credit the paragraph referring to the dead body. The police had been able to read the cipher message from Grell, and she assumed correctly enough that they had been more successful in obtaining an early glimpse of the advertisement. What, then, had become of her note of warning?

She was half reclining in a big easy-chair, her arms resting on the broad ledges, her fists tightly clenched. Her train of thought led her to alarming conclusions. If the police had been watching—and that now occurred to her as having been an obvious step—they must not only have seen her note, but they might have secured and questioned the person who brought the advertisement. And if so, might not Robert Grell's hiding-place have been betrayed? Her heart-beats became unsteady. What if the visit of the detectives down the river had been not to identify a drowned corpse, but a living prisoner? Suppose Grell were already in their hands?

She jumped to her feet. The watch on her wrist spoke to quarter to eleven. Her reflections had occupied many hours. She was already dressed in a brown walking costume, and she had never removed her hat since she returned. In answer to her summons a maid appeared with a cup of coffee and a couple of biscuits on a tray. That reminded her that she had not eaten since she had risen. She drank the coffee and ate the biscuits, while waiting for the brougham she had ordered. Within a quarter of an hour she was on her way to Scotland Yard.

In the circular hall, entered through swing doors from the wide steps of the main entrance, a uniformed policeman hurried forward to take her card. Through the big windows she could see beneath her the surging life of the Embankment and the smooth traffic of the river. Had the river given up its secret? The constable returned, and she was ushered along a grey and green corridor to Foyle's room. He had his overcoat on, and his hat and stick lay on the table. He smiled a polite welcome at her, and she strived to read his genial face without success. For her there was something of humiliation in the situation. She, who had taken pains to be offensive on the last occasion that they had met, was now dependent upon his good-nature for the information she wanted.

"What can I do for you, Lady Eileen?" he asked with grave courtesy.

She had dropped into a chair and her grey eyes met his, half defiant, half entreating. She answered with quick directness:

"You can tell me what has happened to Mr. Grell."

He opened his hands in a gesture of surprised expostulation. "My dear young lady! I only wish we knew."

Her foot tattooed impatiently on the floor. "Please don't treat me as if I were a child, Mr. Foyle. Something has happened since yesterday morning. I demand to know what it is."

Foyle was invariably gentle with women, and her insistent dignity rather amused than angered him. "Since you demand it," he said suavely, laying a scarcely perceptible stress on the word demand, "I will tell you. As the result of certain information, observation has been kept on Lady Eileen Meredith. She was followed yesterday to the advertisement offices of the Daily Wire, where she made inquiries respecting a certain cipher advertisement which was to appear in that paper. Failing to obtain what she wanted, she left a note warning someone in the following terms: 'The police know the cipher. Be very cautious. R.F. is acting with them.'"

An angry flush swept across the girl's pale cheeks. "I know you have set your spies about me," she said scornfully. "I did not come here to ask you that. What——"

"One moment. Let me finish. This morning Lady Eileen rose at an unfashionable hour—about four, to be exact—and went out to obtain a copy of the Daily Wire. Having deciphered the advertisement, and finding that it afforded no direct clue to Grell's whereabouts, she returned home and there came across a paragraph—which I will confess was inspired in this office—that set her wondering whether, after all, her lover was safe. She went out again—this time to Waterloo Bridge Police Station — and there made some inquiries—"

Eileen had got to her feet. She was plainly angry. "I don't want to know how effective your spying on a harmless woman can be."

"I am glad you admit it is effective," he answered quickly. "I wanted to bring that home to you. You cannot or will not understand in how perilous a situation you may find yourself if you go on playing with fire. There is no one else who has fuller sympathy with you or greater understanding of your feelings than I. Therefore I warn you. Do you know that merely on what you have done and are doing I should, were I certain that Grell was guilty, be justified in having you arrested as an accessory after the fact?" His voice became very grave. "If your conduct has not hampered this investigation, Lady Eileen, it has not been for want of effort. Take warning of a man who wishes you well. For neither your position nor your friends will save you if ever you stand in my way. I shall do my duty, whatever the consequences."

She was more impressed by his words and his tone than she would have cared to admit. But except that her face became a shade paler, she gave no indication that the warning touched her. Foyle had picked up his hat and stick.

"You have not found him, then?" she cried. "Can it be doing you any harm to say what has happened?"

"We have not found Grell — yet," he answered. "We found where he had been hiding, but he got away."

A sigh of relief came from between her lips. She scarcely noticed the abruptness with which he ended the interview, and returned his bow almost with cordiality. Foyle only stayed long enough to thrust a few papers into the safe, and then followed her out. Two resounding smacks called his attention to the landing of the private stairs, where Chief Detective-Inspector Green was struggling in the embrace of a stout, matronly woman, while a half-suppressed snigger came from a passing clerk.

Green, his solemn face crimson, pushed the woman gently away from him towards a girl and a young man who were apparently waiting for her. "There, there; that will do. Let us know if everything does all right. Won't keep you a moment, sir," and he disappeared along the corridor.

When he returned he had recovered something of his usual impassivity. But he could not be oblivious to the twinkle in Foyle's eyes. "Women are the very devil," he said as if in answer. "There's no knowing what they'll do. Now, the young girl there wanted to run away with a man of fifty, who is already a married man. So her mother—the old lady you saw kissing me—brought her up here, evidently under the impression that we can do anything. I took the girl into my room and gave her some good advice, telling her she had much better marry the young man you saw—they had been engaged, and quarrelled—and I told of some cases like her own that had come under my own knowledge. She wept a bit, admitted I was right, and then suddenly flung herself on top of me and started hugging and kissing me. I got her outside, told her mother that the matter was all right, when I'm blessed if she didn't try it on too. That was just as you came out. You may have noticed that I side-stepped warily round the young man."

"Be careful, Green. Is she a widow?" laughed Foyle. And then, more seriously: "How far is it to this place Our man may be out when we get there."

"Shall we leave it till to-night, sir. It will be more certain then."

"No, we'll chance it. Let's have a look at the letter." He fished a note out of his pocket and paused to read it through, carefully replacing it in its envelope as he finished.

It was the letter that had been addressed to Floyd on the barge "Flowery Land." It read:

"Dear Mr. Floyd,—I have tried to carry out your instructions, but luck has been against me, as I have to be very careful. It has been easy enough to buy the seamen's discharges that you require, but I have been unable to see Lola since she took the advertisement to-day, so do not know if she has managed to raise money. I believe I am fairly safe here, and my friends are to be relied upon, though they are much occupied with the gambling and the smoke, so there is not much quietness. If you write, address me as McKirty, 146 Smike Street, Shadwell."

It had needed little penetration to identify the writer of the note as Ivan, and to guess that he had taken refuge in a gambling and opium den. Indeed this latter fact was soon verified by a telephone appeal to the detective-inspector in charge of the district, who declared that he was only waiting for sufficient proof of the character of the house before making a raid. Foyle had promptly ordered the place to be discreetly surrounded, but that no steps were to be taken until his arrival. He had conceived an admiration for Ivan's cunning in the matter, for there was no place where a fugitive could be more certain of having the intrusion of strangers more carefully guarded against than a gambling-house.

BRONCHITIS
If Neglected Will Surely Turn Into PNEUMONIA.

Bronchitis comes from a neglected cold. It starts with a short, painful, dry cough, accompanied with rapid wheezing, and a feeling of oppression or tightness through the chest. At first the expectoration is of a light color, but soon becomes copious and of purulent character.

You have, no doubt, wakened up in the morning and have had to cough half a dozen times before you could raise the phlegm from your bronchial tubes, and when you do succeed in doing so you find that it is of yellowish or greenish color, and you get some relief right away. When this happens to you, you may rest assured that you have a touch of bronchitis, and if not cured immediately it will sooner or later develop into pneumonia or some other more serious trouble.

This can be quickly done by the use of DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

Mrs. Rebecca Have, Mahone Bay, N.S., writes: "My little boy, aged six, was always troubled with bronchitis, and when he had whooping cough he was worse. Doctors advised me to use Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. It gave him instant relief, and positively cured him."

Another Woman's Case.

Providence, R. I.—"I cannot speak too highly of your Vegetable Compound as it has done wonders for me and I would not be without it. I had a displacement, bearing down, and backache, until I could hardly stand and was thoroughly run down when I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helped me and I am in the best of health at present. I work in a factory all day long besides doing my housework so you can see what it has done for me. I give you permission to publish my name and I speak of your Vegetable Compound to many of my friends."—Mrs. ABBIL LAWSON, 126 Lippitt St., Providence, R. I.

Danger Signals to Women are what one physician called backache, headache, nervousness, and the blues. In many cases they are symptoms of some female derangement or an inflammatory, ulcerative condition, which may be overcome by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands of American women willingly testify to its virtue.

AGED FARMER BURNED.

William Maginn Perishes In Fire Which Destroys His Home.

TORONTO, March 29. — William Maginn, one of the oldest settlers on the east side of York Township, on the town line between York and Scarboro, early Saturday morning was burned to death. The neighbors noticed the house on fire at 6 o'clock, but it was not until after 8 o'clock that the flames were got under control, or, rather, until they had practically burned themselves out. A search was made all over for Mr. Maginn, and about noon his body was found in his bedroom, where he had been suffocated by the smoke, but not very badly burnt by the flames. He was over 80 years of age, and occupied the front part of the house, the rear portion being occupied by the family of his nephew, who worked the farm.

Mr. Maginn had been in failing health for some time and had a stroke not long ago. He retired Friday night and it is believed started a fire in the stove in his chamber.

Austrian Blockade Planned.

ATHENS, March 29.—In the Austrian naval yards all the usual work is being suspended. Men are working on about twenty up-to-date submarines, with which it is intended to blockade the Mediterranean.

Lady Paget's Death Denied.

WASHINGTON, March 29. — The British embassy here received a message from the Foreign Office in London denying the report that Lady Paget had died at Uskub, Serbia, where she was sewing with a red cross hospital unit. "No truth whatever in the report," the message said. Latest news from her was good.

Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy is Home-Made
Easily Prepared in a Few Minutes. Cheap but Unequaled

Some people are constantly annoyed from one year's end to the other with a persistent bronchial cough, which is wholly unnecessary. Here is a home-made remedy that gets right at the cause and will make you wonder what became of it.

Get 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) from any druggist, pour into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Start taking it at once. Gradually but surely you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether, thus ending a cough that you never thought would end. It also loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflammation in a painful cough with remarkable rapidity. Ordinary coughs are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, winter coughs and bronchial asthma.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup mixture makes 16 ounces—enough to last a family a long time—at a cost of only 54 cents. Keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant. Easily prepared. Full directions with Pinex.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, and is famous the world over for its ease, certainty and promptness in overcoming bad coughs, chest and throat colds.

Get the genuine. Ask your druggist for "2½ ounces Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

IN THE ROSE GARDEN

And a Welcome Surprise That Came.

By VIRGINIA BLAIR.

It was on the third night of the new moon that Beverly Alden, musing on his sermon in the darkness of his study, beheld from the window something white moving in his garden.

As the Rev. Mr. Beverly's garden was a vegetable garden, he thought fearfully of something sinfully trampling on his succulent salads.

He went into the hall, took his hat from the rack and stepped softly over the threshold.

As his footsteps sounded on the gravel of the path a white object moved from the middle of the garden and fled. He heard the click of the gate and then silence.

"Hum!" mused the Rev. Beverly and bent over his lettuce bed. "A thief," he said as he straightened up.

The next morning a fuller investigation showed that there had been depredations of onions and radishes. But the minister said nothing to his housekeeper.

The Rev. Beverly had no unusual powers of penetration, but it had not taken him many moments to decide that the spoiler of his garden was a woman.

"But why," he debated the next night as he finished his sermon—"why should a woman steal—a lady, I am sure, by the grace of her carriage—why should she steal my little onions and my lettuce?"

But all the wisdom of the Scriptures did not answer his question. And after his sermon was finished he again turned out his light and sat in the darkness of his study.

And again, as he mused, he saw a patch of white at the end of the garden. Breathless he watched, and closer and closer came the ghostly figure until it stood just beneath his window.

Then a voice said, "I have come to pay you for the vegetables."

"Oh!" His usual readiness of speech had forsaken the clergyman. "Oh, I beg your pardon!"

"No, you needn't beg it," the voice said again. "I picked some lettuce and things last night, and here is the money. It wasn't a very conventional way to go to market, but we wanted a salad, and"—

The Rev. Beverly, peering over the sill, caught the sparkle in her eyes as she made her half apology.

"You needed your salad late," he said dryly.

"Ah"—her little laugh rippled out—"think of my predicament! Some people came from the city hungry, and there was nothing in the house but eggs. You see, I am such a new housekeeper—we came only yesterday—and Susanne, my maid, forgets to tell me when things are out, and the shops are so far away—so, while she made an omelet I flew into your garden—and—and flew back and no one was the wiser."

"I saw you," the Rev. Beverly informed her, "and I thought you were a thief."

"Oh!" There was a little gasp. "It did look like it, didn't it?...But, you see, I have brought the money." And the silver glittered on the sill as she spread it out before him.

"No," the Rev. Beverly protested; "you are perfectly welcome to anything you care to take."

"Oh, but you must"—there was a note of alarm in her voice—"because I should feel as if I had stolen if I am not allowed to pay."

He was smiling down at her. "You can pay me by giving me a rose from your garden," he said.

"Why don't you have roses of your own?" she demanded.

He sighed. "I hardly dare allow myself the luxury. It is cheaper to raise one's vegetables than to buy them, and a clergyman in a small town has to think of expenses."

"I suppose," doubtfully, "that your salary is not large?"

"No, but there are donations." His eyes twinkled.

"Such as roses?" She was laughing up at him. The moonlight touched her hair with gold. The pulses of the Rev. Beverly began to beat.

"May I come over some time and walk with you in your rose garden?" he asked.

"Come now," was the quick response.

He went, and it was the beginning of friendship.

"He is lovely," Constance confided to her aunt, who had come up to her niece's colonial mansion for the purpose of chaperonage. "And he's here in this little town because he feels that he is needed more than in a city charge where he could get much more money."

"Constance," her aunt warned, "don't get romantic over a country parson."

"He has the dearest little cottage," Constance mused, "with a vegetable garden. He sends over tomatoes and parsley, and I put roses in his buttonhole. "It's very interesting," she sighed.

"It may be tragic for him."

"Why?"

"If you make him love you—what then?"

"Well?" Constance's tone was defiant.

"Constance's eyes flashed. "I can too! If I don't marry Warren I simply lose my inheritance. I don't deny that I love this old house, Aunt Anne. But did it ever occur to you that I might prefer a man to a fortune?"

"You would miss the fortune," was the quiet answer. "You were not made for love in a cottage, Constance."

But Constance was down the path. She bent over a pink rosebush and picked a bud just as the Rev. Beverly Alden came in.

"'Roses red and violets blue,' she quoted. "Can you tell me the rest off?"

"'If you love me as I love you,'" He hesitated. "You mustn't make me say such things."

"Why not?"

"Because I have nothing to offer you but a cottage and a vegetable garden." He was looking down at her with somber eyes.

"And if I don't marry one Warren Olmstead," she informed him, "I lose my fortune. And I won't marry him, so I am really homeless—and—please, I'd like to come and live in your cottage."

Aunt Anne's chagrin over the engagement found an outlet in a letter to Warren Olmstead. "Come up and rescue Constance from her country parson," was the theme.

But when Warren's answer came it was a revelation.

"Of all things!" Aunt Anne ejaculated when she had read it.

"What's the matter?" Constance asked.

"Read that," said Aunt Anne tragically.

It was a brief epistle, but it was very extraordinary, no doubt, for Constance danced with joy and waved the letter, crying "Hurrah!"

"Of all things!" Aunt Anne ejaculated again.

Constance caught her breath quickly. "You mustn't tell Beverly," she said.

"Why not?"

"He won't marry," Constance said mysteriously, "if he knows it."

So they were married quietly and went to live in the cottage, and Aunt Anne went home, and the big colonial house was closed, and the winter came, and the roses were wrapped in winding sheets of straw.

"You will miss the rose garden next summer," said the parson as he and his wife walked up the snowy path. "I wonder who will live here then?"

"The new tenants," said Constance, who, wrapped in a big red cloak, was leaning on her husband's arm, "are lively. There will be a young clergyman, a very handsome young clergyman, and a very, very loving little wife. Beverly"—

"Constance!" He bent down over her.

"The house is mine. Warren wrote to say that he loved some one else. He married first and forfeited his right, and I didn't want to tell you because you hated to have me rich. But don't you think it will be nice—for—for Beverly junior to—to play in the rose garden, dearest?"

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat If You Feel Backachy or Have Bladder Trouble

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

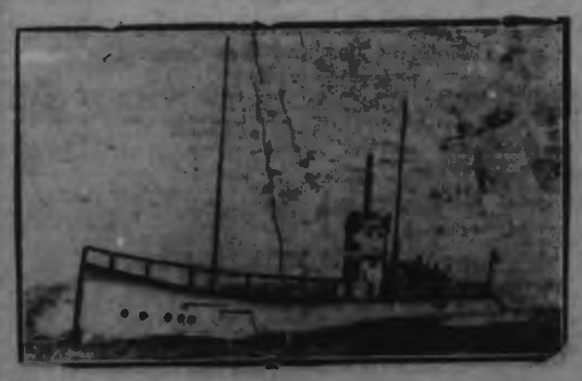
To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effercescent litha-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

A Result of Bigness.

"It's getting to be a big city, isn't it?"

"Yes. We no longer get mad when our friends don't invite us to all the parties they give."



THE FAMOUS U29 SUNK BY THE BRITISH.— This submarine of the U class is thought to have displaced about 800 tons, was driven with heavy oil. It had four torpedo tubes and two 14 pounder disappearing guns and two 1 pound high angle guns. The Admiralty announced that evidence was to hand which pointed to the destruction of this unterseeboote.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO. March 27.—Notwithstanding indications that considerable export business was being done under cover, bears ruled wheat today the greater part of the time. Intervention by Italy and other heretofore neutral powers seemed to have approached a little closer, and the market finished nervous at 1-8c to 1 1-8c decline. Other staples, too, all showed losses, corn 3-8c to 1-2c, oats a shade to 1 1-8c and provisions 5c to 15c.

Some complaints of Hessian fly damage to wheat were received from Illinois, Missouri and Indiana, but the trade on the whole was in no mood to take kindly to crop damage reports. The outlook for a good-sized decrease in the visible supply on Monday was also to a great extent ignored.

Corn showed heaviness thruout the session. Commission houses were persistent sellers, influenced by the fine weather and large stocks and by the weakness of cables.

Oats were unloaded quite freely. Seeding conditions had improved and demand for shippers slackened.

Liberal estimates of hog arrivals next week made provisions sag, despite steadiness at the start. Sympathy with the course of grain seemed also to cut a figure.

Ancestry of the Hen.

Darwin believed that our domestic fowls are descended from the jungle fowls of India. As other authorities have sometimes disputed his view, the statement of Charles William Beebe, curator of ornithology at the New York zoological park, is especially interesting: "After studying all four species of feral Gallus in their native haunts as well as many examples of natural and artificial hybridizing and reviewing the evidence from all points of view I can find no reason to attribute the ancestry of all varieties of our domestic fowls to other than the red jungle fowl of India."

FUNERAL UNDER FIRE.

Col. Farquhar's Body Laid to Rest Behind Firing Line.

LONDON, March 29.—Col. Farquhar was buried in a little churchyard just a short distance behind the battlefront. The entire Princess Pats' Regiment was relieved from duty in the trenches to attend the funeral, which took place under heavy shell fire. Col. Farquhar's body was placed beside that of Captain Newton and other Patricia officers. Five officers of the headquarters staff and the officer commanding the division paid tribute to the honored dead. A memorial service was held Saturday in St. Mary's Church, Barrington road. Six wounded officers, just out of the hospital, and thirty men of the Patricias attended.

Col. Farquahar was shot in the chest by a stray bullet while getting through barbed wire entanglements. He suffered much pain and lived three hours. No successor has yet been appointed.

A recently invented watch is provided with an interchangeable set of attachments so that it can be worn in seven different ways.

Three German Ships Sunk.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, March 29. —(Via London.)—The loss in the Baltic of three German steamers, the Bavaria, the Germania and the Koenigsberg, all laden with iron ore, is announced in the newspaper Social Demokraten.

The Bavaria went down March 15 with her entire crew. The cause of her sinking is not revealed. No details of the destruction of the other vessels are given.

Submarine Located.

HONOLULU, March 29.—The submerged submarine F-4 has been located outside the harbor, it was announced yesterday. Portions of the superstructure have been brought to the surface. The dredge California will shift moorings, tugs will criss-cross in all directions, and an attempt will be made to lift the submarine.

CLEANSES YOUR HAIR MAKES IT BEAUTIFUL

It Becomes thick, wavy, lustrous and all dandruff disappears

Surely try a "Danderine Hair Cleanse" if you wish to immediately double the beauty of your hair. Just moisten a cloth with Danderine and draw it carefully through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt or any excessive oil—in a few minutes you will be amazed. Your hair will be wavy, fluffy and abundant and possess an incomparable softness, lustre and luxuriance.

Besides beautifying the hair, one application of Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; invigorates the scalp, stopping itching and falling hair.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, stimulating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow long, strong and beautiful.

You can surely have pretty, soft, lustrous hair, and lots of it, if you will just get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and try it as directed.

7063

A good example of the type is shown here and could be copied very successfully in any of the smooth, plain suitings, or, if one preferred, a gray mixture might be used. Gray is a very good color for the season, particularly the shade called battle ship. The fulness in the back of the coat is fitted in easily with a plait each side, while the front is in two sections, the body and skirt portions with a waist line seam. The new coats are drawn in a little at the waist so that they will flare at lower edge. This design is intended primarily for wear with a matching skirt rather than as a separate coat. The pattern, No. 7,063, can be obtained in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Mr. Herrick Roche, C.P.R. agent, is visiting at his home in Welbar.

Mrs. Albert Armstrong is visiting friends in Hastings.

The play entitled "Oh Sussannah," which was held in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening of last week, was a splendid success. It was for the benefit of the Woman's Relief Committee, under the auspices of the Dorcas Rebeccas.

The plot of the farce is as follows: A young doctor, John Sheppard (Almore Haig) is persuaded that marriage is the secret success and secretly marries Flora Warner (Miss McBurned. Mr. Plant (Bruce Puffer), a solicitor with two charming young daughters, Pearl (Miss Ida Howe) and Ruby (Miss Ina Morrison, discovers that Sheppard is entitled to a fortune, and with his daughters descends upon Sheppard with a fixed resolve to marry one of the girls to him by hook or crook. However the girls have fallen in love elsewhere, and Ruby's sweetheart, Lieut. Andrews, Merry or Merry Andrew, as Sheppard calls him (Henry Scott), an old chum of his, conceives the idea of impersonating a maiden Aunt Sussannah (Miss T. Morrison), that Sheppard is expecting to visit him. Amora (Miss Paget), the said of all work for the doctor and his land lady, (Mrs. W. Hart), and adored by Tupper, (E. Avery), the doctor's buttons, passionately and romantically in love with the unsuspecting doctor, overhears the plots and puts the medical man wise. When the real aunt comes along, both think it is Merry disguised and after abusing her in every way cap the climax by throwing her headlong into the doctor's bath tub. When Merry arrives he is thought to be the real aunt, and treated accordingly The ensuing complications are exceedingly funny. Pearl captures a prospective husband in Merry's friend, Hon. W. Vane (Wm. McBurney), and Plant's heir is settled when he learns that both young men have money. Sheppard's young bride, who poses at his anatemical model when Plant interviews the doctor, is shocked by what she hears of his apparent perfidy and goes off with Plant to his home. The real aunt finally learns the facts of the case from Merry and explanations follow all around.

The receipts of the evening amounted to $91.00, which will be turned over to the Woman's Relief Committee after the expenses are paid.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES

Galt's veteran hotelman, William Bernhardt, died on Saturday evening. He was born in Buffalo, N.Y., and lived practically all his life in Galt where he was identified with the hotel business for thirty years.

TO PROROGUE THIS WEEK?

Much More Remains To Be Heard In Army Purchase Scandals.

OTTAWA, March 29.—Uncertainty and contradictory reports characterize the Parliamentary situation. The Government has given formal notice of a motion for the usual Easter adjournment, but there is still talk of prorogation on Wednesday. It is authoritatively announced, however, that the House will not be prorogued until the investigations now under way are concluded. The beats committee have still 17 witnesses to examine, and the public accounts commission has subpoenaed witnesses to appear on Tuesday, including T. A. Russell, of Toronto.

The testimony taken before the public accounts committee Saturday showed that efforts had been made to influence Col. Hurdman of the Militia Department for the benefit of an Ottawa jeweler who had binoculars to sell, and for a Milwaukee motor company that desired to sell trucks to the Government. No testimony, however, directly incriminated any official of the Militia Department.

Nine cases in ten of hard hearing are curable.

By curable we don't mean relievable—we mean that the sense of hearing can be permanently brought back.

Catarrh usually causes the deafness. Cure the catarrhal condition and you remove the cause of your poor hearing.

If you were sure you had catarrhal deafness you would like a real cure at once—of course you would.

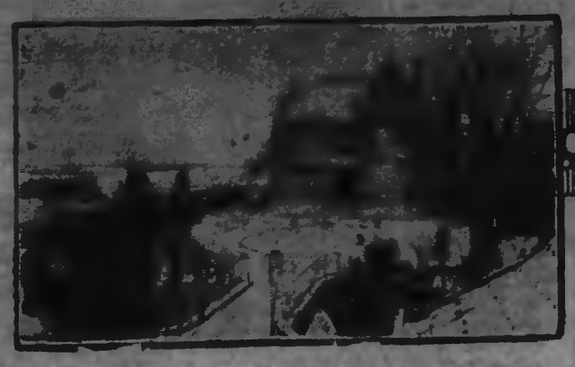
There is a cure for you—one that is inexpensive — pleasant, to use — and sure to do its work thoroughly.

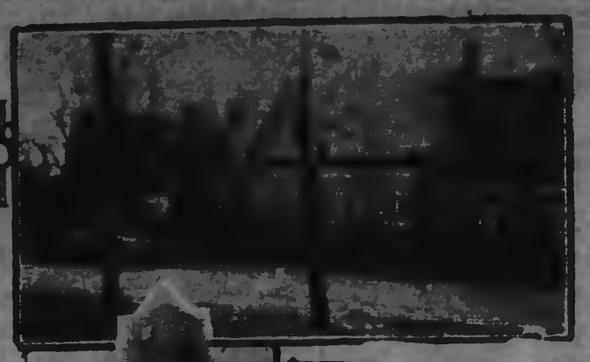
Catarrhozone is no experiment for deafness.

Thousands before you have cleared Catarrh out of their heads by the aid of Catarrhozone and have thereby been cured of deafness.

No batteries or miniature telephones to bother you—no internal medicine to take—you have simply to follow special directions for the Catarrhozone inhaler. Do this and you'll find a wonderful improvement in short order.

Any druggist can supply you Catarrhozone, or you can for $1 secure it post paid under plain wrapper from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.





Canadian Staff Headquarters in Northern France.— These pictures were sent by a Canadian officer at ——, France. "Blank" is somewhere near Armentieres and Estaires, but the censor does not permit its exact location to be published. The upper pictures show the modern chateau (surrounded by a moat) where the staff lives, the old fashioned tile roofed school which is used as staff offices. The lower picture is that of a church which was the centre of a violent conflict, and in front of it is seen one of the big Canadian lorries.

May Establish Cheese Board In Norwood

So As to Make It More Convenient and Advantageous for the Factories in That Section—Meeting Will Be Held To-morrow

BUILDING OFFERED

NORWOOD, March 30.—There is a strong likelihood of a Cheese Board being established at Norwood this coming season, in order to make the marketing of cheese more convenient and advantageous for the factories of this section.

It is felt that if the patrons of Stirling, Campbellford, Madoc and Belleville districts are served with boards, where the intervening distances between the centres are only about fifteen miles, why should not this same convenience be afforded the factories of this section, who now have no Board closer than Campbellford on the east, a distance of sixteen miles, and Peterborough on the west, a distance of twenty miles, making a stretch of territory of thirty-six miles without a Board.

As Norwood is the very centre of a particularly strong dairying section in which there are quite a number of factories, the villages would be very easy to reach, and the salesman would not be under the expense of railway fare, but could drive in. Much valuable time would also be saved. It is also pointed out by some of the cheesemen that if their factories were served by a weekly Board here as in other places, and the cheese shipped every ten days, especially in the heat of the summer, it will mean an increase in receipts of a large sum of money for the patrons, which is now lost by shrinkage in waiting two or three weeks for a Board to be held.

As regards the output it is said the factories of this section now contribute the bulk of the cheese on a Board which is situated outside of their territory.

Many other points in favour of this section being served with a Board can also be advanced, and was fully discussed at a meeting of the members of the factories were; Killarney, Norwood Saturday afternoon, the 27th inst., at 2 o'clock; in the office of the Dept. of Agriculture. All officers and members of the factories of the district were called to attend. Some of the factories were: Kilarney, Norwood, Daisy D., Ormonde, Oakdale, Westwood, Warsaw, Stony Lake, Trent River, Star, Victoria, Rush Point.

In regard to accommodation in Norwood, it is understood, three very suitable quarters were offered to the factories free of charge.

OTTO WEDDIGEN.— Commander of the U29, which is understood to have been sunk. He is Germany's most daring under-water navigator. It was he who, while in command of the U20, sank the British warships Hogue, Aboukir and Cressy. For this he was decorated by the Emperor. It was generally understood that he also sank the Hawke. Lately in the U29 he has been cruising off the Scilly Isles, where he sank four British steamers and a French one. He was courteous and considerate, giving warning in most cases to the crews of the vessels he destroyed.

American Ships Released.

CHICAGO, March 28. — A special cablegram to The Chicago Daily News from London, Eng., Saturday says: "An understanding has been reached between the British and American Governments by which the ships Ruby and Raven, detained at the Downs, off the southeast coast of England, will be released and permitted to proceed with their cargoes of packing house products to Rotterdam to-day.

CANADIAN ARTILLERY'S GOOD WORK

Mr. Chas. Duggan, city, has received the following interesting letter from Pte. Pat. Duggan, 14th Battalion, 3rd Brigade, First Canadian Contingent:

"Just a line to let you know how things are in general up to the present. We have just been relieved from the trenches by the 48th Highlanders. The weather during the last few days has been most satisfactory, real spring weather which helps a great deal to make things pleasant in the trenches, considering the condition they are in at present, muddy and wet. Of course in some places the trenches are fairly dry. Things are pretty quiet where we are at present, just a little sniping on both sides during the day. The artillery seem to be doing all the work. They are at it from morning to night. We are using our own artillery, and their work up to the present is proving most satisfactory. They have been doing quite a bit of damage to the German trenches. One of the guns met with an accident yesterday. Through a defective shell the gun was put out of action, and a few were killed and wounded. There will be a divisional attack very shortly. There should have been one a few days ago, but for some reason or other it was cancelled.

"The Germans try to bring down our aeroplanes when they are observing for the artillery. They generally send up about a dozen shells, each going a little higher than the other. It's quite exciting to watch the performance, the aviator going along as though not taking the slightest notice and enjoying the fun as much as ourselves. The fellows are all happy here, nice dugouts to slepe in, plenty of bully beef and hard tack, and they don't seem to give a d——n for all the Germans in creation, only they are very anxious to drive them out of the trenches they are occupying at present opposite us."

10 CENT "CASCARETS" STRAIGHTEN YOU UP

To-night! Clean Your Bowels and End Headaches, Colds, Sour Stomach

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and bad colds—turn them out to-night and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels, or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken.

Scout News

The regular weekly meeting of the Boy Scouts was held on Friday night in the armouries with a splendid attendance. The recruiting is still going on and any boy four feet six inches in height and twelve years of age is quite welcome to join. The Scouts are contemplating having soom good times this year and it will be worth your while to join. The Scouts are following the example of their brother Scouts in England, namely, wearing the khaki caps, something similar to the cadets and soldiers.

On account of Good Friday, the regular meeting of the Scouts will be held on Thursday night at 7.30 p.m. sharp at the armouries. Full uniform and staves are required. This is an important meeting, so all are asked to attend.

We should not forget that our families are made up of individuals, each one with their likes and dislikes, and varying dispositions. Each individual's future is to a great extent made or marred by the atmosphere of

A WARSHIP'S WEAKNESS

Shells Most Frequently Strike and Penetrate the Decks

The majority of the hits made by the battle cruisers in the North Sea battle struck upon the decks of the ships. A naval correspondent in discussing this battle, which was fought at long range, with the shells reaching the height of some three miles in the curve of their projection, says it shows a weakness of modern battleship construction that the decks were so easily penetrated. The decks, he says, are the weakest and most vulnerable of all the above-water parts of the up-to-date warship.

Another lesson he draws is that the ship fighting end-on is more likely to be hit than the one fighting broadside to the enemy.

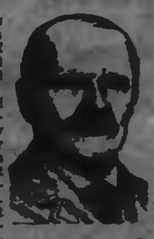
"It has been generally believed," he says, "that a ship fighting end-on stands the smallest chance of being hit, but that is no longer believed. The science of gunnery has been brought to the standard for a competent man to aim off the proper line of fire, that is he may be depended to send his shells in the right direction. Misses are mostly made by the shell falling short or passing over the target; and it is therefore obvious that the longer the target is, not at right angles to, but parallel with the flight of the shell, the greater will be the chance of hitting. The effective target presented by a battleship end-on is really much greater than when she is broadside on, besides in the former position losing what all-over protection might be afforded by her vertical side armor."

Operation Decided On As Only Means of Relief

But the Writer of This Letter Resolved to Try Dr. Chase's Ointment First and Was Cured.

This is not an isolated case, for we frequently hear from people who have been cured of piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment after physicians had told them nothing short of an operation could bring relief and cure.

If you could read these letters, coming as they do, day after day and year after year, you would realize what a wonderful curative agent Dr. Chase's Ointment really is. Few ailments are more annoying or more persistently torturing than piles, and when this suffering is promptly relieved by the application of Dr. Chase's Ointment there can be no doubt as to where credit is due. Friends and neighbors are told of the results and so the good word spreads, and Dr. Chase's Ointment is becoming known far and wide as the only actual cure for piles or hemorrhoids.



MR. BEAUVAIS.

Mr. Charles Beauvais, a respected citizen of St. John's, Que., writes:—"For 14 years I suffered from chronic piles or hemorrhoids and considered my case very serious. I was treated by a well-known physician who could not help me, and my doctor decided on an operation as the only means of relief. However, I resolved to try Dr. Chase's Ointment first. The first box brought me great relief, and by the time I had used three boxes I was completely cured. This is why it gives me such great pleasure to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to everybody suffering from hemorrhoids as a preparation of the greatest value."

LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA.

"My nerves were very bad, and I could not sleep at night, nor could I control my arms or legs," writes Mrs. Robt. Bustard, Maxwell, N.B. "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of what I believe was the early stage of locomotor ataxia or nerve pain. I cannot describe what I suffered, but now I am entirely cured."

80,000 Russians Pour Through Dukla Pass

Liner "Flaminian" Torpedoed Off Scilly Islands

HUGE ARMY SMASHING AT ENEMY'S POSITIONS

100,000 Russian Troops Gaining the Heights--Bukowina Operations a Masterly Bit of Slav Strategy

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, March 31.—Eighty thousand Russians supported by light artillery have poured through Dukla Pass and now occupy strong positions in the northern foothills of Hungary, according to despatches reaching here to-day. Their outposts are now in a clash with the rear guard of the Austro-Germans on the Hungarian plain along a 15-mile line extending from the northeast of Evidnik to the north of Bartfa. Fighting has been resumed on a large scale in Lupkow and Usok Pass regions where the Slavs have taken more than 6,000 prisoners. Though the War Office makes no comment, it is known that at least 100,000 troops from the army that besieged Peresyul is now smashing at the enemy's positions along the heights. Russian military critics pointed to Bukowina operations to-day as a masterly bit of Slav stragedy. Bmissing a comparatively small army along the Pruth and threatening the second invasion of Bukowina, Gen. Ivanoff forced the Austrians to send reinforcements from Lupkow and Uszok Pass regions, where Austrian troops were badly needed to stem Slav invasion of Hungary.

Von Hindenburg apparently has given up all hope of pressing on toward Warsaw. Germans are everywhere on the defensive in Poland.

BOMBARDED LIBAU.

LIBAU, Russia, March 31.—German warships bombarded this port, killing three civilians and wounding seven. The steamer "Baltica" lying in the harbour, and fifteen houses were damaged. Libau is a Russian Baltic seaport of 65,000. It was bombarded last Sunday also, when one civilian was killed.

TURKISH FORCE CHECKED.

PETROGRAD, March 31.—An attempt by a large Turkish force to move northward against Russian Caucasus' seaport of Batum has been checked, the War Office announced to-day. The Russian troops have re-occupied Artvin, 32 miles south-east of Batum, and are pursuing the Turks, who retreated southward across the Cherek river.

WARSHIPS BOMBARD TURKISH POSITIONS

Recently Fortified Plains of Troy Were Shelled and the Fortifications Destroyed--Turkish Reply Was Feeble.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 31.—A Reuter despatch from Athens says: "The Turks are repairing the damage done to the forts and concentrating troops in Smyrna.

"The operations in the Dardanelles Sunday were confined to an intermittent bombardment of several Turkish positions in which seaplanes cooperated. The Turkish reply was feeble."

The Salonica correspondent of the Daily Mail telegraphs that during the operations the allied fleet before the entrance of the straits bombarded the plains of Troy and Kalifatli, which was recently fortified. After its destruction a part of the fleet bombarded the heights of Chersonese, completely destroying the positions known as Asab and Tchiffilk. The fortress of Yniser replied.

THE ATTACK ON BOSPHOROUS FORTS.

An official communication issued by the Russian War Office tells of the operations of the Russian fleet against the Bosphorous. It says: "On Monday morning our fleet approached the outer fortifications of the Bosphorus, but was unable to continue the bombardment, as a fog shrouded the coasts. One of our smaller ships exchanged shots with a Turkish destroyer, which made off at full speed for the Bosphorus after the first shot."

"A semi-official statement commenting on the Russian naval operations in the Bosphorus," says the Daily Telegraph's Petrograd correspondent, "warns the Russian people not to expect the speedy success either of the allies against the Dardanelles or the Russians against the Bosphorus. This double attack, the statement says, has been carefully co-ordinated, but it is recognized that the operations will require great exertion and occupy considerable time. Moreover, whereas the allies are in a position to make good their losses in ships, however great, the Russian Black Sea fleet is not in a position to do that. Great caution also is required, as the forts at both ends are manned with heavy guns."

Frederick Rensot telegraphs to the Daily News: Fine weather favoured Sunday's bombardment of the Bosphorus by the Russian Black Sea fleet and this enabled aviators to obtain a clear view of the damage inflicted. The worst destruction was done to the fort of Elmas, which early in the day had been firing is four guns very steadily.

Russian twelve-inch shells demolished both the old stone bastions and also the new earthworks around the emplacement where the Germans had recently transferred some of their guns. It is known that the Turks have 22 guns at Anadoli and Kawak, four miles further along the Asiatic shore of the Bosphorus, and 24 guns at the neighbouring fort of Madjar Kali.

Six guns were worked from the fort of Kilia, on the European side. The garrison of Elmas fled, being unable to withstand the fire of the warships. The Turkish land troops are now evidently preparing for important operations, which they expect to be undertaken simultaneously from the Black Sea and the Aegean Sea. The Russian Admiral congratulated his fleet on the excellent results of the day's operations.

ITALIANS REPORTED WOUNDED

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, March 31.—The London Telegraph to-day printed the following despatch from Rome:

"The Giornale D'Italia of Rome, received from Venice, news which it publishes under reserve, to the effect that there has been a grave incident on the Austro-Italian frontier between some Austrian soldiers and Italian customs house officers. Some Italians were wounded.

General Advance Started Mar. 10

"One of the Biggest Battles in History Started To-day" Writes a Soldier

Special to the Examiner.

"By the time you get this letter you will know that one of the biggest battles in history started to-day," wrote Pte. E. Osborne Callighen, of the 48th Highlanders, on March 10. The letter, which was received by his parents in Toronto yesterday, was written in a field where the 48th were being held in reserve.

"The shells are flying over our heads and you can hear the rifles cracking," continues the letter. "It sounds fine. We came out of the trenches last night for a rest, but we all had to get up at four o'clock this morning, and by 7:30 were on the move without breakfast. When the artillery opened fire at 8 o'clock it was deafening, then the rifles started, and the general advance all along the 200 mile line of trenches."

On March 12 Pte. Callighen added the following to his letter:

"The advance has started, and I think if all goes well, the war should be over by May or June. We thought we were done for the other day. The Germans shelled our trench, and a shell hit right in our dug out. There were five of us sitting there hugging the parapet, ready to duck the shells, but this one burst within five feet of us and covered us with mud, but did not hurt any of us. Our artillery is sure good. I saw them blow up the German trenches with their first shot, and they fired ten, every one hitting in the trenches. We saw the Germans go up in the air, and I felt sorry for them, but that is the luck of the game."

Student's Wife Held Prisoner

Following Abduction of His Bride Young Man Receives Note Written by Her That She is Held Captive.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., March 31—Following an elopement in New York the alleged abduction of his bride from Amsterdam, N.Y., a note informing him that she was held a prisoner in this court, court proceedings here to secure her release and another flight to New York City, Joseph Charzewski of Brooklyn is still seeking to get possession of her.

Charzewski, a medical student at the New York university, appeared in this city recently and went to police headquarters. There he displayd a section of a paper shoe box upon which was written the words "I am held a prisoner at 405 Barnum Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn. Come and get me. Ann."

Saw Bride in Window.

The address is the home of Dr. Bronislaw L. Smykoski, a well-known practitioner among the Polish people in New York and throughout New England. Detective Edward Cronan, assigned to the case, observed the young bride in an upper window beckoning to her husband. She was roughly pulled away from the window. At the doorway Mrs. Smykowski is alleged to have threatened the husband with death if he persisted in entering the house. Dr. Smykowski later explained that this threat was actuated by excitement.

An attorney in behalf of Charzewski, secured a writ of habeas corpus on Thursday. Though Charzewski's detectives alleged Mrs. Charzewski was then in the house, Deputy Sheriff Donnelly was told by Dr. Smykowski that she and her mother had gone shopping. Judge Webb immediately cited Dr. Smykowski into court.

Bride Hidden in New York.

His attorneys secured a postponement of the case until Saturday. During the interim Charzewski learned that his bride had left the city on Thursday afternoon and was being hidden in New York city. Search is now being prosecuted here.

The girl is said to have been Miss Anna Mechowska of Amsterdam, and according to the statements made by Charzewski is 18 years old. She is 21 years old. Miss Mechowska told him her hand had been pledged to a wealthy New York doctor.

She was prevailed upon to elope to Amsterdam where they were married about three weeks ago by a justice of the peace. It was agreed both should go to their respective homes to notify their parents and then rejoin each other. He was unable to find his bride until last Tuesday.

Lady Paget Foresaw Her Death as a War Nurse

Resigned Herself to Task of Accomplishing as Much as Possible in Serbia Before End Came

NEW YORK, March 29.— The fact that Lady Ralph Paget, whose death from typhus has just been reported from Servia, not only expected to succumb to the disease during her work as a Red Cross nurse, but had heroically made preparations to this end, was made known by Mr. Henry James, Jr., of the Rockefeller Foundation, who arrived recently on board the Lusitania.

Mr. James was in Servia from February 19 to February 26. He spoke enthusiastically of Lady Paget's tireless efforts to alleviate the suffering of the Servians, and said that in carrying on the work she was enduring hardships which only a seasoned soldier could live through.

"She was constantly on the move from one end of the country to the other," said Mr. James, "and was wonderfully sympathetic in her work. Having full knowledge of the terrible conditions to which she was hourly exposed, she resigned herself to the task of accomplishing as much as would ultimately be the end—her own death by typhus."

"The typhus epidemic was under way in all large centres of Servia when we were there and is now distributed throughout the country," said Mr. James. "The seriousness of the situation is indicated by the fact that during January and February one hundred out of three hundred and fifty physicians died from the disease. This is an enormous mortality, but it does not indicate the average mortality among the people at large. It does indicate, however, that the physicians cannot control conditions under which they work—that is, there are not adequate facilities for isolating patients and taking the proper sanitary precautions to guard the physicians themselves fro mthe disease.

"Typhoid also has made its appearance in Servia and there are other infections of less importance. Cholera was expected within a month, but there was none when we were there. The Balkan countries obtained enough experience during the recent wars to know how to meet a cholera epidemic, but the typhus outbreak caught them wholly unprepared and without equipment to meet it.

"The country is so exhausted economically by the recent wars that it is compelled now to import almost everything, which complicates extremely the fight against disease. Under present conditions of transport and export in Europe the difficulties in the way of rapid organization, say of fever hospitals and sanitary work, are very great.

"I believe that the French and Britons are sending strong sanitary commissions to Servia, and I hope that the American Red Cross units will be able to co-operate with these and that all three will be amply supported—that is, provided with equipment to create safe conditions for work. Unless this support is forthcoming they not only will be unable to accomplish much, but will be in danger of losing their own personnel."

Mr. James explained that typhus was taken into Servia by Austrians. More than sixty thousand prisoners were captured during recent victories, and it was among these prisoners, he was told, that the first evidences of the disease were noted.

Airmen Fight in the Clouds as Ships Engage Submarines

AMSTERDAM, March 31—Modern warfare had its full opportunity at Zeebrugge yesterday, when simultaneously there was a battle between aeroplanes in the clouds and a desperate attempt of a British squadron to destroy submarines. The batle was a tie. The British destroyed one Taube, killing its aviator and observer, while the submarines, so far as accounts serve, got away.

The British aeroplanes, flying very high, shot from above a cloud at the outset to try to destroy a captive balloon of the Germans. Immediately the German aeroplane batteries went into action and shot so close that the British airmen swung away.

Just at that minute four German aeroplanes shot up from the ground to give chase, but as soon as the Britons were out of range of the guns they turned and gave a fight.

The observers of both aerial squadrons turned loose with their guns and a fusilade was heard up in the air. One of the German machines suddenly slid sidewise and came to the earth, its crew crushed by the fall.

While this was going on German submarines which had been in the harbor, made a dash for the open sea. They were detected by the airmen who promptly signaled, whereupon the British squadron which was cruising outside flew at them, whipping the water to a foam with their shells. The submarines sank, it is believed, to safety, and the aeroplanes returned to earth in the German lines. The British planes continued their scouting trip down the coast.

AN EXPLANATION REQUIRED.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—An article appeared in your paper a short time ago, reporting how the boys were amusing themselves at Bridgenorth, fishing through the ice. I inquired and am informed that some were successful in securing half a barrel of pretty good fish. Is there any law up there now? Does it not seem strange that the law can be so openly violated right under the Inspector's nose, and nothing done? What is behind this? There must be a few pets. I, with many more from the city help to pay the Inspector's salary, and when we go to Chemong for our vocation we spend days trying to catch a fish, but all our efforts are in vain. Why this wholesale slaughter we would like to know. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I remain,

Yours truly,
Cottager.

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Froest

He was willing to forego a conviction against the keepers of the place rather than miss an opportunity of securing Ivan. For cautious steps are always necessary in proceeding against such places. It is so easy to transform a game of baccarat, faro, or fantan into an innocent game of bridge or whist with a few innocent spectators, and to hide all gambling instruments between the time the police knock and the time they effect an entry. Then, however positive the officers may be, they have no legal proof, unless one of their number has been previously introduced as a "punter," and to do that would require time.

Smike Street at one time had been a street of some pretensions. Even now, in comparison with the neighbourhood in which it was set, it maintained an air of genteel respectability, and its gloomy three-storeyed houses had in many cases no more than one family to a floor. It was, however, one of those back streets of the East-end which are never deserted, for its adult inhabitants plied trades which took them abroad at all hours—market porters, street hawkers, factory workers, dock labourers, seamen, all trades jostled here. One or two of the houses bore a sign, "Hotel for Men Only."

It was at the corner that Foyle and Green were joined by the divisional detective-inspector, and the three swung into the deserted saloon bar of a shabby public-house which afforded a better opportunity for unobtrusive conversation than the street. Leaving the glass of ale he ordered untouched upon th counter, the superintendent rapidly learned all steps that had been taken.

"It's a corner house on this side," said the local man, "kept by an old scoundrel of a Chinaman calling himself Li Foo, and a man who was a bit of a bruiser in San Francisco at one time—a chap called Keller. He looks after the faro game in a back room on the first floor, while the chink runs the black smoke upstairs on the top storey. They're the bosses, but there's three under-dogs, and the place is kept going night and day."

Foyle grunted. "How long have you known this? Couldn't you have dropped on 'em before"

The other made a deprecatory gesture with his hands. "They're cunning. The show had been running three months before we got wind of it. That was about a month ago, and we've tried every trick in the bag to get one of our men inside. There's no chance of rushing the place on a warrant either, because both front and back doors are double, and only one man is allowed to go in at a time. They won't open to two or more. Before we could get the doors down there'd not be a thing left in the place as evidence."

A gleam of temper showed in Foyle's blue eyes. "That's all very well, Mr. Penny. It won't do to tell me that you've known of this place for a month and that it is still carried on. Why didn't you let a man try single-handed? With the door once open he could force his way in."

"I couldn't send a man on a job like that," protested the other. "Why, you don't know the place. They'd murder him before we could get at him."

He flinched away from Foyle as though afraid his superior would strike him. For the superintendent's hands were clenched and his eyes were blazing. Yet when he spoke it was with dangerous quietness.

"A man of your experience ought to know by now that it's his business to take risks. If you'd made up your mind there was no other way of obtaining evidence you should have sent a man in. Never mind that now. Take your orders from Mr. Green for the day. Green, I'll be back in an hour. I'm going into that place. Act according to your own discretion if you think I'm in difficulties."

CHAPTER XXXVII.

The game of faro is one that makes no strenuous demands on the skill of the players. It is a chance pure and simple, and therein lies its fascination. While baccarat or chemin-de-fer are almost invariably games to be most in favour when the police raid a gambling-house in the West-end, at the other side of the town it is invariably discovered that faro holds first place in the affections of gamblers. In its simplest form it is merely betting on the turn of each card throughout a pack.

Although it was broad daylight, the room in which the operations took place was shuttered and had the blinds drawn. A three-light gasolier beat down on a big table in the centre of the room, round three sides of which were ranged a dozen or fifteen men eagerly intent on the operations of the banker. A heavy-jowled man with overhanging black eyebrows, he was seated in a half-circle cut into the centre of one side of the table. In front of him was a bright steel box sufficiently large to contain a pack of cards with the face of the top card discernible at an opening at the top. The cards were pressed upwards in the box by springs, and at the side a narrow opening allowed the operator to push the cards out one at a time, thus disclosing the faces of those underneath and deciding the bets. On each side of the box were the discarded winning and losing cards, and on the dealer's left a tray which served the purpose of a till in receiving or paying out money. A cloth with painted representations of the thirteen cards of a suit was pinned to the table nearest to the players, and they placed stakes on the cards they fancied would next be disclosed. Twice the box would click out cards amid a dead silence. Those who has staked out money on the first card disclosed won, those who had staked on the second lost.

There was often dead silence when the turn was being made, save for the click of a marker shown on the wall and guarded by a thick-set little man with red hair, fierce eyes, and an enormous chest. But directly afterwards babel would break out, to be sternly quelled by the heavy-jowled man.

"I 'ad set on sa nine," . . . "Say, that king was coppered" . . . "I ought ter have split it."

The jargons of all the world met and crossed at such time. It was rarely that there arose a serious quarrel, for Keller and his myrmidons had a swift way of dealing with malcontents. When a man became troublesome, the fierce-eyed little marker with the big chest would tap him on the shoulder.

"That's enough, you," he would say menacingly.

If the warning were not sufficient the left hand of the little man would drop to his jacket pocket, and when it emerged it would be decorated with a heavy brass knuckle-duster. It took but one blow to make a man lose all interest in the game, and thereafter he would be handed over to the tender mercies of "Jim," a giant of a door-keeper, who after dark would drop him into the street at some convenient moment, with a savage warning to keep his mouth shut lest a worse thing befall him.

This was the place Heldon Foyle had made up his mind to enter single-handed—a place in which the precautions against surprise were so complete that every article which could be identified as a gambling implement was made of material which could be readily burnt, or soluble at a temperature lower than that of boiling water. A big saucepan was continually simmering on the fire, so that the implements could be dropped in it at a second's notice.

But Heldon Foyle had hopes. At the worst he could only fail. He returned to Scotland Yard and shut himself up for twenty minutes in the make-up room. When he reached Smike Street again he was no longer the spruce, upright, well-dressed official. A grimy cap covered tousled hair. His face was strained, his eyes bloodshot and his moustache combed out raggedly. A set of greasy mechanic's overalls had been drawn over his own clothes. He walked uncertainly.

Green and the local inspector saw him reel past the public-house in which they still remained, as affording an excuse to be near the spot, and reel up Smike Street. Towards the end he appeared confused and gravely inspected several houses before approaching the gambling-joint. He rapped on the door with his knuckles, ignoring both the knocker and the bell. It opened a few inches wide, enough for the scowling face of Jim the door-keeper to appear in the aperture.

Supporting himself with one hand on the door-post, Foyle leered amiably at the Cerberus. "Hello, old sport, I want t'come in. Open the doro, can't you?"

"Git out of it, you drunken swab. You don't live here," said Jim, taking stock of the drunken intruder and coming to a quick decision.

The door slammed. Foyle beat a tattoo on the panels with his hands, swaying perilously to and from the while. Again the door opend the cautious six inches, and Jim's face was not pleasant to look on as he swore at the disturber.

"Tha'ss afri', ol' sport," hiccoughed Foyle. "I want to come in. A Bill Reid tol' me if I wanted—hic—game I was to come here. You know ol' Bill Reid"—this almost pleadingly—"he'll tell you I'm allri', eh?"

The door-keeper of the gaming-house holds an onerous responsibility. On him depends the safety of the gamblers from interference by the representatives of law and order. Jim's suspicions were lulled by Foyle's quite obvious drunkenness. Nevertheless, a drunken man who had apparently been told of the place was a danger so long as he remained clamouring for admittance on the step. Jim tried tact.

"There's nothing doing now," he explained. "You go away and come back to-night. It'll be a good game then."

"Tha'ss a lie," said Foyle, with an assumption of drunken gravity. "Old Bill Reid he says to me, he says——"

But Jim had lost the remainder of his small stock of patience. He jerked the door again in Foyle's face, pulled off the chain and leapt out, his intention of throwing the other into the street and so ending the argument once for all written on every line of his stalwart figure.

That was his programme. But Foyle had also his programme. He had got the door open. All that remained between him and the entrance was the muscular figure of Jim. He suddenly became sober. The door-keeper's hand grasping at his collar clutched empty air. The detective's head dropped. Jim was met half-way by a short charge and Foyle's shoulder caught him in the chest. But men were forced by the momentum of the charge back through the open door and fell in a heap just within.

At ordinary times the two would have been fairly evenly matcher. Both were big men though the door-keeper had slightly the advantage in size. He had, however, been taken by surprise and received no opportunity to utter more than a stifled oath before his breath was taken away. Inside the house Foyle stood on no ceremony in order to silence his opponent before those within could be alarmed. He had fallen on top of Jim. Pressing down on him with head and knee, he swung his right fist twice. Jim gave a grunt and his head rocked loosely on his neck. He had in the vernacular of the ring, been put to sleep.

The effects of a knockout blow, however deftly administered, do not last long. The detective's first move was to close the street door, leaving the bolts and chains undone so that it was fastened merely by the catches of the Yale locks. Then he whipped a handkerchief about the unconscious man's mouth, and silently dragging him to a sitting posture, handcuffed his wrists beneath his knees, so that he was trussed in the position schoolboys adopt for cock-fighting. He surveyed his handiwork critically, and, a new idea occurring to him, unlaced the the man's boots and, taking them off, tied the laces round the ankles. That would prevent the man rattling his boots on the floor when he came to, and so have given the alarm.

HAD DYSPEPSIA
So Bad Could Not Take a Drink of Water Without Suffering.

Dyspepsia is one of the most difficult diseases of the stomach there is to cure. You eat too much. Drink too much. Use too much tobacco. You make the stomach work overtime. You make it perform more than it should be called on to do. The natural result is that it is going to rebel against the amount of work put on it. It is only a matter of a short time before dyspepsia follows.

That old, forty year old remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, will cure the dyspepsia and will cure it to stay cured as we can prove by the thousands of testimonials we have received from time to time.

Miss Sarah McRae, Newfield, Ont., writes: "I write to say that I have used your Burdock Blood Bitters, and have found it the best remedy I have ever used for dyspepsia. Two years ago, I had stomach trouble so bad that I could not even take a drink of water without suffering. I took six bottles of B.B.B., and have been entirely cured, and can now eat anything without any bad after effects."

Burdock Blood Bitters is an old and well tried remedy but on account of the many substitutes we would ask you to make sure that our name appears on both the label and wrapper as this preparation is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

It appears that there is a plentiful supply of rennet for the present year's cheese-making in Canada; but after the war broke out a report was started to the effect that as most of the rennet used in the Dominion came from Germany, the supply from there would be cut off. It turned out, however, that ample supplies were left over from last year, to meet all requirements for 1915. And before another year the farmers will be instructed by the dairy commissioner, Mr. J. A. Ruddick, of Ottawa, how to make their own rennet, instead of depending upon German manufacturers.

There is no reason why farmers should import such a necessary article for the making of curd, when they can secure any quantity of calves' stomachs, from which rennet is procured. This article is prepared by cutting up the fourth or digesting stomach of the suckling calf, and then adding salt thereto. The influence of rennet is due to a kind of fermentative action, whereby the sugar in the milk is changed into lactic acid. The process of making rennet is so simple that we know of a party in this city who has made it for the purpose of procuring curd with which she made the celebrated Cambridgeshire cheese cakes. There is, therefore, no need of importing rennet from Germany or Denmark.—Trade Bulletin.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

FROM BAD TO WORSE

Accident Prevents an Unnecessary Separation; It Was the Husband's Last Chance.

By CLARENCE RICHARDSON.

The telephone was jangling discordantly and Cleave was conscious of an acute presentiment of disaster as he took down the receiver.

"Your wife . . . accident . . ." he heard a voice saying. "Thrown from the buggy . . . head in the road . . . unconscious and grave fears . . . come home at once."

Cleave hung the receiver up and sat staring moodily at the papers upon his desk. He need not start for half an hour, or there would be that much waiting at the station, and he preferred the silence of his office. It seemed like fate, this accident, for he had not expected to see Mary again for months, if ever.

They had been married two years, and had no child. If one had come things might have been different—they might not have quarreled so perpetually. Cleave was not by nature unkind, but he had spent long years of selfish bachelorhood, and he was devoted to his fixed habits. Mary was seven years younger; they had never managed to adjust themselves to each other. They had quarreled over the merest trifles, and their disagreements always left them unrepentant and moody.

How she had loved him before their marriage, thought Cleave, as he sat at his desk. Then she had striven at first to make him happy! And he, too, had tried hard to be good to her, for Mary was very lovable and sweet. But at last they had both given up in despair. Cleave would always remember the words she had said to him that night, three months before:

"I can forgive you John, and love you, but the memory of these two unhappy years must always be with me. It can never be quite the same again."

And after that everything had seemed hopeless. Things had gone from bad to worse. And finally they had decided that Mary should go back to her mother, to spend the summer with her. There was to be no scandal. Their friends had no inkling of the condition of affairs, but thought them a devoted couple. They would separate quietly, to resume their relationship in the fall if, after mature consideration, they decided that such an arrangement would be for the best. Mary had been on her way to the station when the accident happened.

Suddenly there swept over him a fuller realization than had ever before come to him of his selfishness. He had ruined her life, he had killed her love. Not the blindest and most devoted love could have survived his callous cruelty and indifference. If he could only have one chance more!

He sprang to his feet and hurried to the street. The car carried him to the station none too swiftly. His train was just pulling out as he flung himself aboard. That was John Cleave all over, he thought bitterly. His wife was dying, and he—loitering at his office when every moment of delay meant so much!

An hour's run and he was treading the streets of the country village in which he lived. He saw his home; an automobile was standing before the door. He rushed in. The doctor and a nurse, hastily summoned, were in the hall. The doctor, on his way out, was giving the nurse her instructions, and for a full minute he did not pay the least attention to Cleave. When he had finished speaking, and the nurse had sped up the stairs, he turned to him.

"Your wife has had a very serious accident, Mr. Cleave," he said. "She was thrown out of the buggy when the horse swerved, and sustained a fracture of the skull. There is no immediate danger, I am happy to say. She may recover consciousness at any time. But we fear some brain injury."

"You mean insanity?" asked Cleave, miserably. He could bear to think of her dead better than of that bright spirit obscured and fettered. The love that he had ever felt for her rushed over him in a tide of bitter reproach. If only he had his chance once more!

"Well, hardly that," parried the doctor. "I cannot say just what form this injury is likely to take—and, really, until it happens, don't let us trouble ourselves unnecessarily by speculating upon it. Miss Anderson is an excellent nurse and knows just what it is necessary to do. I shall be back this evening."

All through that afternoon John Cleave sat at his wife's bedside, staring into the wide-open eyes that saw nothing. She lay in a stupor; there was not the smallest movement; she might have been a figure of marble. Her beautiful hair had been clipped short and hung like a ragged fringe under the bandages that had been placed about her head. Her hand was as cold as marble in John's feverish one.

"At any time," the woman answered. "Today, tomorrow, or tomorrow week. We can't tell—we must just hope."

"Or—never?" he asked, and Miss Anderson turned away without answering.

It was not until the third afternoon that consciousness returned. John had watched continually at his wife's bedside, hardly suffering himself to be torn away for the hastily snatched meals and the brief intervals of sleep. And all the while Mary had remained in the same position and her hand was as icily cold in John's.

It was about three o'clock in the afternoon when she stirred and spoke. A light of consciousness came into the eyes; she turned them upon John and knew him. She smiled at him, and the smile was like that which she had worn upon their wedding morning.

"Dearest—where am I?" she asked.

"At home," said John, thrilling at the faint clasp of her fingers. "At home, never to go away again."

"But why should I want to go away from you, my husband?" said Mary, smiling. "I feel—weak. Have I been ill?"

"You have met with an accident," he answered. "But thank God you are getting well. Now you must lie still and sleep."

She smiled up at him obediently and for the first time the tired eyelids fluttered down upon the eyes. Mary slept. Her hand in John's was moist and warm. The nurse came in and saw the change.

"She will live, Mr. Cleave," she said.

"You didn't expect it, then?"

"No," said Miss Anderson.

"She spoke to you, you say?" inquired the doctor of John that evening. "She knew you and spoke and seemed rational?"

"Absolutely rational," answered John Cleave, and turned away. He went into his room and on his knees thanked God for the chance that was to be his. His prayer was answered.

"How long have we been married, John?" Mary asked next day. "It seems such a long time, somehow, and yet I know that it can't really be an entire year as that calendar on the wall seems to show."

John looked at the calendar. It was an old one of the preceding year, and it had remained on the bedroom wall, as old calendars are apt to do when they have become familiarized by time.

"It is June," said Mary, "and we were married in June. Is it a whole year, dearest?"

John dared not tell her that it was two years.

"Dearest," she whispered presently. "Put your arms round me and let me tell you something. Do you know, all the time I was lying here this morning, I have been thinking how unkind I have been to you, and how unhappy I have made you. I want you to forgive me, John. And I believe you can forgive me, because the memories of this year of our marriage have been so dear."

"It is you who must forgive me, dearest," said John, humbly.

That night the doctor explained the situation to him.

"Your wife," he said, "is on the high road to recovery. Her mind is as sound as it has ever been. The brain trouble which I anticipated amounts simply to this: The whole of the past year has slipped out of her memory. Has she had any great trouble that could account for this?"

"Yes," answered John, humbly, and the doctor shot a keen glance at him.

"Then that is the explanation," he said. "Her mind was troubled; she wishes to forget the episode, whatever it was. It is necessary for her to forget it in order that she may get well. The group of brain cells which registered those memories have, so to speak, isolated themselves from the remainder. We could possibly awaken those dormant memories, but it would be highly inadvisable to do so. Are you prepared to let her go through life with no memory of that one year?"

"Indeed, I am," said Cleave, "especially since you think it is for the best. But how can she adjust herself to conditions? Will she not be constantly perplexed by discrepancies in dates?"

"Happily not," the doctor answered. "In such cases the mind meets all these problems and solves them in its own way, and to its perfect satisfaction. You have a very charming wife, Mr. Cleave," he added. "Guard her and care for her—and let the past bury its dead."

And John, kneeling at Mary's bedside, thanked God that his chance had come, and renewed his vows, never more to be broken.

WOMAN'S BEST MEDICINE

Mrs. Kelly Advises all Women to Take "Fruit-a-Tives"

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., AUG. 26th, 1913.

"I can highly recommend "Fruit-a-tives" because they did me an awful lot of good and I cannot speak too highly about them. About four years ago, I commenced taking "Fruit-a-tives" for a general break-down and they did me a world of good. We bought a good many dollar's worth, but it was money well spent because they did all that you claim for them. Their action is so pleasant, compared with other laxatives, that I found only pleasure, as well as health, in taking them. They seemed to me to be particularly suited to women, on account of their mild and gentle action, and I trust that some other women may start taking "Fruit-a-tives" after reading my letter, and if they do, I am satisfied the results will be the same as in my own case".

Mrs. W. N. KELLY

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

WASHINGTON, March 30. — Despatches received in diplomatic quarters here yesterday from diplomatists in Mexico City said it was understood there that Gen. Obregon with Carranza forces was returning to the capital and that Zapata forces were about to evacuate.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GREY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies Are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Hair that loses its colour and lustre, or when it fades, turns grey, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even colour, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the grey hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Italian Regiments Move.

BASLE, Switzerland, March 30.—The sixty-seven Italian regiments of Italian infantry departed suddenly from Come yesterday, says a press despatch. It was announced that the troops were to take part in target practice, but it is reported they are really en route to the Austrian frontier.

Premier's Mother Very Ill.

OTTAWA, March 27.—Sir Robert Borden left Ottawa last evening to visit his mother, who is very ill, at Grand Pre. It is understood that Mrs. Borden took a turn for the worse yesterday, and the Premier is hastening to her bedside in response to a special message.

The Joy of Good Health Is Now Experienced

Nervousness, Dizzy Spells and Sleeplessness Are Now a Thing of the Past.

MRS. PEACOCK.

This is a cheerful letter from Mrs. Peacock, and it should bring joy to the heart of many a reader of this paper. Dizzy spells and sleeplessness are symptoms of exhausted nerves, and are the bugbear of many women, who do not know just what treatment to use.

You can read Mrs. Peacock's letter and take courage, for she has proven that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a complete cure for these troubles. So pleased was she with the results obtained that she wants other women to know about this food cure.

Mrs. Thomas Peacock, 23 Hiawatha street, St. Thomas, Ont., and whose husband is conductor on the Wabash Railway, states:—"I was quite run down in health, was very nervous, did not sleep well, and had frequent dizzy spells. Believing this to be the result of an exhausted nervous system I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and can say that this medicine did me a world of good. It entirely freed me of the symptoms stated above, built up my health generally, so that to-day I feel that I am quite well again."

In a more recent letter Mrs. Peacock writes:—"Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has done me a world of good, and I would be pleased to tell everybody so."

In nearly every issue of this paper you will find letters about Dr. Chase's medicines. If this one does not describe your case watch for others or write to us. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Only Two Legs But Is a Healthy Calf

Los Angeles, March 29.—His name is Adam Zad, with apologies to Kipling, and his "bear that walks like a man," with whom "no truce" is to be made. No truce, however, is necessary with the namesake, who, although possessed of a tendency, or rather a necessity, to adopt human methods of locomotion, is a very sweet-dispositioned, healthy, intelligent six-weeks-old Holstein calf.

Adam was born with only two legs; where his front legs might have been there is not even a stump. Therefore, when learning to get about in the world he worked under a certain difficulty.

At first for two weeks he seemed surprised and hurt that Nature should have played him such a trick, and he made no effort to walk. Then one day, his legs being doubled under him in the right position, and a feed-box near by offering moral stimulus, ge arose on two legs. Since then his skill has increased with practice, and his owner believes that he will soon manage about as well as a natural biped.

Local veterinarians say that although calves with two mouths or three legs are more or less common, this is the first of the kanagroo type they have in Los Angeles.

Pickled Tea as Relish.

Pickled tea, "letpetso," is a rare delicacy in Burma and Siam. The leaves are thrown into boiling water and there remain until they become soft, when they are rolled by hand on mats and allowed to cool. They are then rammed down tight into the internode of a bamboo, a stopper is made of guava leaves, and the bamboo is suspended two days, with stopper down, to drain off the water, and then buried in the ground till the letpet has matured, when it is ready for sale and use. If not buried the letpet becomes black and spoiled instead of yellowish, as it should be. The letpet is rarely made into a drink, but is eaten, generally with oil and garlic.

COULD NOT GO TEN STEPS

FOR THE PAIN IN HIS KIDNEYS.

When you get a pain in the back you may rest assured that it comes from derangement of the kidneys, for were there not something wrong with the kidneys the back should be strong and well.

Doan's Kidney Pills regulate the kidneys, and there is no further excuse for any kidney trouble to exist. What more needs to be said? While Doan's Kidney Pills are not a "balm for every ill that flesh is heir to," they are a positive, never-failing remedy for every disease that has its inception in the improper action in those delicate little filters of the blood, the kidneys.

Mr. Adelard Clercux, Eganville, Ont., writes: "I was troubled with my kidneys for four years. They were so bad, at times, I could not go ten steps for the pain they caused me. My doctor could not do me any good. A friend advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I bought five boxes, and now I have been cured for over three years. I will recommend them to whoever may be suffering from kidney trouble."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box; 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Don't Be Fussy About Eating

Your Stomach Will Digest any Kind of Food When Given the Proper Assistance.

We are prone to fall into the error of singling out some article of food and soundly berating the fiend who first invented the dish. The habit grows with some people till almost all food is put on the blacklist. This is all wrong. What is required is a little assistance with those agencies upon which scientific students for many years have set their seal of approval because they have become absolute facts. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets for all stomach disorders are recognized; they have a fine record; they are rated reliable, dependable and worthy of confidence just as the president of a big bank puts his O.K. on a depositor's check. And so you can eat what you want, whatever you like, knowing well that should indigestion, sour risings, gas formations, fermentations, or any other stomach distress arise, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in a few moments will put you right.

Coated tongue, bad breath, heartburn, belching, flatulency, bloat—all the symptoms of digestive troubles disappear quickly when these tablets are used. They are not a cure for anything but dyspepsia and kindred complaints. But they have brought relief to more sufferers from digestive diseases than all the patent medicines and doctor's prescriptions put together.

The stomach does the heaviest work of any of the bodily organs, yet it's the one we treat with the least regard. We eat too much of the wrong kind of food at any time. The patient stomach stands such treatment as long as it can and then it rebels. You get notice of the rebellion in the shape of the gases and pains caused by undigested, fermenting food.

Many Canadian Young Girls Take Chance of War Widowhood

TORONTO, March 29.— The most surprising social phenomenon of war times has been the number of marriages contracted by officers and men before leaving for the front.

The natural assumption was that the fewer married men to go to war the better, that single men would be given the preference in order that bereavements would fall as lightly as possible.

The epidemic of weddings, the alacrity of young girls to run the danger of becoming war widows within a few months has come as something approaching a shock. In Toronto alone, 100 officers engaged for active service have married before leaving for the front. The total throughout the country must approach a thousand. The number of privates married is of course, much larger though it is not likely as large proportionately.

It is different to entirely explain the phenomenon. A number of factors enter.

The military authorities seem rather to encourage the practice than otherwise. No obstacles are placed in the way of granting two or three days leave for a short honeymoon, after which the bridegroom returns to his corps.

Enthusiasm at High Pitch.

The enthusiasm for war is now at the highest pitch in Canada since the war started. In Toronto, there has never been such a spectacle as was witnessed when the local encampment for the second contingent turned out for a farewell parade. It was far different from the usual military parade. There were no bands, no gaudy uniforms, no reds or blues or golds—just 9,000 men in dull service khaki but with the stride and bearing that five months' exacting discipline has engendered. Hundreds of cannon and ammunition waggons thundered over the pavement also differentiated the occasion from the ordinary dress parade.

But the real spectacle was provided by the crowds that lined the route. Almost half the city, not less than 200,000 persons turned out. There were no cheers. Such were reserved for some indefinite day in the future. But there was no mistaking the spirit of the multitudes. It was one of pride and almost religious fervour. There were plenty of tear-dimmed eyes but no dismay. Mothers of sons already in the trenches in Belgium patted the shoulders of passing strangers and murmured "God bless you."

As to Recruiting.

Probably the new enthusiasm arises from the casualties that Canadians have already suffered at the front. The daily lists of dead and wounded, though trivial in number as yet are sinking into the souls of the people as nothing in the previous months of war has done.

Some complaint is heard that not more recruiting is being done. From some circumstances it would seem as though the authorities are deliberately keepin gthe number down. For example the medical requirements are so exacting as to be almost prohibitory. One rural battalion asked to raise 100 men had to examine 500 before they secured the 100 approaching the physical perfection required by the department. Rejections almost invariably resulted from trivial defects such as in teeth. It seems absurd that a man who has lived all his life in the open, in lumber camps and mining camps, roughing it as few men in Europe know anything about, should be considered not fit for cannon fodder because he has a bad tooth.

The minister of militia states that Canada is supplying all the men Lord Kitchener. Besides if the rural districts are further depopulated there may be a serious crisis here next summer. A big harvest in the west which could be of the greatest assistance to the Empire will meet disaster if there are not 100,000 extra farm labourers promptly available.

THE BOYS IN RED

The following lines of an old recruiting song were set to music by Molloy and sung by Mr. Barrington Foote about thirty years ago, before khaki came into use for service uniforms. The song was entitled "The Lads in Red":

The sergeant met me on the road
Says he, my lad, to me,
The war's begun, and nows the time
For lads of six foot three.
A smarter regiment you'll not find
Tho' you may travel far,
Or truer comrades round the world
In friendship, love or war.

Chorus—
Here they come, fife and drum,
Gaily led, the lads in red
Not one eye will be dry
When the regiment marches by,
Your fortune's made if you will come
With the lads in red and the fife and drum.

Says he we've just come from Japan,
It's yonder o'er the sea,
The language is not quite the same,
As spoke by you and me.
But soldiers are the boys to learn,
And when on shore we ran
We heard each little maiden whisper
Softly to her fan.

Chorus—

I took the sergeant by the hand
I served for thirty year,
Till now a worn-out veteran, I
On one leg wander here.
But when the regiment marches by
I throw my crutch aside,
And murmur in the sergeant's ear
With all the old glad pride:

Here they come, fife and drum,
Gaily led, the lads in red,
Now I say, old and gray,
If this life had but one day,
I'd give it twenty times to come,
To be back once more
With the fife and drum.

The song was very popular for years until a vulgar parody appeared, and "Lads in Red" was banished.

MOTHER! THE CHILD IS COSTIVE, BILIOUS

Look, Mother! If Tongue is coated give "California Syrup of Figs."

If your little one is out-of-sorts, half-sick, isn't resting, eating and acting naturally—look, Mother! see if tongue is coated. This is a sure sign that its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with waste. When cross, irritable, feverish, stomach sour, breath bad or has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, sore throat, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Fifs," and in a few hours all the constipated poison, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

Mothers can rest easy after giving this harmless "fruit laxative," because it never fails to cleanse the little one's liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach and they dearly love its pleasant taste. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs;" then see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

In addition to nuts used in confectionery the Indian cashew tree yields an insect repelling gum, a juice that makes an indelible ink and three kinds of oil, one edible and the others used to tan shing nets and preserve wood.

WOMAN SUFFERAGE

It's War Time Aspect

LONDON, March 31.— The women of England are doing their duty. They are taking care of the wounded, or if they cannot assist in work of that kind they are adding their savings to promote the good work. They are knitting and sewing for the soldiers at the front. The suffragists have given so little trouble to the government that it will undoubtedly soften the hearts of those in Parliament, since the "militants" have turned all their energies to aid the fighting men of England, and so sufferage may soon come after this terrible war is over.

Thousands of women in Canada have overcome their sufferings, and have been cured of womanly ills by Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription. This medicine, though started nearly half a century ago, sells more widely to-day than any other womanly tonic. It can now be had in tablet form as well as liquid, and every woman who suffers from backache, headache, nervousness, pain at times, should take this "Prescription" of Dr. Pierce.

Many a woman is nervous and irritable, feels dragged down and worn out for no reason that she can think of. In ninety-nine per cent. of these cases it is the womanly organism which requires attention; the weak back, dizzy spells and black circles about the eyes, are only symptoms. Go to the sources of the trouble and the other symptoms disappear.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Doctor Pierce's Pellets are unequalled as a Liver Pill. Smallest, easiest to take. One tiny, Sugar-coated Pellet a Dose. Cures Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. 25 cents vial, by druggists.—Adv.

Woman Sought in Poison Pen Mystery

NEW YORK, March 29. — Church circles in Bloomfield are agitated over the latest letters in the "poison pen" series sent to several New Jersey cities.

The latest outbreak of scurrilous anonymous notes is believed to be the work of a jealous woman, but whether there is any connection between these and similar letters received in Passaic and nearby towns is not known. In addition to investigations by several police forces, the Federal authorities are carrying on an inquiry to determine the identity of the writer.

The Bloomfield letters were written in an attempt to present the forthcoming marriage of Miss Loretta Henderson, the popular young pianist of the Watsessing M. E. Church, and Raymond Ellar, a young bank clerk, who is a member of the choir. While the communications, it is said, will not interfere with the wedding plans, they have caused great indignation not only among the co-workers of the popular young couple, but throughout the entire community.

Will Not Halt Wedding.

Miss Kate Ellar, sister of Miss Henderson's fiance, said that but for the offensive character of the later notes, the affair would be regarded as a joke. In any event, she declared there would be no interference with the wedding.

The audacity of the offender is shown by the fact that she attended Church services where her actions were condemned and then sent a note of defiance to the Pastor.

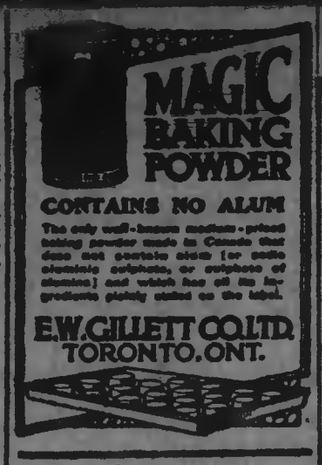
The Rev. Benjamin H. McCoy, in an effort to stop the vicious letters, made them the subject of a special sermon. He dwelt on the irreparable damage that may be caused in the homes of innocent persons and urged the benefit of a frank confession on the part of the sinner. . . . . .

Pastor is Defied.

A few days later he received an ananymous letter in feminine handwriting. The note said the writer had attended the service; knew the sermon was intended for her ears, but that it would make no difference — that she would continue the anonymous attacks.

Mystery still surrounds the letters received in Passaic. There has been at least a temporary cessation in the attacks there, but citizens are still worked up and the investigation is being pushed vigorously.

Schoolgirls weer among hose mentioned in these letters. In letters sent to several wives, husbands' names were linked with those of girl pupils. The Chief of detectives is co-operating with the postal authorities and school officers to discover the origin of these letters.



A Call to Neutral Nations

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir:—I believe this war is both Christian and un-Christian — Christian on the Allies side and un-Christian on the German side. The following verses, which are written by me, are founded upon the hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers" etc.

Yours truly,
An Old Soldier.

Onward Christian soldiers,
Marching as to war,
With the Cross of Jesus
Going on before.
See the Kaiser's legions
With their horrid means,
Killing non-combatants,
With their submarines.

Onward Christian soldiers,
Marching as to war,
With the Cross of Jesus,
Going on before.

See the neutral nations,
Standing looking on,
While the Kaiser's legions
Usurp Belgium's throne.
See the tars of England
Fighting for the right,
While the neutral nations
Should be in the fight.

Onward Christian soldiers, etc.

See the Belgians fighting;
See their noble king;
For a scrap of paper
Neutrals now begin.
See the German warfare;
See the awful woe;
Neutrals go to battle;
Neutrals, you should go.

Onward Christian soldiers, etc.

At the eve of triumph
Kaiser's hosts will flee;
Onward Christian soldiers,
On to victory.
Onward then, ye people,
Join the Allied throng,
Hand in hand, together,
Make the Allies strong.

Onward Christian Soldiers, etc.

See Great Britain struggling,
And her British Tar,
Neutrals do your duty,
Stop the cruel war.
The world must have freedom,
Both on land and sea,
Until Thy Kingdom come.
Good Lord, may it be.

Onward Christian soldiers, etc.
—An Old Soldier.

Peterborough, March 29, 1915.

A WORD OF GRATITUDE.

"In justice to humanity I want to tell you that I was a great sufferer from itching piles, and have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable," writes Mr. Fred Hins, Brodhagen, Ont. "It gives instant relief and I can recommend it to any sufferer from this dreadful disease."

The chef was interviewing the young man who had applied for work.

"Have you had experience in the lunch business?" he asked.

"Why, I should say so," replied the energetic youth, "I've been lunching for almost twenty years."

EVAPORATORS WORKING FOR ALLIES' ARMY

Potatoes, Carrots and Onions Bought in Rochester Vicinity

BY THOUSANDS OF BUSHELS

ROCHESTER, March 30.—Large orders for evaporated potatoes, carrots, onions and celery have been received by Western New York evaporators, in which Rochestarians are interested, from the British commissariat department. These products will be used for food for the British troops. The English subsistence department, through Canadian interests, is said to be negotiating for tons and tons of evaporated fruits and vegetables in Western New York.

During the last few days 26,000 bushels of onions, it is estimated, have been purchased by Canadian firms and arrangements made with nearby evaporators to slice and dry the bulbs so that they can be shipped to England. Thousands of bushels of potatoes and carrots, it is said, have been bought in Western New York for similar purpose. Owing to the shortage of home-grown celery supplies, not much of this vegetable has been available to these buyers. But they have picked up a car here and there, it is reported, and have had it dried for shipment abroad.

The war orders for evaporated products have been so large, one dealer said, that evaporators which had been closed down have been started up and are now doing a profitable business. He stated that apples were being taken out of storage and evaporated.

Potatoes, carrots and onions are evaporated about the same way apples are dried, this dealer explained. The vegetables are sliced or pared and evaporated. The potatoes look something like Saratoga chips but are not salted. They are packed in air-tight tin boxes and can be kept indefinitely. They are prepared for cooking by simply soaking in water.

EAT CABBAGE, FISH, SAUSAGE, NEW BREAD

Do some foods you eat hit back—taste good, but work badly; ferment into stubborn lumps and cause a sick, sour, gassy stomach? Now, Mr. or Mrs. Dyspeptic, jot this down: Pape's Diapepsin digests everything, leaving nothing to sour and upset you. There never was anything so safely quick, so certainly effective. No difference how badly your stomach is disordered you will get happy relief in five minutes, but what pleases you most is that it strengthens and regulates your stomach so you can eat your favourite foods without fear.

Most remedies give you relief sometimes—they are slow, but not sure. "Pape's Diapepsin" is quick, positive and puts your stomach in a healthy condition so the misery won't come back.

You feel different as soon as "Pape's Diapepsin" comes in contact with the stomach—distress just vanishes—your stomach gets sweet, no gases, no belching, no eructations of undigested food, your head clears and you feel fine.

Go now, make the best investment you ever made, by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder.

No More Cakes To Be Baked Until April 12

BERLIN, via London, March 30— Additional restrictions have been placed by the authorities on bakers and housewives in Berlin, who now have been forbidden to bake cakes which require the use of yeast or similar preparations. The baking in homes of any cakes whatever between March 25 and April 12 also has been forbidden. The latter order is designed to check the consumption of flour for Easter cakes.

The former regulation limiting to ten per cent. of the total weight the amount of flour which may be used in cakes not under the official ban remains in force.

The baking of cakes also has been forbidden in private households in the Duchy of Anhalt.

WINNIPEG, March 30.—Wheat futures opened unchanged to 1⅛c up, oats ⅛c to ¼c higher and flax unchanged to 1c higher. Following the opening the market was generally firmer and fluctuations were within narrow limits until near the close. Trading was light, and without any stirring news from the other side of the Atlantic, a waiting attitude prevailing. Inspections were 464 cars, as compared with 286 last year.

Prices strengthened just before the close, futures closing 1¼c to 2¼c up, oats ⅛c to 1c higher and flax ⅝c to 1c higher.

DULUTH GRAIN MARKET.

DULUTH, March 29.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.51⅝; No. 1 northern, $1.50⅝; No. 2 do., $1.47⅝ to $1.46⅝; Montana, No. 2 hard, $1.49⅝.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, March 29. — Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 1820 cattle, 961 hogs, 127 sheep and lambs and 139 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Master quality steers and heifers, $7.75 to $8.15; choice butchers, $7.35 to $7.60; good, $7 to $7.30; medium, $6.60 to $6.85; common, $6.25 to $6.50; choice cows, $6.25 to $6.50; good cows, $5.75 to $6; medium cows, $5.25 to $5.60; canners and cutters, $4 to $4.50; choice bulls at $6 to $6.50; common bulls at $5 to $5.

Stockers and Feeders.

Feeders, 800 to 900 lbs., sold at $6.25 to $6.60; stockers, 500 lbs. to 700 lbs., at $5.50 to $6.25. See Rice & Whaley's feeder sales.

Milkers and Springers.

Less than half a dozen milkers and springers were reported on sale. Prices were reported to be nominal.

Veal Calves.

Choice veal calves sold at $10 to $11.25; good at $8 to $9.50; medium at $7.50 to $8; common at $6 to $7; eastern rough calves at $4 to $5.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes of light weight, sold at $7 to $8; heavy ewes and rams, $5.50 to $6.50; lambs at $10.50 to $12.

Hogs.

Selects weighed off cars were reported at $8.75 to $9, one firm selling 7 carloads at the latter price.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, March 29.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, receipts of live stock for the week ending March 27 were 1,100 cattle, 150 sheep and lambs, 3,000 hogs and 1,500 calves. The supply on the market this morning for sale consisted of 900 cattle, 100 sheep and lambs, 1,000 hogs and 500 calves.

On account of the continued small supplies of cattle coming forward, and the fact that a large percentage of them consisted of cows and heifers, a stronger feeling developed in the market for steers and prices as against a week ago show an advance of 25c per hundred pounds. This was Easter market day, but notwithstanding this fact there was no display of cattle, as in former years, but the average quality of the stock was good, and, as butchers' and packers' supplies on hand were small, there was an improved demand and an active trade was done. A few small lots of extra choice steers for the Easter trade were on the market, which were sold at $8.50, $8.75 and $9 per hundred pounds, while ordinary choice steers brought $8 to $8.25, but the principal demand was for good steers, at $7.50 to $7.75.

The feature of the small-meat trade was the increased offerings of calves, for which there was a good demand. A few extra choice veals brought forward for the Easter trade sold at 9c to 9c per pound, live weight, while the ordinary run of stock sold at unchanged prices. The market for sheep and lambs was quiet, but prices were firm on account of the limited supplies available and sales of small lots of Ontario lambs were made at $8.50 to $9, and ewe sheep at $6.75 to $7 per hundred pounds. A few spring lambs were on the market, which brought from $7 to $10 each, as to size and quality. The tone of the market for hogs was strong under a good demand from packers, and an active trade was done in selected lots at $9, while sows sold at $7, and stags at $4.50 per hundred pounds, weighed off cars.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $8 to $8.35; butchers' cattle, medium, $7 to $7.75; butchers' cattle, common, $6 to $6.50; canners, $5.75 to $4.50; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $6.50 to $6.75; butchers' cattle, medium, $5.50 to $6.25; butchers' cattle, bulls, $5.25 to $7; milkers, choice, each, $70 to $75; milkers, common and medium, each, $60 to $65; springers, $50 to $55; sheep, ewes, $6.75 to $8; bucks and culls, $5.25 to $6.50; lambs, $8.50 to $9; hogs, off cars, $8; calves, $8.50 to $10.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, March 30.—Cattle—Receipts, $10,000; market unsettled. Beeves, $6 to $8.75; cows and heifers, $3 to $7.75; calves, $7 to $10.20.

Hogs—Receipts, 34,000; market higher; light, $8.05 to $8.30; mixed, $8.00 to $8.30; heavy, $8.00 to $8.30; rough, $8.00 to $8.15; pigs, $6.60 to $8.00; bulk of sales, $8.75 to $8.25.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 10,000; market firm; native, $7.35 to $8.35;; yearlings, $8 to $9.25; lambs, native, $7.60 to $10.

The moisture holder of a new letter sealing device is so arranged that if a pile of envelopes be placed beneath it with the gummed edges uppermost it will moisten the gum on each in turn as it is withdrawn.

THE GERMANS ABANDON SIEGE OF FORTRESS

AUSTRIANS LOSE 18000, KILLED, WOUNDED OR PRISONERS

MAJOR.-GEN. HUGHES CENTRE OF FIREWORKS IN COMMITTEE

Minister on Stand Says Shooting is Too Good for the Guilty Contractors---War News From the Inquiry Overshadows News From the Firing Line To-day.

GERMAN-POLAND CAMPAIGN FAILS

(Special Cable to The Examiner.)

OTTAWA, March 31.—The Boots Committee was the centre of a big attraction this morning. General Sam Hughes, the Minister of Militia was on the stand. There were lots of fireworks. The general provided most of them. In response to preliminary questions by E. F. Macdonald, the Minister stated that owing to the reports which reached him concerning the boots for the second and third contingents, he maintained that the boots at Valcartier were generally good, he ordered military boards to hold enquiries all over. He paid little attention to representations of manufacturers as to the character of the boot to buy. "One crowd recommends one way and another crowd recommends the other way," said General Sam, "and I've learned to pay mighty little attention to any of them." As a result of the investigations it was found that "a lot would stand wear, some were not of high standard, and some were undoubtedly very bad." Concerning any contractor who had supplied the "undoubtedly very bad boot," the Minister told Mr. Macdonald if he had his way he would "put him as far as the law could put him."

"Should be shot?" suggested Mr. Murphy.

"Shooting's too good!" declared General Sam.

"No boot that was ever made would stand Salisbury plain," said the Minister. Mr. MacDonald pointed out that both General Alderson and Sir George Perley had made adverse official representations concerning the boots. "I can make official representations better than either one of them—if you don't mind my being a bit egotistical," replied the Minister. "Men had come to him at the time of the Ross rifle enquiry, from General Lessard down," he said, "and asked them not to put questions to them because they did not know the reports and representations they had signed."

Here followed one of the liveliest tilts of the sitting.

Hon. Charles Murphy asked the Minister if he were serious?

General Sam jumped to his feet and shouted that he would take no impudence from Mr. Murphy, who was a "downright pettifogger."

General Sam caught a tartar.

Mr. Murphy struck back. He did not intend, he declared warmly to take any impertinence from "an individual like you, minister or no minister," and he demanded a withdrawal.

GOOD FRIDAY UNION SERVICE

In George Street Methodist Church Good Friday Afternoon at 3 O'clock

The Protestant churches of th is city will unite in one service at three o'clock on Good Friday afternoon. The service will be held in George Street Methodist church. The united choirs of George Street and St. Paul's will have charge of the music. It is expected that all the city ministers will be present. Brief addresses suitable to the day will be delivered by Rev. Leonard Phelps and Rev. J. R. Webb. Last year on a similar occasion Murray Street building was crowded to its capacity and it is expected that since the world in its present sorrow is pushed toward the cross that this service will exceed in attendance and interest anything that has been hitherto attempted. Only one hour will be occupied. 2d.

REORGANIZATION OF HOME GUARDS IS DECIDED ON

A Battalion of Four Double Companies Instead of Twelve Single Companies Will Form the Establishment

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

A general meeting of the Rifle Association was held at the Ranges last Thursday night, and a large number of members attended. Matters as to the future of the association were discussed. It was decided that the target practice would continue and be placed on a self-sustained basis. As a large majority of those present wished to continue drilling, at least as long as the war continued, it was decided to form up one battalion on the basis of four double companies. This will enable the Guards to have properly qualified officers and instructors for each company.

The general feeling of the meeting was that the Home Guards should not and did not interfere with the 57th Battalion, and it was noted that a number of the younger members, also a number of the officers, had enlisted in the 57th Regiment.

FINANCIAL REPORT.

The following financial report was read and discussed:

WOUNDING OF LOCAL BOY

Major Bennett Describes How 57th Man Was Hit by Germans When Lifting Fog Revealed Him

AN INTERESTING LETTER

The Chaplain of the 57th Regiment has received the following interesting letter from Major George W. Bennett, commanding the Peterborough boys in the 2nd Battalion of the first Canadian contingent:

"It was with very great pleasure I found your letter in the midst of my much longed-for Canadian mail when we arrived here last night.

In the first place I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your kindly references to my lads and myself. The circumstances under which we are existing and the awfulness of the situation and the doings here unfit us for the task of writing ordinary letters. Every ordinary thing which may have been carried across the channel in our minds has long since given place to the extraordinary. The horrible and uppermost in our minds to-day is the longing to destroy. Willie no doubt we are here in the first instance in support of principle, I fear our experiences and the sights we see have made such impressions that we are no longer thinking of principles, of right and justice, etc., but rather hoping to take revenge on the dastardly race and nation which has so ruthlessly inflicted such terrible suffering and destruction upon what appears to be everywhere a peace-loving people. Beautiful churches, in ruins; villages and the country is a vast checkerboard of villages, interlocked with large towns, absolutely razed to the ground. Farms and farm buildings knocked all to pieces, desolation on every side and the poor women and children wandering homeless.

Boys in Fine Fettle.

My Peterborough boys are exceptionally in fine fettle. Several are temporarily in the hospital and many changes have taken place, but up to the present I have not suffered any losses among the Peterborough boys. One of my 9th Horse men from Toronto died on the way up. I am sorry to say Peter Victor of the 57th was severly wounded a few days ago. He was out in front of his trench (he is now a Sergeant in No. 3 Company) and when the fog lifted the Germans got him in a volley. He was hit twice and I fear he will not be back for some time as the bone of the leg is shattered.

Fred Howarth is still my sergeant-major. E. Nicholls, senior platoon sergeant. Field and A. Ackerman are now full sergeant, and Cumberland, Carpenter, Haydon and Stevens are corporals. My commanding officer frequently compliments me on the splendid character of my company, and as a fact we do without a doubt get honours on every side. We were the first Canadians of the First Contingent to go into action, which meant something.

We have our regular, or perhaps irregular, service every Sunday, and our last was a "Cracker Jack."

Captain Gordon, who is one of our brigade chaplains — I think he comes from Kingston—came along to my valet and asked me could we open up.

WATCH FOR ABRAMSON'S EASTER BARGAINS

Abramson's new store is featuring for to-morrow some splendid buying chances in ladies' dresses, waists, skirts and coats. Ladies requiring Easter hats and outer garments should not fail to give this store a call. Mr. Abramson has made a big purchase of ladies' wear from a large factory in Montreal which failed, and is now prepared to give the ladies of Peterborough garments at less than the manufacturer's prices. Mr. Abramson was too busy to-day to check off the stock to make announcements to-day, but advises the ladies to watch for the paper to-morrow.

THE 57th REGIMENT WILL START ITS REGULAR SEASON IN FINE SHAPE

Large Number of Recruits Enrolled at Drill Last Night and Rangers in Spite of the Many Men on Active Service Will Show Splendid Nominal Roll.

ORDERS FOR THE WEEK

The turn-out at the weekly drill of the 57th Regiment at the armouries last night was the largest of the season and the officers of the regiment were delighted with the showing. The regular drill season of the Rangers begins next Tuesday night, and as Lt.-Col. Walker announced to the regiment last night, the 57th will start the season at greater strength than for some years, in spite of the fact that the call for men for three overseas contingents played havoc with the membership.

Many Non-Coms. Gone.

A glance at the personel of the non-coms. of the regiment now as compared to this time last year, shows what changes have been brought about by the call of the Empire. A very large percentage of the 57th's non-commissioned officers have responded. Among them may be mentioned, although this list is not intended by any means to be a complete one: Col. Sergt. F. Howarth, Sergt. Allan, Sergt. F. Griffin, Sergt. Peter Victor, Sergt. A. Ackerman, Sergt. Ellis, Col.-Sergt. Playford, Sergt. K. Cumberland, Sergt. E. Hale, Sergt. A. Harper, Col. Sergt. H. Dodds, Sergt H. Wilford, Sergt. F. McGrath, Quartermaster Sergt. Wes. Edwards, Sergt. J. Coppock, Sergt. M. Metheral, Corp. Carpenter, Corp. Kennedy and Corp. Stevens, as well as former non-commissioned officers such as Sergt. F. Thomas and Sergt. H. Barrett. Among the rank and file, too, there have been great changes. O Company, for instance, has sent nearly 90 men to the front since the war broke out.

231 on Parade.

With such a splendid answer to the call to the colours, it is therefore gratifying indeed to Lt.-Col. Walker and his officers to face the opening of the 1915 drill season with the regiment in good shape. There were 231 men on parade last night, and a particularly pleasing feature was the large number of recruits sworn in. There was a striking mixture of tunics and serges and military caps and civilian headgear in evidence, and a number of the recruits appeared in mufti. An effort will be made to have all in uniform by next drill night. The absence of the regulation scarlet did not interfere with the spirit of the occasion, however, and the men entered into the drill with a zest. No. 8 company spent the evening in the shooting gallery, while the remainder of the regiment practised squad drill and physical exercise.

Complimented by Chaplain.

Before the parade was dismissed, Hon. Major Davidson, chaplain of the Regiment, congratulated the officers and men on the splendid turnout. He emphasized to the men that by taking their places in the ranks and turning out regularly for drill they were doing a real work for their king and country. All could not be in the trenches, but in offering themselves for military training they were showing the proper spirit. He had, he said, walked back and forward in the armouries during the drill and had been impressed with the earnest manner in which they had conducted themselves. They were drilling under conditions that were a handicap, but this only made the spirit they evidenced more creditable. Major Davidson in conclusion, thanked the newspapers for the work they had been doing on behalf of the Regiment.

Next Week's Drill.

Lt.-Col. Walker in announcing the regular opening of the drill season next Tuesday night, stated that for the older members of the regiment, that is those that had had some training, there would be a lecture that evening by Capt. McPherson.

Capt. Gray of the 21st Battalion, Kingston, the officer who is in command of the Peterborough boys in the second contingent, was an interested spectator at the drill. While he appreciated the existing difficulties in regard to uniforms and equipment, he had a good word to say for the appearance and spirit of the men of the 57th.

PETERBOROUGH BROTHERS ON THE FIRING LINE

SERGT. ARTHUR ACKERMAN

A Company, 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Contingent. Like his brother, Sergt. Ackerman, was an enthusiastic member of the 57th Regiment. Recently he has been promoted sergeant for bravery in bringing rations into the trenches under fire. He is the youngest sergeant in the company.

LIEUT. CHAS. ACKERMAN

Of the 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Contingent. Lieut. Ackerman was a subaltern in the 57th Regiment, and enlisted for active service with his senior officers, Lt.-Col. Clegg, Major Bennett, and Major Mills. The Examiner has published some very interesting letters from Lieut. Ackerman recently.

Probably no Peterborough man has a more varied interest in the world war than Mr. B. F. Ackerman, whose soldier sons are pictured above. Not only has Mr. Ackerman two sons at the front, but his son-in-law, Major S. T. Medd, is on the way there while the firm of which Mr. Ackerman is at the head, the B. F. Ackerman, Son and Co., has been busy ever since hostilities commenced making war supplies for the allied governments. In addition Mr. Ackerman was one of the largest contributors and hardest workers for the Peterborough Patriotic Fund.

Mr. Ackerman's eldest son, Capt. W.C. Ackerman, has just been appointed to the command of the 24th Battery, C.F.A., succeeding Major G. R. Hall, who has gone to the front.

LT. COL. DUFF IS TO EXAMINE REJECTED MEN

Will Look Over Recruits Turned Back From Belleville and Ottawa —At Armouries To-day—Gossip of 39th Boys

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

A medical enquiry into the cases of the Peterborough men sent back from Belleville and Ottawa as physically unfit was conducted at the Armouries this afternoon by Lt.-Col. Duff of Kingston, who was in charge of a similar enquiry at Lindsay, last night. The investigation at Lindsay resulted in a number of the men rejected at Belleville being declared medically fit by the Board and similar results are expected here, although the percentage of 57th men sent back was very small.

The following order was issued today:

Recruiting for 7th Field Artillery Brigade C. E. F.—The 25th and 26th Batteries and Ammunition Column of the 7th Field Artillery Brigade, C. E. F., having been recruited up to full strength, no more recruits are to be accepted.

W. C. Ackerman,
O. C. 24th Battery, C.F.A.

Toronto University and Peterborough have been the principal contributors to the battery, Varsity having sent sixty men while Peterborough's quota so far is two officers and forty men.

Belleville Gossip.

Belleville, March 31.—(Special to the Examiner)—The 39th Battalion will soon be fully mobilized and the 57th boys are settling down to make themselves as comfortable as their quarters will allow. Some of them have developed ailments which ren-

THE ACTION WAS DISMISSE D WITHOUT COSTS

Without Prejudice to Plaintiff Who Can Continue Drilling Well in Otonabee Township Until Water is Found--Wide-open Contract

COUNTY COURT

This morning in the County Court, His Honour Judge Huycke, gave judgment in the case of William Edwards versus James Edwards, of Otonabee, and Mrs. Hannah Dickson, of this city. The case concerned an action to recover the sum of $123.50 as costs alleged to have been incurred in the drilling of a well on a farm in Otonabee, which is owned by Mrs. Dickson and leased to James Edwards. The action was dismissed without costs and without prejudice to the plaintiff, who is at liberty to go ahead and continue drilling operations under the terms of the alleged contract. The pump which was put in the well, it is said without the consent of the defendants, will be returned to the plaintiff. This figured in the claim to the extent of $23.50. The remaining $100 representing the cost of drilling a fifty foot well at two dollars a foot.

"No Water No Pay."

Mr. G. N. Gordon, who appeared for the plaintiff, contended that the bargain was based on the principle of "no water no pay." This was made after the work was started. Plaintiff drilled the well to a depth of thirty-eight feet and then received further instructions from Mrs. Dickson to go a few feet farther. This Mr. Gordon claimed, indicated Mrs. Dickson's acceptance of the work undertaken by the plaintiff.

The fact that plaintiff was stopped by the defendant Edwards, is corroborated by the circumstances respecting the board. Both defendants agreed that the well would not be complete without a pump. Mr. Gordon submit-

A CHANCE FOR PROTEST.

The United States has certainly done its full duty in the way of despatching diplomatic notes of protest to Great Britain and Germany in cases where its commercial interests seem to have been affected. One may not know what diplomatic considerations influence such despatches; but the piratical destruction of the passenger steamer Falaba seems to offer an admirable opportunity to enter a protest with Germany against the piratical actions of her submarines; especially as it is officially announced that among the missing and, doubtless, drowned passengers, is a United States citizen. When the crew of a pirate craft, dressed in kakhi, hoists the British ensign, only removing it at the moment of attack, and gives insufficient time for unarmed and non-combatant passengers to escape from the torpedoed steamer, one would think that a great neutral nation would protest in the name of humanity. Use of a neutral flag to permit a vessel to escape capture is in accordance with international law; but hoisting a neutral flag to facilitate the work of piratical destruction is in accord with only the law of the lower regions. The only negatively redeeming feature of the more recent manifestations of German barbarism, is that the desperate tactics adopted indicate the desperate character of the German position and prospects, its hopelessness of emerging, except beaten and prostrate, from the abominable war it has provoked, to satisfy a diabolical ambition.

THE CITY GARDEN AND HEALTH.

Elsewhere on this page is an interesting and authoritative article relating to the matter of diet. The chief point of interest to Peterborough people is the emphasis placed upon the importance of a vegetable diet, especially fresh palatable vegetables, such as can be grown in, and plucked from, a city garden, ready for the table. As a rule fresh vegetables, that is, absolutely fresh, are hard to obtain. If we get them from the shops they have lost much of their refreshing and appetizing crispness. They may be imported, and that argues a railway journey, delivery at leisure, and necessary impairment of freshness. These vegetables may be wholesome; but they are not as wholesome, not as tasty and attractive, as vegetables plucked one moment from the soil, and the next moment placed upon the table. This is only possible with the existence of a convenient garden. And there are thousands of opportunities for having a garden in connection with thousands of city homes. There are many who do not appreciate the advantage of the city garden; but they have only to reflect to be convinced of the little mine of wealth, health and table comfort, possible in their little heretofore neglected weed-grown plot, at the rear of their residence. Intensive gardening may be used to produce an amount of vegetables and edibles, unbelievable to those who have not tried it. Others have grown vegetables of a value of 25 cents for every square yard of a plot 40 x 40 feet. Some may say this is not much; but it represents about 30 dollars' worth of fresh, crisp vegetables in the season—a joy and benefit to every member of the household. The point is here. We are assured by competent authority that vegetables in season, are the most wholesome of diet, as they are the most palatable; and in many a household there would be a leak of vegetables—if they have to be bought they would not, in many cases, be bought; for the income is so reduced, perhaps, as to make such purchases impossible. If unemployment is taken advantage of to cultivate a garden plot, in one sense unemployment ceases, and the maintenance of the household by a garden is, as far as it goes, the most remunerative employment possible. If any unemployed has no garden plot of his own, there are vacant lots that will be placed at his disposal. But employed or unemployed, there are profit, health and pleasure in cultivating a city garden. We talk of patriotism and production, but when to that can be conjoined in the city garden, loyalty to oneself and family, we have in the collective result, the highest kind of patriotism in the most pleasant production.

DELUSIONS.

The war has already rid the world of a good many delusions. Many more will evaporate before it is ever. A lot of artificiality is going to be removed. Russia has found that it can get along without the revenue derived from the sale of vodka. France has disillusioned itself from the belief that its people needed the absinthe they have been accustomed to for generations. Above all, the German people are fast learning that friendship and intercourse with the world would have been better for them than the threat of the mailed fist.—Ottawa Free Press.

CANADA'S STUPEFYING SIZE.

We see that the British Press are following the lead of the Canadian Gazette and finding something "almost stupefying" in the fact that Ontario has just had added to her territory 6,000 islands as a result of the settlement of a boundary dispute. It is illustrative of the vastness of Canada that a transfer of land on so huge a scale should have attracted so little Canadian attention. But Canada is nearly as large as Europe, and Ontario nearly as large as France and Germany together, and even 6,000 islands in Georgian Bay is not much when you are dealing with propositions on this scale. But although possessing an area nearly as large as Europe, Canada has a population only about equal to that of Belgium before the war. The Belgians have done wonderful things with a bit of land equal to three or four Ontario counties. Their farmers are experts in intensive cultivation, and important manufacturing industries were created. What may not Canadians do with their far vaster heritage? Can one wonder that some among us predicted that before the end of the century Canada will have a population of 80 million people. Even then Canada would be sparsely populated in comparison with Europe.—Canadian Gazette, London.

THE LOOTING OF OTTAWA.

In every direction in which enquiry is turned, as far as enquiry has gone as yet at Ottawa the same condition has been revealed in connection with the buying of war supplies.

Always between the Government and the firm that could supply the goods the Government needed, there seems to have wedged in the speculator, who, perhaps with no previous knowledge whatever of the materials he was dealing in, just bought and sold and skimmed off the deal a few thousand dollars for himself.

How far and wide these operations have been carried remains to be shown, and the whole country will insist upon knowing. Only the fringe of the purchasing, which in all runs away up into the millions, has been scrutinized so far. But so far not a corner has been peeped into without revealing the patronage merchant right there, taking large tolls on the public money as it was paid out.

The thing is a disgrace to the country. We feel sure that the revelations will surprise and disgust the Prime Minister. They will have much the same effect on Hon. W. T. White, Hon. George E. Foster, and Conservatives as well as Liberals the whole Dominion over. The amazing part of it is that men should have the effrontery to attempt these daylight robberies and expect to get away with the goods, knowing that the Auditor-General was on duty and that Parliament would meet and its committees get to work. Did they imagine that there would be no reckoning? Did they think the Germans were going to capture the country and burn the records? Did they look to the party truce for shelter, or did they expect a general election to raise a dust in which they could slip away?—Toronto Star.

Music & Drama

Last night at the Grand Opera House was indeed a Khaki Night, when "True to The King" a Romantic Military play, was presented by Mr. Alexander Loftus and Company. The plot dealt with a supposed incident in the present war in which a man is found fighting on the side of the enemy to avenge the death of his son, which took place at the hands of soldiers of his country. His daughter marries a soldier of the King and finds herself between two fires. In her effort to shield her father she gets him into a room of her husband's where he steals some important despatches and endeavours to get with them to the camp of the enemy. Her husband is accused by a bother officer of being the traitor and he is sentenced to be shot at sunrise. The officer who makes the accusation is in love with the wife of the accused man and in this way endeavours to get the husband out of the way. A means of escape is offered the accused, and when he gets away he enlists again as a private under an assumed name and is finally vindicated when the officer who accused him is discovered to be himself a German spy and is denounced by the father of the girl when he is at the end of his tether and no further means of escape.

It was a very good play, with several musical numbers and the last act came as a surprise at the conclusion of which the audience stood and sang "God Save the King."

IMPORTANCE OF VEGETABLES IN THE DAILY DIET OF HUMANITY

Canadians eat too much meat. They are one of the three greatest meat eating peoples in the world, Australia and the United States being the other two. High prices for meat are gaining. The cost of food as well as its nutritive value should be considered.

Prof. James Long, the eminent British authority, recently addressed the following advice to the War Office:

"Jam has three and a half times the energy value of butter. Its value lies in its richness in sugar — of which one-half its weight consists—in the minerals present in the skins of fruits, in its laxative character and its mechanical aid to digestion.

"The sugar of fruit has a remarkable effect on nutrition. Commercial sugar, if eaten too freely, causes irritation, acidity and other freaks of indigestion.

"The most nutritious and useful varieties of jam are those made from plum, apricot, gooseberry and currant, but a mixture of plum and apple stand at the head of the list. Jam should not be considered as a dainty but as an article of food."

Dr. Frank T. Shutt, of Ottawa, Dominion Chemist, gives us the following authoritative statement as to the great importance of vegetables, especially if home grown. The importance in connection with small gardens in towns and cities is very apparent, and the subject is opportune at this time of the year. It may be that a small garden will keep down the doctor's bills.

"That many of the ills that flesh is heir to arise from indiscretions in diet is a fact that more of us should realize— and the earlier in life the better. Many of us, and perhaps this applies especially to those who live in the city, eat too much. As a result, we get too stout as life advances and what it still more serious, an extraordinary strain is put on certain of the organs of the system in nature's effort to get rid of the waste. Further, we who live more or less sedentary lives, eat too much meat; the man who sits at a desk all day long or stands behind a counter may work as hard as the navvy or ploughman, but it is a different kind of work. It does not call for the same amount of strong food. There is no necessity to diet ourselves by formula or to weigh out what we should eat, but we ought to be guided to a certain extent in our eating by common sense and the knowledge which science furnishes respecting the requirements of the body for the maintenance of the vital height, the development of energy and the repair of tissue.

"As city people we might keep in better health and live more cheaply if we would eat less meat and concentrated foods and use more vegetables and fruit. And this advice might especially be emphasized for the summer diet, when there is not the same call for the system for the stronger foods.

"Fresh vegetables are wholesome, palatable and productive of good health. Though in direct food value vegetables yield a first place to meats, it must not be supposed they are destitute of those nutrients which build up the body tissue and keep the machinery going. It would be possible, though not desirable, to live exclusively on vegetable foods. But vegetables, and especially fresh vegetables, are not to be regarded merely from the standpoint of maintenance—though we assert that nowadays they would make a very good showing on the ground of economy. Nor need we urge their extensive use on the grounds simply that they are appetizing and furnish variety to the diet. They, in addition to these excellent qualities, possess a medicinal value; they are aids to digestion and afford that bulk or volume to the food necessary for the right distension of the alimentary tract. Many vegetables contain salts which are gently laxative, relieving constipation, that scourge that is the forerunner of so many dangerous and not infrequently fatal, diseases. And, again, many vegetables, especially those used in salads, have a special value in cooling the blood and, are, therefore, most wholesome, especially in the summer season.

"Fresh vegetables are vastly superior to those that are wilted from keeping a day or two, in succulence, crispness and palatability. To be enjoyed at their best, vegetables must be eaten strictly fresh."

HOW ABOUT HENS RUNNING AMUCK?

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In view of the present movement for city vegetable and flower gardening, I would like to ask if there is a law against allowing hens to run at large. If there isn't, then in some quarters of the city not far from where I live it's mighty little use to plant anything except for the benefit of scratching hens. I think the city authorities should cooperate with the citizens in their efforts to beautify the city and to raise a few vegetables. Will you please look up the law in regard to hens and dogs running at large. We people who are interested in our little gardens and flower beds would like to know whether the destroyers or the growers are to have the right of way.

Yours truly,
Vegetation.

A Discriminating Dog

Yesterday afternoon a west end lady placed a plate and a bread ticket on a chair on her side verandah so that the baker should leave the usual supply of daily bread. On looking she found the plate but no ticket and no bread. She called the baker by 'phone and he said that he had left the bread and taken the ticket. He added that after he had left the bread he saw at the head of the same street a huge hound dog, with a nice, crusty brown loaf in his mouth. Thus the missing loaf was accounted for and the good judgment of the dog exhibited; the loaf he took was good bread, made by Lush Bros. It's no wonder that housewives, who are bothered in that and other ways by roaming, badly-fed dogs, should have so little love for them that they sometimes yield to the temptation to feed marauders something stronger than bread.

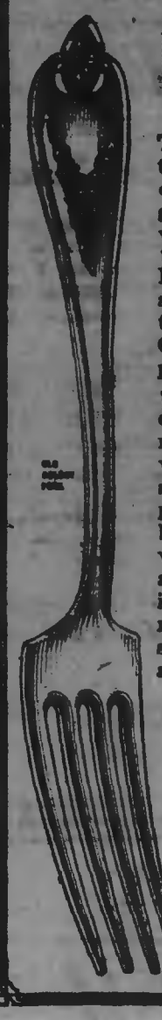
A CONTRAST IN TEUTON HAPPINESS.—These two pictures show a marked contrast. One shows German prisoners of war obviously happy, photographed as they were being transferred from the prison ships on the Thames river, to more comfortable quarters on the Isle of Man. The other picture shows a distribution of bread to the poor of Vienna under supervision of officials of the Austrian Government which has taken over food supplies.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

"Silver Plate that Wears"



The Old Colony design, as pictured by the fork on the left, is an excellent example of the dignified beauty and good taste characteristic of all silverware bearing the name 1847 ROGERS BROS. If your taste suggests simple and chaste lines, the Old Colony and Cromwell designs will please you.

1847 ROGERS BROS. designates the original make of Rogers Bros. ware—the make that has set all standards in silver plate since 1847. Do not be misled by other goods with a similar name—always look for the year in connection with the name; then you are sure of beauty, quality and wear.

Backed by the world's largest makers of sterling silver and plated ware with an unqualified guarantee made possible by an actual test of over 65 years.

Sold by Leading Dealers

Made in Canada by Canadians. Equal in quality to the best the World Produces.

That is a good day in which you make some one happy. It is astonishing how little it takes to make one happy. Feel that the day is wasted in which you have not succeeded in this.

Local Council of Women's Column

The Matter Published in this column will be supplied by the Local Council of Women and in the interest of their work.

A feature of one of the meetings of the National Council of Women at Ottawa, which aroused great interest, was a letter read by Mrs. Cummings, from Mademoiselle Bonnevial, convener of the suffrage committee of the National Council of Women of France, in reply to one sent by Dr. Anna Shaw, convener of suffrage of the International Council, urging that action be taken in favour of an appeal to the women of all countries to take the initiative in a movement in favour of peace. The sentiment expressed in this letter, from which the following extracts are made, are the sentiments, it was stated, felt universally by the women of France:

'To Rev. Dr. Anna Shaw:

"We have unimpeachable proof that Belgium, confiding in the treaties that assured her neutrality, had no thought of waging war; that France and England until the very last moment made every effort to avoid it; that our government in acting thus were expressing the national feeling to which so many eminent pacificists had given voice, and for which one has paid with his life, his last effort to prevent the crime of this war.

"This crime, nevertheless, has been accomplished, and is being achieved with a barbarity worthy of the darkest ages. Human life and the treasures of art, all are the victims of the destroyer. Belgium invaded in spite of treaties signed and sealed, has unhesitatingly paid with the blood of her own children the price of keeping her signature inviolate. And David, the youth, has stayed the onward march of the giant, Goliath. The bravery of our neighbours, gave to France, surprised by an attack as inster as it was precipitate, the opportunity to collect her forces and face the enemy.

'England, our loyal friend, whose spirit is at once so liberal and so democratic, and who, also had spared no efforts to maintain peace, seeing her labour vain, drew her sword in the service of right and of justice. Now, we three allied nations stand united by an immutable solidarity, and bent upon pursuing the combat till victory is ours.

"Perhaps you have reason to think that if women, all women, were called into council to decide for peace or war the difference would be settled otherwise than by war.

"But this is the time for action, not theory. We are attacked, we are defending ourselves, and not one of us would lend an ear to premature advances for peace. We should blush with shame if our tear should weaken the courage of our boys whose spirit is so high and whose enthusiasm is so great. They know they are fighting for a principle, for more than to avenge wrongs. It is a holy cause they are defending, the rights of a nation, the establishment of a world based on justice, peace and human fraternity. We shall not for a moment weaken our determination, nor yet utter a word of recrimination for our neglected rights. Later on we shall have a better reason for securing our rights in that we have done our duty completely.

"And in the calm of a beneficial peace we shall re-read with pride the beautiful epistle you have addressed to us.

(Signed) "Marie Bonnevial.

"Convener of Suffrage Committee National Council of France."

This letter is a great contrast to the article which appeared some time ago in an American paper. Queen Wilhelmina of Holland is said to have cabled out to Miss Jane Adams, President of the Women's Peace party of the U. S., asking her to be present at a Convention of Women of Neutral Countries, to be held at The Hague in April to "discuss means of ending the war." This is rather like dusting the china with the bull still in the shop.

(Contributed by Mr. Carson)

A short time ago an article on "Playgrounds" appeared in the daily papers. In this article the need of supervised playgrounds was outlined, and the fact that the city owed it to children was established.

In this necessarily brief article the author attempts to put before the reader those factors which make the playground a necessity toward an all-round development of the child in a modern city.

The value of the playground does not lie alone, as so many people seem to think, in keeping the child off the street, under watchful eye, thus protecting property owners from loss, but there is a decided educational influence exerted on the child in a properly organized playground. Tyler says, in Growth and Education:

"Muscular exercise and fresh air are absolutely necessary to the child, to promote growth and development of all the vital organs, the brain included." The basis of education is, and must be, physical."

Playground and Intellectual Growth.

Play assists intellectual growth through the education of the senses. It trains in alertness. The boy who plays baseball is training his mind to be wide awake, keen, able to judge, control and observe. Games of counting, of puzzles, riddles, guess games, etc., stimulate imagination, develop memory. Constructive plays, as modelling in clay, sand pile and cutting, pictures are aiding intellectual growth as well as keeping the child out of doors and under proper environment. Other types of playground work as nature plays, field walks, gardens, drawing plays, as tracing pictures, music plays, as singing, story telling, etc., tend toward developing the imagination, powers of observation, memory and general intellectual growth of the child.

Playgrounds and Aesthetic Growth.

The esthetic education of the child can be stimulated through the playground, properly conducted, in many ways, chief of which are through the appearance of the grounds and the directors. The child will imitate, to a large degree; habits will be formed for good, unconsciously. The sense of beauty may be cultivated indirectly. The aesthetic education of the child through constructive plays, trips through the woods, studies of birds and flowers, and in the very administration of the playground, the orderliness and regulating of which will teach the child to appreciate things well and systemetically done.

Moral Growth.

What the boy is after is manliness. He gets this through the self-confidence obtained in competition and in the gang. It develops the spirit of citizenship. Organization in team play, as in baseball, affords scope for development in the prowess of skill, judgment and self control. It is a training in social consciousness which brings the boy into a realization that he is a part of a social unit. How can we realize the moral value of play easier than by analizing briefly the main points brought out in a game of baseball. Because of loyalty the boy often takes a fielder's position when, if he had no team spirit, he would choose to be pitcher. Moreover he even encourages the boy who takes his place, unconsciously losing personal rivalry, forgetting utterly any mean individual comparisons in what he has enthusiastically accepted as the greater common good. He goes to bat at a critical moment. The score is close. He would like to increase his batting average as much as anyone. For the sake of the team his chief concern must be to advance the runner. He makes a bunt or sacrifice hit with the certainty of being put out at first, but in doing so he advances the fellow on the base and contributes to the team's success. It is this sacrificing type of loyalty we see all around us in our national life to-day, and it begins in just such ways as the boy's sacrifice to his team.

Judge Ben. B. Lindsey has demonstrated to a remarkable degree this use of loyalty in the reformation of boy criminals. In eight years, out of 517 cases of boys put upon their honour, there were but five failures. The relation of one team mate to another, the fighting spirit of playing a game to the finish, the pat on the back after a good hit, the impulsive embrace, the very tears shed after a good hit, the impulsive embrace, the very tears shed after a game is lost, all is both social and moral experience of no small value.

Games also develop the spirit of justice and fair play. Giving the opponents a cheer after a game is showing the highest type of manliness and sportsmanship.

A large part of morality consists in bringing the body into habitual obedience to the will. The moral value of play in this respect arises from the constant muscular response to volition. Delay, half-hearted response, inattention, carelessness and every sluggish performance of the order of the will disqualifies the player. He must be alert, attentive, keen and quick in will power to make a good player. The physical efficiency obtained in athletic games has its reaction upon every mental condition. Boys with unreasonable diffidence, lack of self confidence, self assertion, can be brought to a realization of themselves through games in a way nothing else would so effectively do.

The saving power of organized play in the prevention and cure from sex conditions cannot be overestimated. The diversion of strenuous play and the consequent use of energy is every where recognized as an indispensable moral prophylactic. Play and the exhiliration given to the body derived from muscular exercise takes the place of the nervous excitement sought by the cigarette smoker, but without the injurious effects. It substitutes clean living boys with healthy bodies and minds for the immoral cigarette smoking boy of the street. Play, rightly directed, brings these results. The relation of the play time and of the play-grond to the intellectual, aesthetic, moral growth, and later, to efficiency, should grip the citizens of Peterborough, and make them sympathetic and responsive to any appeal that might come for the promotion of this great work.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS.

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B. writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

CHILDREN ARE WORKING IN THE FIELDS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

Next to war, Austria-Hungary is devoting her greatest energies to agriculture. "If we can only obtain sufficient labour," says the government, "the next harvest is secured." Consequently everything possible is now being done to provide for the spring work on the land. Tens of thousands of boys and girls have been released from attendance at school; married women and girls are being pressed into service, and adult male workers are as eagerly sought after as are recruits for the armies in the field.

By a special decree the Austrian Ministry of Education has directed that in the country districts all children in the three higher grades, that is of 12, 13 and 14 years of age, are to be excused from school, in order that they may work in the fields or at home. The school authorities are instructed to organize this child labour in a systematic manner, so that the best results may be obtained where help is most needed.

They will be forced into groups in a sort of military manner, the elder boys acting as under-officers. It is thought that this will encourage the children in working, besides inspiring them with patriotic sentiments.

Practically all country children have been brought up to work on the land, and there are endless ways in which they can be useful, from picking caterpillars off the fruit trees to guiding a plough and a yoke of oxen.

So many peasants have been called to the army that there is very little adult male labour left in the rural districts. And the few men who are there show no great inclination to go to work, and so far have steadily refused to enter into the usual contracts for harvest work holding by waiting to get considerably higher wages. The land owners are furious and threaten that the government will compel them to work when the time comes.

In addition to securing all the labour possible, the government is doing its best to encourage the use of machinery on the farms. The Minister of Agriculture has already agreed to subsidize seed sowing machines with a grant of $20 each, and will do the same with harvesting machines when the crops are ready.

From the official reports of the Vienna markets, it appears that many of the most important articles of daily food have more than doubled in price since the outbreak of the war, seven months ago. Flour now costs eight cents a pound, and dried peas 11 cents, compared with four cents last JJuly. Split peas cost 15 cents. Lard costs 40 cents a pound, which is exactly double the price when the war began. Eggs now sell at three and four cents each, instead of two cents. Beef costs anywhere from 26 to 30 cents a pound, according to the cut, and pork from 24 to 40 cents. Horseflesh, the consumption of which is now steadily increasing, cannot be bought for less than ten to 16 cents a pound as compared with eight cents last summer. Sugar has risen very little, costing now eight or nine cents a pound, scarcely half a cent more than before the war.

Bread, however, has gone up considerably and costs now from four to six cents a pound. The quality is miserable, as it contains only 50 per cent. of flour; the remainder a mixture of corn, barley and potato meals.

Petroleum is quoted at 90 cents a gallon, as compared with 26 cents last July; and soft coal has risen in the last week to $10 a ton. Both these, and especially coal, are often difficult to obtain at any price, owing to the lack of transportation.

Fifty thousand British railway men joined or rejoined the colours when war was declared.

The population of the earth at the present rate of gain will be about 4,000,000,000 in the year 2014.

Every month a thousand tons of firewood are sent to the British troops in France and Belgium.

There were 31,000 passenger cars standing about on the railroads of this country at the last count.

Pre-arranged Plan Failed.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Additional information about the attempt of the German steamship Odenwald to slip out of the harbor of San Juan, Porto Rico, without clearance papers, a week ago Sunday, was received here last night from Collector of Customs Richardson.

The report says investigation after a five-inch shell from Morro Castle had stopped the Odenwald, showed that five rowboats had been anchored along the channel, indicating a prearranged plan to point the way out of the harbor for the German skipper.

Stop Liquor for Dance Halls.

LONDON, March 31. — Liquor licenses are being refused to dance halls by the magistrates in charge of this branch of excise. Formerly they were generally awarded without much question, even to halls in which dances were held only occasionally.

"The present is not time for dancing anyway," explained a magistrate in West London, in refusing an application. "If they must dance, they will have to dance on coffee."

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

"THE HOLY CITY"

Of the presentation of "The Holy City," by the combined choirs of the George Street Methodist and St. Paul's Presbyterian churches last night it might be said that a new standard was established in Peterborough for musical works of this kind. The question of classifying it in the lists of cantatas or oratorios or of fixing an intermediary position for it need not be considered here. Neither are comparisons necessary. The production in every sense was a splendid success, and in referring to it one is inclined to use superlatives. The chorus of seventy-five voices sang with uniform excellence. In the first place there was a resonant depth or volume, with nicely balanced harmony, that responded smoothly and precisely to the conductor's interpretation of the subject matter. This tonal strength was under fine control, and equally effective in the piano and forte passages. Another noticeable feature, and possibly only an incident of the choir's responsiveness, was the clean cut manner in which the notes were taken. Every voice seemed to be in unison from the initial to the final note. There was no lagging. The conductor the chorus and accompanist struck in together with an approach to perfection that deserves special mention, and which no doubt accounts in a large measure for the four months' of faithful practices, the price of finished execution.

There was also the assurance resulting from preparedness and a complete knowledge of the work. It was probably expected that the combined choirs would exhibit exceptional resources of harmony and in this there was no room for disappointment. The choral balance was all that could have been desired. The ensembles demonstrated this fact, and particular passages showed the individual strengths of the parts.

The opening chorus "No Shadows Yonder," was a promise of the evening's performance. The voices blended with very pleasing effect and the choir's general qualities were outlined. Beautiful soprano depths were called out in the phrase "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy" and the bass strength was displayed in "He that goeth weeping." In this chorus the choir responded with a full, round tone, sweeping through the measures in perfect time. The finale to the first part was splendidly done. The verse "For thee, O Dear, dear country, etc.," was taken by the first and second sopranos and contraltos; the first and second tenors and basses sang the second verse and both combined on the last gradually swelling into one of the most imposing lines of the whole work "The saints build up its fabric, and the corner-stone is Christ." The final two lines of the first part provided grand scope for the choir and they rose to it easily and voluminously.

In the second part the choir maintained the standard set at the beginning. The piano effect in "Holy is the Lord of Hosts," was artistically rendered and the choir then broke into the majestic strains "Let the heavens rejoice." Another splendid passage was "The fining pot is for silver," sung without accompaniment. It was handled in fine style, with splendid harmony, and general effectiveness. "List the cherubic host" for ladies' voices was one of the most lyrical passages in the whole work. It has a lovely melody and was well rendered. The concluding chorus, "Great and Marvellous are Thy Works," proved a stirring finale and offered rather difficult phrasing in parts. And not the least impressive was the resounding verse of the National Anthem with its noble harmonies and depths of sentiment.

As a summary one may say that the combined choirs acquitted themselves with an approach to that perfection expected of professionals. It had most of the choral qualities, depth, volume, balance, precision in attack, control, in fact there seemed no quality absent. The members deserve every congratulation upon their success achieved by diligent practice, love of the work and unselfish endeavour.

The Soloists.

The solos were taken by Mr. Maurice Park, Miss Ida Sanderson, Mr. Fred Miles, Mr. Edward Jones, Miss Dorothy Allan, Mrs. Renwick and Mr. Charles Thorpe; a sextette composed of Miss M. Armstrong, Miss E. Kemp, Miss Pearl McKee, Miss M. Telgmann, Mrs. McCarrell, Mrs. Rehill; and ladies' quartette, Mrs. Renwick, Mrs. Allan, Miss Allan and Miss Sanderson. On the whole the soloists sustained the work quite capably. Miss Sanderson had a contralto number with a very pretty theme. In fact the production is almost a succession of striking solos and choruses. Mr. Miles had everything, a pleasing bass with a wide range and fine qualities throughout. Mr. Thorpe sang the lines in which Mr. Ruthven Macdonald was heard some time ago. Mr. Thorpe sang in good tone and expression. Mr Ed. Jones displayed a robust tenor which he used with full appreciation of his lines. Mr. Maurice Park's solos were sung in good voice and feeling, especially his first, "No Weeping Yonder." Mrs. Renwick was heard to advantage, her soprano solos, in a duet with Miss Allan, and in the ladies' quartette. Miss Allan was at her best and sang with all the fluency and ease which has characterized her work. The first quartette by Mrs. and Miss Allan, Mr. McKeown and Mr. Dickson, and the sextette of ladies both deserve mention. Few weak spots were noticeable in the entire work. Although all the soloists acquitted themselves in a praiseworthy manner, with one of two exceptions they scarcely measured up to the excellence of the choir's work, if a comparison may be made. This fact, however, is rather a compliment to the choir rather than depreciative of the soloists.

It should be observed that George Street church held a capacity audience, and at least one thousand persons enjoyed "The Holy City."

In conclusion it is self evident that Mr. Renwick and Mr. Allen, the respective choir leaders, are largely responsible for last night's success. By choir union alone, they have made an advanced improvement in local musical affairs, and have gone a long way to bury the bogey which is alleged to have kept choirs apart. Apparently they have been wholly unselfish in their efforts, and no better proof of this is afforded than the utter absence of a single hitch in the rendition of the work. In their first associated preparation they have given the citizens a finished choral body which, to say the least, has not been surpassed locally in a long time. With their choirs they deserve every congratulation. Mr. Allan played the organ accompaniment and the prelude to the first part, while Mr. Renwick conducted. They alternated positions in the second part. The prelude and intermezzo were both exquisite offerings with a tender imagery that prepared the senses for the choral themes. Miss Pearl McKee played the piano accompaniments.

The composite choir was as follows:

St. Paul's.

Land Forces Preparing

Operations in Country Around Constantinople Imminent

LONDON, March 31.—Fine weather favored the bombardment of the Bosphorus by the Russian Black Sea fleet, and this enabled aviators to obtain a clear view of the damage inflicted. The worst destruction was done to the fort of Elmas, which early in the day had been firing its four guns very steadily. Russian 12-inch shells demolished both the old stone bastions and also the new earthworks round the emplacement where the Germans had recently transferred some of their guns.

It is known that the Turks have 22 guns at Anadoli and Kavak, four miles further along the Asiatic shore of the Bosphorus, and 24 guns at the neighboring fort of Madjar Kali. Six guns were worked from the fort of Kilia on the European side. The garrison of Elmas fled, being unable to withstand the fire of the warships. Turkish land troops are now evidently preparing for important operations which they expect to be undertaken simultaneously from the Black Sea and the Aegean Sea.

The Chronicle naval correspondent, discussing the position at the Dardanelles, and the necessity that a passage shall be forced at all costs, says:

"There will be combined operations such as we have hardly seen for a hundred year. Three fleets are sharing in the attack, and at least three armies will be engaged in the campaign on shore."

A Reuter despatch from Athens says:

"The Turks are repairing the damage done to the forts and are concentrating troops in Smyrna.

"The operations in the Dardanelles Sunday were confined to an intermittent bombardment of several Turkish positions in which seaplanes co-operated. The Turkish reply was feeble."

MOVES AMENDMENT TO NEW LIQUOR LEGISLATION

All Day and Night Debate in Legislature Results in Defeat of Liberal Demands That Liquor Traffic Be Stopped During the War and People Given a Chance to Say If They Want It.

TORONTO, March 31.—The Government's liquor legislation was under debate all day yesterday and until three o'clock this morning. The Opposition amendment introduced by Mr. Proudfoot (Huron) was finally defeated by a vote of 69 to 23, and the second reading given to the bill. Mr. Proudfoot's amendment to the measure was in two sections, the first expressing regret that despite the war crisis, not a single bar was closed. No reduction made in hours of sale, nor any enlargement made in the power of the people. The second section urged that the Government,

"(1) Close all drinking places during the war (this covers all hotel and club licenses); (2) grant to the electors of the province the right to decide by a majority vote whether these drinking places shall remain closed or be reopened at the end of the war; and, (3) provide more effective measures for wiping out any shops which may remain, by making local option county-wide."

Hon. Mr. Hanna, in moving the second reading, amplified his original statement regarding the bill, and announced that a clause would be added to the section giving the commission power to restrict the sale of liquor to any class of persons by giving additional authority to declare "any area, no matter how large or small, absolutely dry." The Provincial Secretary laid great stress on the character of the men to be selected for the commission, who would not represent any particular class or section, to have no opposing interests on the board.

Mr. Proudfoot followed with his amendment. He believed that the Government proposed to keep a grip on the commission to revoke anything which might be undertaken.

Messrs. Musgrove, Munro, McElroy, Davidson and Price followed and Mr. Rowell took the floor late in the evening. He described the bill as "a pitiable performance in the face of a national crisis." The liquor dealers alone were satisfied with it. Russia, France and Britain had all taken steps against the evil. In the Ontario House alone was it laughed out of court.

The Premier, in reply, said Mr. Rowell was not so much afraid of the Government being discredited as of himself not obtaining credit for one of the most advanced laws. There could be no comparison of conditions in Europe with those in Ontario. The Ontario measure was broader and deeper than the British one, yet nothing had come to it but castigation. He review the system prior to 1905 and in conclusion he gave his word that men of the utmost purity and integrity would be chosen for the commission. He pledged himself to this and said he "until I am proven false my word should be accepted."

Allan Studholme concluded the debate and the division was taken. The House rose at 3.15 to sit again at 3.15 p.m. to-day.

Germans Preparing to Retire Says Persistent Rumours

Fall of Permysl and Imminence of Capture of Constantinople Occasions a Council of War in Berlin

LONDON, March 31. — Germany's next move in the military field — for some stroke either in the east or the west is expected before the allies attempt their spring advance — is at present the chief subject of speculation and conjecture. According to reports reaching here from Petrograd, the German Emperor is now at Berlin holding a war council with Field Marshal von der Goltz, the German military commander of Constantinople, and other leaders, and is planning a new campaign to offset the fall of Permysl and meet the situation in the Dardanelles.

There has been nothing of an outstanding nature in either theatre of the land operations since the surrender of the Austrian fortress, sniping, mining and bomb-throwing predominating along the western front, while fierce fighting rages in the Carpathians.

The Dutch correspondents of English papers in their despatches refer to persistent rumors in circulation in Holland of a change in the German front in Belgium, which is alleged to have been made necessary by the fall of Permysl and by the pressure of the allies along the existing extended front.

According to these rumors the line of the Yser is to be abandoned in favor of a less extended line slightly west of Brussels. It is reported that large bodies of cavalry already are being withdrawn from the Yser.

A line of German trenches in the western part of the forest of Le Pretre was captured by French infantry yesterday and 100 prisoners were taken. To hold their new ground the French infantry had to repel a violent German attack.

Another success achieved was the capture of a German post near Pont a Mousson and the repulse of three violent counter-attacks by the French soldiery.

German batteries got close enough to Fort Donaumont, north of Verdon, to hit it with eight-inch shells on Monday. The French artillery at once replied and silenced the enemy's batteries.

Artillery actions and mine warfare have succeeded the French infantry offensive in the Champagne region. The French War Office reports gaining the advantage in this species of warfare.

The bridges thrown across the Nieuport Canal by the allies continue to be the object of a German bombardment. The French official statement says that this firing has been without result.

From the sea to the Aisne cannonading has been intermittent.

The Russian plans are developing with perfect success. This was the cheering news given out by the Russian War Office last night. Although the Austrians and Germans are making a desperate resistance on the roads to Bartfeld and the Uszok Pass, the Russian infantry managed to carry more of the enemy's fortified positions on the heights covering the roads. The Russian captures amounted to 76 officers, 5,384 men, 21 machine guns, 5 field pieces and one trench mortar in Sunday's and Monday's operations. The enemy put up a stubborn resistance to the Russian progress and made a series of desperate counter attacks.

A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. from Bucharest, says:

"It is reported from the Roumanian frontier that a considerable Austrian force, which crossed the River Pruth, near Bojana, Monday, was ambushed by the Russians and compelled to retire across the river with heavy losses."

The boys are down to soldiering in earnest. Fine, healthy appetites are developed and since Sunday both the quantity and quality of the meals are much improved and there is not much kick coming in that direction. Credit must be given the commanding officers for the interest they are taking in the feeding arrangements, and the men are not unreasonable, but what they complain of is the barrack accommodation. They know they are being put to these inconveniences and the dangers of fire and epidemic to serve the interests of some who have a "pull" in Belleville while scores of better places might have been selected.

The Peterborough boys have one big regret. The two gentlemen who came down with them as officers have been posted to another company, much to the regret of the men.

A very much respected non-commissioned officer, Sergt. W. Field, has left us, having been declared medically unfit.

A Barack Room Ballad.

The latest parody that is making a hit with the 39th boys is the following, to the tune of "In My Harem":

"Oh, the Barracks, the Barracks;
The dirty, rotten barracks;
And now we know, where the beans all go:
Beans for breakfast, stewed for dinner,
Jam at supper time;
All the eatables and dishes,
They never cost a dime.
Oh the barracks, the barracks,
It was there, I knew, that my death was due,
To the Barracks at old Belleville.

ted that his client was entitled to the benefit of the loose authority ratifying the drilling of the well up to thirty-eight feet, and direct authority to continue for a few feet beyond that. The term "a few feet" was a revelant term, and required to be interpreted according to the circumstances under which it was used or applied.

Two Contracts Existed.

Mr. Goodwill, representing the defendants, said that there were two separate contracts, one for the old well and one for the new well, both of which were said to be understood by both defendants. There existed no contradiction or difference between the two defendants as to the nature of the contracts. As regards the new well, plaintiff was to dig a well and get a delett supply of yater. The evidence before the Court indicates that the well is no good, there not being a sufficient supply of water. The case turns on whether the plaintiff was stopped when a distance of fifty feet had been reached.. According to the evidence plaintiff came to town, saw Mrs. Dickson, and agreed to accept two dollars a foot for the work, based on the understanding that he was to receive no pay unless he obtained a supply of water. No evidence has been offered to show that the work was stopped by Mrs. Dickson, and the surrounding circumstances are against the plaintiff's contention that the work was stopped by the defendant Edwards, said Mr. Goodwill. If he had been stopped in the work the most natural thing to have done would be to leave the machine on the ground and demand his money. The machine was moved away. Mr. Goodwill submitted that the action should fail upon the grounds that plaintiff had failed to fulfil the terms of the contract.

Work Was Stopped.

His Honour Judge Huycke, in dismissing the action, said that it was an unfortunate case, and should have been settled by both parties. He found that an agreement existed upon the terms of "no water no pay," and that the well in question was not a satisfactory well. A pump had been put in which was not contracted for. This he would return to the plaintiff. His Honour also found that the defendant Edwards had acted improperly and in excess of his authority, in stopping the work.

Under the terms of the contract the plaintiff can continue the work.

MR. JAMES RYRIE'S ADDRESS TO THE MEN'S ASSOCIATION

Well Known Church Worker of Toronto Deals With a Few of the Problems That Confront the Church of To-day --Banquet in Murray Street Baptist Church Was Largely Attended---The Toast List.

"Do not become so absorbed in the things of this life as to allow the work of the King to go by default." This was the closing injunction of Mr. James Eyrie of Toronto, who, last evening, addressed the Men's Association of Murray Street Baptist Church. Over one hundred members were present in addition to a large representation of ladies upon whom devolved the responsibility of preparing the very excellent repast that was provided. The organization is one that has more than justified its existence as indicated by its many achievements which were referred to during the course of a number of very excellent addresses. Chief among these is the periodical house to house visitation, or what is better known as 'house to house every membership canvas." This is undertaken by the Association, and its object is to create a closer and more sympathetic association between the members and the Church. The actual work of visitation is accomplished by a number of teams. By this means the Church is enabled to keep an authentic record of each member, the sick and those who may be in distress. Mr. Ryrie remarked that such a scheme was unique in church history and is one that commends itself to all churches.

Asa Huycke's Orchestra supplied an enjoyable repertoire of music which was supplemented by vocal selections contributed by Miss Clara Kidd and Mr. Asa Huycke.

The toastmaster's duties were ably performed by Mr. Robert C. Read, President of the Association.

The Toast List.

The toast to the King was responded to by the entire gathering which joined in the singing of the National Anthem.

This was followed by a toast to Murray Street Church, proposed by Mr. A. J. Raddon and seconded by Dr. Wm. Scott. The former referred to the able leadership under which the work of Murray Street Church had prospered. He hoped that all would appreciate the honour that was vested in such a worthy organization. In responding, Dr. Scott briefly reviewed the growth of the Church from the time of its inception up to the present. Rev. J. R. Webb has presided over the destinies of the Church for upwards of eight years. In the words of Dr. Scott, the ministerial head of the Church has ben faithful and zealous in the discharge of his duties and has lived for the Church day in and day out. He hoped to see the day when he would become pastor emeritus

The Association.

The next toast was for the Men's Association. It was proposed by Mr. G. H. Duncan, Vice President of the Association, and seconded by Mr. Robert Harding. Mr. Duncan said that in the Association he had found a feeling of good fellowship, and a willingness to help in promoting the best interests of the congregation as a whole. The year he had spent as Vice President was one of the best years of his life and he hoped the Association would continue to prosper as it had done in the past.

Mr. Harding loked with considerable pride upon the organization of which he was president during the first year of its inception. He had never called a meeting that was not productive of a hearty response. Among the absentees were many who had gone forth to fight their country's battles. Their heart was with the Association as the hearts of those present were with them.

The Ladies.

It fell to the lot of Chief of Police Thompson to propose the toast to the ladies. This he did with the becoming dignity for which the Chief is noted. He jocularly remarked that the team of which he was a representative had called on more ladies durign the every member canvas than any other team in the organization. He regarded the ladies as a valuable aid to the Association.

In responding to the toast Mr. Jos. Wearing paid a glowing tribute to the ladies and their work in connection with the Church. He believed that the Empire of to-day was being served as much by the ladies as by the men, and that the present war would tend to produce an equality of the sexes.

"Our Guest."

The next toast was for the guest of the evening, Mr. James Ryrie of Toronto, President of the Baptist Church of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Ryrie, in response, recalled two previous visits to Peterborough, one when the corner stone of Murray Street Church was laid, and the other during the course of the Baptist convention that was held in this city about a year and a half ago. The present visit carried with it the honour of an introduction to the family circle. Continuing, Mr. Ryrie said: "To-day Christianity is receiving a very severe test. There are many of us who cannot go to the front, but we can hold up the banner of Christ at home. The trouble is we do not give this thing first place in our lives. In the extension of Christ's kingdom we must seek Christ, Himself, and promote the upbuilding of His cause. That should be the paramount object of our lives. I think the visitation scheme as carried out by this organization, is an admirable one. I have never heard of it being done in other Churches. The tendency of to-day is to grow away from each other. I recall a gathering that was held in Toronto some years ago, when each member of the Church who was present was instructed to speak to his neighbour. One man, upon being asked if he were a stranger, replied: "No, I have been attending this Church for about fifteen years. This was in marked contrast to another family who complained that they were never regarded as other than strangers. Investigation revealed the fact that they usually sat at the rear of the Church and by the time the Benediction was over, were on their way out.

Respect for the Sabbath.

One of the chief responsibilities of manhood, said the speaker, is the proper observance of the Sabbath. In this he was not strictly puritanical. He believed that the Sabbath was made for man. He recalled his boyhood days, when it would be considered improper to whistle or even take a walk on Sunday. He believed that a vast responsibility rested with every man of seeing that the Sabbath was reasonably observed. The speaker also paid some attention to what he characterized as "onoers," that is, people who cultivate the habit of attending Church only once each Sunday; also those who were in the habhabit of arriving late. In ten or fifteen years he had never been late, and had resided both five and twenty-five minutes' walk from the Church. He also commended to his hearers the desirability of attending the mid-week prayer services. It served as a stimulant to carry one along until Sunday.

A Grave Danger.

In conclusion, Mr. Ryrie referred to the grave danger of becoming so absorbed with the things of this life as to allow the work of the King to go by default. People were apt to become afflicted with a desire for success to the ultimate exclusion of any interest they might have had in Christ's kingdom.

A vote of thanks on behalf of the Association was moved by Rev. J. R. Webb and seconded by Mr. Harry Webber.

In reply, Mr. Ryrie said that he appreciated the vote of thanks that was moved by "Webb and seconded by Webber". He had enjoyed his visit to Peterborough and hoped that the Pastor of Murray Street Baptist Church would become Pastor emeritus.

The speaker had been connected with Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto, for over fifty years, and had not yet received the distinction of Pastor emeritus.

Members of Police Force to Qualify in First Aid

Before They Are Recommended For Second Class Pay—P. C. Deannard Gets an Increase in Salary.

TO CHANGE TARIFF

Before the Chief Constable recommends a constable for second class pay, the man recommended must possess a certificate, showing that he has passed an examination in First Aid to the Injured. The above is the gist of a resolution adopted by the Police Comissioners at their meeting yesterday afternoon. It was also decided that this should be added as one as the permanent Rules of the Force.

In Chief Thompson's annual report he recommended that all his men be required to pass the above examination as being a means of adding to their efficiency. There may not be much occasion for practice, but on the other hand there might come a time when the rendering of First Aid before the arrival of a physician would be the means of saving a life. The officers of the law are present at the fires and there might be a fire at any time in the city and people injured, and the men could easily be trained to render first aid before a physician could be on the spot.

At present five members of the force possess the certificate. These are Detective Newhall, Sergeants Brown, Reid and Kidd, and P. C. Blade. The Chief was authorized by the Board to make the necessary arrangements with Dr. McPherson to conduct classes for the other members of the force with a view of having them qualify as soon as possible. Dr. McPherson was present at the meeting for a few minutes to back up the Chief in pointing out the advantages of classes of this sort among the men.

P. C. Deannard was a year with the force on March 16. The Chief recommended that he be raised to Second Class pay, dating from April 1st. It was felt by the Commissioners that it would not be fair to bring P. C. Deannard under the new rule on such short notice, as at best he could not hope to pass the examination under six months' work. His pay will be at the rate of $760.00 a year from April 1.

Other than a lengthy discussion on a fair license fee for two motor trucks which will operate in the city during this year, also consideration of making some changes in express tariffs and the passing of some accounts, the above two recommendations constituted the business done at the meeting. As pointed out by the Mayor, the by-law which at present governs the tariffs was passed some time ago when conditions were altogether different to those existing at present. It was the feeling that expressmen in the city were not living up to the charges set down therein, but considering the cost of feeding horses and wages now as compared with the time the by-law was put into operation, the tariff was hardly fair. The Mayor was asked to compile a list of rates he would consider fair to all concerned and present it to the Board at the next meeting which will be called at an early date. In the meantime the two motor trucks will be allowed to operate until a new by-law is decided upon.

The Helen Brown case was not touched upon much to the disappointment of a representative of a local paper which has been concerning itself over the affair lately.

Members Denounce Obsolete Systems in Canadian Penitentiaries

OTTAWA, March 31.—The House occupied the greater part of the sitting yesterday in discussing prison reform and the penitentiary system as administered by the Dominion Government.

Dr. Edwards (Frontenac), Mr. Bickerdike (Montreal), Col. Hugh Clark (North Bruce), and W. F. Nickle (Kingston), agreed in denouncing cruel and obsolete practices in Canadian penitentiaries.

Col. Clark paid a high tribute to the Ontario prison farm at Guelph, which he regarded as the model institution upon this continent. At the same time he declared that prison reform had progressed much farther in the United States than it had in Canada.

The subject came before the House when the estimates of the Department of Justice were under consideration in committee of supply. Dr. Edwards severely criticised the report of the royal commission which recently investigated his charges against the management of the Kingston Penitentiary.

W. F. Nickle (Kingston) warmly defended the royal commission against the attacks of the member from Frontenac.

Judge Doherty, Minister of Justice, regretted that the subject had become involved in a controversy over the actions of individuals. The commission had made many useful recommendations, which had been put into effect by the Department of Justice.

The balance of the day was taken up with the introduction of bills to amend the elections act and the estimates of the Inland Revenue Department.

Estimated weekly expense ... $ 28.00

A large number of the members have paid their dues since the meeting, and as a charge will be made of 5c per score of 8 shots for use of rifles ranges, ammunition and targets, the expense can be met and the work go on.

ORDERS ISSUED.

Orders by Officer Commanding Peterborough Civilian Rifle Association, "Home Guards":

Carrying out resolutions of general meeting, March 25, 1915, target practice will continue at the ranges every evening and Saturday afternoons, also one afternoon during the week, to be decided later. A charge of 5c per score of 8 rounds will be made for use of ranges and ammunition. Members may use their own rifles or ammunition, but charge will be the same.

Drill will continue on Thursday evening, and the class of instruction will be held after drill. A battalion of four double companies will be formed, and the following officers are detailed to organize these companies:

No. A Company—Capt. J. Pilling, Capt. C. J. Hicks.

No. B Company—Capt. C. E. Sisson. Capt. Keyes.

No. C Company—Capt. V. W. Lancaster, Lieut. Reg. Turner.

No. D Company—Capt. R. H. Parsons, Lieut. J. S. Watson.

Companies will be organized and be maintained at equal strength. Responsibility of attendance will be placed on section commanders and members are requested not to join this battalion unless they can give each Thursday for the purpose of drill. Members of the Home Guard must be members of the Rifle Association.

The battalion will parade for organization on Thursday, April 1st, at 8 p.m. Members will fall in on 12 company markers so that they may be posted to the four companies in sections.

By Order,
F. D. KERR, Capt. Adj.

Letters From Sergt.-Maj. Howarth

News Communications in Which Reference is Made to a Number of Peterboro' Boys Including Jas. Bills, Recently Wounded

SOLDIERS DOING WELL

The following letters have been received by Mrs. Fred Howarth from her husband, Sergt.-Major Howarth, with the 1st Contingent, now in France:

"We are back to work again. Doing our little bit as well as well we can You would be surprised to see how nicely the boys have taken to this job. The bullets and shells don't worry them one little bit. They look for them just as they would their rations. Jim Bills is outside cooking dinner for Arthur Field, "Dodger" Green and myself. A stray bullet has just hummed over his head, and all he said was 'Let me get this stuff cooked before you shoot me, d—you". That is a pretty fair sample of how the boys worry about the bullets. There are several deserted farms near the trenches, and at dusk the boys go out and come back with all sorts of vegetables. When we had our turn in billets Ernie (Sergt.) Nicholls, Field, Green and I had a big pancake feed; I made the pancakes, and the boys said they were good. I suppose they thought that if they did not I should have charged them with insubordination. We have four days in the trenches and four days in billets. It is just pitiable to see the number of ruined churches, just four walls and perhaps half a spire. In a village near us there is not a house that is habitable, they have been shelled to skelatons. The Germans use quite a number of star shells at night. They do not explode, but illuminate the country and really help us quite a bit. (Jimmy has just been swearing at another bullet). The star shells help us when we are working in the dark and many a man has been saved from falling in the mud, through the timely assistance of one of them. I got a box of cigarettes from mother, which were a treat to all. We get good food but feel the absence of "sweet stuff" a bit. Sam Mills got hit in the eye and had two days in the hospital, but is all right again. All the rest of the boys are well. Fred Stevens is Lance Sergeant, Arthur Ackerman is full Sergeant. Peterborough again, you see.

12—3——15; In The Trenches.

Peter Victor got a nasty wound in the leg about half an hour ago. He is the first of our crowd to get it. I am all right yet and pretty comfortable. We still find time to laugh at things and take life as it comes. I had a letter from Captain Carruthers some time ago, but have not had time to answer it yet. I also got two letters from you to-day.

In Billets, 15-3-15.

We are back in the billets again, as snug as a bug in a rug. I think I told you that I have Jimmy Bills as a batman, and he looks well after me. As a forager he is without equal. He will leave the billet and come back with something; eggs, chicken or rabbit, it doesn't matter what it is he gets it, and that's the main thing.

The same crowd are together, Ernie Nicholls (Sergt. Nicholls), Arthur Field, Dodger Green, Bob Kirk, Jimmy Bills and myself. When we arrived at our new billet, after our shell in the trenches we found some of the Peterborough boys from the artillery, "Dicky" Boone of the test, now a full sergeant, also Sergt. Guerin. We (Field, Ackerman, myself and a few more of the boys) had a yarn swapping contest and at night had a hand at bridge in our billet. We have to keep under cover in day time and do our roaming about after dark as our billet is within easy reach of the German artillery Our troops are doing fine. We haven't had many casualties yet, nobody you know except Peter Victor, and as I told you in my last letter poor old Victor got it in the leg. We haven't heard from him since he was sent to the hospital.

It is pitiable to see the villages about here. They are just a mass of ruins, the churches in particular, and when you stop to consider that these villages were the homes of people who asked for nothing less than to be let alone and mind their own business, it makes you think what a dreadful thing war is. The people about here are very poor. Some of them will do anything for a couple of tins of "bully beef." At one place we were at twenty children used to come around to the cook house every day to get something to eat. We are having a real good rest for a day or so and then go back to the trenches. I am certainly looking forward to that holiday, and between ourselves I don't think it will be very long. Our artillery is far ahead of the Germans now, and I think the face of the map will be altered before long.

PONY NOTICE

Contest closes to-night. The merchants who are conducting the Pony Contest have decided to have Mr. Horace Walkey of the Bank of Montreal to audit their books during the period of the contest. They have also agreed to appoint him as official judge of the counting of the ballots.

All ballot boxes and votes will be collected to-night by Mr. Walkey. As some of the boys have a quantity of votes that are not yet deposited in ballot boxes, they may deposit same to-day or meet Mr. Walkey between 7.30 and 9 p.m. at Webber's drug store on Charlotte Street, where he will receive them and give receipt for same. Boys who have quantities will largely assist in work of counting by giving votes to Mr. Walkey and save the assorting out in names.. As Mr. Webber and Empire Theatre are open in evenings, the merchants have arranged with Mr. Walkey as above to give every boy a chance to get in all his votes. The counting of the votes will be proceeded with at once and the winner announced as soon as possible.

WITH THE PETERBOROUGH BOYS IN BARRACKS AT BELLEVILLE

How the Enlisted Men Are Housed, Equipped and Trained For the Front—39th Battalion is Quartered in Canning Factory.

NEWS OF THE SOLDIERS

(Written by Adj. F. H. Dobbin)

The streets of Belleville are spotted with khaki-clad figures. They move in twos, threes and often in groups of ten or twelve. The men do not stroll. There is no appearance of idling. Sometimes there pause to converse with the civilian. Such conversation as passes is one with another. The attitude, as one may observe, is that of earnestness. Of some duty recently assigned or expectant. Occasionally the flat topped hat of the enlisted man is seen standing up from the throng on the street. The wearer is one of the many specimens of manhood, six feet and over, who have volunteered, and who are undergoing initiation into the preliminary work of the life of the soldier.

The Influence of Discipline.

The attitude of the enlisted man is one of partial reserve. He is feeling the influence of discipline. A gathering of men brought together for a purpose and lacking discipline is but a mob. Presently the volunteer, having absorbed the idea that he is one of the cogs on the wheel of efficiency, and that his movement is to be regulated as a part of the larger movement of the whole gives himself willingly and cheerfully to attaining proficiency in detail. Months from now, adherance to that discipline and promptness in execution of the order may mean success or failure, the carrying of a position, or the loss of a trench. He, in the first weeks of his drill, begins to realize that this preparation for the battlefield is indeed serious work. He is not invited to suppress all he has of initiative, but to hold such in reserve until he may see how best to apply. The end to be achieved is to turn out, not automatons but intelligent soldiers. The personal equasion of bravery, dash, vim and esprit de corps is taken as a part of the game. It is not even thought that the volunteer will be lacking in these attributes. And he never is.

The Medical Inspection.

All over the country men are enlisting and enrolling. Taken in and drilled for a few weeks they are transferred to one of the military centres and there stationed. While physical inspection has been made when the enlistment took place, at the temporary headquarters there is more rigorous inspection. It is the pity of it all that only the best, or nearest best should be selected. But it is beyond question that the man who may have some physical defect or ailment, hitherto latent, may under the stress of the campaign and exposure, fall down and become a positive hindrance and charge on the force. The field is no place for any but those in fit condition and who may be forced to retire from the field only because of wounds received in action. So thorough inspection is made, and in cases of weeding out and possible rejections. For things seemingly trivial, but likely to grow into positive obstructions farther on.

Some hundred of men have gone to the training headquarters from Peterborough. Detachments have moved off so late as the last two weeks. Others will follow so soon as provision may be made to care for and house and train. To get the best of drill and experience men must be drilled in masses as large as may be, and in many respects approaching the conditions of field service. This is impossible, except at a few points, where suitable buildings can be had to house and territory to allow of evolution and practice. All this is in care of the military authorities and who are acting wisely and for good reason.

At the Training Camp.

The enlisted man leaves home, or the centre where enlisted, and either in civilian dress or in equipment provided is moved to the drill headquarters. There follows inspection, and the outfitting. Just as the novitiate in some monastic order, sets himself apart from the world, the coming soldier sets aside the things of civil life. He is given a complete and ample outfit. These he draws from the stores of the quartermaster, who is a sort of munificient and beneficient provider. Once in his new belongings the clothes of the enrolled man are carefully parcelled and despatched to his home. He may use them months or years after. For the present he is the King's man. He wears the King's uniform. Civil affairs, aside of the interests of wife and family are no concern of his. Such are laid aside with the garments he has discarded.

Equipping the Recruit.

That we may know how our soldier is provided for let us enumerate his equipment. First let us look at the stores from which this equipment is drawn. All that care and forethought can do has been exhausted in providing things which are necessary, and such things. Safe to say that on an average the volunteer has not had of equal quality in the whole course of his life. Two or three buildings are made use of as store houses. A disused school has been hastily fitted up. It is crammed with good things. Barely room to leave a corner for the man busy in recording the stock and givins outs. For a most careful and accurate stock-taking is practiced. Every article and object has to be accounted for.

Events on the Austro-Italian Frontier—On the left of the map is Lanio, where the Italians seized supplies for the Krupp Works. At Tyrol and Trieste the Austrians are constructing defences and mobilizing troops. They have dynamited buildings near Lake Guarda and torn down a part of the town of Roveredo, which might be in the way of artillery fire.

If a counter or two were provided, the doors thrown open, the prices advertised, the department could do a land office business as a retailer of good merchandise. For there would be no question of quality. Underclothing of the very finest and warmest, socks, mitts, mufflers, shirts, jackets, and all intimate personal wear are piled around in profusion. The now familiar khaki uniforms in sets and sizes for all. Nearly two thousand suits made from cloths well woven on the looms of the Auburn Woollen Co., at Peterborough. The greatcoats look especially comfy appearing. Boots of all sizes, mostly of reddish brown colour. These are some of the leather outfits that we read so much about. But these have been inspected and there is little doubt of their serviceability. At any rate the soldiers wearing them say they are fine.

What They Receive.

Here, as a matter of record, is the personal equipment of the soldier and which he enjoys. The list is that issued to the dismounted men, or infantry: Boots, ankle; caps, forage; greatcoat, jacket, putteen, shirts, service; rousers, service; trousers, drab; cap, sleeping; housewife; knife, table; knife, pocket; razor; socks, 2 pairs; towels, hand, 2; blacking or polish; mitts, winter; waistcoat, cardigan; boot laces, 3 pairs; brush, hair; brush, shaving; brush, clothes; comb, hair; drawers, winter, 2 pairs; drawers, summer, 2 pairs; forks, table, 2; holdall; shirts, flannel, grey; shirts, light; spoons, table; dubbin (for boots); kit bag.

In addition each man is given a stout mattrass of ticking, which is filled with oat straw, and forms a bed. A pillow filled with straw is the complement of the tick. Two big warm, woollen blankets are handed each man. Then with his rifle, cartridge belt, bayonet belt and bayonet, canteen, haversack, etc., one would think that the soldier had acquired so much responsibility in these personal belongings that he would be loaded down. So he would be if he essayed to carry all he claims as his own. On the line of march some of it is taken care of for him. It is crammed into a capacious bag, blasoned with his number and corps and carried on the transport train. It is his privilege and perplexity to find it when he is ready to turn in at night. But the soldier takes care of his own.

It will be seen that the above is a pretty full equipment. Of course neckties and sleeve buttons and such trifles are not included. These have no place in the force. They are left behind with the affairs of civil life. On what is so well provided any man can get along. If he needs anything else he must buy it out of his own private fortune.

Feeding the Soldiers.

Having outfitted the soldier the next thing is to feed him and sleep him. Both most material. The first Napoleon, of whom we hear good and bad, said, or is reported to have said, which is the same thing at this distance, that an army marched on its stomach. hTe eminent Corsican was most right. Experience has amply proved. A well fed soldier is a dangerous thing and that is the kind we are after making, I'ye mind. That is the end of our exertions. The soldier must be housed and mealed and that is what they are doing in Belleville. Doing it well, too, considering. This is our first war, our first preparatory experience. After we have gotten our dander up and squabbled with our neighbours for a few years, and everlasting punched the stuffing out of them, and do be acclimatised, so to speak, and do some things better. That is the result of experience. So to house the soldiers such buildings as were available had to be utilised. Something better than temporary wooden structures had to be made use of, for the winter has been cold

Housed in Factory.

The buildings of the big and deceased canning factory have been utilized. These are a few blocks from the centre of the city and are about as suitable a premises as could have been found. Large, roomy, the floors extend from one end to the other. It is of three stories. Substantial and built of brick. It was thoroughly cleaned, the walls whitened, floors scrubbed and made clean and sweet. The lower floor is given over to the mess room, and tabled and seated to serve eleven hundred at one sitting. At one end, and separated from the main room are the appliances for cooking. Four big double stoves, or furnaces, are attended to by eight cooks. Special boilers provide steam and hot water in large quantities. All the table ware is of the enamelled kind, and is scalded after each using with boiling water and dried by heat.

The stoves are set on a wide platform of concrete, removing all danger of fire. Sinks, washing troughs, cupboards, and a complete sewer service has been installed. A big refrigerator takes care of the meats. A part of the bread is baked on the premises. Great, big, crusty loves, with the "kind-that-mother-used-to-make" appearance show up handsomely. Other bread is supplied by local bakers. Foods and supplies are bought in large quantities and of the very best. There is no lack of provender. A good appetite is ensured by the outdoor exercise and there is ample to subdue such wants.

Where They Sleep.

As to the soldier's sleeps, as the children say, the two floors have been fitted up with open bunks, constructed of planed scantlings. These are built across the width of the rooms, each set of bunks provide for twelve men. Getting into the upper bunks is no more troublesome than climbing into the upper berth on a Pullman. Once in the sleeper may be calm and dream away until the bugle call rouses him for the duties of the day. He lays on the straw filled tick, inserts the straw filled pillow under his head, snugs down into his warm and expensive blankets and snores off to dreamland. All lights go off at ten o'clock. The strictest order is maintained. There is no sky-larking. This getting a good night's sleep is serious business. The only lights left burning, or rather, lighted, are at the entrance to the stairs. The dormorities are warmed by big open draft hot air furnaces, each set on a wide base of concrete. All pipes are carefully portected and are kept quite within view from the furnace to the chimney.

Guarding Against Fire.

Something has been printed as to the building being a "fire-trap." Nothing could be farther from the facts. All that human carefulness can do is done to guard against the possibility of fire. There are ample windows and fire escapes. All day and all night the corridors of the dormorities are patrolled by the sentries on duty. They walk unceasingly up and down and across and watch and peer that no fire is in sight. The only way in which fire could occur would be from some soldier trying, by stealth, to smoke in bed. So far that has not occurred. Should a man be detected in so doing the penalty would be heavy.

On a raised platform at the end of the eating room is a piano. The force may be regaled with music while at meals, if the officer in charge permits. In the evenings the men get up concerts and entertainments, and the excellence of the programmes would distance many of the events for which we pay good money to hear and see. The singing is fine and there is plenty of talent available.

Cleanliness Essential.

Cleanliness is a thing expected and looked after. That there be no excuse ample facilities and conveniences have been provided. The fittings are most substantial, even if not so elaborate as in the city hotel. Around one end of each of the flats a space is partitioned off for lavatory and bath room. The baths are of the shower variety. Each set of conveniences is served with both hot and cold water and the sprinkling system is efficient. The soldier takes his choice and exercises his preference. Not only may he bathe if he chooses, but he must do so. That is part of the regulations having for its care the health of the soldier. Clean towels are provided fh profusion. Thirty men can bathe on each floor at once. The lavatories are well fitted up and most excellent in arrangement. Drinking water is served on each flat by means of the sanitary drinking jet, doing away with all cups and bowls. Taken altogether the soldier is well clothed, well fed, and cleanliness is looked after and insisted on. He has time allowed for some recreations and is, in many cases, better off physically than he has been for many years. If any ailment develops or disease shows itself it will come about in spite of the very thorough sanitary arrangements that have been made and that are being carried out and enforced.

Peterborough Men There.

Of the Peterborough men doing things there is Capt. and Quartermaster Carruthers, who is one busy man. It is his care to handle the stores and to dispense. It is some job. Lieut. Racham is in charge of the signalling corps and making good. Lieut. Ross Cameron is into harness, and a general favourite, as is Lieut. Eastwood. Of the men themselves, Belleville peoplehave only words of praise. All are diligently trying to perfect themselves in their duties, to become efficient and to cross the ocean to share in the discomfiture of the Germans. When their time comes they will surely give as good an account as their comrades who ple have only words of praise. All are

BROTHER OF PETERBORO' MAN INJURED AT CHAPELLE

Three of the Five Mantell Brothers Have Figured in the Casualty Lists Since the Outbreak of the War—Letters From Two of the Mantell Brothers.

Word has been received to the effect that another of the Mantell brothers has been injured. This time it is Sergeant Richard Mantell. This makes three out of five brothers that have figured in the casualty list since the outbreak of the war. They are as follows: Private Herbert Mantell, killed at the battle of Mons, Private Robert Mantell, wounded at the battle of Mons and now interned in a German prison camp, and Sergeant Richard Mantell, wounded at the battle of Moute Chappelle.

Sergeant William Mantell of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers, and now with the second Canadian contingent at Kingston, is a brother. His wife and family reside at 545 Chamberlen Street.

Shot in the Face.

"I got shot in the face on the 10th, Pitt, Chatham. I am glad to say Pitt, Chatham. I am lad to say that it is only a flesh wound, and will not be long before it is better. We got an awful smash-up at a place called Neuve Chapelle, but I'm pleased to say we got what we wanted. It was a rotten night! Sorry to tell you that my chum was killed in action there."

On Patrol Duty.

Another brother, Petty Officer Edward Mantell of H. M. S. Astrea, has the following to say in a letter to his sister:

"We have not been able to set foot ashore for a long time now, having either been patrolling and lying off the enemies' colony, South-West Africa, we arrived at Walfisch Bay at Christmas, by convoying troops to the Cape. Walfisch Bay is a small piece of British territory situated about the centre of the west line of German Southwest Africa. It had been held by the enemy since the outbreak of hostilities, but they did not oppose the landing of troops, who soon established a base. About the middle of January our troops occupied Swakopmand, losing a couple of men, who were blown up by a land mine. We were lying off the town, but did not bombard it, as no opposition was given.

Found Infernal Machine.

"Our troops found an infernal machine ashore in the sheds of the Wanmann Line of steamships. 'Twas a sort of primitive torpedo, as far as I can gather, and believe it was intended for us. We had visited the town occasionally, just to let them see that we were knocking around; a sort of "I've-got-my-eyes-on-you" kind of business. Anyhow, it was rather fortunate that they didn't try it on us as I for one am not anxious to become shark's food yet awhile. There are plenty of these sportsmen hereabouts.

"The beach from the ship, is the most dismal hole one could gaze upon. As far as the eye can reach there is nothing but sandy desert and sand dunes barren of vegetation. Across the desert, however, I believe the country is very fertile.

Same Temperature All Year.

"Although situated in the tropics the temperature here is not at all bad. The glass remains at eighty all the year round.

"The spirit of the ship's company is indeed marvellous, although we are all longing to return to the Cape, just to get a run ashore. Impromptu concerts are an every day occurrence, and ships laden with stores and troops are arriving daily. We can't get depressed."

DISMISSED AFTER A COURTMARTIAL

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, March 31—A cable despatch to-day says that Lieutenant John Wood Bottomley, Paymaster of the First Canadian Overseas Battalion, has been dismissed from service after trial by court martial. Bottomley is given in the militia list as an officer in the 4th Lincoln Regiment.

HORSE DROPPED FROM EXHAUSTION

A horse, the property of one John Doig, got tired of this strenuous life and lay down on the street about 5:20 last night and refused to go farther. By its general appearance the oats it has received for some time past were few and far between, and its lying down on the street was most likely due to exhaustion from lack of food.

A policeman ended its suffering with a well-aimed bullet shortly after. Interment took place at the incinerator this forenoon.

To Help Nature Shed a Bad Complexion

Beauty devotees are enthusiastic over the beautifying qualities of mercolized wax. Perhaps nothing discovered within recent years accomplishes so much, so quickly, without harm, without detaining one indoors, and at such small expense. The principal reason for its wonderful merit is that it works in harmony with physiological laws. Instead of hiding, or "covering" complexion defects, it removes them. The wax actually takes off the aged, faded, sallow or blotchy cuticle, gently, gradually, enabling no inconvenience. It is Nature's way of renewing skin tissue. When the natural process is retarded by reason of distinct circumstances of nerve tone, mercolized wax comes to the rescue and hastens the skin shedding. The new complexion which appears is a beautiful one, youthful, healthy, exquisitely beautiful. If you've never tried mercolized wax, get an ounce of it at the drug store, use at night like cold cream, wash it off in the morning.

Another natural beautifying treatment for wrinkled, flabby skin—is to bathe the face in a lotion made by dissolving an ounce of saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. This is remarkably effective.

REV. MR. SMITH AND MARIE CORELLI

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In Monday's issue of your paper appeared the synopsis of an address delivered by a Rev. Mr. Smith in Murray Street Baptist Church. The subject of the discourse was one of Marie Corelli's novels, and the object of the discourse seemed to be, to cast discredit upon the use of religious forms and ceremonies.

As to the propriety of choosing such a topic for an address, from what purports to be a Christian pulpit, I will say nothing. Nor do I wish to enter into any discussion as to the necessity of Baptism. But I would like to ask your readers what they think of the Rev. Mr. Smith's arguments as he himself sets them forth.

First argument—Christ said: "He that believth and is baptized shall be saved"; therefore Baptism is not necessary to salvation.

Second argument—The Ethiopean said to Philip: "Here is water, what doth hinder me from being baptized." Philip said: "If thou believest with thy whole heart, thou mayest." And Philip baptized him. Therfore Baptism is not essential.

Third argument—Christ said: "Let the little ones come unto Me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Therefore that church that insists on bringing the little ones to Him that they might obtain that inheritance which He purchased for them at the price of His blood, pursues a course that makes infidels.

Last argument—Marie Corelli, who the speaker admitted, was somewhat of a cross between a Christian Scientist and a Buddhist, "put religious ceremonies where they belonged"; and she must be right because she is a clever woman and gets a lot of money for her books.

Oh bosh! The truth as regards this matter as well as other doctrines of religion is what is is independent of what Rev. Mr. Smith or Marie Corelli may think or feel about it.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, March 30.—Assertions that a change of policy had seemingly prevented until May, if not altogether, the entrance of Italy into the war, did a good deal today to lift the price of wheat. The market closed strong, 1¾c to 2⅛c above last night's close. Corn wound up with a gain of ⅛c to 1⅛c, and oats unchanged to ⅛c higher. In provisions, the outcome varied from 12½c decline to a rise of a shade.

Strongest prices of the day in wheat came in the last hour. On top of the cable news, complaints piled up from Illinois and Missouri that dry, cold weather was hurting the winter crop. A comprehensive report, indicating that winter-killed area was small, and that the condition of the plant thruout the country as a whole averaged better than in December last, had only a transient effect on the market.

Corn mounted with wheat, and as a result of a material improvement in cash demand, due largely to rough weather. There were also rumors of some export business.

Adverse conditions for seeding tended to make oats firm. Seaboard call, however, was disappointing.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, March 30. — Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 433 cattle, 974 hogs, 136 sheep and lambs and 255 calves.

Best choice, lightweight butchers' cattle were in demand and sold steadily at Monday's advance. The fat cattle market was unchanged in values with nearly everything cleaned up in good time.

Receipts of milkers and springers were larger, but not greater than the demand, and values equaled those paid last week.

Sheep and lambs remained at Monday's high market value.

Hog prices were quoted about steady.

Butchers' Cattle.

THE WORLD OF SP[ORT]

EXPECT AN EVEN BREAK AT OTTAWA THI[S] [YE]AR

OTTAWA, March 30 — Indications now point to a resumption of hostilities in the Canadian Ball League, with a six-club circuit, consisting of Ottawa, London, Hamilton, Brantford, St. Thomas and Guelph. Information has finally been received from the Military Department that the soldiers will vacate Lansdowne Park before May 1st, so that the Ottawa Club will be able to proceed as usual. The club will meet this week to discuss prospects, and while some think it would be suicidal to go ahead this season, the directors are evidently prepared to take a chance. They hope for at least an even break, and claim that to suspend operations for this year would be to injure the game to a great extent. Manager Shaughnessy is expected back from the Pacific Coast on Thursday, and things will then be whipped into shape.

There are four holdouts in the Ottawa Club, and al[l] w[ill] ed. They are Rogers, and Gero. PLAYERS TO BLAME.

sted Fans by Holding up Clubs and Patronage Dwindled.

CHICAGO, March 29—Thomas M. Chivington, President of the American Association, does not agree with the plan of arbitration proposed by David Fultz, President of the Baseball Players' Fraternity, for settling the baseball war.

"Fultz is talking from the player's viewpoint," Chivington says. "Unsettled business conditions, combined with the baseball war, have forced all leagues in the country to adopt a policy of retrenchment. Salaries and player limits have been cut, and I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that one-third of the ball players in the country will be without employment this season.

"All this is due to the stand taken by the ball players last season. With the Federal League as a club, and with the Fraternity to back them up in many of their demands, the men took liberties that cannot be allowed if the game is to prosper.

"Repeated jumping has disgusted the patrons of baseball for which the club owners must suffer. To protect themselves the club owners must cut expenses."

BA[SEBALL] CLUB OFFICERS ELECTED

[Th]ere is an effort being made to [org]anize a Church Baseball League in [th]e city for the coming season. Several of the churches of the city have a number of young men connected with them, and it will not be very difficult to get four or five entries in a league of this sort.

A start was made at a meeting of the young men of Knox Presbyterian Church last night, when a club was organized and officers elected. Mr. A. McKenzie will write the teachers in the different Protestant churches in the city asking them to co-operate with his club in forming a league for the coming season.

The officers elected at Knox Church last night were as follows:

Hon. President—Rev. Jas. A. MacKenzie.
President—Mr. A. McKenzie.
Vice-President—Mr. S. Byers.
Secretary-Treasurer — Mr. Dave Mordon.
Manager—Mr. C. Thurber.
Executive—Messrs. Roy Smith, Bob Pilling and L. H. Ingram.

GRAND OPENING OF ROLLER RINK

Is Scheduled For Good Friday —A Number of New Features

Mr. Jack McNish, the popular and well-known rink manager of Canada and United States, has leased the Brock Street Rink for the coming season, and under his careful attention, the rink will be conducted in a high-class manner. Every new feature in the skating line will be adopted from time to time.

Mr. McNish is now using an electric surface machine on the floor, which when finished will be in a perfect condition, every detail in the making being carefully looked after. The floor is treated daily with a liquid preparation, dustless, anti slip, which prevents slipping.

EXCLUSIVE PATRONAGE.

The ventilation is well looked after, and the skate room equipment is the very latest and best to be had.

The rink will be one of the best conducted rinks in Canada, and it is only natural that Peterborough should have the opportunity of enjoying this high-class amusement.

Relative to the above condition, roller skating is, and has been, highly spoken of by leading physicians, to be one of the best and healthiest exercises under the condition which will prevail at Brock Street Rink.

Three big sessions, Good Friday: Morning 10 to 12, afternoon 2 to 4.30, evening 7.30 to 10.330. Band, afternoon and evening. Exclusive patronage.

EASTER HOLIDAY FARES CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Return tickets will be issued between all stations in Canada, Fort William and East, also to Detroit, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Niagara Falls and Buffalo, N.Y., as follows:

Single fare tickets good going Friday, April 2rd, return limit April 3nd, 1915. Fare and one-third tickets good going April 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th. Return limit April 6th, 1915.

Particulars from any Canadian Pacific Ticket Agent or write M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent, Toronto, Ont. 6d-73

"Not till you apologise to me-" shouted the minister. It was some time before order was restored.

As for Sir George Perley's report concerning the bad condition of the boots at Salisbury Plain, General Sam brushed it aside with the observation, "He was just transmitting a message, the same as one of my clerks—that's all." Mr. Macdonald suggested that this was a brusque way to characterize a confidential cablegram from the Canadian High Commissioner to the Prime Minister.

"Can't help it—it's right!" quoth General Sam.

As to the representations from Britain or from Military Boards of enquiry "I wouldn't give my own opinion when I know I am right, for all Christendom."

Replying to Mr. Markey, K.C., regarding the Ames-Holden boot with rubber cemented vamp, General Sam said he preferred an unlined boot, but added that the leather lining was better than canvas. As to the evidence that soldiers had been forced to wear shingles and bags tied to their feet, General Hughes declared that it was a "deliberate lie."

"Two witnesses from Halifax swore to it," commented Mr. Macdonald.

"Who?" demanded General Hughes.

"Major Doane of the 63rd," retorted Mr. Macdonald.

"Never heard of the man."

"Therefore I presume," countered Mr. Macdonald sarcastically, "he does not exist, and therefore he lies."

"I say any man who said that is a liar!" retorted the Minister, "he should be in a lunatic asylum or penitentiary---he is either a fool or a liar; I would like to have the handling of him for five minutes!"

"That is very sanguinary talk," cautioned Mr. Macdonald.

"I dare say, but that's the way I have done all my life time."

"But that does not dispose of the cold facts," said Mr Macdonald. "The man should be dismissed from the force quicker than lightning," declared the Minister, pounding the table." "Then you refuse to pay any attention to the judgment of General Alderson," was Mr. Macdonald's final question.

"You pay attention to General Alderson," retorted General Sam. "I'll pay attention to facts."

AN AEROPLANE RAID

PETROGRAD, March 31.—Fifteen German taubes swooped down upon a house near Ostrolenka, near Poland, supposed to contain the headquarters staff of the Russian Grand Duke Nicholas, it was officially announced to-day. The Germans hurled 100 bombs, none of which struck the building.

SIEGE IS ABANDONED

PETROGRAD, March 31.—The Germans have abandoned the siege of the Polish fortress of Ossowetz, it was announced in a semi-official statement to-day. After several weeks of battering away at long range, the enemy found further progress out of the question and yesterday began withdrawing his siege guns towards the Prussian border. The German retirement at this point indicates the collapse of Von Hindenberg's whole campaign against the Warsaw-Petrograd Railway, according to the war office. Germans who massed for another attack on Przasnysz, are also reported retiring upon the border.

Correspondents say that the Austrian losses in the fighting north of the Vereeske pass, in the Carpathians, have been enormous compared to the number of troops engaged at that point. In last Sunday's fighting, the Austrians lost at least 18,000 in killed, wounded and prisoners.

SUBMARINE SUNK

PARIS, March 31.—The French ministry of marine announced to-day that in all probability a German submarine was sunk off Diepe yesterday by a French ship belonging to the second light squadron. The German began to submerge when she sighted the warship. The latter began firing at the periscope, and as the periscope sank beneath the waves, the warship overran the submarine. A large field of oil soon overspread the spot.

CREW ARE SAFE

LONDON, March 31.—The Flaminian, the steamer sunk by a German submarine, was a 3500 ton liner owned by the Ellerman Company, whose ships ply mostly between English and Mediterranean seaports. She was built in 1914, and was 323 feet in length. Shipping records show that she was a slow vessel with a speed of only 12 knots, making her an easy prey for a speedy submarine. Her crew of 41 are safe. They were landed at Holyhead this afternoon by a Danish steamer. The Flaminian had accommodations for a large number of passengers but on the voyage out of Glasgow carried only her cargo and crew.

I said certainly, and called for a voluntary parade for divine service. Every man responded, and in a few minutes we were assembled in an old barn sitting around the chaplain and singing praises to the spasmodic accompaniment of 8-15 guns, which are set about 50 yards in rear.

DIN OF BATTLE IS AWFUL.

The din of battle is simply awful at times, and every second is filled with the vitriotic shieking of shrapnel or 303 or mauser. There is safety nowhere within three miles of the fire trenches—a poor woman was completely severed in two three miles back yesterday. This building which we are in now has been shelled regularly at intervals of a day or two. We dive for the cellars and base of walls and a ditch near by when we hear the big ones coming. It's great sport for the boys to dodge shrapnel. You can form the excitement when I tell you that only a few moments ago a high explosive shell got a direct hit in a large building about 100 yards in our right and simply annihilated the entire building—lucky the party who had been occupying it had moved out last night. It will no doubt be different for an unitiated to understand some of the references, and I am very sorry that I cannot spare more time to fully explain our organisation and disposition in this game.

NOT ACCORDING TO DRILL BOOKS.

Be it enough to say here that nothing I ever saw in all my years of experience as a soldier exceeds the violation, flagrant violation, of the teachings and principle as laid down in all the drill books or schools as are the actual doings in this campaign. Things are totally different. They happen different, and it will be the business of the war department to get very busy and at least burn all the red tape and drill instructions, as we will have no further use for them. There is no place for the dapper machine made soldier here — it's brains and intellect that count, combined with pluck and courage, and a man cannot have too great a stock of the latter. All our movements and work go on during the night, of which none the less sad are our funeral ceremonies, of which I have held several, and we have had ten altogether since coming up. The Germans flash a light called a "Very Pistol" on us in the darkness, and if uncovered we are treated to a shower bath from a machine gun—it tickles some, doesn't it? We have had several wounded in that manner.

MOVING TO LABASSEE.

My Captain has just come in and informed me that the rumour is about that we are to move to-morrow to the west, in the neighbourhood of Labassee. If that is so, you may expect to read double head lines in the newspapers very soon. We are not supposed to write news of the movement of troops, but, stranger to relate, the Canadian papers always like to be well informed of our doings, and before we see it in the London papers too. The papers were wrong in their guess about where we landed in France and also about our being stationed at Rouen. We simply skipped right into the firing line from the transport, and have been doing the trick ever since.

Now once more I thank you for all your kindly references and hope and prayer for our and my future. It is my only wish that I may be permitted to "carry on" as I started and to safely pilot my lads safely through to their own credit and to the credit of our beloved Canadian home, and as for myself in command, I hope of course to come through safely and be permitted to quietly resume my ordinary walk of life.

CALL TO LAKEFIELD SUSTAINED

MILVERTON, Ont., March 30—The Presbytery of Stratford, in special session here to-day, sustained the call from the Presbyterian congregation at Lakefield, Peterborough Presbytery, to Rev. T. J. Robinson of Burns Church, Milverton.

TRIBUTE TO REV CANON DAVIDSON

Referring to the mission, recently conducted by Rev. Canon Davidson in the Anglican Church of Port Perry, the Port Perry Star has the following to say:

"Canon Davidson is not an orator, but his utterances are forceful, logical and conspicuous for their absolute purity of expression. While the services were clothed with considerable more warmth than the public are inclined to associate with Episcopalism and divested of much of the formalism which outsiders consider cold, yet there was not the slightest suggestion of the revival clap-trap of the Rev. Bill Sunday type. The speaker urged in simple language, the clean, upright, manly life. Hell and devil, if not altogether obsolete words in his vocabulary, were not employed, they were given a well merited rest.

Something-for-nothing didn't appear to be part of the Canon's philosophy. We do not recall that anyone was invited to "get saved," but all were urged through divine power to live up to the standard character that would make them worth saving.

OBITUARY

GEORGE BALLANTYNE.

A highly respected resident, in the person of George Ballantyne, passed away Monday night at the residence of his father in Emily. The deceased was well known in Emily and Cavan, where he lived all his life. He leaves to mourn his loss his father and mother and six brothers, James and William of this city, Charles of Brantford, Bert of Toronto, Norman and Frank at home, and two sisters, Mrs. Morrison of Cavan, and Miss Addie at home.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, lot 20, concession 1, of Emily, on Thursday afternoon at 2 p.m., and proceed to Gardener's cemetery for interment.

Shaft Smashed in Auto Collision

An accident occurred at the corner of George and Simcoe streets last evening, which at one time promised to have serious results, when an automobile belonging to the Pulkinghorn Livery collided with a horse and buggy. The auto was proceeding south on George street, and the horse and buggy, driven by Mr. Collins, was going east on Simcoe, when they connected on the crossing. A shaft was smashed but otherwise no damage was done. The auto hit the horse sidewise, and was stopped very quickly.

Traffic going north or south always has the right-of-way, providing drivers are not going too fast, and from the fact that the car was stopped in such a short time indicates that the chauffeur could not have been making very fast time.

Inspector is After The Meat Vendors

Sanitary Inspector Spence proposes to try out a couple of cases under the by-law governing the Exposure of Food Stuffs, which is being violated by some vendors of meat throughout the city. He examined one load of meat this morning, which was being offered for sale to local butchers and found that the covering was not very clean and the meat was not prepared in a very thorough manner. In all probability the first case will come before Magistrate Dumble to-morrow morning.

MOTHERS' CLUB'S GOOD MEETING

A very enjoyable meeting of the Mothers' Club of the King George School was held yesterday afternoon. After the regular meeting of the club, a most interesting paper was read by Mrs. W. E. Conway. Mrs. Jas. Locke contributed a splendid instrumental solo and also accompanied Master Sam Whitehouse, who sang "The Boys of the King." Many thanks are due the last named three for the pleasure they gave. The club is pleased to announce that they have secured six new members, bringing the membership up to 88. The next meeting will be held on April 12th, when the members are requested to bring needles, thimbles and scissors.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. and Mrs. John Quartermaine, and Miss Milfor, left to-day for Victoria, B.C., where they will reside in future.

Mrs. Collier and little son and Mrs. Lightfoot are spending a few weeks with the latter's daughter, Mrs. E. N. Jones, St. Catharines.

THE SUMMER HOLIDAYS.

People fortunate enough to be sure of summer vacations have to-day their plans early. This year there are reasons for laying them earlier than ever.

After the early part of May in past years, thousands were leaving the American shores bound for Europe. By the end of June thousands of school teachers, students and sightseers have also looked to Europe for their summer vacation. Where are all these people going this summer? Owing to the war, not to Europe, and this great army of summer tourists are looking for new fields to explore and new playgrounds to visit. Canada offers just the ideal places with variety that will suit the most fastidious. Present indications give promise that these resorts are going to have the biggest season in their history, as our cousins from the other side of the international border are looking this way for their objective point this summer. Now is the time, therefore, for Canadians to make their plans and secure their accommodation in the charming districts that include the following: Kawartha Lakes, Peterborough County; Muskoka Lakes; Lake of Bays; The Magnetawan River; Algonquin Park; Timagami, and the 30,000 islands of the Georgian Bay.

Drop a postal card to C. E. Horning, D.P.A., Union Station, Toronto, for handsome descriptive literature of any of these districts.

Devotions For Holy Week

Hours for the Various Services on Holy Thursday, Good Friday and [illegible] Easter Sunday.

The devotions in the three Catholic parishes of the city during the remaining days of Holy Week are of special signification, especially at the Cathedral on Holy Thursday. The hours of the various services are as follows:

St. Peter's Cathedral.

Thursday—Pontifical High Mass at 8 o'clock, celebrated by His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, at which the oils used in the administration of the sacraments during the year will be blessed. Holy hour, 7:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.

Friday—Mass of the Pre-sanctified and Adoration of the Cross at 9 a.m. Way of the Cross 3 p.m. Way of the Cross and sermon on the Passion of Christ at 7:30 p.m.

Saturday—Blessing of the Easter and Baptismal water, also the Paschal candle, commences at 7 a.m. Mass at 8 a.m.

Easter Sunday—Services at 8 a.m. and 10:30 a.m. Vespers at 7 p.m.

Church of the Sacred Heart.

Thursday—Mass at 8:30 a.m. Holy hour from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Friday—Mass of the Pre-sanctified at 9 a.m. Way of the Cross 3 p.m. Way of the Cross and sermon on the Passion of Christ 7:30 p.m.

Saturday—Blessing of the Baptismal water at 7:30 a.m. Mass at 8:30.

Sunday—Services at the usual hour.

Church of the Immaculate Conception

Thursday—High Mass at 7 a.m. Evening holy hour beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Friday—Mass of the Pre-sanctified at 9 a.m. Way of the Cross 3 p.m. Way of the Cross and sermon on the Passion of Christ, at 7:30 p.m.

Saturday—Mass at 7 a.m.

Sunday—Services at the regular hours.

The bells in the three churches will be rung at the Gloria of the Mass on Thursday and not again until the Gloria of the Mass on Saturday. Wednesday, Friday and Saturday will be days of fast and abstinence.

The Casualties Listed To-day

'Round the Stores

"The Easter dawn is breaking,
Nature greets the rising sun;
So, may all our hearts do homage,
To the Blessed Risen One."

AT THE REID STORE.

As we enter into the spirit of Easter, it is quite right that we should let those who come in contact with us know it. Good thoughts, good acts and good habits are contagious. The proper adornment of the body, as well as of the heart and mind, is legitimate, and has the approval of those whose aim it is to set a good example, as well as those who set the styles.

The psychological influence of the year's events upon the clothes which will cover our bodies is one of the most interesting points of the present opening season. The military features are but the natural outcome of the all-absorbing interest in the war zone. The charming garments which the decrees of fashion have evolved are splendidly exemplified by The Reid Co., George Street, the exclusive ladies ready-to-wear store. Their handsome models give the effect of variety in materials, as well as styles, and show the ingenuity of the designs. This firm has shown the latest in military effects, as well as in long coats, Zouave jacket, costumes and striking designs in gowns.

AT W. C. SYSON'S.

There is real art in wearing just the right thing. William C. Syson, who has recently opened new quarters, upstairs, over 435 George Street, is a specialist in tailor-made outer garments for ladies. His parlours are on the second floor, and are well adapted for the quiet, refined interviewers, so desirable in this line of business. Mr. Syons gives expert attention to creation in ladies' suits, coats and skirts that are up to date in every detail, with all the chic and line of the latest ideas. He is an enthusiastic student of the leading models for spring and summer wear; gives ideas and estimates; and corset ideas under only. Fashionable makes up to order. material is shown for selection and materials are accepted when desired.

At the Peterborough Floral Co.

The very wide variety of striking Easter bloom on display at the Peterborough Floral Co.'s show room, Water Street, is attracting unusual attention. Easter lilies, roses, azaleas, tulips, hyacinths, violets, lilies of the valley, sweet peas, carnations, palms, ferns, etc., make an excellent showing. The flower-loving people of Peterborough should have no difficulty in obtaining their Easter flowers this season, as the supply is much larger than usual. Many extra good flowering plants are shown in pots. Above and below the benches are jammed full of choicest bloom and foliage plants. There has been quite a run already for decorative plants, from the churches, business houses, hospitals and homes. The beautiful collection of Easter lilies is standing the strain pretty well, although late orders may be impossible to fill. The Floral Co. are exerting themselves to satisfy the most exacting tastes.

At Hooper's.

The three confectionery stores of Thos. H. Hooper are making a fine showing of fancy Easter confectionery. The show windows in each of the George Street stores are dressed with the alluring decorated sweet meats, such as fancy chocolate, Easter eggs of various designs; also rabbits, chickens, and other candied novelties. The call for these seasonable confections has been good, and the demand seems to grow this week. Hooper's home-made chocolates and confections made on the premises, keeps up their popular reputation and steady sale. Remember to order their hot cross buns.

PASSENGER ARRESTED

PARIS, March 31.—Raymond Swoboda, aged 38, a passenger on board the French liner La Touraine, which caught fire in mid-ocean on March 6th, was arrested early to-day, suspected of having started the fire. According to the newspaper Matin, Swoboda listed on the La Touraine's record as an American financier, but is suspected of having "close relations with the enemy."

A LULL IN FIGHTING.

PARIS, March 31.—Excepting as to the clashes of minor importance in La Petre woods, near Pont a Vendin, there has been a lull in the fighting along the entire France-Flanders front in the last twenty-four hours. The War Office announced this afternoon that there has been no change in the situation since the last communique was issued, last night.

RUSSIAN BLACK SEA FLEET ABANDON BOSPHORUS FORTS

Bombs Dropped on German Submarine Base

RUSSIAN SQUADRON BOMBARD SEAPORT

Of Zunzuloak, Eregli and Kozlu, 150 Miles East of the Bosphorus—Russians Hurled 2000 Shells Without Any Important Damage.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 1.—Confirmation of the report that the Russian Black Sea fleet has abandoned the bombardment of the Bosphorus forts came from both Petrograd and Constantinople War Offices today.

An official statement from the Turkish capital said that the Russian squadron again has bombarded Turkish seaports of Zunguisak, Eregli and Kozlu, 150 miles east of the Bosphorus. The Russians, Constantinople announced, hurled two thousand shells without doing any important damage. The Slav fleet then retired to the northward.

Petrograd announced officially that Turkish forts had been bombarded, the Russian fleet completing the work of destruction begun in a previous attack. Unofficial reports received here to-day said that five Russian warships participated in the bombardment and that eleven Turkish sailing ships were sunk in the harbour at Eregli. At Zunguisak, two explosions at the coal mines followed the dropping of Russian shells.

London naval and military critics who had contended from the start Russian guns could make no impression upon the strong Bosphorus forts were not surprised at the admission from Petrograd that the Black Sea fleet had withdrawn from the attack on the strait. The object of the bombardment at the Turkish villages was to destroy the machinery at the coal mines from which the Turkish fleet draws part of its supplies and to wreck the coal docks. Several Russian aeroplanes flew over Zunglaak before the bombardment began, according to the Turkish War Office, evidently attempting to locate shafts of coal mines. They were pursued by Turkish aviators and fled back to their ships.

It was officially announced at Constantinople that the Dardanelles situation is unchanged.

INTEREST AT FEVER HEAT.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Interest in the Prinz Eitel Freidrich case was at fever heat in official quarters to-day. The belief that the German converted cruiser would eventually intern was giving way to feeling that, after all she might try to smash her way through the neck of the bottle to the open sea. Newport News reports that the administration is cognizant of the German commander's plans were denied by Secretary Daniels. The Eitel is filling her bunkers with select coal.

ATTEMPTED LIFE OF KING NICHOLAS.

CETTINJE, Montenegro, April 1—For the third time Austrian airmen have attempted the lives of King Nicholas and members of the Royal family. An Austrian hydroplane flew over the city to-day, dropping two bombs near the Royal Palace. The five bombs exploded without doing damage. In other parts of Cettinje five bombs were dropped. Four civilians were injured.

MASSED AERIAL ATTACKS.

BERLIN, via The Hague, April 1—The Germans are building Zeppelins much faster than the Allies are building ships. There is every reason to believe that enmasse aerial attacks upon fortified cities of the enemy will be made before long.

American In Foreign Legion, Blinded, Gets Hero Medal

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, March 30.— An annex for soldiers who have lost their sight during the war was opened to-day in the ancient asylum Quinze Vingts, which was founded in 1260 by Louis IX. (St. Louis) after some three hundred of his followers had been blinded in his crusades.

Among the first twenty men admitted to the annex was a young American, Joseph Amar. He is twenty-two years old and was born in Washington, D.C. Amar was at yons working for an electrical company when the war began. He enlisted in the Foreign Legion and took part in dangerous scouting tasks, and was especially skilful in throwing hand grenades into German trenches. He lost both his eyes by the premature bursting of a grenade thrown by a comrade. The military medal, which is reserved for the "heroes of France" has been awarded to him.

"I am glad to have fought for France and for the justice of the French cause," said Amar to-day.

The director of the hospital says the youth has never uttered a word of regret at the loss of his eyes. He will be educated in reading and writing in the manner taught to blind persons and also will be permitted to adopt any handicraft which he may select. Amar spends his time now entertaining his comrades by playing the mandolin.

$7,000 a Night for Caruso For Season in Buenos Aires

Special to The Examiner.

Eclipsing all records for a singer's earning capacity, Enrico Caruso will sing ten times in Buenos Ayres at the rate of $7,000, or 35,000f., a performance. His engagement there will yield him $70,000.

Caruso writes that he will finish singing his tenth performance at Monte Carlo on April 6, will go at once to Italy, and will leave Genoa on April 21 for Buenos Aydes. He says that he has had great success at Monte Carlo, the impression left by his singing at Radames in 'Aida' being that he never had sung so well in his career. In Buenos Ayres the season is during May and June. At its close he will return to Italy and will remain there until the autumn, when he will come to New York.

This amount —$7,000 a performance —is about three times as much as the famous tenor receives at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Supply Ship Is Captured

Suspected of Carrying Supplies to German Submarines

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

NEW HAVEN, Eng., April 1—Suspected of being a supply ship for German submarines, the big Dutch cargo boat Lodewijk Van Nassau, was captured near Brighton to-day, by two British torpedo boats and brought into this port. Her cargo was found to consist largely of oils, and a thorough investigation has been ordered.

PARLIAMENT WILL NOT TAKE EASTER REST

OTTAWA, Ont., March 31.—Parliament has decided to stick to business and not take the usual holiday of little less than a week or so over the Easter holiday. Even at that it is not likely that business will be concluded before the end of next week, or perhaps later. The matter was practically settled in the House this morning. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that it had all along been the desire of the Opposition to facilitate the business of the session. Sir George Foster said that he had given notice that the House would simply adjourn

STEAMER WAS SUNK.

Crew of the British Boat South Pacific Was Saved.

LONDON, March 31.— The British steamship South Pacific, bound from Glasgow for New York, was sunk last night in a collision with an unknown vessel off Arran, an island on the west coast of Scotland. The crew were saved.

The South Pacific was of 2,310 net tonnage, and was built in 1913. She was 351 feet long, 51 feet beam and 24 feet deep. She was owned by the Pacific Shipping Company, Limited.

THE CALIFORNIA EXPOSITIONS.

The Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific's Railways with their steamship and other connections, offer the traveller a choice of delightful routes to and from the great Expositions being held in California this year. In taking your round-trip ticket you should travel at least one way through Canada and behold the scenic wonders of the territory opened up by the newest and most modern of Transcontinental Railways. The Grand Trunk and Grand Trunk Pacific run a superior service, they offer ideal ways to or from the Pacific Coast and California, threading the land abounding in big things—great lakes, majestic mountains, dark forests, deep canyons, mighty rivers and fertile valleys and plains.

From points in Eastern Canada the Grand Trunk provides exceptional facilities of reaching Chicago, where a choice in transcontinental routes is offered the traveller. A desirable route is via Chicago and one of the American transcontinental lines, returning via Seattle, Victoria, Vancouver, through the 'Norway of Canada' to Prince Rupert, thence Grand Trunk Pacific.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT SAID TO BE IMMINENT

Lull in Flanders Gives Rise to Impression That Preparations Are in Progress For Important Moves.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, April 1.—With the exception of night fights by French aviators at various parts of the line, the only action recorded in yesterday's communiques, like those of the past three or four days, took place on the right, in Champagne, the Argonne and Lorraine.

The continued lull in Flanders and on the western part of the lines gives rise to the impression that preparations are in progress for some important moves. This impression is supported by an unofficial despatch from Amsterdam received here by way of London, which says that important events are progressing on the Yser River front, but which gives no details of what is the nature of these events.

In the communique issued last night mention is made of the capture of 150 metres of German trenches in the Argonne between La Fleur de Paris and Bagatelle, and of a German counter-attack made yesterday morning on the trenches taken by the French on the Bois-le-Pretre, following a night-long bombardment. The Germans regained a part of the position, but soon lost it again.

The Amsterdam Tijid says that 30 German soldiers were killed and 60 wounded near Theurout, Belgium, on Saturday by bombs dropped by five airmen of the allies. Bombs were dropped on the German submarine base near Bruges yesterday, the Tijid says, with what results is unknown.

A bill was proposed in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday providing for the pensioning of those totally disabled in the present war. The proposal, which apparently had strong support, provides for the following pensions: Officers, two-thirds of their pay on active service; non-commissioned officers, 850 francs ($190) yearly; privates, 360 francs ($170). If the bill is adopted pensions and allowances will also be made for widows and orphans.

Big German Prison Camp Brings Allies Face to Face

BERLIN, March 30.— Fortunes of war have thrown together ten thousand members of the armies and navies of the countries with which Germany is at war into a conglomerate gathering in the huge prison camp at Doeberitz, about fifteen miles from Berlin.

Fresh faced English sailor boys still in their teens, bearded Scotch Highlanders, peasants from the south of France and Moujiks from faraway Russia suddenly have been plunged together—each with his customs and habits, likes and dislikes. Pretty nearly every one is face to face with his ally for the first time in his life.

How to control the throng of prisoners so that discipline may be tempered with humanitarian measures and the thousands may rub shoulders without friction is a problem with which German system has been grappling. A group of newspaper representatives from neutral countries, who inspected Doeberitz recently found it well organized, active and intensely interesting, and its inhabitants as contented as might be expected in the circumstances.

In dealing with problems arising from the proper control of the prisoners, the authorities have drawn certain broad conclusions, summed up as follows by a reserve officer stationed at the prison camp:

Russians Most Industrious.

"The Russians are the most industrious; the English are by far the laziest to handle; the French are most docile, the last to make trouble of any kind."

Doeberitz is a huge collection of long wooden shacks, built by the prisoners. The camp is enclosed by a barbed wire fence ten or a dozen feet high, which contrary to legend, is not charged with electricity to prevent escape. Only four men, Russians, have tried to get away thus far, and they came back.

At night time and in leisure hours the men are divided according to nationality and so far as possible, in racial subdivisions. In the workshops, however, English and Russians are put together. Men of both races are proving adept at shoe making, but the Frenchmen seem to have little skill at it, and are more available in the cook houses.

Prisoners artistically inclined and in poor physical condition have a house in which they paint and make crayon drawing and photographic enlargements. Callers at the camp post subsequently purchase the output, the money finding its way to the canteen for food and tobacco.

Food is Nourishing.

At meal time French and Belgian British and Russian, gather together and pass through the cook house. Each house is equipped with huge boilers containing hundreds of quarts of the stew, soup or goulash that forms the principal item on the bill of fare. That this food is nourishing and appetising has been attested to by scores of persons who have been to Doeberitz and who invariably are invited to sample it. The prisoners say the same, but they complain that the tang is monotonous.

The means of relieving this monotony lies in the canteens, and that is available only for the men who receive money from home. Every effort is made by the German authorities to facilitate this, and gradually a miniature banking system, with hundreds of accounts, has been evolved.

There is also a post office, which handles between 50,000 and 60,000 letters a month. The prisoners are allowed to write, on an average, two letters a week. The Russian mail presents the greatest difficulties for the censors. The men write in a variety of ways—Russian in German script, German in Russian script, Polish in several scripts, Hebrew and any number of dialects.

In the package division of the post office thousands of sacks of presents have to be examined and distributed. The percentage of illicit articles that relatives attempt to send to the prisoners is gradually lessening, but efforts have not entirely stopped. How little some persons appreciate the censorship is indicated by the fact that every once in a while revolvers and similar articles are discovered and confiscated.

Keep Your Lungs Strong

This advice is doubly important with the knowledge that every three minutes some one in the United States succumbs to consumption and many refuse to realize they are afflicted until it is too late.

It is after colds or sickness, from overwork, confining duties or when general weakness exists that tubercular germs thrive because the resistive powers of the body are weakened.

Only with fresh air, sunshine and abundant rich blood can one hope to arrest their progress, and the concentrated fats in Scott's Emulsion furnish fuel for rich blood, and its rare nourishment helps strengthen the lungs while it builds up the forces.

If you work indoors, tire easily, feel haggard or run-down Scott's Emulsion is the most strengthening food-medicine known and is free from stupefying drugs. Avoid substitutes.

WEDDING BELLS

BUCKHAM—FISHER.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the George Street Methodist Church at 3.15 p.m. to-day, when Lillian May Fisher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fisher was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to John F. Buckham, son of John Buckham, South Monaghan. The bride who has been one of the prominent young ladies of George Street Church was given away by her father.

Rev. Mr. Peever officiated. While the young couple were signing the register, Mrs. J. H. Renwick sang. Mr. Renwick played the special wedding music. Mr. and Mrs. Buckham left on the afternoon train on an extended honeymoon trip and on their return will reside in South Monaghan.

PRESTON—FRY.

The marriage of Miss Margaret Fry, daughter of the late Thomas Fry, and Mr Allan J. Preston of North Monaghan was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Lillico, 570 Homewood Avenue, yesterday afternoon, Rev. J. P. Wilson of Charlotte Street Methodist Church performing the ceremony. Owing to recent bereavement in the bride's family the wedding was of a quiet nature. The bridesmaid was Miss Stella Fry, sister of the bride, while Mr. Fred Preston supported the groom. The bride was beautifully attired in white, carrying a bouquet of white carnations. Her sister was also gowned in white.

Following the ceremony, a buffet luncheon was served, after which Mr. and Mrs. Preston left on the 4.29 train for their honeymoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Preston will reside in North Monaghan, where the bride will be at home to her friends after May 1st.

To prevent an automobile spattering mud upon pedestrians there has been invented a flexible metal ring to be attached close to a tire.

Divorced, But Leave Court Arm-in-arm

Special to The Examiner:

TRENTON, March 31—An appealing scene occurred in the court of chancery here just after Vice Chancellor Backes granted a preliminary decree of divorce in the suit of Anna M. Read of Belgium against Albert L. Read of Newark.

The evidence was conclusive and showed that Read had deserted his wife in 1909. The vice chancellor also awarded the wife $8 a week alimony but she immediately told the court that she wanted no alimony.

The couple sat near each other at the court table and when the judge had left the bench their two little children, a girl of five and a boy of eight, began tugging at their arms. While one pulled at the father, the other got the mother, with the result that the couple did embrace.

Mr. and Mrs. Read left the court room arm in arm, and it is probable that they will have no use for the final decree of divorce.

YOU'RE BILIOUS AND COSTIVE!—CASCARETS

Take Cascarets Now—Relieve Headaches, Colds, Sour Stomach

Don't wait. Your Liver, Bowels and Stomach need attention now. Furred Tongue, Bad Colds, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable feelings come from a torpid liver, bowels which cause your food to ferment instead of digesting filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then to keep their stomach, liver and bowels regulated and never know a miserable moment. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

A Photograph of one's self drawn with it the personal touch so essential to Easter greetings—and it is so inexpensive.

OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

By Frank Frocst

The inner door had been left open by Jim, a lucky circumstance for Foyle, as otherwise he would have been at a loss, for it was of stout oak and he must have made considerable noise in forcing it. Yet he did not make any attempt to soften his footsteps as he climbed the stairs. He hoped to be taken as an ordinary client long enough at any rate, to discover the whereabouts of Ivan. Once that was achieved he was reckless as to his identity becoming known.

He needed no guide to the right door, for the clink of money and the exclamations of many voices guided him. He threw it open and entered the faro room with quiet assurance. Beyond a quick glance from Keller no one took any notice of him. They took it for granted that Jim had gone into his bona-fides and that he was "square."

He took up a position at the end of the table nearest the door and apparently watched the game before staking. In reality he was studying the faces of the players. He was uncertain whether he would find Ivan there, but he had calculated that the Russian would at least be watching, if not taking a hand, if only a means of passing the time during his voluntary imprisonment. And he was right. Seated at the table two or three paces away was the Russian, lost to all save the turn of the card.

Foyle bent over and staked a coin. At the same moment Ivan's eyes met his in puzzled recognition. There was a crash and the gambler sprang up, overturning the chair. His hand was outstretched, the finger pointing at the detective.

"That man—how did he get in here?" he cried with something like alarm.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

For a second or a trifle more a dead silence followed Ivan's denunciation. Heldon Foyle backed towards the door, dragging with him a chair which he had clutched with some idea of using it as a shield should there be a rush. There arose an angry snarl among the gamblers, for with them suspicion was quick. A rush of crimson had swept across Ivan's face at the first alarm. He ejaculated something excitedly in Russian, and then went on in English—

"He is a police officer. I know him. It is the man Foyle of Scotland Yard."

At the mention of the word police the hubble died down a little. Heldon Foyle, leaning quietly on the back of the chair, took advantage of the lull.

"Yes, I am a police officer," he admitted confidently. "The place is surrounded. It will pay you to behave yourselves—you over there, put that knife away, do you hear!"

The order was sharp and authoritative, and the Greek in whose hand the detective had caught the gleam of steel thrust it back hastily into the sheath at his belt. There were men there who would have thought little of murder, and Foyle knew that once they were roused to fighting-pitch he stood little chance. At the first sign of flinching on his part they would be on him like a pack of wolves. He held them for the moment only, as a lion tamer holds his beasts under control—by fearless domineering assumption of authority. They were like a flock of sheep. Only two men he feared—Ivan and Keller. Both were men above the average intelligence, and both had more reason to fear the law than the others. If either of them took the initiative he might be placed in an ugly position. He felt for his whistle while they remained inactive, uncertain.

"Let's teach the dog a lesson," hissed a venomous voice—that of Keller. "He's trying to bluff us."

"Boot him, boys," incited Ivan, edging forward and so creating a movement towards the detective.

Heldon Foyle put his whistle between his teeth and gripped the heavy chair with both hands. As the rush came he blew the whistle three times in the peculiar arrangement of long and short blasts that is the special police call, and swung the chair down with all his force on the leading man. It was Keller. The gaming-house keeper dropped, stunned, and the detective swept the chair sideways and so forced a clear space about himself. Again the whistle thrilled out, and Ivan dodging sideways seized one of the legs of Foyle's unwieldy weapon. Menacing faces besieged the detective on all sides. Other hands assisted the Russian to hold the chair. And still no help came. Once the door opened and the wrinkled leathern face of a Chinaman protruded through the slit, took in the scene with quick understanding and disappeared. That was all the notice taken of the row by the habitues of the opium den on the high floor. The two or three clients who were stretched on the low couches were either entirely under the influence of the drug or too listless to worry about anything short of an earthquake—if even that would have aroused them.

It was with small hope that the superintendent sounded his whistle again. A heavy blow on the face laid open his cheek, and he saw the little red-headed man who had slipped on his heavy brass knuckle duster dodge back into the crowd. He relinquished his hold of the chair and defended himself with his hands. He carried a pistol in his pocket, but, imbued with the traditions of the London police, he would not use a lethal weapon save in the last extremity. Inch by inch he sidled along the wall, fighting all the while until he reached the corner. Here the crowd could only come at him from the front.

A knife was thrown and a bottle crashed against his shoulder. The crisis had come. He dropped his guard and his hand closed over his pistol. Those nearest to him recoiled as the muzzle was thrust into their faces.

"He daren't shoot," insisted a voice which Foyle recognized as that of Ivan.

In fact, the gibe was partly true. True. The detective had himself well in hand, and he knew that even though he were justified, a wounded man would lead to an inquiry which at the very least would prevent his going on with the Grell investigation for some time. But to let the taunt pass would invite disaster. He dropped the weapon to his thigh, forefinger extended along the barrel to help his aim, and pressed the trigger with his second finger twice. The reports were deafening in the confined space of the room, and one man put his hand to his head with a sharp cry. He need not have disturbed himself, for the bullets had passed over him and were buried in the opposite wall.

"We'll see whether I daren't fire," said Foyle grimly. "Come on. Who'd like to be the first?"

There was no answer to his challenge, for from below came the sound of a crash and the quick tread of many men racing up the stairs. One or two of the gamblers turned white, and Foyle felt the tension of his nerves relax. Half-a-dozen men, headed by Green and Penny, were rushing into the room.

A little gurgling laugh burst from the superintendent, and he waved his hand about the room. "You see, Penny, it could be done, single-handed. That is Ivan over there. Take good care of him, Green. Keller is that man knocked out down there." And, swaying, he crashed forward to the floor in a dead faint.

When he came round he was lying on a couch with his injured face and shoulder neatly bandaged. There were only two other persons in the room, Green and one of the local detectives, who were systematically making an inventory of everything in the room. The superintendent struggled to a sitting position and the movement brought Green to his side.

"Hello, Green," said the superintendent cheerfully. "You've got 'em all away, I see. How long have I been lying here?"

"Matter of half an hour. It's only a case of loss of blood, I th... You must have been bleeding for some time before we broke in on the tea-party. We put some first-aid bandages on."

"I'm all right," said Foyle, rising stiffly. "What happened? You were a deuce of a time answering my whistle."

"We tried the wrong door first, and it's my belief that nothing short of dynamite would move it. It's steel-lined, and with all the bolts pushed home we stood no chance. We gave it up after awhile and tried the other. Luckily that was not bolted."

"I know. I left it like that purposely."

"Well, we didn't know. By that time w got thirty uniform men down here, and they followed us up. Once we got the door down and found the chap you'd trussed behind it, we had no trouble worth mentioning except with Master Ivan, who fought like a wild cat. We got the cuffs on him at last, but even then it took four men to get him away. Penny is down at the station waiting till you come before charging 'em. What is it to be? Attempt to murder?"

AFTER SUFFERING TWO LONG YEARS

Mrs. Austin Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"After my little one was born I was sick with pains in my sides which the doctors said were caused by inflammation. I suffered a great deal every month and grew very thin. I was under the doctor's care for two long years without any benefit. Finally after repeated suggestions to try it we got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking the third bottle of the Compound I was able to do my housework and today I am strong and healthy again. I will answer letters if anyone wishes to know about my case."—Mrs. JOSEPH AUSTIN, 628 Monroe St., N. E., Minneapolis, Minn.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy we know for woman's ills. If you need such a medicine why don't you try it?

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Big Shipment To Red Cross Society

By the Ladies of Keene—News of the Village—Hockey Club Dance Next Tuesday

Special to The Examiner:

KEENE, March 31.—Rev. Dr. Ross, of Pontypool, spent a few days the past week with his son, Dr. C. F. W. Ross.

Miss Josephine Kennedy spent the past week with her sister, Mrs. Thomas O'Neil, at Hastings.

Miss Laura Macfarlane, of Peterborough, visited friends in the village a few days the past week.

Mrs. William Macfarlane was in Peterborough on Wednesday last.

Miss Alice Lumsden returned home last Thursday from Peterborough, where she had been the past two weeks with her sister, Miss Agnes.

A meeting of the Keene Ladies' Patriotic Society was held at the home of Mrs. H. McLachlan last Wednesday afternoon, with the newly elected president, Mrs. (Dr.) Harrison, in the chair. As there were sufficient funds on hand to continue the work, with the outlook very favourable of raising plenty money to work with, it was decided to purchase yarn to knit into socks and cotton for hospital gowns, also cheesecloth for handkerchiefs, bandage rolls and pneumonia jackets. Any lady wishing to help out with the work may get it by calling at the home of Miss Lumsden or Mrs. H. McLachlan. The ladies will meet again on Wednesday afternoon, April 7th, at 2.30 sharp, at the Town Hall, Keene.

Mrs. James McCann returned last week from Peterborough, where she had been visiting friends.

Mr. Herbert Sides, of Kingston, spent a few days the past week with village friends.

Messrs. George McIntyre and John Wedlock drove to Peterborough last Wednesday and spent the day.

Mr. Andrew Brown, of Peterborough, spent Thursday last at the home of his father-in-law, Mr. John Edwards.

Miss Agnes Lumsden returned home last Thursday.

Mr. Herbert Miller has purchased the farm belonging to William Plunkett.

Mrs. (Dr.) W. T. Harrison and Miss Hill spent Friday last in Peterborough.

Mr. Robert Brown was in Peterborough on Saturday on business.

The last shipment from the Otonabee Patriotic Society was made to the Red Cross Society at Toronto on Monday last, and consisted of the following articles: 130 pairs men's socks; 1¼ dozen face cloths; 55 bandage rolls; 6 men's shirts; 7 pneumonia jackets; 28 pairs bed sox; 23 flannelette hospital gowns; 15 cotton gowns; 2 Balaclava caps; 5 pairs wristlets; 1 muffler (knitted); 3 pairs knee caps; 15 kit bags; 1 dozen handkerchiefs. The value of the shipment amounted to $100. Altogether this society has knit and sent since November 144 pairs of socks.

Miss Elsie Moore spent Saturday in Peterborough.

Mr. Michael Kennedy spent the week-end with friends at Peterborough.

Mrs. J. H. Cunningham, who has been convalescing since an operation at Bralesford, three weeks ago, was able to return to her home at Toronto on Monday.

Mr. William Brown was in Peterborough on Monday.

Mrs. (Dr.) Harrison is spending the week-end in Toronto.

Miss Josephine Kennedy returned home on Sunday from Hastings, where she spent the past week.

Mrs. George McCartney and daughter Kathleen are guests at the home of Mr. James McNeil, Sr.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Burley spent Sunday with Peterborough friends.

Mr. Joseph O'Neil, of Hastings, was in the village on Sunday.

Miss Bessie Reid, of Peterborough, visited the Misses McCrea this week.

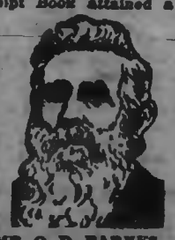
Mrs. Sherman, who underwent an operation at Bralesford on Saturday, is, we are pleased to report, doing very nicely.

The annual hockey ball will be held in the Town Hall on Friday night, April 9th.

Was Personally Attended by Dr. A. W. Chase

Before He Became Famous as the Author of Dr. Chase's Receipt Book.

Here is a letter from an aged gentleman who consulted Dr. Chase, long before his Receipt Book attained a world-wide circulation or his family medicines became known to the ends of the earth.



MR. O. D. BARNES.

Like most people of advanced years his kidneys were the first organs to break down and when doctors failed to help him he remembered the physician who cured him of pleurisy in his younger days.

Mr. O. D. Barnes, R.F.D. 1, Byron, Mich., writes:—"About fifty years ago, when living in Ann Arbor, Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous Receipt Book author, was called on to treat me for pleurisy. Ever since that I have used and recommended Dr. Chase's Medicines, and have two of his Receipt Books in the house.

"Some time ago a cold settled in the kidneys, causing backache, frequent urination, dizziness, and affected the eyesight. My appetite failed and I could not sleep nights. Two doctors failed to do me any lasting good, so I started using Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. The results have been highly satisfactory to me. Appetite improved, I gained in weight, sleep and rest well, and feel strong and well. My kidneys resumed their natural functions, and I believe that my cure was due to Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. I am 78 years old, superintend work on my farm, and can turn in and do some work myself."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box. All dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

WIRES GOT CROSSED

Mistake of Big, Blundering Boy, Brought Him Wife and Fortune.

By MILDRED CAROLINE GOODRIDGE.

"Just a boy—a big, blundering great-hearted boy!" was the way Cecile Merritt got it in a casual discussion of their friends with a confidential girl acquaintance.

It was Roy Bacon whom Cecile referred to, and her words were repeated in time to Roy himself, who flushed like a bashful school girl and then looked proud and pleased.

"I would rather hear that from Miss Merritt's sweet lips," he said, "than to have any other girl tell me I was the model of the universe," and the rotary movement of circumstances carried this bank to Cecile and made its due impression.

The sensible, sympathetic little lady had estimated Roy just right. Roy was sensitive as a child, but there was true sterling worthiness under the surface. An indulgent uncle had nearly spoiled him. He had recently, however, tried to redeem the error by getting Roy a position with a local brokerage house.

Roy was set at learning the routine of the office. He studied over lists and quotations until his head ached. Then they employed him at receiving orders over the telephone. The rapid jargon of the stock exchange nearly drove him out of his mind. At the end of his first day's experience he went home in a state of determined rebellion.

"I shall inform Uncle Gib that he may put me at work with a shovel or running a street car, but I can't stand the wear and tear of this wild investment business!" Roy told himself.

But then, as he turned a corner he came face to face with Cecile. She was so sweet and friendly, her inquiries as to how he was getting along showed so much interest, that he forgot his late decision.

"Look There!" Thundered the Manager.

"Just for her sake, just to show that I've got energy and ambition," he soliloquised, "I'll stick it out and make a record."

Roy was full of this ambition, but as well of the pretty face of Cecile. Perhaps that set his wits wool-gathering, perhaps it was the fault of somebody else, but about one o'clock the next afternoon, the rush hour of the office, Roy made the ghastly mistake of his life.

The telephones were jangling all over the place, for the market was feverish with a fairly delirious close. He caught up the receiver at a call.

"Burton Black & Co.—take order. Buy for us 2,000—"

Buzz-zz-z! came an interruption. Then a hiss. Then a snap, and then the words:

"United Utilities at 1.95."

There was no time to verify the order, for some rush business came over the wire. Roy handed the order to one of the office brokers and forgot all about it.

"Manager wants you," came the sharp order from his assistant the moment Roy reached his desk in the morning. With a face white with anger and manifestly intensely excited, the manager glared at him.

"You took an order from Burton-Black yesterday afternoon?" he demanded.

"I did, sir," acquiesced Roy. "It was a big one, too—2,000 United Utilities at 1.95."

"Nothing of the sort," shouted the manager. "They ordered the sale of Commonwealth Central."

"Why, sir," explained Roy, "I am sure they said 2,000 United Utilities."

"Did you verify the order?"

"No, sir—rush of business—"

"Have you seen the exchange quotations?"

"Not yet, sir."

"Look there!" thundered the manager, holding up the printed sheet—"United Utilities, 63." Raided into yesterday, a drop of forty points in an hour, and we are loaded down with $200,000 worth!"

"There—there," stammered Roy, fairly appalled, "the message got mixed—crossed wires!"

The firm sent at once for Mr. Bacon. Morally he was responsible for the unfortunate error of the nephew he had recommended. Proud and just, without a word Uncle Gib drew out a check, pocketed the unlucky bank and said, coolly to his nephew:

"Now then, you come home with me!"

Roy felt dreadfully distressed. His first business experience had been a costly one. He spoke of turning over some compensation in the shape of a small legacy his mother had left him. But Uncle Gib was not to be appeased. He was grim, silent, repellant, and the next evening, feeling much like a disciplined school boy, Roy packed his satchel and wrote a note to his uncle, intimating that he had better visit a cousin at Brandon for a week or two.

Then with a very sad and solemn face Roy went to the telephone and called up the Merritt residence.

"I wish to speak to Miss Merritt," he said, fluttering, confused, but determined on his course.

"Yes?" insinuated a girlish voice.

"This is Mr. Bacon, Cecile—that is, Miss Merritt. I'm sorry, but I have made a complete failure of everything. Before I go away, I wanted to say to you that I thank you for being the kindest best friend I ever had, and I love you and always shall. Good-by," and then dropping the receiver, he seized his satchel and rushed from the house as if he expected it to fall upon him for his rash declaration.

It was a pretty miserable journey to Brandon. It was a long wearisome day that next one, worse the second, unbearable the third. Part of the time Roy thought of his awful business blunder. The rest of the time he sought lonely lanes and secluded by paths, mind, heart and soul full of Cecile.

"Oh, say, Roy," hailed his cousin, as he returned tired and glum from a solitary tramp one evening," here's a rush telegram from the city.

Roy tore open the envelope. He read: "Return on first train—Uncle Gib."

If the signature had been "Gibson Bacon or "G. B.," Roy would have been chilled. The familiar old "Uncle Gib" gave him some heart of hope. He ran up the steps of the old home when he reached it, to be greeted by Uncle Gib with a hearty handshake.

"Ha! Ha! Ha! Ho!" rollicked the old man. "Roy, boy, you did it! Yesterday United Utilities went up to 130, and you've made a small fortune!"

Of course Roy was the happiest of mortals at this unexpected lucky outcome to his big business blunder. Whenever he thought of his impulsive message to Cecile, however, he got almost scared. He kept pretty close around home, but as he ventured forth at dusk came face to face with the very subject of his thoughts.

She blushed and he was dreadfully embarrassed. Wise little woman that she was, sweetly and naturally she brought the conversation back to a message that Roy had sent to her sister Nella over the telephone.

"Your sister?" gasped Roy. "Oh, my!"

"Do not feel distressed, Mr. Bacon," said Cecile, "for Nella ran to father the elfish little sprite that she is, and father spoke to me," and—and here Cecile grew confused and dropped her eyes.

"What did father—oh, my! What am I saying? What did Mr. Merritt say?" inquired Roy hopelessly in a lost voice.

"He only smiled," reported Cecile in a low tone.

"And—and what did you do, Miss Merritt?" pursued Roy.

"I—why, I kissed the dear old treasure, and told him he was the best father in the world!" replied Cecile blushingly, and Roy knew that he was the happiest man in the world.

How to Care for Your Complexion

There is no truer saying than that "beauty is only skin deep." Good features lose their charm under a sallow or blotchy skin and poor features are glorified by a beautiful complexion.

A very useful toilet booklet entitled "Your Complexion" has just been issued by Nyal's and contains many helpful health and beauty hints, including proper methods of massage. It can be had for the asking at the Nyal Agency Drug Store and you should call or telephone for it. Among other things it points out is that dirt, sleep, ventilation, and a thousand other things we cannot escape are continually warring against our complexions. Get a 25c or 50c jar of Nyal's Face Cream and convince yourself of its cleansing and refreshing and beautifying qualities. It is greaseless, oxygenated and quickly absorbed by the skin, leaves no shine, and gives a pleasant, smooth, cool sensation, quickly removing the irritation produced by wind and weather. 7-10a

All Nyal preparations are justly famous and none more so than Nyal's Face Cream which we unhesitatingly recommend. Call, or telephone us for your copy of this book which contains most valuable information.

HEART WOULD PALPITATE.

HAD WEAK and DIZZY SPELLS.

Palpitation of the heart is one of the most common of all heart troubles. The heart will beat fast for several seconds, then slow, then start to flutter, and a feeling of utter depression will come over the system accompanied by weak and dizzy spells, making you feel that you are surely going to die. When you feel this way what you require is a real good heart and nerve tonic; one that will strengthen the weak heart and build up the nerve system. For this purpose we know of nothing that can equal Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. S. Nicholls, Listowel, Ont., writes: "I was weak and run down, my heart would palpitate, and I would take weak and dizzy spells. A friend advised me to try your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills so I started at once, and found that I felt much stronger, and my heart was ever so much better within a short time. I cannot praise your medicine too highly for it has done me a world of good. My husband has also been bothered with heart trouble ever since childhood and finds great relief in using your valuable pills."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUN'S WORK.

French soldier exhibiting part of an aeroplane brought down near Paris.

MOTHER! IS CHILD'S STOMACH SOUR, SICK?

If Cross, Feverish, Constipated, Give "California Syrup of Figs."

Don't scold your fretful, peevish child. See if tongue is coated; that is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with sour waste.

When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache, indigestion, diarrhoea, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul waste, the sour bile and fermenting food passes out of the bowels and you have a well and playful child again. Children this harmless "fruit laxative," and mothers can rest easy after giving it, because it never fails to make their little "insides" clean and sweet.

Keep it handy, Mother! A little given to-day saves a sick child to-morrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Remember there are counterfeits sold here, so surely look and see that yours is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

CAPTAINS WANT GUNS.

Masters of Merchant Vessels Angered By Outrage to Falaba.

LIVERPOOL, March 31.—The Falaba outrage has aroused mercantile masters, who are determined to avenge the death of Capt. David. He was of a quiet, reserved disposition, with hosts of friends in the service. It is declared in Liverpool that the gallant manner in which he died was typical of his character.

"Give us guns is the reply of shipmasters to the German pirates," said Thomas Scott, of the Mercantile Marine Service Association, in discussing the outrages yesterday. Continuing, he said: "Submarines have now given sufficient evidence that they have not the slightest scruple in murdering defenseless crews and passengers. There no longer is anything in the argument that arming merchant ships would provoke submarines. They need no provocation. Our only defence is guns."

One College's Fine Record

Harrow has knowledge, according to its own magazine, of 1,043 Old Harrovians who are serving or have served with the colors in the present war. Fifty-four have been killed, twenty-eight are prisoners, and 106 wounded. Fifty-four have been mentioned in despatches, three have received D.S.O., and fourteen have been decorated by the French Government for valor.

Rialto Gossip.

"There goes Susan Brett," remarked Yorick Hamm. "She loves to hear herself talk."

"Then it must be a great trial to her," responded Hamlett Patt, "to have to work all the time for the movies."

A Good Excuse.

A choir boy recently gave as an excuse for missing choir practice that he had to sit up with a dying friend, but an investigation proved that it was his best girl who was "just dying to see him."

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Retiring toward the interior, the German troops are reported to have destroyed the main railway line in German Southwest Africa.

The Australian warship Sydney, which destroyed the German raider Emden, left Montevideo yesterday for an unknown destination. She arrived Sunday.

Gen. Felipe Angeles has been decided upon for Provisional President of Mexico by the Villa and Zapata factions, says a despatch received from Mexico.

According to a press despatch two civilians were killed by the German aerial attack against Rheims which was referred to in yesterday's official communique.

Returns furnished by British trade unions show that out of a membership of 1,250,000 the unemployed in February were 80,000, or 6.5 per cent., as compared with 4.7 per cent. a year ago.

After tieing his wife to the bed in apartments in the tenement at 173 East Fourth street, New York, Varagi shot and killed her yesterday, and then committed suicide by firing a bullet into his head.

Former Premier Venizelos of Greece issued a statement yesterday denying that he had offered to surrender Kavalla to Bulgaria during his term of office in order to avert any Bulgarian attack upon Greece.

PRECAUTIONS RELAXED.

Austria Feels Safer Now From Invasion By Italy.

ROME, March 31. — The Trieste correspondent of The London Daily News reports that Austrian reservists who happen to own farm land in Trentino have been granted a fortnight's leave of absence in order to attend to their agriculture work. This measure is said to be based on the fact that assurances have been received at Vienna that Italy will maintain her neutrality and that the majority of the nation is opposed to war.

It is a fact that the troops hitherto concentrated on the western frontier have been partially withdrawn. Austrians are still convinced that Italian intervention is inevitable and are continuing defensive preparations, though not in the Alpine region.

Citizens Kept Out of Woods.

ROME, March 31. — Citizens of Vienna are officially warned through Neue Wiener Tagblatt not to visit the wooded hills that surround the city. These are favorite resorts in spring and summer, but fortifications are now being erected and the hills practically closed to the public. Those who disobey the orders of the military authorities will run grave risk of being shot by military patrols, gendarmes and police, who are ordered to use their arms, especially at night. The suburbs were fortified last autumn after the Russian occupation of Lemberg and the new precautions are the result of the fall of Perm yal.

Greece Must Fight, Says Venizelos.

LONDON, March 31.—The return of ex-Premier Venizelos to Athens after a short rest, the tumultuous reception accorded him and his reiteration of the declaration that Greece must join in the conflict on the side of the entente powers, have combined to start up further predictions that when the group of neutral states which have been wavering so long, will take up arms.

But the materials upon which these predictions are based are of the scantiest.

German Troops for Cracow.

BERNE, March 31.—News has just reached me that about 160,000 German troops have arrived in Austria, the greater number being despatched to Cracow and the Carpathians and any point where Russian attacks are feared. One hundred and seventy troop trains have reached Angyar since March 24, most of the men in them being Bavarians and Saxons, and many of them students under 18 years of age.

Italy Must Have Better Position.

ROME, March 31. — The Giornale d'Italia, replying to comments in the Russian newspapers opposing Italy's acquisition of the territory on the Adriatic now in the hands of Austria because of the large Slav population, says that while Italy acknowledged the right of the Slavs to have an outlet on the Adriatic, it was not to be supposed that Italy would acquiesce merely in the substituting of Slavs for Austrians on the east coast, the Slavs having the powerful support of Russians behind them.

It adds: "It is best clearly to state now that whether Austria continues to exist as an Adriatic power, or a great Serbia be formed, Italy's position on the Adriatic must be absolutely or largely ameliorated."

Aviation Corps Given Prize.

PARIS, March 31.—Acting on the suggestion of Gen. Joffre, the French commander-in-chief, the Academy of Sports has awarded the grand prize of 10,000 francs ($2,000) to the military aviation corps. Minister of War Millerand has undertaken to distribute the money among the families of the French airmen who have been killed during the war.

Botha Takes German Camp.

LONDON, March 31. — A Cape Town despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. says that a German camp at Platt-bes, 50 miles northeast of Ukamas, German Southwest Africa, has been captured by the British, under Gen. Botha. It contained great quantities of supplies and horses and other live stock.

BUDAPEST PAPERS ARE TALKING TERMS OF PEACE

LONDON, March 31—The Morning Post correspondent at Budapest telegraphs: Newspapers here occupy themselves daily more and more with peace talk, for this is the only subject people are interested in in Hungary. There is no allusion to peace which does not find eager readers, and there is no peace, however humiliating, which would not be welcome. The tone of these peace articles is always the same — consoling people with statements to the effect that Hungary will receive her reward for the immense sacrifices made; that this time Austria will be willing to acknowledge the superiority of Hungary, and that "our national independence" will be our reward. At the same time hatred against Austria is growing day by day. The former admiration for Germany is well on the wane.

Hindenburg alone has admirers, but Austria is hated and despised even more than before the war. Moreover, to make things worse, everybody is preparing for the inevitable invasion. I had a talk with a high Ministerial official yesterday, who said: "No one thinks it impossible. The Russian offensive in the Carpathians which began a few days ago cannot now be checked." He was of the opinion, like a good many others I have seen, that this time we have been prepared for an unprecedented onslaught, and one which will not cease until it has achieved its aim. He pointed out that the Russian advance, although it will be slow even in the west and centre, in a few days' time will reach Eperjies and probably Kassa, and if during the next few days the battle now proceeding has not given Austria the victory, nothing will stop the Russian forces invading our plains.

The papers give 80,000 to 100,000 as the number of Russians released at Permysl, but nobody gives credit to them.

Conflict Blunts Human Sympathies

World Fed Up With Horror Until Horror Has Lost its Appeal

How completely the European war has revolutionized humanity's ideas continues to be revealed, even now when the earlier appetite for news from the battles has lost its edge.

A year ago the country would have followed with keen anixety the reports which told of a mine explosion burying alive or dead nearly 200 workers. The effort at rescue and the slow disclosure of the fate of the entombed men would have absorbed the attention of everybody.

It is probable that not more than a very few newspaper readers now could tell off-hand where the mine is in which the explosion occurred, and only an occasional observer has followed the subject closely enough to say whether the victims survived or were taken out as corpses.

The dramatic sea-story of the French liner La Touraine, adds its testimony to the indifference of people to thrilling events of the day. It is the kind of news that used to set nerves on edge, that produced an insatiable demand for newspaper extras and made people stop on the streets and exchange opinions about the marvels of the wireless and the perils of the ocean. To-day, hardly any one more than glances at it.

The world has been "fed up" with horror until horror has lost its appeal. With millions of men in war, with daily figures of deaths by the thousand before our eyes, with the fate of nations in the balance and stupendous events being acted that will stand out vividly in all history, what was sensational has sunk below the level of the commonplace. It is one of war's most evil effects that it blunts human sympathies with suffering and makes mankind careless about mankind.

Years will pass before the world's people recover their former concern for one another. Compared to such a degradation of humanity's best qualities, of what consequence is it that some colours will be changed on the maps or even that some localized shifting of allegiance to sovereign governments will be forced upon individuals or communities?

The inhabitants of territory brought by the war under new control will quickly adjust themselves to the altered status, but how long will it take to readjust the perspective of us all and to regain the fellow-feeling that makes us kind?

RECIPE TO CLEAR A PIMPLY SKIN

Pimples are Impurities Seeking an Outlet Through Skin Pores.

Pimples, sores and boils usually result from toxins, poisons and impurities which are generated in the bowels and then absorbed into the blood through the very ducts which should absorb only nourishment to sustain the body.

It is the function of the kidneys to filter impurities from the blood and cast them out in the form of urine, but in many instances the bowels create more toxins and impurities than the kidneys can eliminate, then the blood uses the skin pores as the next best means of getting rid of these impurities which often break out all over the skin in the form of pimples.

The surest way to clear the skin of these eruptions, says a noted authority is to get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of hot water each morning before breakfast for one week. This will prevent the formation of toxins in the bowels. It also stimulates the kidneys to normal activity, thus coaxing them to filter the blood of impurities and clearing the skin of pimples.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia. Here you have a pleasant, effegvescent drink which usually makes pimples disappear; cleanses the blood and is excellent for the kidneys as well.

The Golf Professional (giving a lesson)—"You know, sir, you lift your elbow too much to play golf properly."

AN EASY WAY TO GET FAT AND BE STRONG

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to the remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This master-stroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh - builders. Sargol aims through its re-generative, reconstructive powers to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this amazing transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappear, and you take on from 10 to 20 pounds of solid, healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. Leading druggists on Peterborough and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution:—While Sargol has given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

STRONG FOR PROHIBITION.

Little Resentment Felt In Britain at Anti-Liquor Proposals.

LONDON, March 31. — All of the evening papers in London yesterday published columns of interviews with notables regarding the speech of Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George, in which he urged that the production of war material ought not to be hampered by drunkenness.

The Chancellor's opinions are practically unanimously supported in all responsible quarters. The possibility of a prohibition bill totally preventing the sale of intoxicants during the war, appears to arouse little resentment. It is generally believed that drastic steps will be taken.

Three members of the Anglican episcopate are taking a leading part in the agitation for a drastic reduction. They are the Bishop of Lincoln, Bishop of Croydon and Bishop of Willesden.

Serbia Ready Again.

PARIS, March 31. — Serbia will await word from the allies before beginning a second invasion of Austria-Hungary, said Milenko Vesnitch, Serbian Minister at Paris, yesterday.

"Serbia is absolutely ready to recenter the campaign at a moment's notice," he said. "It has been decided, however, that the allies shall henceforth plan in concert all important movements on all fronts. When Serbia receives the indication to march she will immediately advance, and with greater dash and determination than ever."

Western Miners Against Strike.

LETHBRIDGE, March 31. — The referendum taken by the miners on Monday shows that five to two of the men are in favor of continuing at work and accepting the new agreement arrived at in Calgary between their representatives and the operators. In Fernie, Hillcrest and other camps, except Bellevue and Blairmore, the sentiment was overwhelmingly in favor of it. The result at Coalhurst is in doubt.

$270,000,000 Loan To Small States.

PARIS, March 31. — The Senate yesterday adopted a bill, which already had passed the Chamber of Deputies, providing for the advancing to Serbia, Belgium, Greece and Montenegro as friends of the allies, the sum of 1,250,000,000 francs ($270,000,000).

To Drop Conspiracy Case.

SEATTLE, Wash., March 30.—The prosecution of Dr. Wilhelm Mueller, German consul at Seattle and B. Max Schmitz, his secretary, charged with conspiracy to bribe an employe of the Seattle Construction & Drydock Co. to reveal secrets of his employers' business, will be dropped, it was announced here yesterday.

The State Department at Washington desires that the prosecution, under a state law, be discontinued, to which the prosecuting attorney has assented.

German Names Retained.

LONDON, March 31.—War feeling is not likely to obliterate German names from London streets, since the London County Council has turned down a number of petitions on the ground that a sufficient case for an alteration had not been made out. Discontented patriots must therefore continue to live in Berlin road, Wiesbaden road, and other streets of Germanic origin.

LOCAL WEEKLY MARKET REPORT

Timely Comments and Comparison of Prices

Eggs were very much in evidence at last Saturday's market. The price remained about the same, but towards the close weakened down to 28c a doz. Sevral lots were disposed of at 17c. Butter maintained its usual price of 35c.

Potatoes continued to sell at 60c a bag.

Fowl was somewhat scarce but was of a better quality than that offered the week before.

The centre of attraction, however, was the maple syrup, which appeared for the first time this season. It sold at 45c a quart, on the average, though two vendors asked 50c. Two, also, quoted 40c, and it was noticeable that they did a rushing business. Ten lots of maple syrup were offered altogether.

One woman hovered near a syrup can for a long time watching the sparkling liquid being poured out. Like the "foolish virgin" she had not provided herself with the wherewithal to carry it home. At last she mustered up courage enough to ask the farmer if he would deliver a quart. It would have done your heart good to see the look that woman got. The syrup-man must have been a very wise farmer, for, philosopher-like, he decided that silence was golden (like his syrup), but his expression was eloquent. He actually said more with those questioning eyes of his, than if he had opened his mouth, and if he had opened it he might have put his foot in it.

While witnessing this amusing episode it occurred to the writer that the method as carried out by the Belleville farmers would be a good one to adopt here: that of charging five cents extra for delivering goods. If this were made uniform and every farmer stuck to it, then the buyers would understand that if they wished delivery made they could have the goods brought to their house for a five-cents charge.

Grains, Hay.

Wheat per bushel	$1.30
Barley	.70 to .80
Oats	.60 to .65
Peas	$2.15
Flour, cwt.	$4.25
Shorts, ton	$20.00
Bran	$23.00
Baled hay	$20 to $22
Loose hay	$24 to $25
Straw	$13.00

The importance of the opening of the Dardanelles from the standpoint of Western Europe's wheat supply is indicated by the fact that Russia is responsible for about one-third of the supply to Europe's importing nations. The imports of Britain have greatly increased in recent years.

Practically all of it is exported by the Black Sea and the Dardanelles. This is because the northern outlets are blocked during most of the shipping season, but chiefly because the great wealt belt of Russia is in proximity of the Black Sea.

Dairy and Poultry.

Butter, per lb.	35c
Butter, creamery	37c
Cheese, lb.	20 to 22c
Eggs, new laid, doz.	17 to 19c
Turkeys, lb.	25c
Geese	18c
Chickens, per pair	$1.50 to $1.80
Ducks, lb.	20c
Live hens, each	$1.00 to $1.25

The streams of milk as they flow from the cow start in motion many lines of manufacture, trade and commerce in nearly all parts of the world. It is like the stone thrown into a lake, causing ripples and movements extending to the farthest shore.

Prof. Dean relates the view expressed by an American railway man, who was asked Why he took such an interest in dairying. His reply was: "If the farmers along our lines persist in the raising of grain and selling it, it will only be a short time before they will have nothing to sell or ship, and as a result there will be no freight to haul."

Fruit and Vegetables.

Apples, per bbl.	$2.75 to $3.25
Potatoes, per bag	60c.
Onions, peck	20c
Onions, whole pickling, qt.	15c.
White beans, qt.	10c.
Celery, per head	5c to 10c
Carrots, peck	15c.
Turnips	10c
Parsnips, peck	15c.
Beets, peck	15c.
Cabbage, head	5c to 10c

Potatoes have been increasing in demand owing to the fact that they have been found cheaper than bread since the advancing price of wheat has put bread up.

Meats and Hogs.

Bacon, per lb.,	25c to 28c
Ham	25c
Cooked hams	35c
Pork	11 and 12c.
Spare ribs	12c
Lamb	23c.
Veal	20c-23c

Sirloin steak	23c
Round steak	22c
Beef, dressed	10 to 12
Live hogs, cwt	$8.25
Small pigs, cwt.	$7.75

(Not under 18c lb.)

A hog skin or a beef hide is the best grain sack a man can have on a farm. War does not keep a pig from making a hog of himself. War does not keep a cow from giving milk, nor a hen from laying eggs.

On the other hand war does very decidedly interfere with the marketing of the products of the one-crop farmer. The only safe way to continued success against unfavourable markets, is to have something to sell every week in the year.

Wool and Hides.

Wool (no market)
Sheep skins, each	$1.75
Calf skins, lb.	16c.
Beef skins, lb.	11 to 13c

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, March 29.—The business situation continues to improve as the spring opens. Travellers still report cautious buying on the part of retail merchants, but the buying tendencies on the part of the public seems to move toward a little more liberality. This gain in confidence is probably based on psychological reasons. People are always inclined to be more optimistic as the lethargy caused by being cooped in all winter wears away. Finance Minister White gives it as his opinion that the business of the coming summer will depend more on the progress of the war than anything else; if the Allies continue to win, business will be fairly good.

Sir John French's plain prediction that the war will not last long, has had its effect on the farm produce market. Prices generally have gone down, though the slump has not been serious. The cattle market has improved in the week. Dairy produce continues firm.

WHEAT

No one fact in the wheat market stands out more clearly than that the future of prices depends on the duration of the war. The market has not been steady since the report of that momentous interview with Sir John French. The perseverance of the Allies in the bombardment of the Dardanelles is another feature that does not tend to give wheat holders more confidence. A new factor is now entering into the situation; how will the winter wheat come through the winter? Already winter killing on an extensive scale is being talked and the wheat fields are being anxiously watched. Quotations now are: No. 1 Northern, $1.37; No. 2, $1.35; No. 3, $1.33½; Ontario wheat, $1.42 to $1.46.

COARSE GRAINS

There has been a general scaling down in prices of all grains whose value is effected by the wheat market. Coarse grains, however, seem to gain more readily than wheat, and it would take little to restore them to their old levels. Quotations: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 68½c; No. 3, 66½c; No. 1 feed, 66½c; Ontario oats, 60c to 62c; corn, 78½c; peas, $2 to $2.05; buckwheat, 52c to 53½c; rye, $1.15 to $1.17; barley, malting, 70c to 80c.

The Montreal market quotes as follows: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 65½c; extra No. 1 feed, 65½c; local white, 64c to 65c; corn, 82c to 84c; barley, feed, 68c; malting, 70c; buckwheat, 52c.

MILL FEEDS

Mill feeds are a shade easier on the market. Bran is now quoted $25 to $27; shorts, $28 to $29; middlings, $33 to $34; feed flour, $38 to $39. Montreal dealers quote bran $25; shorts, $29; middlings, $33 to $34; moullie, $35 to $38.

SEEDS

Seeds are quoted in wholesale quantities a cwt. as follows: Red clover, No. 1, $21 to $23; No. 2, $19 to $19.50; No. 3, $18; alsike, No. 1, $19.50 to $20.50; No. 2, $17.50 to $18.50; No. 3, $16; timothy, No. 1, $11 to $11.50; No. 2, $9.50 to $9.75; No. 3, $8.75.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Eggs are cheaper than at this season for several years. The decreased price is the result of decreased consumption and probably very considerably increased production. Dealers, however, express the opinion that the market is now at its low ebb and that the seasonal decreases, which in normal years would be still to come, will not transpire this year. Packers, it is said, are already starting to buy for storage. It is a characteristic of our production that when a certain point has been reached, prices slump badly as they have this year, production goes down and it is a long time before the old level of production is again reached. Hence, while prices this year do not encourage increased production, poultrymen will be safe in continuing on about the usual scale as better prices may be looked for next year. On this market new laids are quoted 23c to 25c in cartons and straight receipts, 21c. Prices throughout the country run 16c to 17c for straight receipts.

Poultry is quoted here as follows: Chickens, live, 12c to 13c; dressed, 16c to 18c; fowl, live, 10c to 11c; dressed, 12c to 15c; ducks, 20c to 22c; dressed, 16c to 17c; turkeys, 12c to 15c; dressed, 19c to 22c.

DAIRY PRODUCE

New butter has begun to arrive on the market in greater quantity and the general tendency has been to weakness in quotations. The supplies on hand are so light, however, that holders are not worrying and prices are still two to three cents higher than at this stage last year. The new butter arriving at Montreal brings 31c and September creamery sells at about the same. The greatest complaint against the new butter coming in is its stable flavor, and this, it is estimated, decreases the price 2c to 3½ c cents. On this market creamery prints, fresh made, command 34c to 35c; solids, 33c to 33c; dairy prints, 30c to 32c; bakers, 28c to 30c.

Sales of fodder cheese are reported from Western Ontario at 16½c to 16¾c f.o.b. country points. This is 2c to 2½c higher than at this time last year. The strength is due to war time prices, the Imperial Government last week buying 50,000 boxes at one sale on Old Country markets.

LIVE STOCK

The net result of the week's cattle trade shows a general lose in quotations. The policy of shipping light has been continued by country drovers and it is beginning to bring results. The approaching Easter season has also had its effect on the market. From the farm end it has tended to bring out a better fitted class of stock, and some of the extra well finished stuff brought as high as $8.75. The end of the week found the yards well cleaned up.

The slaughter trade has been light, principally because receipts were light. The Michigan buyers, referred to last week in these columns, and who were expected back this week, did not show up because of light receipts. The future of the slaughter trade does not look good. Buying cattle and feeding them is more or less of a speculative proposition, and the fact that so many feeders have lost money in the last few months, will discourage buying at long prices this spring.

Quotations ranged as follows: Butcher steers and heifers, $7.75 to $8.25; shipping steers, $7.25 to $7.75; handy choice steers, $7.25 to $7.50; butcher steers, $6.50 to $7.25; heifers, $6.50 to $7.25; choice cows, $6 to $6.50; com. to good, $4.75 to $5; butcher bulls, $4.50 to $4.75; feeders, $6.25 to $6.75; stockers, $4.75 to $4.75; canners and cutters, $3 to $4.25.

Mutton animals are strong. Lambs, light, $9.50 to $11.25; heavy to med., $7.50 to $9.00; culls, $6.50 to $7; spring lambs, each, $7 to $12; light ewes, $6 to $8; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $6; culls, $3 to $4.25.

Hogs continue in strength and have regained some of the ground lost earlier last week, $8 to $8.10, f.o.b. country points.

CLARK'S SOUPS

SMOTHERING OF ASTHMA STOPS QUICK THOUSANDS CURED BY "CATARRHOZONE"

COUNT TEN — THEN RELIEF COMES FROM CHRONIC ASTHMA.

Nothing yet discovered can compare with Catarrhozone in bad, ugly cases of Asthma.

Catarrhozone is the one remedy that can be sent quickly and direct to all parts of the breathing apparatus.

The effect from Catarrhozone is a quick one— you feel better in no time —keep up the good work, use Catarrhozone as directed and you get well.

If your case is curable, if anything on earth can rid you permanently of Asthma, it will be Catarrhozone. It contains that strangely soothing and powerful antiseptic found in the Blue Gum Tree of Australia, and this is fortified by other germ-killing properties which, when so scientifically combined, make Catarrhozone a veriable specific for Asthma, Catarrh and Bronchitis.

Even though many other remedies have failed— even though you are discouraged and blue —cheer up and try Catarrhozone to-day. What it repeatedly has done for others it will surely not fail to accomplish for you.

Catarrhozone is not expensive. One dollar will buy a complete outfit from any Druggist. The money will be well spent because your immediate improvement in health will surpass your fondest expectations. Don't wait—today is the time to use Catarrhozone.

Patrons of Young's Point Cheese Factory

YOUNG'S POINT, March 29. — A meeting of the patrons of the Young's Point Cheese Factory was held in the factory hall on Thursday, the 25th inst. Mr. Wm. Lane was elected president, while Mr. Maxwell Kidd will act as secretary and treasurer. Mr. A. Wilson, the cheese maker, expects to have a busy season, and he is starting early.

Miss Geraldine Markle, who has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. J. E. Kearney, the past winter, has returned home to Sturgeon Falls, Ont.

It is not expected that the water will be very high in the lakes and rivers in this district. It is very low here to start with, and a good deal of the snow has disappeared, although if it turns out a wet spring, as it occurred four years ago, there will be plenty of water.

The first auto of the season from Peterborough. Mr. Robt. Sturgeon, accompanied by Mr. Robert Gallop (proprietor of the Snowden House, Peterborough), visited the Point on Sunday in an auto.

Girls! Thicken And Beautify Your Hair

Bring Back Its Gloss, Lustre, Charm and Get Rid of Dandruff.

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now — all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance; freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will you cannot find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first— yes — but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp — Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower; destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft you hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this.

THE BELGIAN AVIATORS SUCCESSFUL ATTACK

THE FRENCH MAKE GAINS NEAR SOISSONS

FRENCH CAPTURE PRISONERS AND GAIN GROUND NEAR PONT-A-MOUSSON

Official Communique To-day Announces Damage Done by Belgian Aviators Who Drop Bombs to Good Effect -- German Statement Admits French Gains But Claims Advances at Other Points.

$100,000,000 WAR VOTE PASSES SENATE

(Special Cable to The Examiner.)

PARIS, April 1, 1915.—(French official.)—The Belgian aviators delivered a concerted attack upon important German positions a few miles east of Dixmude, according to despatches received here to-day.

The Belgians hurled several bombs upon the German aviation camp at Handzaeme, seven miles from Dixmude. It is believed that they did considerable damage. Continuing eastward, they destroyed the railway buildings at Cortemarck railway junction, a place of much importance to the Germans operating in Belgium.

Fighting in the Lepretre wood, near Pont-A-Mousson, continues, with the French making gradual gains. In the last 12 hours three German officers and 137 men have been captured.

North of the Aisne and west of Soissons, the French artillery destroyed a German position.

BERLIN STATEMENT

BERLIN, April 1.—The war office admitted that the French have gained a small section of advanced German trenches in the Lepretre woods, west of Pont-A-Mousson, where the fighting continues, but said that the French have suffered great losses east and northeast of Luneville, in the last 24 hours. The battling in this region is going on near the German border. The statement says: The Germans are again on the offensive in Flanders near the seacoast. They have driven the Belgians from the hamlets of Klosterhoek and Dappni, near Dixmude, taking one officer and 44 Belgian soldiers as prisoners, says the war office.

WAR MEASURE PASSED

OTTAWA, April 1.—The Senate this morning gave the $100,000,000 war measure bill a third reading without comment. The government bill for seed grain and other relief, was also given a third reading. The resolution amending the criminal code making it a penalty to aid aliens to leave the country for the purpose of aiding the enemy, was put through the committee stage.

RUSSIANS ON OFFENSIVE

PETROGRAD, April 1.—Taking advantage of the apparent weakness in the German lines west of Warsaw, the Slavs have delivered a number of swift smashes against General Mackensen's forces along a fifty mile front extending from the Vistula to Opiezno.

The first infantry charge was ordered on Tuesday morning. Almost hourly fresh Russian battalions hurled themselves upon the German trenches and roports from Warsaw this morning indicated gains at several points. Mackensen's forces have been greatly depleted, according to the word brought to the Russian war office.

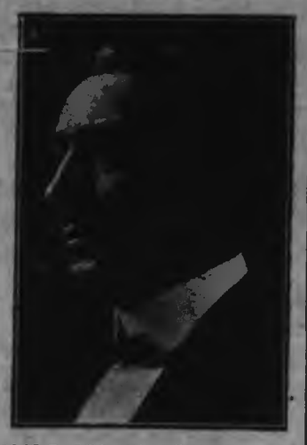
DOVER, April 1.—The French steamer Emma, Dundalk, Ireland, to Bordeaux, was torpedoed in the English channel on Tuesday, it was learned to-day. A British destroyer to-day brought two survivors and the bodies of two members of the crew to Dover. Seventeen other members of the Emma's crew are missing.

Two survivors of the Emma declared that the German submarine torpedoed the steamer without warning. The vessel sank almost immediately and the submarine made off, leaving the crew struggling in the water.

METALS ARE SCARCE

VENICE, April 1.—The Austrian military authorities have extended the confiscation of metals in Austria to include every variety, except iron and steel. The minister of national defence has issued a patriotic appeal to the people for al broken or unused metals, pots, pans and miscellaneous utensils. The school children of Vienna have been directed to begin to-morrow a house to house collection of these articles. The appeal frankly admits that the blockade established by England and France has prevented the importation of much needed war material there, interfering seriously with the conduct of the campaign.

THE "FATHER" OF THE 57th BOYS



MAJOR GEO. W. BENNETT, commanding A Company, 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Contingent. His company not only includes the 57th men, but also detachments from the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, Lisgar Rifles, Prescott, and 9th Mississagua Horse of Toronto. Major Bennett, whose letter in last evenings Examiner was one of the most interesting received from the trenches, was one of the veteran officers of the 57th Regiment, having had twenty-five years' service with the Rangers. He is the idol of his men, many of whom in letters home have referred to him as being "just like a father" to them. In peace times, Major Bennett is Inspector of Colonization Roads for the Ontario Government.

THREE BROTHERS HAVE OFFERED THEIR SERVICES

Three Sons of His Honour Judge Huycke Have Volunteered for Overseas Service

PRACTICAL PATRIOTISM

A number of Peterborough boys who have heard and responded to the call of the Empire are the three sons of His Honour Judge Huycke. The eldest son, Wilfrid Huycke, has been made a Provisional Lieutenant of the 40th Battalion stationed at Cobourg. A couple of years ago he obtained his degree of Bachelor of Arts at Toronto University and subsequently entered the Law School at Toronto.

Douglas Huycke, who is an accountant in one of the large financial institutions in Toronto has also enlisted, and it is expected will be attached to the Artillery Corps at Kingston. He has received orders to attend the Artillery School at Kingston within the next few days.

The third son is Meredith Huycke, who it will be remembered, carried off the Prince of Wales Scholarship while attending the Collegiate Institute, Peterborough. After closing a brilliant career here, he entered the Toronto University. He expects to be attached to the Artillery for overseas service. All three boys are well known in Peterborough.

Since the outbreak of the war His Honour Judge Huycke has given considerable time and attention to matters of a patriotic nature and has assisted in many ways to further the patriotic movement in Peterborough.

TEST FOR TEA.

The only positive test of good tea is in the cup. "SALADA" tea is all clean, bright fresh leaves, and there is genuine satisfaction in every ounce. So many cheap, dusty old teas are sold for the sake of extra profit that it is necessary to always say "SALADA" to ensure complete satisfaction.

LOCAL BOYS UNABLE TO GET EASTER AT HOME

Owing to Outbreak of Measles at Ottawa Leave is Cancelled—Peterboro Boys Play Football at Kingston

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Many Peterborough people who have been looking forward to have their relatives in the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles home for Easter will be disappointed, according to the following despatch from Ottawa:

Ottawa, March 31—About one hundred members of the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles from Toronto and Peterborough, who intended spending the Easter holidays at home, were disappointed to-night, when an order was issued cancelling all leave. Several cases of measels have been discovered among the men, and Lieut.-Col. Munro is taking no chances of a spread of the disease.

The Peterborough contribution to the 26th Overseas Battery consists of two officers and thirty-nine men. The percentage of native-born Canadians is probably the largest in any quota leaving Peterborough, as twenty-five of the rank and file were born in Canada. The 26th Field Battery has so far sent 125 men to the front, while practically all the officers of the 10th Artillery Brigade have gone.

All local soldiers who were rejected at Belleville, Ottawa and Kingston, are requested to report to the Armouries on Saturday. Lt.-Col. Duff of Kingston, who was to have conducted a medical enquiry here yesterday, was unable to remain in the city, but will return in day or two.

Recruits at Kingston.

Kingston, March 31—Seventy-seven recruits, most of them from the University of Toronto arrived in the city this morning in charge of Lieut. Allen, for the 26th Battery. Among the new recruits are a number of Toronto athletes, who have made a good name in the athletic contests of their home city, and it is expected will be quite active in all the athletic events of the 26th Battery and the local garrison while here. Twenty-six horses have been turned over by the R. C. H. A. to Major Hall for the use of the 26th Battery. Lieut. Hilliard will arrive in the city from Peterborough to-morrow. The 26th Battery now has four officers and 143 men.

The Battery Boys.

The Peterborough boys with the 26th F.B.C.E.F., stationed in Kingston, played an exciting football match last Saturday. The teams were Married vs Single men, and as they were playing for a supper, great rivalry was witnessed all through the game. The bachelors were victorious by the score of 2 to 1. The first goal was scored by C. Watkins for the bachelors, who led at half time by 1—0. During the second half H. Wilson, who captained the Married Men's team, broke away and equalised ten minutes before the call for time. The game then waged fast and furious, each team trying desperately for the lead. Five minutes before time Captain H. Gamble of the Single Men, scored with a fast, long shot, amidst great excitement. During the remainder of the game the benedicts tried hard to equalise, but the singles kept up a stout defence, leaving the poor old benedicts to pay for the supper. The game was handled by A. Mason, who gave satisfactory decisions. All the Peterborough boys are in fine health and have won great praise since they came to Kingston. A report in a Kingston paper said that the 26th F.B.C.E.F. was the

BRITAIN IS VERY CLOSE TO PROHIBITION

King George's Letter to Lloyd George Has Given the "Dry" Movement a Tremendous Boost

ECONOMIC GROUNDS

LONDON, April 1.—Britain is very close to prohibition to-day. King George's letter to Lloyd George has given the prohibition movement a tremendous boost. There is every indication that the nation will give the cabinet loyal support if it concludes that a "dry" Britain is necessary for a successful prosecution of the war. At the same time dispatches received here from Amsterdam indicate that Germany, too, is putting the throttle on the liquor business. The German Federal Council, it is reported, has passed an order permitting the authorities of each state, at their discretion to limit or absolutely prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors. The government leaders frankly admitted to-day they are not concerning themselves with the possible moral effects of prohibition in Great Britain. They are considering the question purely from an economic standpoint. The London newspapers, which for the most part are agreeing unanimously that drastic steps must be taken, to-day gave a prominent display to an official statement from Petrograd, reporting a remarkable increase in the deposits in Russian savings banks since the government placed the ban on vodka.

Lord Kitchener is the first man of prominence in England to respond to King George's suggestion of total abstinence from liquor. The British war leader announced through the press to-day that so long as the war lasts no liquor will be served in his household. Similar announcement, it is understood, will be made by the cabinet members to inaugurate a movement to obtain abstinence pledges from prominent persons all over the country.

To-night at the New TIZ-IT Theatre

If you are interested in the great English photo play, to-night will be your last chance to see King Baggott in "Human Hearts," depicting scenes in and around Sing Sing prison. Climaxes are reached which will bring you to the edge of your seat. To-night for the last time you can see Hal. Reid's great melodrama, "Human Hearts" at the Tiz-It Theatre.

The First Good Friday

And when he had scourged Jesus, he delivered Him to be crucified. Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common hall, and gathered unto Him the whole band of soldiers. And they stripped Him, and put on Him a scarlet robe. And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon His head, and a reed in His right hand; and they bowed the knee before Him, and mocked Him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews! And they spit upon Him, and took the reed and smote Him on the head. And after that they had mocked Him, they took the robe off from Him, and led Him away to crucify Him. And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: Him they compelled to bear His cross. And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull, they gave Him vinegar to drink mingled with gall; and when He had tasted thereof, He would not drink. And they crucified Him, and parted His garments, casting lots; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted My garments among them, and upon My vesture did they cast lots. And sitting down they watched Him there; and set up over His head His accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

CASUALTIES WILL REACH 60,000 A WEEK WHEN ADVANCE BEGINS

Half a Million Fresh Troops Will Have to be Raised in the Empire During the Summer to Repair the Wastage of War.

RECRUITING FALLS OFF

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 1. — The Army Concil is now considering whether it will ask the Dominion Goverament to raise further forces, either as reinforcements for previous contingents or more contingents. Until this request is made, or the Dominion Government offers further troops, and the offer is accepted, fresh recruiting cannot well proceed. The British situation, however, shows that large bodies of fresh troops will soon be urgently required to supply the wastage.

Responsible authorities, who are best able to form correct opinions, assume that the casualties brought home for hospital treatment from the time the real spring campaign begins, say from the latter part of April, will average a minimum of forty thousand a week, allowing for killed and very seriously wounded who cannot be moved, and the minor wounded. This means sixty thousand casualties weekly, of whom perhaps twenty thousand may recover sufficiently to return to the front. While no official British recruiting figures are available, recruiting has obviously fallen off heavily since December. This is mainly due to the fact that large numbers are required for war industrial employments and the first lot of enthusiastic young men has been absorbed.

There has been considerable growth since Christmas in volunteer corps. The value of these corps varies greatly. Some, like the public school old boys' corps are splendid, but the vast majority are utterly unsuitable for anything but home guard work. Fresh troops must undoubtedly be raised, who, trained now, will take the place of summer losses. Many believes it is possible to create another voluntary recruiting boom. The fundamental fact is that half a million fresh men must be raised within the Empire during the summer. Canada in volunteering further contingents without waiting for the Army Council to request it, would give fine impetus to voluntary service.

Adamson has lived in Peterborough for eight years. His wife and family reside at 40 Sophia Street, East City.

THIEVES ARE ROUNDED UP BY THE POLICE

Frederick Mitchell and David Rouselle Arrested on a Charge of Robbing the Store of Zacks Bros.

REMANDED A WEEK

As a result of a clever piece of detective work on the part of the local police, Frederick Mitchell and David Rouselle are now in the cells at the police station on a charge of having entered the store of Messrs. Zacks Bros. on George Street some time on the evening of March 29 and the morning of March 30 and stealing several suits of clothes and raincoats. They appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning and were remanded for a week. Mitchell is wante for breaking out of Central Prison with two other fellows named Murphy and Wilson some little time ago, and Rouselle also has a previous record it is thought.

A Clew.

The robbery was discovered on Tuesday morning when Mr. Zacks opened his store for business. The police were notified and Detective Meagher and Acting Detective Blade were dispatched to look into the case. They found that the store had been entered through a window at the rear which the visitor broke. On the pane of broken glass were found finger prints which did not coincide with any records at the Chief's office. This left the officers for a while without any clew.

On Tuesday the Chief received some information about two men being seen drinking several bottles of liquor by some boat houses along the bank of the river on Sunday morning. He got a description of them and also found out where they spent Sunday night and that they were both ex-convicts. He then called the officers and sent them in search of the wanted parties. All they had to work on from there was a meagre description of two suspects. About 11.15 a.m. yesterday Rouselle was rounded up as he was going into the Montgomery Home on Simcoe Street and Mitchell was arrested on George Street at 3 p.m. when he was about to enter one of the Chinese restaurants on George Street.

THE CITY GARDEN.

Easter and spring are with us, and whatever we do in developing the idea of the city garden and vacant lot gardening, must be done promptly. The idea of the city garden suggested by The Examiner, seems to have struck all parts of the country at the same time. On this page is to be found an article from the Globe on the subject, and also an article showing what practical steps are being taken in Welland to give practical and general effect to the idea. Yesterday's issue of La Presse, Montreal, states that [illegible] active movement is on foot [illegible] at city to promote the floral embellishment of of the city by transforming vacant lots into gardens. Practical steps are proposed, to bring in the unemployed to work out the idea. One of the chief commendations of the city garden is that when there is unemployment it can be relieved by putting the unemployed to cultivating a garden either on the lots in their occpation, or on vacant lots that can be placed at their disposal. If the work is to be done effectively in Peterborough, there will have to be considerable preparation made by those in a position to extend assistance in the provision of lots, seeds, tools, etc. It is hoped the Horticultural Society, as one, may be sure it will do, and the city authorities as one, may be sure they will do, will lend speedy and practical cooperation. If we cannot give employment by extensive building operations on vacant lots, we can give the unemployed work in cultivating them. The results may not be as effective in the way of earning money as regular occupation at stated wages; but the results will add to the means of living, and the work will be very much better than no occupation at all; will be of some help to the unemployed who otherwise would be without income at all; and then be for their benefit as well as that of the community at large, which is charged with the responsibility of seeing that none of our citizens are without the means of living.

GOOD ROADS.

We have been talking good roads for a score of years, and we seem to be little nearer doing anything definite and practical—getting at the root of the matter—than at the beginning. The good roads problem is too much in the abstract. We don't "get down to brass tacks." We have good roads conventions. We build miles and miles of good roads, with a foundation and with a surface of wind—words. Everlasting talk and never-beginning of doing. We don't begin at the beginning. The object of good roads is to provide transportation for the farmers—to help them get their produce to markets or to the nearest railway. There are thousands of farms that are unproductive as far as getting their products to market is concerned; they are not near railways; they are separated both by distance, and what is worse, impassable and impossible roads, from a market. We talk glibly of building trunk lines—automobile speedways between Toronto and Hamilton—radial railways for the benefit of communities that are now miles ahead of back townships in the way of transportation facilities. The mighty St. Lawrance is fed by thousands of tiny streams in back townships; each pours its little volume of water to make the great river current. Block these little streams, these river-making capillaries, and the St. Lawrance would go dry. The great stream of commerce is fed by little streams that come if they can over the back roads of townships. If we block these little streams by impassable roads we do not properly feed the great stream of commerce. If we put all our good roads energy upon the roads that empty directly into the main stream of traffic, and neglect the remote country roads, we block and jam, what should be, taken collectively, the main sources of supply. A scheme of road-making that is not comprehensive enough to include the byways as well as the highways, falls short of working the greatest good. A steam railway or a radial railway benefits directly those with direct access to it, and its benefits to others is proportional with the facility of access through good side roads. A farmer with a good farm in itself has its productiveness lessened in many ways by bad roads. He has no encouragement to greater production; for, as he is situated, the greater the production the greater his loss, through failure to realize, by fairly easy access to a market. Logically the beginning of a thoroughly good and effective provincial good-roads system, would be the improvement of the remoter roads, and leading up to the centres whose development would be forced by the necessities of traffic created by improving the remote country roads. With good or better roads provided in the remote country districts, the problem of increased production, which the government seems to desire to force by academic exhortation and advice, would solve itself. Give fifty per cent. better transportation from the remote, outlying, farm districts of the province, and we would automatically have fifty per cent. increased production. We should begin at the beginning, talk less and do more.

CRIMINAL WASTE.

The Toronto News, a thick and thin supporter of the Government, whether right or wrong, says that "the chief Liberal organs are willing to defame Canada in order to make capital for their party." And Mr. Middlebro, M.P., chairman of the lid-lifting Public Accounts Committee, at Ottawa, says the newspapers have made too much of the war supplies scandals, though their exposures and protests have brought about the present humiliating revelations of wrong-doing. The Liberal and other newspapers are not to blame; they only print the record of the black list of loot developed by the investigations in the Public Accounts Committee. The persons guilty of this massive pillage of the public treasury — the waste of the war fund—and those who permit it or palliate it, are to blame. These scandals themselves are what "defame Canada," and weaken the assistance the people and Parliament of Canada are giving the Empire. The longer the investigation into expenditures for war supplies, the greater the exposure of "graft" and waste. The money spent is not all spent for war supplies, but a big percentage goes to the middleman, the intermediary leech. We thought that the profits of $9,000 made in a few hours by the middleman, Powell, for furnishing surgical dressings, was a pretty tidy affair; but it is comparatively trifling to what was made by another middleman. In the Public Accounts Committee yesterday it was brought out that a middleman, Charles E. Slater, got a commission of $15,275 on a contract for army boots, while the profits of the manufacturers of the boots, the Gauthier Company, of Quebec, was only $8,650—that is the middleman got nearly twice as much for not lifting a tool or doing a tap of work, as the manufacturers who did the work. For the 17,000 pairs of army boots the Gauthier Company got $55,590—that is the boots cost that amount—for making the boots, while the Government, thanks to the middleman's rake-off, had to pay $65,450—a direct waste of nearly $10,000. Treating the matter in round figures—if $10,000 is wasted in a legitimate expenditure of $55,000, the waste on 100 million dollars at the same rate would be about 20 million dollars; that is at the same rate of waste, Canada would get only 80 millions of dollars of value for the expenditure of 100 millions. With similar waste; with millions going in waste as "commissions" to political favourites, as shown by the result of the investigations so far, Canada is not coming very creditably out of the matter of war supplies. We vote money freely, and without party distinction, for war purposes, and it is wasted freely. We send soldiers cheerfully and willingly, but we cripple them with ineffective equipment, and in the process waste a lamentable proportion of the money we vote for war purposes. It is not the newspapers of any party that are doing this. If this criminal waste, revealed by sworn witness had not taken place—the newspapers would not have the opportunity of performing the painful duty of keeping the public informed as to how their money is wasted, in over-charges and "graft" in protean forms.

How Welland Helps Realize City Garden Idea

The committee, appointed by the Board of Trade to consider the methods of conducting the garden plot competition in Welland, this summer, met Thursday night. The town will be divided into three divisions, in each of which separate competitions will be carried on. The fifth and sixth ward will constitute the first section, east of the canal south to Lincoln street the second, and the section south of Lincoln street to the limits the third and last. The question of how the old gardner and the tyro could be put on an equal basis of competition was much discussed, and at last it was decided that it was almost impossible, and the only way would be to conduct two divisions, one for the already cultivated lots and the other for those just starting this year. It was suggested that a prize be also offered for the best piece of land kept entirely by children on which could be grown vegetables prescribed by the committee. By this it was hoped that the children would be interested in the work and in the course of a few years branch out in the other divisions of the work.

The committee realizes that the work of turning a vacant lot, that has been a baseball field or a short cut, into a finely cultivated garden, is not an easy matter, and to help the people in this matter a little instruction will have to be given. The help of the experienced gardeners will be enlisted and co-operation will go a long way towards lightening the troubles of the beginner. The work of the garden and the cultivation, with the exception of the first plowing, must be done by the competitor, himself. R. Austin will, it is expected, give a short talk on some of the rudimentary principles of gardening in soil such as predominates in Welland. Otherwise there may be some disappointments in the first year's work. The disappointments must be taken, however, and better success the next year hoped for.

A public meeting for the purpose of interesting the people of welland in the movement will probably be held this week. It is hoped that a speaker from the Ontario Agricultural College, or another authority, will be present. Illustrations by means of lantern slides will help to explain the matter and the lecture alone would be worth hearing. A large meeting is hoped for and the people of Welland ought to turn out to express their approval of this movement that will turn the vacant lots and back yards into gardens, if not in the first year, gradually one by one.

Those who have lots vacant, and are willing to have them cultivated under this plan, should communicate with the Agricultural Office, and those who have no ground of their own and desire to enter the competition should also see Mr. Austin. — Welland Telegraph.

PROFITS THAT CAN BE PLAINLY SEEN WITHOUT THE AID OF SPY GLASSES

Tidy Profits Made at the Public Expense of the War Fund in Handling Binoculars

If you had to buy something do you think you would buy it the way the Dominion of Canada bought field-glasses for the use of officers going to the front?

This is how it was done in connection with one lot:

Mr. Bilsky, an Ottawa jeweler, was a dealer in glasses, but was quite precluded from selling them to the Government because he is a Liberal and his name is not on the patronage list.

Mr. T. M. Birkett, an Ottawa hardware man, did not know anything about field-glasses, but he was a Conservative and his name was on the patronage list.

Mr. Bilsky offered to supply glasses to the Government at $42 a pair, but did not receive an order.

Mr. Birkett offered to supply glasses to the Government at $52 per pair and received an order, but the goods had to come via the P. W. Ellis Co., to whom the Government had agreed to pay a ten per cent. commission of $5.20, bringing up the final cost of the glasses to $57.20.

In this case, Mr. Birkett, the hardware Conservative, knew where to sell glasses, but did not know where to buy them.

Mr. Bilsky, the jeweler Liberal, knew where to buy glasses, but he did not know where to sell them.

They got together. They made a signed agreement that on 400 pairs of binoculars to be sold by Mr. Birkett to the Government Mr. Bilsky was to get $5 per pair, or $2,000 in all, as his profit, while Mr. Birkett would take the rest, allotting a portion to Mr. Taylor, an employe.

What service was Mr. Bilsky to render for this $2,000? His secret seems to have been considered worth the money, for you see, he knew where to buy glasses and Mr. Birkett didn't. So in the words of Mr. Birkett, in giving evidence before the Public Accounts Committee: "Mr. Bilsky went to New York to show Mr. Taylor where to buy glasses."

About 166 binoculars were sold by Mr. Birkett to the Government through the Ellis Co. The invoices on being produced showed that those of the Bausch Lomb make cost $33.71 each, duty paid; and we infer that this was not the factory price. A commission of 10 per cent. had to be paid to the New York agent.

It is therefore clear that on these binoculars, between Bausch Lomb, the makers and the Government which did the buying profits were made by Mr. Birkett's New York agents.

Mr. Bilsky.
Mr. Birkett and Mr. Taylor.
The P. W. Ellis Co.

And so, field glasses that cost $33.71, duty paid, cost the Government $57.20 laid down, to be handled no more, and ready for a Canadian officer to sling over his shoulder and wear to the war.—Toronto Star.

BENEFITS OF BACK YARD AND VACANT LOT GARDENING

Toronto has a good many vacant lots, and a good many people within its borders who would be glad to use them in growing vegetables for their table and so reducing the cost of living. Some public-spirited citizens are seeking to bring the landless man and the manless land together temporarily for the betterment of both. They should be encouraged in every reasonable way. Not a few of the subdivisions on the outskirts consist of good market garden land, and if the present holders can be induced to let industrious people, backed by organised effort, use them for the production of food supplies there should be a considerable decrease in the city's poverty next winter.

The standing illustration of efficient vacant lot gardening is that provided by the Philadelphia Vacant Lots Cultivation Association. It has set an example of the utilization of such lands which has been copied largely not only in Philadelphia, but all over the continent. In 1913, under its auspices, 548 families cultivated vacant lot gardens averaging about a sixth of an acre in extent.

The vegetables raised were valued at $38,000. On a single lot of one-sixth acre an amateur gardener raised vegetables worth $160. Much of the work on the lots is done by the women and the children during the school holidays, and only three families forfeited their lots because they failed to give the necessary attention to them.

Perhaps the most important work accomplished by the Association is in making city dwellers acquainted with the land as a productive agent. At the present time, when there are thousands of people in Toronto who should get back to the land but do not know how to secure the experience, without which it would be impossible to make a living on the soil, the cultivation of vacant lots under the tuition and oversight of experts may well show the way for many willing and anxious breadwinners. In the report of the Philadelphia Association for the season of 1912 appears a letter which shows that the same problem confronts the citizens there. The writer says:

"Believing that you can give me such assistance as might prevent me and my wife from becoming dependent upon charity, I hereby make application for a piece of ground for the purpose of cultivating it this summer. My object is to gain such knowledge, with your assistance, as will enable me to take a small farm and provide a living for myself and wife in the country, for I feel that the time is near when I can no longer do so in the city. I am fifty-one years of age and employed in an industry which is on the decline. I find that at my age it is almost impossible to get work unless you have had experience in it. Therefore I must of necessity find means of earning a living outside of the city."

There must be men in Toronto who like the Philadelphia workman, see the shadow of the wolf. For such as they a school of practical gardening becomes invaluable. Were the owners of vacant land in the outskirts to devote two or three hundred acres not now in use to vegetable gardening under the auspices of the Toronto Association they would help to make life easier for many self-respecting people.—The Globe.

SAYS RUM RATION DEADLY TO TROOPS

LONDON, March 30. — Sir Victor Horsley, an eminent medical scientis and a captain in the Medical Corps, (Territorial Forces), has contributed to the British Medical Journal an article remonstrating against the new issue of rum rations to the military forces as a protection against cold and damp. He declares that all medica scientists now know that, although al cohol produces a temporary flush or the surface of the skin, this is due t a rush of blood to fill the arteries slackened by alcohol; and that the ex cess of blood thus driven to the sur face loses its heat, and, on return ing to the interior chilled by such ex posure, inevitably lowers the bodily temperature.

Sir Victor points out that the spirit drinking habit in our army was first contracted in Flanders during Marl borough's campaign, 200 years ago and that its extention in the form o gin drinking caused the College of Physicians to appeal to the Govern ment for legal restrictions, which fol lowed. He says it is more than a na tional misfortune that this story of 200 years ago is being repeated; or our army in Flanders is again being taught (by the issue of rum)to be come victims of the spirit-drinking habit.

In the American civil war, when Mc Clellan's great army on the banks o the Potomac endured several weeks o severe hardships in trenches, battles and exposure, to wit, it was determin ed to issue spirit rations, but after one month the rations were withdrawn because the men were the-worse for it so Sir Victor declares.

Sir Victor stakes his professional reputation on his declaration the rum causes "loss of resistance of chilliness, misery, and frostbite." No bet ter way of encouraging frostbite could have been imagined than the issue o the rum rations, since alcohol pro duces the circulatory changes requis ite for the first stage of this incapaci tating and painful condition. Alcoho also causes loss of resistance to dis ease, (particularly those occurring un der conditions of wet and cold,) name ly, pneumonia, dysentery, and typhoi fever. It also causes loss of efficiency in shooting. The rum ration causes a loss of 40 to 50 per cent. in rifle shooting. The navy rum ration causes a loss of 30 per cent. in gunnery shooting.

THE BATTLE FRONT

Petrograd, Russia, April 11, via London.

The number of head and arm wounds of the men at the front i enormous, for men in trenches expos only their heads and arms. Man hundreds are hit in the head and death does not result from the wound Occasionally one may see the slightly wounded walk back with heads bound up or arms in slings. Motor trucks loaded with wounded tear along the roads leading back from the extreme front. Perhaps forty per cent. of the wounded are back on the firing line after three months' care and rest in a hospital. It all depends on a man's health and blood. If the blood is pure and good, the soldier gets the first aid, proper treatment and his wounds heal by first intention.

Good blood is everything to every man. It means fresh strong nerves good digestion, good circulation. Those who have used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery marvel at the way it checks blood diseases. See a man to-day with skin all broken out; see him a few weeks later after using the "Discovery," his skin is all cleared up, eyes bright, and he is contented with himself.

The formation of good health is good blood! Are you pale? Are you weak? Are you no longer ambitious or energetic? Have you pimples or boils! Do you suffer from headaches, low spirits? Then you are anaemic—your blood is thin, lacking in healthy strength-giving red corpuscles. Then your blood is impure—and your liver is not up to its task of clearing the blood from the poisons accumulated.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a temperance remedy that will restore to you rich, health-giving blood —a remedy proved by experience (in tablet or liquid form). It is a glyceric extract of roots from our forests, known to science as those which will best give the stomach, liver and bowels needed help.—Adv.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Conditions in Germany Not as Rosy as Germany Would Have the World Believe

Financial, industrial, and food conditions in Germany are not so rosy as Germany would have the world believe, according to a recent pamphlet of the Paris Chamber of Commerce.

"Germany," says the pamphlet, "pretended that she was much better fitted out, from a financial point of view, than the other powers at war. This claim will not stand a close examination of fact. From 1913 she had taken three different precautions to raise the amount of gold in her treasury, to order an extraordinary coinage of silver to the amount of 480,000,000 marks and to double the Exchequer bonds of 1871, which thus rose from 120,000,000 marks to 240,000,000 marks.

"But war being declared, the precautions were insufficient and a series of laws, passed on Aug. 4, conferred great license on the government as regards credit. The State, instead of paying its contractors in cash or banknotes, requested them to draw bills on it, which would be discounted by the Reichsbank. In this way the accounts of the money advanced and allowed to the State by the Reichsbank, was apparently reduced by so much, but this was merely a shift. These drafts were untaxed, and the law protected holders against the consequences of the present state of war.

"The Reichsbank discounted acceptances of the State, and thus we see that this was nothing more nor less than raising an indirect loan. Instead of taking 1,500,000,000, or 2,000,000,000 from the Reichsbank, sums which would have been put down in the balance sheet of this establishment as a debt to the State, the German Government contrived to have its signature considered a plain commercial one, mixed up its debts with its bills and acceptances, and the advances. Therefore the reason for the increase in the emission of bills was wholly an artificial one, and will not add to the credit of the bank's notes.

"Another very efficient reason was the starting of loan offices. These offices have to undertake the liberation of capital difficult to effect at any critical time, such as State securities, industrial or commercial enterprises, undamageable goods, and the like. To represent these securities the loan offices issue bonds in small notes which the Reichsbank is to accept in exchange for its own banknotes. Moreover, when capitalists wish to purchase shares in a loan they take their securities to these offices and receive from them, bonds over and above the actual value of the security offered, and then purchased with these common bonds, which are accepted both by the treasury and Reichsbank.

"The loans are thus subscribed partly by paper issue, representing other paper composed of securities, whose value is very uncertain, and their guarantee somewhat unreliable.

"A fall in the mark can doubtless be accounted for, especially in Scandinavia, by the fact that Germany was obliged to make extensive purchases abroad she couldn't compensate for by equivalent exportations, her foreign trade being almost entirely interrupted. But the fall is general, and the chief cause elsewhere; it is to be found in a feeling of suspicion aroused by the financial contrivances, made use of by Germany, co-operating with the Deutsche Bank, ever since the beginning of the war.

"The German government fancied it had found a remedy for this chronic evil; after having for more than two months proclaimed the world over that German finances were in a thoroughly sound state, it suddenly hid its light under a bushel, and the Frankfurter Zeitung announced, in fact, that, owing to the continued depreciation in German banknotes, the publication of the exchange rates would be suspended in future.

"The Dutch Socialist Deputy Troelstra, having met Mr. Molkenbuhr, a Socialist Deputy in the Reichstag, received from him the following information concerning the prices of foodstuffs in Germany. Mr. Troelstra published the particulars in the Dutch Socialist paper, Het Volk, which ran as follows:

"'The price of a ton of rye rose from 150 marks 40, in April, to 212 marks 10, in September, making a rise of 35 per cent. in six months. The price of a ton of wheat rose from 202 marks 90, in May to 240 marks 20, in September, making a rise of 26 per cent.'"— New York Times.

Death Rides Beside Bearer of War Despatches to The Trenches

The danger undergone by a messenger carrying despatches from the War Office to the front is told in a letter received by Robert Stovold, of New York, from his brother in the French Army. The letter says, in part:

"George and the Duke are also in the army now as interpreters. They are with General French and the English Army all of the time. Harry is engaged to take officers with despatches from the War Office to the front three and four times a week. He sees George often.

"Three times a week George has to take despatches up to the firing line. This is a pretty risky job and he has had several narrow escapes. Once he had to jump out of his automobile, and lie down for several hours while shells and bullets went whistling by over him. Another time as he was driving along with his automobile some Germans, hiding in the wood, fired at him. Fortunately they missed him, but several of the bullets struck the automobile.

"Another time a shell burst twenty yards from him, but by a miracle he was not touched. He was enveloped in smoke, however, the fumes of the shell making him feel sick and giddy. George, however, seems to think it great sport.

"Harry Colliard in the trenches. also has been in some of the thickest of the fighting. He is fighting there day and night. Although he has been in many of the bayonet charges, he has so far escaped unscathed. Let's hope it will always be thus. Bob's brother has not been so fortunate. He was wounded in the head by shrapnel, and picked up on the battlefield insensible. He found himself in the hospital when he recovered. He is nearly well, now, though, and hopes to return soon to have another whack at those Germans.

"What a terrible war this is, Bob. Several of my dear friends have been killed, a few others wounded and one is now a prisoner in Germany. If it were not for the wonderful fighting of the English we would have suffered more. But by the time you get this letter you will be reading that the Germans are in full retreat."

After relating the sufferings of the wounded and the hardships undergone the writer closes with the words, "I should just like to have the job of shooting that Kaiser."

Hastings Boy Gets Medal For Bravery

Examiner Special:

HASTINGS, March 31.—Death has once again visited our town and claimed as his victim Mrs. J. Collins, who has been ill for some time, and who passed away on Sunday last at the age of 70 years and 4 months. She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband and one son, John, who resides here. The funeral will take place on Wednesday morning from her late residence to the R. C. cemetery. A large circle of friends extend sympathy.

The regular monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid in connection with the Methodist church was held on Thursday last in the church, when some important business in regard to the church was discussed.

Mr. J. Stevenson, Sr., who took ill while visiting his daughter in Percy, has so far recovered as to be able to return to his home here. His friends are pleased to hear of the improvement.

The Reid Co. of Peterborough had a representative in Hastings for a couple of days during the past week, with a select assortment of ready-to-wear garments, which were much admired by the fair sex.

Mr. Spooner has had his house moved down to his new lot on Front Street, and hopes soon to have it fitted up for occupation.

The robins have returned from their winter quarters, but we fear the severe weather may not be very favourable to them.

Mr. Armar Weir of Norwood spent Sunday with Mr. Lloyd here.

Mr. Julian Carter, who has been awarded the Albert medal for bravery in saving the life of a little child who was in imminent danger of being crushed under a freight train, is an old Hastings boy, a son of Mrs. J. Carter, town.

We are sorry to report the illness of Mrs. Hugh Collins, who is suffering from a severe attack of la grippe. Her many friends wish her a speedy recovery.

A son has come to gladden the hearts of Mr. an Mrs. I. Doonan.

Mr. W. Martin of Peterborough, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. Prest.

Mr. F. Buller of Peterborough, gave us a call on Tuesday.

Miss F. Carter took a trip to Peterborough last week.

Mrs. Y. German has returned from a short visit with friends in Percy.

March is showing its lion-like propensities in earnest, but it will not b of very long duration.

Mrs. D. Scriver has been in Toronto for a short visit with friends.

Rev. T. H. J. Anderson has recovered from his recent illness and resumed his pastoral work on Sunday.

Mr. D. Campbell of Roseneath, was here for a short time last week.

Mr. Albert Armstrong of Havelock, has been renewing acquaintances here.

Mrs. Shunk and daughter of Campbellford, have been visiting friends in Hastings.

Small quantities of maple syrup have been marketed here, the price being high.

A large company of soldiers passed through here last week en route for Kingston.

Sweden is now makig about 6,000,000 matches a day, exporting approximately 2,000,000,000 boxes a year.

GOOD FRIDAY UNION SERVICE

In George Street Methodist Church Good Friday Afternoon at 3 O'clock

The Protestant churches of th is city will unite in one service at three o'clock on Good Friday afternoon. The service will be held in George Street Methodist church. The united choirs of George Street and St. Paul's will have charge of the music. It is expected that all the city ministers will be present. Brief addresses suitable to the day will be delivered by Rev. Leonard Phelps and Rev. J. R. Webb. Last year on a similar occasion Murray Street building was crowded to its capacity and it is expected that since the world in its present sorrow is pushed toward the cross that this service will exceed in attendance and interest anything that has been hitherto attempted. Only one hour will be occupied. 2d.

Government Seeks Power to Expropriate Part of G.T.R.

Hon. Mr. Cochrane, In Support of Action to Authorize the Government to Purchase Line Between Superior Junction and Fort William, Says He Is Guarding Against Refusal

OTTAWA, April 1. — The House of Commons yesterday put through committee stage the resolution proposed by Hon. Frank Cochrane authorizing the Government to expropriate the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway line between Superior Junction and Fort William, together with its grain elevators and terminal facilities. Mr. Cochrane explained that the Government already had authority to operate the eastern division of the National Transcontinental between Moncton and Winnipeg, but for the efficient operation of that system it was necessary to acquire the branch line which led to the head of navigation. He laid before the House considerable correspondence, including a formal demand upon the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Co. to take over, lease and operate the Government railway from Moncton to Winnipeg. He said that the company had not absolutely refused to comply, but under the circumstances, the Government thought it only prudent to prepare to operate the National Transcontinental itself, in case the company repudiated its coptract.

The resolution was vigorously opposed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, George P. Graham, Hon. Wm. Pugsley and Hon. Frank Oliver. Sir Wilfrid took the position that the Government had broken its contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Co. by degrading the standard of the road. They said the time had not yet arrived for the Grand Trunk Pacific to decide whether it would take over the road or refuse to operate it.

Hon. Frank Oliver said the Government was in the wrong and intends to bulldose the Grand Trunk Pacific by seizing its line between Superior Junction and Fort William, together with its elevators and terminal facilities. Of course, if the Grand Trunk Pacific could not get to the head of the lakes, it might as well go out of business.

Solicitor-General Meighen argued that the road was completed within the meaning of the contract.

On account of pressure of business and the desire of the members on both sides to hasten the end of the session, the usual Easter recess has been omitted and the House will merely suspend for Good Friday.

KING GEORGE OFFERS TO LEAD IN ANTI-ALCOHOL CAMPAIGN

Total Prohibition and Shortening of Hours of Sale Are Two of the Solutions Suggested for the Present Delay in Manufacture of Munitions

LONDON, April 1. — King George has added his plea to that of the shipowners and in some cases that of the Laborites themselves, that some vigorous measures be adopted to cope with the question of drunkenness, which, it is urged, is having the effect of delaying the delivery of munitions of war.

The King has volunteered, if it is considered advisable, personally to give up the use of all alcoholic liquors and to issue an order against their use in the royal household. Such a notification has been sent to David Lloyd George, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, by the King's private secretary, Lord Stamfordham. The letter of Lord Stamfordham follows:

"Dear Chancellor of the Exchequer:

"The King thanks you for so promptly letting him have a full report of the proceedings at yesterday's meeting of the deputation of employers. His Majesty has read it with intense interest, but also with the deepest concern. He feels that nothing but the most vigorous measures will successfully cope with the grave situation now existing in our armament factories."

"We have before us the statements not merely of the employers but of the Admiralty and the War Office, which are responsible for munitions of war and the transport of troops and their food and ammunition. From this evidence it is without doubt largely due to drink that we are unable to secure the output of war material indispensable to meet the requirements of the army in the field, and that there has been such serious delays in consequence of the necessary reinforcements of supplies to aid our gallant troops at the front.

"A continuance of such a state of things must inevitably result in the prolongation of the horrors and burdens of this terrible war.

"I am instructed to add that, if it be deemed advisable, the King will be prepared to set an example by giving up all alcoholic liquor himself and by issuing orders against its consumption in the royal households, so that no difference shall be made, so far as his Majesty is concerned, between the treatment of the rich and the poor in this question.

(Signed) "Lord Stamfordham,
"King's Private Secretary."

The effect of drink on the work which is considered necessary for the successful carrying on of the war overshadows at the present everything else in public interest. The press and public favor some drastic measures, a majority of the newspapers expressing the belief that total prohibition which would apply to all classes, is necessary. The Government, however, has not yet reached a decision on the question, although, if Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Kitchener have their way, it is believed that there will be total prohibition. To bring this about the Government must have an act of Parliament passed.

It is pointed out that to prohibit the sale of liquor only in the localities where men are engaged in the manufacture of munitions would cause a great outcry, and that aside from total prohibition, apparently the only way of dealing with the matter is a further curtailment in the hours of sale. Some persons favor prohibiting the sale of spirits, but allowing the sale of beer and wine. It is understood that the leaders in this matter would not be satisfied except with the most stringent restrictions.

The matter will require long consideration for the questions of compensation and the finding of employment for the thousands of men and women who would be thrown out of work.

At a meeting of the Glasgow liquor dealers, it was decided to ask Mr. Lloyd George to receive a deputation from them which will suggest a drastic reduction in the hours for the sale of liquor. The same deputation will confer with the labor leaders.

THE ENGINEERS WORK AT NIGHT

Corporal Fenwick Says Germans Make It Interesting For Them

Writing to his sister, Miss D. Fenwick, 418 1-2 George Street ,Corp. E. S. Fenwick of the 2nd Field Company, Canadian Engineers, First Contingent, gives some interesting details in regard to his experiences at the front. He says: "We do most of our work at night and it's rather exciting at times. The Germans fire a sort of star shell from a specially constructed pistol, which bursts into a glare when it is in the air and lights up all the surrounding country and then they start banging away at anything they see.

All day yesterday our artillery were working continually, and I believe did a lot of damage. The Germans put a few shells around the building we are billeted in and one went through the wall of a cottage next door, but did not hurt anybody. I heard this morning that the guns that fired them were put out of business this morning early. Have just received Princess Mary's gift of a flint and steel pipe lighter. A very handy thing as matches are nearly as scarce as money."

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The Finance committee of the City Council will meet this afternoon at four o'clock, when the accounts for the month will be certified to and passed.

Building Permits.

A building permit has been issued to Samuel King, authorizing the construction of a dwelling on Water Street, north of Dublin, at a cost of $2,200; also one to James Stoddard and one to D. Sullivan for $20 and $125 respectively for the alteration of stores at 739 McDonnel and 639 George Street.

Ventilation at City Hall.

Mr. R. G. Sturgeon has made a preliminary inspection of the City Hall with a view to devising some means of improving the ventilation in accordance with the request of the City Council.

Will be Refunded.

The sum of $39.79 will be repaid to the Peterborough Hydraulic Company for taxes that were overpaid in the years 1912, 1913 and 1914.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

The candidates for Galt Council for one vacant seat are: George Burgess, Dr. W. S. Dakin, A. R. Willard, and W. N. Robinson.

Bill Thrown Out.

The City of Toronto Bill asking that members of the Board of Education be elected yearly instead of having half elected every two years, was thrown out by the Legal committee of the Legislature.

Selling at Par.

According to City Treasurer James S. Bell, of London, the city will receive par for the entire block of $1,150,000 local debenture notes placed on the market for local sale.

Demand License Reductions.

Although they will not appeal against the quashing of the London license reduction by-law the temperance forces of the city declare that unless the License Commissioners cut off six licenses, as called for in the measure, they will take steps to have 12 or even 15 licenses cut off in January next.

Was Elected.

One for the Firemen.

The Fire Brigade, of Brantford, has received many tokens of the citizens' appreciation of its good work during recnt fires in that city.

KITCHENER'S SOLUTION.

He Will Enlist Dockers and Dress Them In Khaki.

LIVERPOOL, April 1.—Lord Derby announced yesterday that the Government was planning to organize the dockers of Liverpool, under the name of First Dock Battalion of the Liverpool Regiment. The men are to be dressed in khaki overalls. This plan is to be adopted to prevent further delay in handling war supplies. Labor trouble among the workers on the Mersey recently has caused serious embarrassment.

The battalion will be made up of about 2,000 men, who will be enlisted under the military law with army pay, in addition to a guaranteed minimum wage of 25 shillings weekly.

The Captures Mean Little

Germany Has Lots of Field Pieces Says British Observer

LONDON, April 1. — The official "eye-witness," in a summary of minor events occurring on the British front that week, sounds a note of warning against placing importance on the capture of machine guns from the Germans, reports of which so often appear in the official statements.

"It must be remembered," he says, "that to the Germans the loss of one or several machine guns does not represent what at the beginning of the operations it would have meant to us, with our then vastly inferior total and proportional number of these weapons.

"It is believed that before the war commenced they had available altogether a stock of 50,000 such guns, apart from any that may since have been turned out by their arsenals. Their employment of them, therefore, has in a certain sense been prodigal and carried out with a disregard to loss, which is only comprehensible when the large reserve of these weapons in their possession is borne in mind."

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passages Right Up.

Instant relief — no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh.

The School Board Enquiry

May Commence After the Easter Holidays

That the investigation concerning certain members of the Board of Education will be proceeded with after the Easter holidays is the opinion of Mr. G. N. Gordon, City Solicitor, and member of the Board. At a meeting of the Legal Committee of the City Council that was held last evening, letters were read from Mr. W. H. Hill and Mr. John Crane, respecting the proposed investigation. Mr. Hill signified his willingness to be bound by the finding of His Honour Judge Huycke. Mr. Gordon, who was present at the meeting, expressed himself along similar lines. If he were disqualified by reason of his position with the city or upon any other grounds, the finding would be accepted unconditionally and without comment.

Special Committee.

A short time ago the Council appointed a special committee composed of His Worship Mayor Buller, Aldermen Green, Dobbin and Edgar, to wait upon the County Judge respecting certain matters incident to the investigation. This committee will probably submit their report at the next meeting of the City Council. If all the parties to the investigation are willing, a stated case will be submitted to the County Judge. This will minimize the cost and scope of the investigation. If such a procedure is adopted, the parties to the enquiry will probably agree to be bound by the finding of the Judge. Whether such a finding results in disqualification or otherwise.

'ROUND THE STORES

AT ALEX.' GORDON'S.

It would seem to be a hard proposition to keep Alex. Gordon, the popular "cattle king" out of the meat business, especially at Easter. After pulling away from a good business in the Market Arcade a short time ago Alex. took a roving commission in the country, and, in the meantime, turned up some good "Cobalt." Sure enough, as soon as the first spring robin of 1915 was heard, he looms up again in the retail business, this time in the J. J. Howden meat market, George Street, and announces that he will be ready Saturday morning, with a fine display of toothsome Easter meats. Read his advertisement in another column and renew his acquaintance by ordering a prime "sirloin" roast for Easter Sunday.

MRS. BYRNE'S BEAUTY PARLOURS.

There are many ladies who have recently came to the city who are not aware of the toilet work done by Mrs. Byrne, of the Ladies' Hair Store, 424 George Street. Appointments are made for artistic hair dressing, massage and skin treatment and the necessary dainty toilet accessories—powders, hair tonics, facial creams, etc., are always to be found here.

AT C. B. ROUTLEY'S.

All the Easter finery you can wear won't give you much satisfaction if there isn't a fresh Easter feeling about your home. This week is the week to decide just what you're going to do to your home this spring. Now is the time when the whole family can hold a consultation and pick out from such varied stocks as Mr. C. B. Routley's just what you want in beautiful wall and window decorations, tea sets, china and glassware, cutlery and bric-a-brac and many other allied lines that go for the adornment of the home. Mr. Routley is known to have an excellent knowledge of the makers and markets in the above lines. He is also in a position to secure the newest stocks at as close a price as they can be bought for anywhere.

Paper that room now and avoid all the extra worry of housecleaning time. It is astonishing how little it costs to paper a room neatly. Mr. Routley's wall paper patterns are so new in elegant parlour designs, kitchen and bedroom hangings, oatmeals and tiles, cut-out borders, etc., that it will certainly be advantageous to look here before ordering out of town from catalogues or mail order houses.

PAINT TIME IS HERE.

Who hasn't noticed the difference in appearance in the house that hasn't been kept neatly painted, and the one that looks as old and dingy as Methuselah, for want of a fresh coat of paint? "Clean up and paint up!" — that's the spirit, folks. Get busy. Morgan's paint and hardware store has been stocked with every desirable need in the paint and varnish line,—white lead, oils, brushes, colours, stains, wall tints, mixed paints, polishing, scouring and cleaning requisites. This store carries full lines of the well known Sherwin-Williams' mixed paints, which has been found so reliable and handy for those who don't know the trick of mixing colours. Start out next Monday and set a good example to your neighbour by giving your house a new spring dress.

LADIES' TAILOR-MADE GARMENTS.

There is great art in wearing just the right thing. William C. Sysons, who has recently opened new quarters, upstairs, over 435 George Street, is a specialist in tailor-made outer garments for ladies. His parlours are on the second floor, and are well adapted for the quiet, refined interviewers, so desirable in this line of business. Mr Sysons gives expert attention to the making up of ladies' suits, coats and skirts that are up-to-date in every detail, with all the chic and line of the latest ideas. He is an enthusiastic student of the leading models for spring and summer wear; gives correct ideas and estimates; and makes up to order only. Fashionable material is shown for selection and materials are accepted when desired.

AT HOOPER'S.

The three confectionery stores of Thos. H. Hooper are making a fine showing of fancy Easter confectionery. The show windows in each of the George Street stores are dressed with the alluring decorated sweet meats, such as fancy chocolate Easter eggs of various designs; also rabbits, chickens and other candied novelties. The call for these seasonable confections has been good, and the demand seems to grow this week. Hooper's homemade chocolates and confections made on the premises, keeps up their popular reputation and steady sale. Remember to order your hot cross buns.

LOCAL TO BE RESTORED.

The Tweed Advocate says that official notification has been given that the "local" will be restored to that town about May 31st, at which time a new time-table will be put in operation.

PATIENT RESIDENT OF PETERBOROUGH

According to the Ruling of His Honour Judge Mason of Toronto—Will Have to be Maintained by the City

Peterborough will likely have to shoulder a new financial responsibility in the form of a tubercular patient, that at present is confined in the Toronto Free Hospital for Consumptives. The patient in question formerly resided in Peterborough and in recent years has worked in Toronto, visiting Peterborough at periodical intervals. Eventually she contracted tubercular trouble and was removed to the Hospital. The city of Toronto claimed that the patient was a resident of Peterborough and that this city would have to pay the cost of maintenance which is fixed by the Act at one dollar per day. To avoid the costs of litigation proceedings it was agreed to pay ten dollars and have Judge Morson of the County Court, Toronto, give judgment as to whether the girl was a resident of Toronto or Peterborough. Judgment was given in favour of Toronto, and it now devolves upon this city to meet a hospital bill of $270 in addition to the fixed rate of one dollar a day.

An Easy Way Out.

Mayor Buller told the Legal committee that such a course was preferable to having to maintain a consumptive hospital here. As this is the only tubercular patient the city has to maintain at the present time although there might be more at any time. The committee authorized the payment of ten dollars for the judgment that was given.

A similar fee will have to be paid by the Toronto Free Hospital for Consumptives as per agreement between the solicitor for both parties.

Lieut. Bottomley Dismissed.

OTTAWA, April 1.—The Militia Department yesterday confirmed the cable report of the dismissal from the position of a paymaster of the first Canadian contingent of Lieut. John Bottomley. He was short in his accounts.

Bottomley comes from Niagara Falls, and was formerly a lieutenant in the 44th Regiment. He enlisted at Valcartier last August.

Horse Takes Large Part in the War Despite Autos

Special to The Examiner:

"There is many a war-horse that is more entitled to immorality than the man who rides him." — General Robert E. Lee.

So far as it can be estimated from official sources, seven months of the world's war has used up one million horses through death, wounds, sickness, and in some cases the killing of horses that they may not fall into the hands of the enemy.

The war horse has taken a tremendous part in this great war, although the noble animal has been superseded in a large measure by the automobile.

Washington, Wellington, Napoleon, Grant, Lee, Sherman, Sheridan, to name the famous generals of a century, went to war on the war-horse; the modern general of to-day goes in a taxicab.

All the romance, all that goes to make the picturesque, seemingly is lacking in these days, when an army fights with an enemy unseen.

In a large measure the four-legged steed has been supplanted by the throbbing motor. If you want to see picturesque cavalry charges, go to the museums when the war is over and look at the masterpieces of the other days.

Grant and Lee saw each other, but once in the famous campaign that ended at Appomatox, and then at great distance. Grant recognized Lee's gray horse, but not his rider. Going to war in taxicabs and motor cars and autos, the generals on opposite sides never see each other.

It only requires Thomas Buchanan Read's lines of "Sheridan's Ride" to recall what changes 50 years of progress have made in the method of going to war.

An officer connected with the remount department of the British army says that the life of a horse in this war is ten days, so great is the unexampled wastage. In the Civil war, a cavalry horse, under an active commander, lasted four months.

It has been estimated that in seven months of the war 3,000,000 horses have been used. For the complete mobilisation of its army the German government required 800,000 horses. The French cavalry alone required 250,000 horses, other figures for other branches of the service not being available. For the British army in France and Belgium there has been transported 200,000 horses. For the cavalry, artillery and for the transport service, because of lack of railways, Russia is using 1,000,000 horse. Austria put 250,000 horses into service, and both Belgium and Servia contributed horses; also Turkey.

When the war broke out practically all the nations at war requisitioned every horse that was of use, unless it was to the detriment of the country, as in the case of stud horses. But race horses, thoroughbreds, all of them were put to a better use, as the war departments regarded it. Howlett's famous horses were seized for the French army and even Hennessy's Grand Prix winner was requisitioned along with other blooded racers. The race tracks were turned into huge cow pastures at Auteuill and Longchamps.

Even the famous Elberfield thinking horses were the victims of war, being taken for duty in the German artillery a month or two after a reprieve was granted upon their first seizure. It is reported the horses died in the Flanders campaign. The "thinking horses" did such wonderful stunts that various scientists investigated their abilities. The astonishing thing that these horses did attracted attention for years all over Germany, France and Italy. Edward Bullough of Cambridge University, and Dr. V. J. Wooley looked into the abilities claimed for these "thinking horses" and reported that to the Society of Physical Research that they were not in any position to give any definite solution of the problem.

Richard Harding Davis, who was in Brussels when one division of the German army took three days to pass through, followed the various armies. In speaking of the appalling waste of horses, he says:

"Those that first entered Brussels with the German army had been bred and trained for the purposes of war, and they were magnificent specimens. Everyone who saw them exclaimed ungrudgingly in admiration. But by the time the army reached the approaches of Paris the forced marches had so depleted the stock of horses that for remounts the Germans were seizing all they met. Those that could not keep up were shot. For miles along the road from Meux to Soissons to Rheims their bodies tainted the air.

"They had served their purpose, and after six weeks of campaigning the same animals that in times of peace would have proved faithful servants for many years were destroyed that they might not fall into the hands of the French. Just as an artilleryman spikes his gun, the Germans on their retreat from the Aisne river left in their wake no horse that might assist in their pusuit. As they withdrew they searched each stable yard and killed the horses. In village after village I saw horses lying in the stalls or in the fields, still wearing the harness of the plow, or in groups of three or four in the yard of a barn each with a bullet hole in its temple. They were killed for fear they might be useful.

CHANGES IN ACT.

Compensation Bill Undergoes Amendments In Legislature.

TORONTO, April 1.— The Legislature spent the bulk of the day yesterday in committee, and although several points occasioned discussion, unusual progress was made. The order paper was cleared of several rows of third readings, and amendments to some important bills were added.

The workmen's compensation bill was changed to make the employers of Ontario workmen injured outside the province individually liable. All Ontario men so employed will receive compensation unless they have been living beyond the confines for more than six months. An employer may include himself upon his own pay list of employes, but will never receive compensation on a salary basis of more than $2,000. The age limit of 21 is removed, and parents will receive compensation for a son's injuries.

When the good roads bill appeared, the Opposition urged the more than twenty per cent. be spent for maintenance in order to bring old roads up to the new standard.

Hon. Mr. Macdiarmid said so generous an offer was out of the question.

French Cruiser Sinks Submarine.

PARIS, April 1.—A statement indicating that a German submarine may have been sunk by a French cruiser was given out yesterday by the Ministry of Marine. It is as follows:

"Tuesday afternoon a French light cruiser sighted a German submarine manoeuvering on the surface off Dieppe. The cruiser immediately gave chase, forcing the submarine to dive, firing meanwhile at the periscope and turning in order to ram it with the bow.

"The cruiser passed above the submarine at the moment the periscope disappeared, and from the spot where the submarine was last seen quantities of oil flowed to the surface."

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE.

THE OIL SCHEME AS VIEWED AT A DISTANCE

Old Resident of Peterborough Now Living in Florida Writes

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I see in your daily paper the people of your city are considerably stirred up over the oil street proposition. Now, for the benefit of the city I want to say that the oil is a complete success. About eight months ago our city, at my advice, ordered a car of crude oil at a cost of 3 3-4c. per gallon, delivered. The car cost $263.55. We applied one-half of car to about 1-3 mile of street, using the water tank, putting on a 3 in. pipe for a sprinkler. We applied this to a hard, smooth street, without sacrificing it. Then we took hand brush brooms and swept it, so as to get it evenly distributed, then covered it with about one inch of sand, and then rolled it with street roller. Now, after about eight months wear we have the best street in the City. It is clean, no dust, no smell, and it looks like a velvet carpet. The most of our streets are paved with vetrified brick and they make a good street, but very expensive and hard on horses; but we like the oil on the natural material best. This is the best spent money our city has spent in years. I was born in old Peterborough and, naturally, I have her interest at heart, and the Examiner is always welcome. I think it just possible that I have played marbles with the Editor, if it is the Mr. Stratton I think it is. I used to live on James Street, Ashburnham, and went to school with John Wood, also Mr. Hallett. It has been twenty-two years since I left Peterborough. In that time the good Lord has been good to me and mine, since I came to Florida. The climate here is perfection itself. Well, I can't think of anything else that would likely interest you, so I will close.

Thanking you for your valuable space, I remain

Yours truly.

Henry Albert Fausett.

AGED TAX COLLECTOR

Restored To Health By Vinol

Corinth, Miss.—"I am a city tax collector and seventy-four years of age. I was in a weak, run-down condition. My druggist told me about Vinol. I tried it and in a week noticed considerable improvement; I continued its use and now I have gained twenty pounds in weight, and feel much stronger. I consider Vinol a fine tonic to create strength for old people."—J. A. Peace.

Could Double The Territory

Former Premier of Greece Favours Intervention in the War

PARIS, April 1.—Former Premier Venizelos of Greece, who has returned to Athens after a short rest, has made declarations to political friends concerning concessions he obtained during his ministry in regard to territorial claims of Bulgaria, according to the Athens correspondent of the Havas Agency. M. Venizelos is quoted as saying:

"At the beginning of the war the demands of Bulgaria included not only Kavala but Vodena. These demands, which were supported by certain powers, assumed a serious character, but my line of policy was such that I succeeded in obtaining the withdrawal of this support from Bulgaria."

Speaking of the participation of Greece in the war on the side of the allies, urged by him, the former Premier said he believed that with her fleet and a division of her army Greece could have doubled her territory.

SUDDEN DEATH OF C.P.R. MAN

Wm. Stith, General Passenger Agent Dies of Heart Disease

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, April 1. — William Stitt, the general passenger agent of the C.P.R., dropped dead at 9.30 this morning in the C.P.R. offices here of heart failure. He joined the company in 1885 at Winnipeg.

Soldiers Were Well Represented

Over 58,000 persons were present to watch the cup tie between Chelsea and Newcastle United. The takings amounted to $9,500. To those who have given the subject any thought it was not surprising to find practically half of the spectators were soldiers.

That fact is illuminating when one considers the gallons of ink that have been wasted by those who would have had the game stopped incontinently. Not only did the game give pleasure to the men in khaki who watched it, but there are the tens of thousands at the front who were dying to read all about it.

It was a terribly hard game, but the finer points were painfully lacking, especially from the play of the home side, but Abrams' breakdown early in the game was a bad handicap from which the team never really recovered.

On play the Tynesiders were the superior eleven, the entire back division giving a fine display. The backs, M'Cracken and Hudspeth, were the best pair that has been seen on the ground this season, and the members of the League Committee who were present, must have wished William M'Cracken had been of English birth.

James Hay has been so long in first-class football that one is inclined to look on him as a veteran. There was no sign of that in his play for at the finish of the two hours he was full of running. He is a rare asset for the Newcastle club, and should have years of play in him yet.

Big-limbed Wilfred Low was also in great form, and along with Hay smashed up many of the best efforts of the home forwards. The whole of the Newcastle forwards were much better together than the Chelsea front rank, King being best of the bunch, but George Wilson ran him close until he got hurt.

Soldier Shot Through Head

Mr. Charles Noyes, received news yesterday that his nephew, Pte. Walter Cook, had been wounded while in the trenches. He was shot through the top of his head, but is recovering and expects to soon be back in the trenches again. The news of the casualty came to Mr. Noyes in a letter from another nephew, Mr. Ernest Cook, brother of Pte. W. Cook, residing near Toronto. No particulars are given as to any engagements which Pte. Cook took part in.

Pte. Cook is a son of the youngest sister of Mr. Noyes, the genial gateman at the Charlotte Street crossing of the Grand Trunk Railway. He is a regular, as are also four nephews of Mr. Noyes.

Mr. Harry Hill a Product of St. John's

A promising young musician in the person of Mr. Harry Hill left the city early this morning to take up the position of organist and choirmaster in the Methodist church at Orangeville, a position he has held for some time in Park Street Baptist church. He began studying music while serving two years as a boy alto in St. John's choir, and has achieved first class honours in several examinations in both vocal and instrumental music. He will be greatly missed at Park Street, as well as by the Choral Society of which he was a faithful member. Mr. R. J. Dovey has been his only teacher and regrets very much the loss of so apt a pupil.

Industrial Employment Agency

Mr. E. Langley, the secretary of the Industrial Employment Agency, 392½ Water Street, sends the following for publication:

ASSUMES HIS NEW DUTIES TO-DAY

Mr. J. B. Brown, ex-alderman, and now ex-Market Clerk, has resigned his commission as presiding head of the Peterborough public market. His retirement automatically came into effect at midnight, and this morning Mr. W. Savigny, his successor, or, in other words, the successful tenderer for 1915-16, assumed his new duties in the senate building. Whether the change will mean the disbandonment of the senate remains to be seen. The new encumbent may find their services indispensible when it comes to a question of familiarising himself with the modus operandi under which the market is governed.

GOOD FRIDAY AT THE S. ARMY

Mission Band Is Entertained

The members of the Go-Forth (Mission) Band of Knox church spent a very enjoyable evening on Tuesday, when they were the guests of the secretary, Miss G. Watt.

During the evening an excellent paper entitled, "The New Era in Korea" was admirably presented by Miss Lillian Holyman, earning well deserved applause.

It was with deep regret that the members took leave of their hostess at a late hour.

Holy Thursday at St. Peter's Cathedral

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien celebrated pontificial High mass at the Cathedral this morning, with Monsignor Casey of Lindsay as assistant priest. The deacons of honour were Rev. P. J. McGuire of Downeyville and Rev Father Ferguson of Lindsay, the deacon of the mass Father Scanlon, and sub-deacon, Father Maugher of Lakefield. Rev. P. J. Kelly was master of ceremonies. The Holy Thursday rites are commemorative of incidents immediately preceding the Passion of Christ. Rev. Father Fitzpatrick of Ennismore and most of the local clergy were present at the Cathedral.

A Reference to Max Brackenridge

Mr. Max Brackenridge, who has been engaged with McDermid & Jury, Peterborough, since his graduation from the Norwood High school about two years ago, has enlisted in the third contingent, and was among the 110 men to leave Peterborough for training headquarters at Belleville.

Max is a son of Matthew Brackenridge of Westwood. While attending High school in Norwood he was one of the number who took up the signalling course conducted by the Militia Department. He was also a member of the School Cadets. The knowledge he gained in signalling has now proved of much value to him, with the result that he takes a place in corps of signallers attached to the contingent. — Norwood Register.

Lots Have Been Received To Be Let Free For Planting

Movement to Utilize City's Vacant Land is Making Good Progress —Further Donations of Land Are Asked For.

The plan to utilize vacant lots in the city this summer is steadily advancing. Property has been donated, temporarily, of course, by the Canadian General Electric Company, the Colonial Weaving Co., the Bradburn Estate, Dr. Frederick, Chas. Carroll and others. The committee in charge of this work—Rev. Peter Campbell, chairman; Chief Howard, R. M. Glover, W. H. Young, and Walter Stocker, president of the Horticultural Society—will be glad to receive further donations from property owners in the city. It is understood that the lots are loaned only for the present summer and until the harvest is gathered.

The lots will be let without any charge to those who desire to work them. The Horticultural Society will have them plowed and everything will be made ready for planting. They should be applied for at once as the ground will soon be ready for use. The advantages of the scheme should appeal to all those who would like to put in a garden. The Horticultural Society will even offer prizes for the best work, tidiness, etc., shown by those who may wish to compete for them.

Easter

Celestial glory fills the sky.
The rosy clouds divide
And show the morning's golden gates
Unfolding bright and wide.
A little bird begins to trill
Upon a budding spray,
And every branch and rootlet hails
The dawn of Easter day.

The old gray church upon the hill
Has left its doors ajar,
And Easter lilies blow within,
Each shining like a star.
Along the crimson altar steps
Their snowy blossoms sway,
Saluting with their rich perfume
The dawn of Easter day.

The ancient woods are all astir,
The air is sweet and bland;
The resurrection miracle
Appears on every hand.
Awake! Let joyous anthems rise,
For death has passed away,
And life eternal springs to greet
The dawn of Easter day.

Maple Leaves for Soldiers.

Lt.-Col. Winters, private secretary to the Minister of Militia, has asked people who gathered maple leaves last Fall to send the same to the Department of Militia and Defence so that they might be sent to the Canadian wounded in the hospitals of France and England. Col. Winters feels that these little reminders of Canada will lbe appreciated by all wounded soldiers, and will remind the boys who have suffered from German shells and bullets that they are not forgotten at home. A great many leaves have no doubt been gathered around Peterborough and many will feel like parting with them for such an excellent purpose.

Horses for Cavalry.

Ottawa, March 31 — Twenty-five horses have been bought by Mr. A. Z. Palmer and Dr. Pallster for the 8th C.M.R. The total number needed is 584, and it will likely be several weeks before this number is obtained.

Sergt.-Major Edwards, one of the most competent drill instructors in Canada, has taken charge of the musketry training of the men of the Mounted Rifles.

TORONTO, March 31st.—Some notable Toronto athletes left this morning for Kingston, where they will join the 26th Field Battery, which is attached to the Third Contingent. In the company were Jack Tait, the Olympic runner and all-round sportsman; "Hec" Phillips, also an Olympic performer; Howard Webster, captain of the Argonaut Hockey Club; George Warwick, who played with the double blue last season; and D'Arcy Smith, the ex-Toronto R. and A. A. goal-keeper, who came all the way from Melville, where he played hockey last season, to join the contingent. Everard Butler, the champion oarsman, who was to have gone with the party, will not go until later, on account of the serious illness of his mother.

These boys will be Battery mates of the Peterborough recruits.

Col. Hemming of Kingston, the officer commanding the 3rd Divisional Area, was in the city this morning.

Although no special orders have been received in regard to recruiting for what is popularly called the "fourth contingent" and no special effort is being made to secure recruits Lt.-Col. Walker is accepting any who offer themselves. The pay of these men starts of course, from the date of enlistment. The enlisted have not yet started drilling, but will do so in a day or two.

The English inventor of a new wireless telephone claims that it is so compact that a man can carry the entire apparatus about with him.

COLDS OR COUGHS

Should Never Be Neglected.

If They Are, Some Serious Lung Troubles Are Sure To Follow.

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS on their first inception, and will thereby prevent you from becoming affected with some serious lung trouble, such as bronchitis pneumonia or even consumption.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get it as there are many imitations on the market.

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c; and manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited Toronto, Ont.

Mrs. Thomas Bridges, Gorrie, Ont. writes: "I was so bad with a cold I gave up work, and I was in bed four weeks being unable to do anything. I thought the cold was turning to bronchitis, so I changed my medicine to Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I used three bottles, and they completely cured me and I am as strong as ever. I highly recommend it to all sufferers.

Mr. F. L. Hutchinson

FRANK LOSH HUTCHINSON, manager of the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, the largest hotel in Canada, has been appointed to the position of manager-in-chief of hotels of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He will enter upon his duties on the 1st of April, succeeding Mr. Hayter Reed, who retires, after a long and faithful and successful term of office. There are few hotelmen whose climb up the ladder of success has been speedier than that of F. L. Hutchinson.

He is a Canadian, born in London, Ont., in 1869, and a son of Charles Hutchinson, K.C., County Crown Attorney for Middlesex. At the age of sixteen he began his career as a clerk in the Bank of Montreal. At the age of thirty-two, or in 1901, he resigned from the bank to become a member of the Montreal Stock Exchange.

Everything was going smoothly until 1907, when that memorable financial panic hit the country, and Mr. Hutchinson also suffered in consequence. It occurred to him that the C.P.R. offered opportunities that appealed to him, and he asked for a job. He was sent down to the Chateau Frontenac as kitchen steward, and there began his hotel experience and his hotel career. Shortly afterwards he was moved to the front office, and soon after that was made assistant manager of the hotel. In less than a year from the time he began in the kitchen he was appointed manager. In 1911 he was appointed assistant to Hayter Reed, manager-in-chief, C.P.R. Hotels system. The following year he was made superintendent of C.P.R. hotels in Alberta and British Columbia. In August, 1913, he resigned from the C.P.R. to accept his present position as manager of the Windsor Hotel, Montreal. In returning to the C.P.R. to enter upon the duties of the highest office in the gift of the hotels department, Mr. Hutchinson does not underrate the work and responsibilities that go with it, but he is glad to go back, and he returns with that practically gained confidence that he "knows the ropes" to guide the destinies of twenty hotels, involving an invested capital of twenty-five millions of dollars.

BRADFORD IN FAVOUR OF TOTAL ABSTINENCE

BRADFORD, April 1.—The Chamber of Commerce adopted last night a resolution in favour of the total prohibition of liquor, with compensation to the holders of liqcor licenses.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

MANY ATHLETES HERE AND ELSEWHERE HAVE ANSWERED THE CALL

Some of the Well Known Sportsmen Have Gone—Prominent Figures in All Lines of Sports Have Enlisted.

ATHLETES AS OFFICERS

Peterborough's sporting organizations have contributed a goodly number of men for the firing line since the war broke out, and all branches of local sport are represented in the different contingents. Naturally, with so many Old Country-bred boys in the ranks, Association football leads. A host of the best soccer players in Peterborough have responded to the call, a notable example being the Nomad football club, many members of which is at the front or on the way.

Among the Rugby players who have gone may be mentioned George Minorgan, Billy Gibson and Heber Rogers, all in the 1st contingent. Hockey has contributed a number, including Walter Flowers, formerly goal-keeper of the Peterborough Juniors; George Butcher, goal-keeper for the champion St. Luke's Church League team; "Barney" Quinn of the Y.M.C.A. City League team; "Scotty" Rogers, who was spare man for the Boston Exploits; Bill Rew, who used to play in the Mercantile League; Alan Sharpe of the St. Andrew's Church League team, and a number of others.

A number of more or less prominent local ball players have gone—probably the best known being Rosca Kendry, who played shortstop for the Stratheonas, Auburns and other teams.

Toronto Athletes Enlist.

Toronto, March 31—Many well-known local athletes are now wearing khaki. Jack Tait, Hector Phillips and Raymond Hughes, former runners; A. W. McKenzie, champion Canadian canoeist; D'Arcy Smith, goal-keeper for the Melville team; Wilson, rover of the 'Varsity hockey team; Hugh Aird, of the Victoria Hockey Club; "Mac" Murray and Jack O'Connor of the Argonaut Rugby club; Howard Webster and Geo. Warwick of the Argonaut hockey club, Connie Smythe and Al Saunders, of 'Varsity Junior O.H.A. champion team. Dafoe, of 'Varsity Senior Intercollegiate hockey champions; Laddie Cassells, Charlie Gage, Bobby and Hugh Sinclair, of champion 'Varsity Rugby team, have enlisted, some of whom now are on their way to the front.

Ottawa's Good Showing.

OTTAWA, March 31—Many well-known Ottawa athletes were gazetted lieutenants in the list issued to-day by the Militia Department. Several have already received their appointments and will depart in the course of a day or two to join their respective regiments. They are all in the Army Service Corps, an important branch of Kitchener's new army, to which much attention is being paid by the British and Canadian Governments.

Among the new officers are Jack Williams, captain of the St. Patrick Football Club, formerly of the Ottawa and Queen's teams, one of the greatest half-backs ever seen in the Intercollegiate and Interprovincial; Ken. Williams, his brother, who played for Montreal two years ago, and who took part last Fall in one or two games with St. Patricks; Eddie Phillips, ex-president of the Inter-provincial union and prominently identified with the Ottawa Rowing Club; Basil Frith, a Cliffside and Toronto 'Varsity hockey star, who also played football with 'Varsity and Ottawa being a member of the local back division last Fall; Roy Finney, a member of the Ottawa Rowing Club's junior eight and junior four; Felix Sowden, who was bow man in the Ottawa eight at St. Catharines last year, and who was a member of the crew which tried at Henley for the Grand Challenge Shield; Joe Foley of the Stewarton Hockey Club and Victoria Yacht Club; Ray Neville, also of the V. Y. C. Ken Williams is already attached to the Army Service Corps at Belleville. "Dick" Raby, the well-known local tennis star, is stationed with the Army Sercie Corps at Montreal, while "Bobby" Pringle of lacrosse fame, is assisting at Lansdowne Park. Many other local athletes are now taking courses of instruction and expect to qualify in the near future.

KNUT BELTING,
Pitcher of the Peterborough Canadian League Club for the past two years, who will manage a City League team this season.

KNUT BELTING TO MANAGE A LOCAL TEAM

Mr. Louis Yectes has secured Mr. Knut Belting for the summer to play ball in Peterborough, and he has a picked team that he says will be hard to beat. He will announce the line-up later in the season. This club will look for a berth in the City League, with Mr. Belting as a bench manager. When the club plays out of town games Mr. Belting will play.

Knotty Lee Has a Team

GUELPH, March 31.— Knotty Lee has not allowed any grass to grow under his feet since he was named as manager of the Guelph Baseball Club for 1915, but has already a number of palvers signed up and strings out for several other good men. He signed a catcher named Frank Jordan of Scranton, Pa., pitchers Dorbeck, last year with Erie; Carney, of Boston; Bradshaw, of Chicago, formerly of Berlin; Hoover, who was a member of Guelph Wobblies last year, and expects to get Kieley from Toronto. For infielders he has signed Murray of Somerville, Mass.; John Murphy of last year's Beavers; Frank Sullivan, a member of the Chicago Logan Squares last year, and expects to get Kiffles from Toronto as well as Hunt, an outfielder. Lee went to Toronto to-day, but will be back in Guelph on Tuesday next to remain for the season.

EVEN STREET CARS CAN'T KILL THE WANDERING DOGS

A Jackson Park car on George street this morning suddenly stopped above Simcoe street, and from the general direction of the wheels and brakes sounded the yelps of one of the mongrel dogs that infest the streets.

The conductor descended to the pavement and while everyone passing expected to find the dog had been killed, it extricated itself, and still yelping, raced down the street on three good legs. The other was gathered up, but it was all there and apparently the pup had escaped with only a few bruises. There are some citizens who will boost every motorman who picks off a worthless cur without making a mess of the street.

THE LOCAL BYE-ELECTION

There is considerable speculation in the North Ward as to the outcome of the bye-election that is to be held on Thursday, April 15th. The ward politicians are out with a full slate and a self-asserted air of superior wisdom concerning matters municipal. They have looked over the list of likely prospects and are now busily engaged in revealing to the prospective candidates some of the inner mysteries that are said to pave the way to the charmed circle.

The Line-Up.

The four candidates named by The Examiner, two days ago, are still in the ring. That is practically all that can be said regarding them until nomination day, which is on April 9th. They decline to declare themselves unconditionally, each one prefering to stand aside and let the other fellow show his hand.

The following names have been mentioned in connection with the vacancy: Messrs. G. H. Duncan, W. S. Dodd, D. H. Kernaghan, G. O. Cameron and Dr. Holloway.

Voice of The People

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—A few days ago, one of our aldermen told me that a leading citizen had just told him that we almost have in our city "commission government." When questioned as to what he meant he said, "Why Chief of Police, the Fire Chief and Adjt. McElhiney are the Commission." It might be difficult to judge as to the truth of the above insinuation. However, from the childish letters we have been reading in the press of late on the Salvation Army and its band, the writer is convinced there is an influence, bigger than the writer back of them. It seems to me this influence must be aiming at creating a state church of the Salvation Army.

We do not want to say a word against any religious sect. The Salvation Army have some good mixed with a great deal of what is undesirable with many sensible thinking Christians. I would like to know what right they have to the public funds, any more than other denominations. They are a religious sect, working sympathetically for their own Society, and it is time our public men awoke to this fact.

They organise a band, and use it every day in the week to attract a crowd, in order to build up their cause. As a taxpayer, I strongly object to our money being donated to any religious societies; let each society look after itself.

It is absurd to say the two bands should have equal shares. One band is enough for this city to support, especially this year, and the 57th Band in the Citizens' Band, and should have help. They are not collecting money from the public every night in the week, and several times on Sunday, as the Army band is doing. It causes one to smile to hear any one say, "the Army band is doing charity work," especially when the plate is passed around every time we hear them on the corner. On the night of "Shamrock Day" we listened to the public sneered at by the Adjutant for not giving a larger collection. He said, "We will play and sing some more, and expect you people to be more liberal." This is the people whom we are told, work for nothing, and expect money out of the city treasury.

In conclusion, I emphatically declare, that they have no right to donations, any more than the other churches have for their choirs. We have the 57th band, of all denominations; let it be supported as our city band. If the city ask the services of the S.A. band let them be paid for the services rendered.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor.

"Taxpayer."

An Admission of Inefficiency? Or a Free Holiday Trip?

We see that His Worship Mayor Buller has been invited to send two delegates to the ninth International Purity Congress, which is to be held in San Francisco in July next. The Congress having for its object the suppression of public vice and the promotion of personal and social purity.

Surely our city officials must find themselves on the horns of a dilemma! To accept will be, in the first place, to confess that Peterborough needs reforming, and could, moreover, learn something from San Francisco! And yet the objections of our city officials to even listen to suggestions for reform from some able women of Peterborough, who had carefully studied social conditions here and elsewhere; their extremely indignant attitude to the police woman question in general and to the particular fact that a police woman from San Francisco, when invited to speak here, had forsooth, assumed that her wider experience on the whole subject of social ills and social reforms, might be of value to Peterborough's governing board, all this must lead one to suppose that either Peterborough needs no reforming, or that our present government board is quite competent to work out, not alone their own salvation, but that of Peterborough's. "All we, like sheep, have gone astray. We have turned every-one unto his own way." No such admissions or confessions as this from our competent Peterborough Board. Yet—and this is a chilling alternative!—in order to justify to the ratepayers of Peterborough, the expense of such a delightful holiday trip to two delegates, (who need not be chosen for their ardor and enthusiasm on the subject of "social and personal purity") our civic officials must admit, not ony a little, but let us say, quite an average amount of incompetency to handle Peterborough's social conditions quite unaided, and a big need for reforming them, otherwise we ratepayers would not willingly pay for the costly trip. Indeed, there are few who could not profit themselves by a trip this summer, at the expense of the ratepayers. But modesty and acknowledgment of our incompetency to cause Peterborough to profit by it, deters us from making an appeal to the ratepayers. The people of Peterborough will await with interest the Mayor's decision.

A Believer in Law and Justice.

Mr. Forysthe's Explanation

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I see a letter in The Examiner yesterday signed "Cottager," in which statements are made regarding the fishing at Chemong Lake, which are absolutely untrue. I claim that the waters around Chemong Park are as well looked after as any in the district, and I would ask your correspondent to prove to me that some men were successful in getting half a barrel of fish. This statement is not correct so far as I know, and if your correspondent is honest in his endeavour to stop illegal fishing, all he has to do is to give me the information and I will act on it. Otherwise I will consider his letter a bluff.

Yours truly,

J. H. FORSYTHE,
Fishing Inspector.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, March 31. — Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 775 cattle, 1683 hogs, 62 sheep and lambs and 304 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Easier quality steers and heifers, $7.75 to $8; choice butchers, $7.25 to $7.50; good, $7 to $7.25; medium, $6.60 to $6.85; common, $6.25 to $6.50; choice cows, $6.50 to $6.65; good cows, $6.75 to $6; medium cows, $5.25 to $6.50; canners and cutters, $4 to $4.50; choice bulls at $6 to $6.50; common bulls at $5 to $6.

Stockers and Feeders.

Steers of good quality, 900 to 900 lbs., sold at $6.40 to $6.75; stockers, 800 to 750 lbs., sold at $6 to $6.40.

Milkers and Springers.

Choice milkers and forward springers sold at $70 to $80, with a few select cows at $85 to $90; common to good cows sold at $40 to $65 each.

Veal Calves.

Choice veal calves sold at $10 to $11.25; good calves are worth $8 to $9.50; medium, $6.50 to $7.50; common, $5 to $6; eastern calves, $4 to $5.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes of light weight, sold at $7 to $8; heavy ewes and rams, $5.50 to $6.50; lambs at $10.50 to $12.

Hogs.

Selects, weighed off cars, sold at $9.90 to $9, and one firm reported a sale at $9.10, which is the highest yet given.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, March 31.—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market receipts of live stock for the week ending March 27 were 700 cattle, 175 sheep and lambs, 1040 hogs and 1150 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale amounted to 150 cattle, 150 sheep and lambs, 300 hogs and 1500 calves.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for cattle, but the feeling was very firm, as the supply was the smallest of any previous market day this year; however, there was no excitement in the market on account of the fact that buyers in most cases had filled their wants pretty well on Monday, and consequently the trade was rather quiet. Sales of a few choice steers were made at $8 to $8.25, good steers at $7.50 to $7.75 and the lower grades at from $5 to $6.50, while butchers' cows brought from $4.75 to $6.75 and bulls from $5.50 to $7 per hundred pounds. One bull, weighing 2460 pounds, sold for $180.

The supply of spring lambs offered for the Easter trade was probably the smallest for many years, for which the demand was good and sales of a few choice head were made at $8 to $10 each, and the smaller ones at from $2.50 to $5. The trade in calves was active and sales were made freely at from $3.50 to $10 each, as to size and quality. One calf, weighing 620 pounds, sold at 8c per pound. The tone of the market for yearling lambs was firm at $8.50 to $9 and sheep at $5.25 to $6 per hundred pounds.

The condition of the hogs was unchanged, the feeling being strong under a good demand and small supplies, and sales of selected lots were made at $9 for hundred pounds weighed off cars.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, March 31.—Cattle—Receipts, 11,000; market, unsettled; beeves, $5.80 to $8.75; western steers, $6.70 to $7.40; cows and heifers, $3 to $7.75; calves, $7 to $10.

Hogs—Receipts, 24,000; market, lower; light, $6.60 to $6.87½; mixed, $6.60 to $6.87½; heavy, $6.45 to $6.85; rough, $6.45 to $6.55; pigs, $5.40 to $6.60; bulk of sales, $6.75 to $6.85.

Sheep—Receipts, 8000; market, firm; native, $7.25 to $8.25; lambs, native, $7.75 to $10.10.

Dockers Refuse Week-End Work.

LIVERPOOL, March 31.—The Birkenhead dockers last evening refused to do the week-end work until the ship owners agreed to pay them on Saturdays for the work done Friday nights and Saturdays.

John Sexton, secretary of the Dockers Union, addressed them, but was unable to persuade the men to change their decision. The suggestion that the military might be called upon to do their work was received with derisive laughter.

Government intervention in some form is generally expected at an early date.

SOLDIERS ON ACTIVE SERVICE WILL HAVE VOTE

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, April 1.—The principle of extending the franchise to all British subjects serving in the Canadian forces was affirmed in the House this morning. The discussion of the measure will take place on the second reading of the bill probably on Saturday.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that he was in accord with the principles of the resolution, but would reserve his opinion on the details. The bill provides for the taking of the votes of the soldiers by their officers at the front or in England in the event of a general election. They will not vote for candidates, but for the party they desire to support, Conservative, Liberal or Independent. The votes will be sent to various deputy returning officers.

blue clothes reported stolen under their other clothes. Mitchell had the suit he was wearing right next to his skin. Chief Thompson was in Ottawa all day yesterday in conference with Col. Sheridan and when the first arrest was made Detective Meagher wired him there that a man named Mitchell was the partner of Rouselle. The Chief went over the records there and found that Mitchell was wanted for breaking out of Central Prison. He was sentenced in Ottawa in December, 1913, to 24 months for larceny. His home is also in Ottawa.

Came Here Sunday.

According to the story of the two men they drifted into the city on Sunday morning last about 3 o'clock, and spent the time about the city until Tuesday morning when they went into Zacks Bros.' store and took only one suit of clothes each. They then walked to Indian River, where they planned to separate, which they apparently did. Rouselle, the first man arrested, came back to Peterborough yesterday morning and coming up town tried to sell a pair of trousers. This was duly reported to the detectives, who were then sure that at least one of their men was in the city again. Mitchell for some reason also came back to the city, getting in some time in the afternoon. He came uptown to get something to eat and was arrested.

Remanded a Week.

This morning in police court they were charged with having stolen 12 suits of clothes and 7 raincoats valued at $321.00. When asked if they would be tried by Magistrate Dumble or by a jury, Mitchell spoke up first, saying that he would come before a jury, but Rouselle elected to be tried by Magistrate Dumble. The latter was asked to plead, and he said "not guilty." Crown Attorney Hatton was not ready to go ahead with the case and they were remanded for one week. When informed of the remand they both asked for time to consider how they would elect or plead.

Quite at Home.

The prisoners seemed quite at home in their surroundings this morning. From their appearance they would not give an observer the impression that they were such desperate characters. To the police Mitchell gave his name as Frederick Morrison, but there is doubt as to his identity. The photos in possession of the Chief, which he brought from Ottawa are good likenesses and there can be no mistake in that direction. From the part Mitchell took in the proceedings this morning he appears to be the leader of the pair. He stands about 5 ft. 11 in. and weighs 160 pounds. He is slight of build and fair of complexion, with light wavy hair. He had on a grey suit and a soft collar and was lately shaved.

Rouselle, the giant of the two, stands about an inch over six feet, and would weigh in the neighbourhood of 200 pounds. He is at present in a very bad state, from drinking. When asked to sign his name to the sheet acknowledging his finger prints his hand shook so badly he could hardly write his signature. He admits having served a term of six months in the Central Prison, to which he was sentenced for participating in a fight.

The Chief is sending the finger print impressions away in an effort to get their previous records and he will likely get more particulars in a couple of days. The arrest of Mitchell is an important one in Police circles, as he was being sought all over the country. The policemen at the station are all on the qui vive with such daring characters in their charge. No chances are being taken with them at any time.

Besides the suits they were wearing a raincoat was found under the platform at one of the boat houses. They were known to have had suitcases with them, but so far efforts to locate these have not been successful. While the prisoners deny taking anything more than the two suits the Police believe that when the whereabouts of the suit cases is learned more goods will be unearthed.

Neither prisoner had much money in his possession when arrested.

Probably Stole Liquor.

These two men will undoubtedly be connected with the robbery of the Peterborough Liquor Store which was discovered on Monday morning. The fact that Rouselle is in such a bad state from drink would indicate that he has had a good supply of late. The same ladder was used in entering the Zacks store as was found against the liquor store building, on Monday.

"HANG VON TIRPITZ & OTHER GERMAN OFFICERS"

THREE GERMAN AEROPLANES BROUGHT DOWN IN ONE DAY

GERMANY REVERTING TO BARBAROUS WARFARE

London Dailies Loud in Their Indignation Over Recent Submarining of British Fishing Boats—Hang Those Responsible at End of War

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, (Special Cable) April3.—"Hank Von Tirpitz and other responsible German officers at the close of the war?" was the suggestion of the London Daily Chronicle to-day in a fresh outburst of indignation at the torpedoing of three English fishing vessels, expressly exempted from attack by the Hague Convention of 1907. The other London newspapers, though more conservative in their suggestions were equally bitter in charging Germany with reverting to barbarous warfare. "We cannot at present prevent Germans from committing any atrocity that seems good to them," said the Chronicle, "but we must insist upon a day of reckoning. The German Government says submarine crews now in our hands acted upon orders. It will be interesting to know who was responsible for those orders."

"Was the U-23 for instance, under orders to fire on boats that were being launched with women in them from the Aguila. Was it under orders to torpedo the "Falaba" under conditions ensuring holocaust of non-combatant lives. Was it under orders to refrain from helping people and to jeer at their struggles? Questions like these will need answering, but that high responsibility for the German policy rests somewhere at Berlin there can be no doubt. At the end of the war, the allies will have two alternatives. They can allow the practice of submarining merchantmen to become a usage recognized by International law, or they can after trial hang German officers responsible for initialing it, including Grand Admiral Von Tirpitz."

Two New Canadian Hospitals Are Established in France

LONDON, April 3—Two more Canadian military hospitals have been established in France, and a third will shortly be ready, making four all-Canadian hospitals on the continent. There is one general, one stationary and one casualty clearing station, commanded respectively by Lieut.-Col. Bridges, Major McKee, and Lieut.-Col. Ford. Tents and huts are to be used for all three.

In addition, arrangements are being made for the Toronto and McGill University and other units beside the hospitals General Carlton Jones is establishing at the convalescent camps at Shorncliffe. There will be sports and other amusements conducted by the Y.M.C.A. Canadian division. Training work is going on, but otherwise there is little to report. The health of the men is remarkably good. Col. Hamilton of Toronto is doing good preventive work by means of an automobile laboratory.

Some more wounded Canadians have reached England. Col. Hodgetts, the Red Cross Commissioner, has just returned to London from France, where he found all satisfactory.

One Canadian unit which has done much strenuous work during the past few months is the Canadian military police. While the general behaviour of the Canadians is said to be good, the police detachment keep a vigilant patrol in the regions of the hotels, and is on the alert at all hours.

Six Canadians Discharged from Hospital

The Duchess of Connaught Hospital at Cliveden discharged 48 patients yesterday, of whom six were Canadians. Lieut.-Col. Gorrell, who expects another big batch shortly, says that the Canadians all hanker after apples.

Major Astor, who provided the building for the Duchess of Connaught Hospital on his Cliveden estate, has just built a recreation hall for the convalescent soldiers.

The appeal of the director-general of the Army Medical Service Corps to the civil hospitals with training schools to make an effort to train emergency nurses in three or six months has caused a flutter in hospital circles. Guy's and St. Bartholomew's have already started, but St. Thomas' hesitates.

The Nursing Mirror recognizes the necessity for training a new nursing army at short notice, just as men of civilian occupations are being trained for Kitchener's army.

Wheat May Go Higher

Argentine Shipments Will be Cut in Two—Unfortunate Year in Southern Continent

CHICAGO, April 3.—Authoritative news from the Argentine that wheat shipments will be more than cut in two this week, that freights are scarce, that seaboard supplies are light and that the quality of the crop has been seriously impaired by rains are factors to bull the Chicago market.

These conditions again place the United States in a position to dominate the price of wheat, giving it a monopoly over the world's markets for immediate shipment.

The clearances from the seaboard Thursday were abnormally large at 1,814,000 bushels with flour included as wheat, of which 1,000,000 bushels were Canadian-grown grain. These big clearances show that foreigners are taking out all the wheat that is available. The cash trade in wheat was small in all positions, the seaboard reporting 500,000 bushels for export, but the business at Chicago was not worth mentioning. B. W. Snow, the well-known crop expert, places the condition of growing wheat plant at 98.5, compared with 86.3 a year ago. Mr. Snow advances the opinion that with favorable conditions from this time forward on the increased acreage the prospects are for a winter wheat crop of 600,000,000 bushels.

Sentiment on corn was bearish, but those who were arrayed on that side of the market seemed to lack the necessary backbone to give the longs a sharp contest. The shipping trade was small, with sales of only 14,000 bushels. There was considerable short selling, but as an offset to this was buying by shorts on the declines. Clearances were small and there was a further falling off in the primary receipts, the latter being 894,000 bushels, or less than half those of the same day last year.

Oats showed some strength late, in sympathy with the other grains, but the cash demand was again small, both here and at the seaboard, with spot sales of 400,000 bushels, part of which was for export.

Miscellaneous holders sold the entire provision list and while the market was somewhat better the lowest prices reached showed slight recessions for the day. Packers were credited with liberal purchases of lard and ribs at the decline, and further support from that interest caused reactions and held values above certain levels.

FALL WHEAT APPEARS QUITE PROMISING

Monday's Snow Helped It Though Changes Previous Were Retarding

GUELPH, April 3—The condition of the fall wheat has been a source of anxiety lately owing to the fact that the snow went off the ground a little earlier than usual, and there has been considerable mild weather. Prof. Zavits, at the Ontario Agricultural College, asked if in his opinion the fall wheat had been damaged to any extent, said he thought that from his observations around Guelph the wheat was all right. The snow which came on Monday had a tendency to help it considerably, but that the continual thawing and freezing which had been in progress previous to this was not very beneficial.

He stated that he paid a visit last week farther west around Chatham, and found the wheat there in fine condition. It was green on top and looked very promising indeed. He thought that if it got over this cold spell successfully the crop should be a good one.

WARNED NOT TO BE TOO CERTAIN

That the Allied Fleet Will Not Force the Dardanelles

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

AMSTERDAM, April 2.— The Berlin Tageblatt to-day warned the people of Germany not to be too certain that the Allied fleet will not force the Dardanelles. An unhealthy optimism is not to be approved," said Tageblatt, "as nothing is impossible. We cannot therefore declare that the Allies will never enter Constantinople. We affirm, however, that such an achievement is impossible unless they bring up different forces."

LONDON, April 2.—English aviators again bombarded German submarine yards at Hoboken, the Admiralty announced. The commander reported considerable damage done to submarines under construction. Another commander bombarded Zeebrugge. The Dutch say one submarine was destroyed and another damaged. Both aviators returned safely.

ALLIES' ANTI-AIR CRAFT BRING DOWN GERMAN PILOTS

French Squadron Dropped 33 Shells on Enemy's Aviation Sheds—Machines Torn by Shrapnel.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, April 3—The battles in the air are becoming much more frequent The French official statement last night announced that a German aeroplane was brought down inside the allies' line east of Soissons yesterday, making the third within 24 hours. A French aerial squadron dropped 33 shells on the hut camps of the aviation shed and the railway station at Vigneulles in the Woeuvre. Most of the projectiles, it is stated, fell right on the objectives. The French aviators were subjected to a very violent cannonade at short range. Three of the machines returned with large holes in the wings, while others were torn by shrapnel. None of the aviators were injured. All the machines returned to the lines safely.

A French aircraft visited Mullheim, Baden, at 5.30 o'clock, Thursday afternoon and dropped a bomb, which caused considerable material damage Another aviator dropped three bombs on Neuenburg, also in Baden, at 7 o'clock.

PARIS IN DARKNESS.

Paris was in semi-darkness last night for the first time since the recent visit by Zeppelin dirigible balloons. The reduced lighting in the Capital and the suburbs is an experiment by the military Government.

In order not to alarm the residents a warning was given some days ago that beginning last evening the normal illuminations would be temporarily dispensed with. The absence of the usual glare of many street lights along the boulevards, in the vicinity of the opera and elsewhere created no difficulty for what little night traffic there is, but the tooting of the horns of automobiles making their way through the streets was more noticeable.

HAS BEGUN TO CRACK.

The Temps greets the ninth month of the war with an outburst of confidence. "Though the end is not yet in sight," begins the editorial, "the result is certain. The allies will win." The writer reviews the war from the failure of the initial drive against Paris to the revised scheme of crushing Russia and then throwing Hindenburg's victorious legions upon France, and continues: 'The reply to that is Peremysl's fall. Germany's edifice is not yet collapsing, but it has begun to crack. Thanks to the mastery of the seas, we are able to renew our armies and refit our cavalry, especially the horse artillery. The results will be apparent once the German line is broken. Success is certain. We have only to hold on. Triumph awaits us."

YESTERDAY'S BULLETINS ON THE WAR

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, April 2.— The Austrians admit the Russian reinforced troops that penetrated into Hungary through the Dukla Pass are making gains, but state the Russian north of the Bukowina frontier met defeat yesterday.

PARIS, April 2.—(French official.)—French forces have cut off communications of Germany occupying St. Mihiel and it is expected that the town will be evacuated by the Germans shortly. British and French are attempting to drive a wedge in the German lines at a point north of Verdun. Germans are very active in the Argonne, but so far unsuccessful. Allies' aviators bombed and partially destroyed German aviation base in Cologne.

PETROGRAD, April 2.—Fresh outrages by Turks and Kurds in Persia upon Assyrian Christians in revenge for the defeat of the Turkish forces. Russians trapped a large number of Turks, who lost ten thousand in the fight.

ROTTERDAM, April 2.—A despatch says that further German attacks on Dutch ships have developed a critical situation. Traffic between countries has ceased.

LONDON, April 2.—In the week ending yesterday five British ships were sunk by German submarines, the Admiralty announced to-night. The sixth ship reached port.

LONDON, April 2.—A British war ship captured a Norwegian steamer from New York carrying supplies for Germany and is now conveying it into port.

NEW HAVEN, Eng., April 2.— Investigation of the charge that the Dutch boat Van Nassau was supplying oil to German submarines was found groundless and released.

LONDON, April 2.—The commander of the submarine which sunk trawlers, said he had orders to "sink everything in sight."

ADVANCING ON ALL PARTS

Russians Pressing Forward at Every Point—Troops Sent into Finland Will Frustrate Any Effort by Germans to Land From Baltic.

SUCCESS ON ALL SIDES

Examiner Special:

LONDON, April 3.—The Russians now are on the offensive along the whole of their front, from the Baltic Sea to the Roumanian border and in the Caucasus, and according to a Stockholm despatch they have concentrated an enormous number of soldiers on the coast of Finland to prevent any attempt by the Germans to land there.

All the Russian advances, according to Petrograd advices, are proceeding with success. The Russian official report issued last night makes the claim that the Germans in North Poland are being pushed back to the East Prussian border, and that in the Carpathians between the Lupkow and Uzsok Passes the Russians have captured still another strongly fortified ridge, overcoming in doing so almost insurmountable difficulties, such as the scaling of steep ice-covered hills and penetrating cleverly arranged barbed wire and timber obstruction.

The Russians also have taken the offensive against the German force in the region of Kozlowwka, near the Uzsok Pass, which has for so long been launching attacks against the Russian position. In the district a large number of prisoners are reported to have been captured.

Against these reports of Russian successes the Austrians make the claim that they have repulsed all the Russian attacks in the Beskid range of mountains, farther east.

The Russians declare they have successfully countered an Austrian raid into Bessarabia, near Chotini. Their reports say that units of the 42nd Honved Division of the Austrian army, which undertook this diversion, were virtually annihilated and that over 2,000 of the survivors were captured.

It is declared that the Turks have now been entirely cleared out of Transcaucasia and that the Russians hold the Turkish Black Sea coast as far as Arkhave.

SHIPLOAD OF ARMS BLOWN UP IN DANUBE

PARIS, April 3.—An Austrian steamer loaded with arms and ammunition on its way from Semlin, to Pancsova, both ports on the Danube, struck a mine in the river last night, says a Havas despatch from Nish. Serbian artillery immediately opened fire on the vessel, which exploded with terrific force.

TOO MUCH RYE.

Being Used in Germany's Pastry.

LONDON, April 3.—Some of the restrictions against the use of wheat and flour in Germany for making bread and pastry have been removed, says a Reuter despatch from Amsterdam. This step has been taken because of the increased consumption of rye bread which is said to have resulted in an undue proportion of that grain being used rather than wheat.

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Frost

"No, I don't think we can get a conviction on that," answered Foyle. "There's plenty up against them—unlawful wounding, assaulting a police officer in the execution of his duty, frequenting a gaming-house, and, of course, Ivan could be charged with the Waverley affair if we find it necessary now. I see you've started running over the house."

"Only just started. We are waiting for the divisional surgeon to see to you and three men who are sleeping like logs in the opium-joint upstairs. The Chinaman seems to have vanished—at any rate, he can't be found. It's just about time this place was broken up. Keller took no chances with the bank." He picked up the faro-box. "Now, in the States this kind of thing would not go. It's a two-card needle-tell swindle."

"That's done with fifty-four cards to the pack, isn't it?" asked Foyle indifferently, handling the box. "I've seen something like it before. The dealer is warned of the approach of duplicate cards by a tiny needle-point jumping out of one side of the box."

"That's it."

"Well, all that will have to be explained when the case comes on for trial. I'm more interested in Ivan just now. It's something to have him under lock and key. I'll leave you here to handle the remainder of the business and get down to the station. No—I'll not wait for the doctor. I feel perfectly fit now."

In spite of his assertion the superintendent felt a little dizzy when he reached the open air. A big crowd filled the street, and a dozen reporters who had been held sternly at bay by the constables on duty at the gambling-house pounced on him determinedly. He laughingly waved them aside, but they would not be denied, and while they walked at his side gave a succinct account of what had happened, omitting all reference to Ivan Abramovitch.

"New thing for you to come all the way to the East Side to take charge of a gambling raid, isn't it?" asked Jerrold, the Wire man, in a tone that told of a shrewd suspicion of something underlying.

"Oh, it's been an experience," said Foyle lightly, indicating his bandaged head. "I've told you everything I know now, boys. If there's anything else you can use, I'll have it at the Yard presently. So-long."

The journalists melted away, and Foyle presently found himself in a dingy back street where the local police station was situated. Here also a crowd of men and women had gathered, and the reserve men at the door were repelling eager women who, not knowing who had been taken in the raid, feared that their husbands might be included and were anxious to know the worst; for news of that kind spreads rapidly.

A motor-car standing without told the superintendent of Sir Hilary Thornton's presence. And the Assistant Commissioner was the first person he saw as he entered the place. Thornton came forward with hand outstretched.

"Thank God, Foyle! We had a rumour at the Yard that you had been badly hurt. I see you've been knocked about a bit. What made you take a hand yourself down here? Couldn't you leave a raid to be carried out by the local folk?"

"I didn't come down here specially for that reason," smiled the superintendent. "I wanted to get hold of Ivan Abramovitch, and everything else was purely incidental."

"They're waiting for you to settle who shall be charged with what," said Thornton. "Be as quick as you can, and I'll wait and give you a lift back in the car. I'll not be happy till I've heard all about this."

The two passed into the charge-room, where Penny was in conversation with the superintendent of the division. In reply to a question, he thought for a little.

"We've got eighteen men in all, sir," he answered. "It would have been fifty if we'd been able to bring our coup off at night."

"Very well. Have 'em all in except Abramovitch and Keller. I will pick out those I want charged with assault, or who I think were mixed up with Keller. The remainder might be let out on bail after you have verified their addresses."

The prisoners were ushered into the room, a shame-faced, sullen, dispirited gang now. Penny and a clerk passed along the line, taking their names, while Foyle scrutinized their faces. Finally, the superintendent touched four men on the shoulder one after the other. One was Jim, the door-keeper; another the red-haired man with the big chest; the third and fourth two men who had been prominent in the attack. Penny put a tick against their names, and the whole of the prisoners, many of whom had broken into voluble protest and appeal, were taken back to the cells. Foyle had determined to leave the business of charging them to Green and Penny.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Something of the chagrin caused to Heldon Foyle by the escape of the man on the barge had vanished with the success of his operations in Smike Street. If his frontal attack had failed, he had at least achieved something by his flank movement. The break-up of the gambling den, too, was something. Altogether he felt that his injuries were a cheap price to pay for what had been achieved.

In bare detail he related the sequence of events to Sir Hilary Thornton, who, with a gloved hand jerking at his grey moustache, listened with only an occasional observation.

The inevitable crowd of journalists, who had been warned by telephone from their colleagues at Smike Street, were jumbled in a tiny, tiny waiting-room when Foyle and his superior reached headquarters. The superintendent, having changed his attire, made it his first business to satisfy their clamorous demands by dictating a brief and discreet account of the raid, to be typed and handed out to them, then with a head that ached intolerably he forced himself to do some clear thinking.

With the dossier of the case before him, he read and re-read all that had been gathered by his men and himself since that night when he had been called from his sleep to find Harry Goldenburg dead. Was there some point he had overlooked? He knew now fatal it was in the work of criminal investigation to take anything for granted. Although the main work of the explorer was now focused on Grell, it was not entirely certain that he was the murderer. Indeed, strange as his proceedings had been, there might be some explanation that would account for them. It might be that after Grell was found the whole investigation would have to begin again with the scent grown cold. Stranger things had happened.

The superintendent dropped his papers wearily into a drawer and turned the key. His speculations were unprofitable. He turned over in his brain his plans for running down Grell. Of the people who had been assisting him to evade capture three were out of the way for the time being. Ivan Abramovitch and Condit were safely under lock and key. The Princess Petrovska was out of London, and there was a fair margin of assumption that she was located somewhere in Liverpool, where the local police were assisting the Scotland Yard men. It was hardly possible that she would double back, even if she evaded their rigorous search. With the detectives on duty at the London termini reinforced and on strict watch, her chances of doing so were very slim.

With three of his friends out of touch, and hampered by want of money, Grell would have to seek a fresh refuge. The chief result of Foyle's actions had been to make any steps he might take more difficult. That was all. It was still possible for him to dodge the pursuit.

The evening papers with the story of the raid were already upon the streets. What would be the effect upon Grell's plans when he learned that Ivan had been captured. In the case of an ordinary criminal, Heldon Foyle might have forecasted what would happen with a fair degree of certainty. But Grell was not an ordinary criminal, even if he were a criminal at all. If he could gain a hint of the possible intentions of the fugitive he might be able to meet them.

There was a vague chance that either Ivan Abramovitch or Condit might be induced to volunteer a statement, although the possibility was remote. In America or France there would have been ways of forcing them to speak. In Britain it was impossible.

With a yawn Foyle relinquished his efforts, and his head dropped forward on his desk. In a little he was fast asleep. He was aroused by a light touch on the shoulder. Green had returned.

"Hello!" said the superintendent. "I must have dozed off. How have you got on?"

Green adjusted his long body to the comfort of an armchair. "We found the Chinaman. He'd climbed through a trap door on to the roof. We went over the house with a tooth-comb, both before and after I'd had a little talk with Keller. It seems that both he and his partner the Chinaman had known the man for some time before they gave him a room. They're old hands at the game and won't talk too much. He went out very occasionally, and mostly at night. We found nothing bearing on the murder, but plenty to show that Keller and his pal were running a pretty hot shop."

"H'm! Could you dig anything out of any of the others There was the doorkeeper."

"No. Tight as oysters, all except those who don't know anything. Ivan has a fit of the sulks. He's called in Mordix to help him fix up his defence.

The superintendent was rubbing his chin. "Mordix isn't too scrupulous. I think we'll hold over the charge of abduction for the time being until we see how things look. Nobody hurt much, I suppose?"

The saturnine features of the inspector wrinkled into as near a grin as they were capable of. "Some of them are rather sore, but the doctor thinks they can all appear in court to-morrow."

Foyle stretched himself and rose. "Right. We won't worry any further about it for the moment. I'm feeling that the best thing for me is a good night's rest. You'd better go home and do the same. Good-night."

CHAPTER XL.

A note came to Sir Ralph Fairfield while he was lingering over his breakfast, and the first sight of the writing, even before he broke open the envelope, caused a thrill to run through him.

"You must see me at once," said the well-remembered writing imperatively. "Urgent, urgent!!"

The paper trembled in Fairfield's hands, and it was only the reminder of the servant that the messenger was waiting that brought him sharply out of his daze.

"Yes, yes. Show him in. And, Roberts, while I am engaged I don't want to be disturbed by anybody or anything. Don't forget that."

If Roberts had not been so well trained it was possible that he might have shown surprise at his master's order. For through the door he held open there shambled an ungainly figure of a man, hunchbacked, with a week's growth of beard about his chin and wearing heavy, patched boots, corduroys, a shabby jacket, and a bright blue muffler. His cap he twisted nervously in gnarled, dirty hands as he stood waiting just inside the room till he was certain that the servant had retired out of hearing.

Then, with a swift movement, he locked the door, straightened himself out, and strode with outstretched hand to where Fairfield stood, stony-faced and impassive. The baronet deliberately put his hands behind him and the other halted suddenly.

"Fairfield!"

Then it was that the impassivity of Sir Ralph vanished. He gripped his visitor by the arm, almost shaking him in a gust of quick, nervous passion.

"You fool—you d——d fool! Why have you come here? If they catch you, you will be hanged. Do you know that? For all I know the place is watched. They may have seen you come in. Perhaps the place is surrounded now."

"I'll risk it," said the other coolly, drawing a chair up to the table. "I've got to risk something. But I don't think they saw me come in. I don't think they'll catch me, and if they do I don't think they'll hang me. What do you think of that, Fairfield?"

WOMEN CAN HARDLY BELIEVE

How Mrs. Hurley Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elden, Mo. — "I was troubled with displacement, inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased every month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, and had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world. After I had tried most every female remedy without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Elden, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it? Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR RHEUMATISM

Hundreds of People Have Found "Fruit-a-tives" Their Only Help

READ THIS LETTER

Superintendent of Sunday School in Toronto Tells How He Cured Himself of Chronic Rheumatism After Suffering for Years.

55 DOVERCOURT Road, Oct., 1st, 1913.

"For a long time, I have thought of writing you regarding what I term a most remarkable cure effected by your remedy "Fruit-a-tives". I suffered from Rheumatism, especially in my hands. I have spent a lot of money without any good results. I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" for 18 months now, and am pleased to tell you that I am cured. All the enlargement has not left my hands and perhaps never will, but the soreness is all gone and I can do any kind of work. I have gained 25 pounds in 18 months".

R. A. WAUGH

Rheumatism is no longer the dreaded disease it once was. Rheumatism is no longer one of the "incurable diseases". "Fruit-a-tives" has proved its marvellous powers over Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago—in fact, over all such diseases which arise from some derangement of stomach, bowels, kidneys or skin.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

LIVES WITH BULLET IN HEART

Among the many curious cases of wounds which have been investigated by the X-rays at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in London, is one in which a German bullet was found imbedded in the muscular part of a soldier's heart.

The radiographer who located the bullet said that it entered the man's left shoulder and burrowed downward. The amazing feature of the case was that after the soldier had been hit he walked for a mile and a half to an ambulance. He did not realize that he was wounded, he said, until he saw a few splashes of blood.

The bullet was not removed, and the man lived afterward.

This is by no means an isolated case of a man living, and even of following some occupation, with a foreign body in a vital spot. Two interesting radiographs in the laboratory at St. Bartholomew's Hospital illustrate this. One is of a German bullet imbedded in the right lung. It measures about one and a quarter inches long, and the delineation is perfect. The other shows a number of pieces of shrapnel in the skull cavity at the base of the eye underneath the brain. The shrapnel entered one side of the cheek and penetrated through to the other side.

RUNNERY DEAFNESS

Tremendous Vibration Not Infrequently Ruptures Ear Drum

The average civilian has a very vague idea as to the conditions inside a turret on a war vessel while heavy firing is going on.

The greatest force of the vibration from the firing of a gun is naturally just outside the muzzle, and that is outside the turret. So terrific is the vibration that, if severe precautions were not taken, the deck under the muzzle would be ripped to pieces; sheet iron doors would be wrenched from their hangings, and skylights shattered. To guard against these effects the deck under the gun muzzle is reenforced with steel plates about an inch thick, and skylights are taken off and replaced with coverings of armor plate.

Of course, there is considerable rear and jar felt inside the turret. Men who are looking for the reinforcement of precaution recommend that gunners wear shoes with rubber cushioned soles and heels to lessen the jar on the deck.

The air vibration, due either to firing in one's own or some other turret, has caused many cases of gun deafness. To stuff the ears with cottonwool is, of course, the commonest expedient followed by men and officers alike. There is also what is called the Cheatham device, consisting of a mixture of clay and wool. It is very flexible, can be moulded to any ear, and still allows its wearer to hear orders.

Gun deafness may come immediately as a result of a ruptured ear drum, or gradually, owing to an injury to the auditory nerve.

BRITISH WARSHIP NAMES

A famous name is Speedy, which is a first class torpedo-gunboat. It was in a small cruiser, the Speedy, that Lord Cochrane earned fame during the wars of a hundred years ago. The vessel had only 14 small guns, yet its commander, Lord Cochrane, had the cheek to capture, mostly by trickery, a Spanish warship with 32 big guns and six times more men than he had! No wonder the name is kept up in the British navy!

Then there is a destroyer called the Renard, which was a famous name in the eighteenth century. At that time it was the name of a sloop commanded by Capt. Jerry Coghlan, and on one occasion he met a French privateer of 20 guns. Her captain hailed: "Will you strike?" never doubting that Jerry would give in at once to superior force. "Aye, that I will, and d—d hard, too!" responded the gallant captain of the Renard in hearty tones. And so he did, and after a half-hour's fight his opponent blew up.

Kaiser Has no Money Here

The Monetary Times has more than once denied the story that the German Emperor ever made investments in Canada. The story, however, has been repeated with a show of some authority. No investments have been made in Canada by the Kaiser. The famous Alvo von Alvensleben, while having invested certain German funds in Canada, and having made matters interesting for the Dominion Trust Company, the Bank of Vancouver and other Canadian institutions, did not make any investments here for the German Emperor.—The Monetary Times.

THE "DIVINE RIGHT" OF HOHENZOLLERNS

Brute Force and Shameless Intrigue the Outstanding Feature of Two Centuries of Rule

Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany is the embodiment of the Hohenzollern idea. His enormous crime against humanity and civilization can be best understood in the light of his family history and the Hohenzollern traditions.

The family takes its name from an unimportant place in the extreme south of Germany, and there the founder of its greatness was Conrad of Hohenzollern, who in the latter half of the twelfth century distinguished himself in the service of the great Emperor Frederick, married a feudal heiress, and became, partly by right of marriage, partly by Imperial favor, Hereditary Mayor or Governor of Nuremberg. With this position the Hohenzollerns had to be satisfied for many generations, until, early in the fifteenth century, Frederick of Hohenzollern was promoted to a higher position in the Imperial service, being made Marquis of Brandenburg, with the duty of defending the northeastern frontier of the Empire, and with a vote in the election of the Emperor. It was not, however, until the year 1701 that Frederick the Third, the twelfth of the Hohenzollern Electors, assumed the rank and title of King of Prussia. Thus the royalty whose pretensions have become so inordinate, and so perilous to European liberty, is little more than two centuries old.

If we divide those two centuries roughly into four periods of about fifty years each, we shall find that each half-century in the history of the new Royalty has been marked by a successful feat of unscrupulous aggression, accomplished by a mixture of force, cunning, and fraud. The date of the first of these performances is 1740, when Frederick the Great, taking advantage of the death of the Austrian Emperor and the disputed succession of his daughter, in violation of a solemn and recent covenant, and without declaration of war or any diplomatic preliminary whatsoever, forcibly seized the Province of Silesia, and thereby involved his country in a war which established his own fame as the greatest commander of the age. From the vicissitudes of the Seven Years' War, he emerged with Silesia still in his possession.

Schleswig-Holstein Question

The second great extension of the Hohenzollern power was achieved by the three famous "partitions" of Poland (1772, 1793, 1795)—transactions of which Austria and Russia shared the guilt and the profits.

The Schleswig-Holstein question worried European diplomacy for more than a quarter of a century. The three duchies were part of the kingdom of Denmark, but the people, who mostly spoke German, were not satisfied with their position under the Danish crown. Their desire was to become a German duchy.

In 1864 Prussia put and end to the long trouble in characteristic fashion. The grandfather of the present Kaiser, grasping a favorable opportunity afforded by the demise of the Danish crown, persuaded Austria to join Prussia in an armed occupation of the Provinces. Denmark was invaded, the moral support which Great Britain offered to the Danes proved to be "moral" only and of no practical use, the Danes were defeated and brought to their knees, and the provinces remained in joint possession of the invading Powers. In the division of spoil, Holstein was allotted to Austria, Schleswig to Prussia, and to the small province of Lauenburg Austria waived her joint claim in consideration of a payment of money. But this was not the end. The King of Prussia possessed the advantage of proximity, and soon turned it to account. He picked a quarrel with his ally, and then—in defiance of his own Parliament, which refused to supply to the army—suddenly marched into Holstein, turned out the Austrians—and the annexation was complete. Of moral right in this acquisition there was not even a pretence.

Alsace and Lorraine

There is no need to dwell on the fourth of the long series of acts of successful aggression—the annexation in 1870, of Alsace and Lorraine. It extended the Hohenzollern dominions for the first time to the western, or French, side of the river which forms the natural and the ancient division between Germany and France.

It is hardly necessary to add that in all these proceedings, the desires and sentiments of the people of Silesia, Poland, Schleswig, Holstein, Lauenburg, Alsace and Lorraine counted for nothing at all. They had no Divine right. The view natural to a Hohenzollern would be that the annexations were parts of a plan designed by the Almighty for the amelioration of humanity through His chosen instrument, the Hohenzollern family, and that it was the obvious duty of the persons concerned to be satisfied. When the family ambitions are in any way thwarted by the perverse and forward, a Hohenzollern, even when inflicting the necessary chastisement, is not angry; he is only grieved that mankind should be so sinful.

It cannot be doubted that the present head of this remarkable family cherishes the most pious respect for the conduct of his ancestors, and feels that he cannot do better than assimilate his own behavior to the sacred example.

Ignorance to Bliss.

Manuel Quezon, the Philippine delegate to the United States congress, and the first man always to appear in white clothes upon the floor of the house, went to New York recently. While there he was introduced to Charles Murphy, chairman of the New York state Democratic organization, and grand mahem of Tammany hall.

Now, Manuel's last name is pronounced "Ka-son," and Mr. Murphy thought it something else. The mistake was to Quezon's advantage, for everyone in Tammany hall now knows him as Manuel Caesar.

Off to the War and in every Knapsack rests a box of

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Dr. Chase's Gift to the Soldier Boys

A Large Box of Dr. Chase's Ointment is Presented to Every Soldier Before He Leaves for the Front.

You will see by the attached clipping that ointment is one of the prime necessities of the military man in camp. Note the amount used each week. The heavy clothing chafes and irritates the skin. Forced marches and heavy footwear make the feet sore. Exposure to dampness brings on piles or hemorrhoids. It therefore happens that nothing is so greatly in demand as an ointment such as Dr. Chase's.

This was proven in the Spanish-American and Boer wars, when we made a similar distribution to the boys going from Buffalo and Toronto. The volume of grateful reports then received convinced us that no soldier's knapsack is complete without a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

To the soldiers in training at the Toronto Exhibition grounds we delivered over 4,000 full-size boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Contributions have also been sent to branches of the Red Cross Society in all parts of the country. If you are a soldier and do not receive your box kindly advise us, so we can send it to you. FIVE TONS OF OINTMENT

Weekly Supply for Use of British Soldiers Upon Their Feet.

London, Feb. 10.—An "eyewitness" at the British general army headquarters in France pays a tribute in an article given out yesterday by the Official Press Bureau to the work of the army supply departments. He calls the Ordnance Department a "military universal provider." He says in part:—

"The vastness of the work of maintaining a modern army may be gauged by the fact that during the past month the supplies furnished included 450 miles of telephone wire, 530,000 sand bags and 10,000 pounds of shoe blacking, while in ten days the Ordnance Department supplied 125,000 fur waistcoats and 250,000 flannel belts. The average weekly issue of ointment for feet is five tons.

"The complexity of the work is illustrated by the fact that the index of the stores include 50,000 separate kinds of articles. Most of these still are obtained from England, but some are being manufactured by the Ordnance Department in its own workshops in France.

Mother Principle Undying.

There is mother principle alive in all nature which never dies. This is different from the mother instinct, the mother passion. The oak and the amoeba respond to the mother principle. It is a law of life; it is one of the constants of being. The mother instinct or passion, on the other hand, occurs only among the higher animals; occurs not sporadically quite, for it is common enough, yet while generally found, and while one of the strongest, most interesting, most beautiful of animal traits, it is at the same time the most individual and the least constant.

This cow of my neighbor's that I hear lowing (the "big blue" cow of the herd) is an entirely gentle creature ordinarily, but with a calf at her side she will pitch at any one who approaches her. And there is no other cow of the herd who mourns so long when her calf is taken away. The mother in her is stronger, more enduring, than in any of the other nineteen in the barn. In my own cow it is hardly more than blind principle, hardly advanced beyond the oak tree's feeling for its acorns, or the amoeba's for its divided self.—The Atlantic.

DON'T USE SOAP ON YOUR HAIR

When you wash your hair, don't use soap. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

A Good Method

My experience has been that if a can of milk is sent back, and the cheesemaker mentions the matter to the patron in a manner at which the patron will not take offence, he will think more of the maker, and understand that he is trying to improve the cheese.

Most patrons nowadays know how to care for milk but are very busy with other work, and let the milk go. Some just throw it into the can. When a patron sends a can home it reminds him that milk must have a certain amount of care.

It is indeed surprising that patrons do not realise that an even supply of cream during the whole year is one of the first requisites of successful dairying.

The farmer drops out of the market just when the prices begin to soar—just when he could almost double the returns that he receives during the summer. This winter market alone is a thing which should tempt the farmer to keep up the supply. The creamery man, forced to employ help for the summer months only, must pay higher prices on that account. The factory having to stand idle for several months, must needs pay insurance taxes and depreciation, all of which must be met by the summer butter. The flood of butter into the market in the summer necessarily means lower prices, because none of this butter can expect regular customers, for the consumer asks for a butter that he can obtain fresh the year round. Hence another loss to the farmer who will not support his factory as he should.

The Advantage of 12 Months' Run

How much better would the returns be if the farmer would supply his creamery the year round? This is merely a matter of conjecture to those who are unable to persuade their patrons to keep the cream coming forward, but if it pays in the summer when all these additional costs must be met, would not the whole community be tremendously benefited by keeping the factory and men employed for 12 months instead of five or seven? Would not the farmers appreciate the extra one or two cents which would accrue to them from the special trade that comes rushing to meet the all-year factory, not to mention the smaller gains from the reduced cost of making owing to the aforementioned savings? The average butter maker and cream hauler is longing for the day to come when he can get 12 months' work at fair wages, rather than seven months at a wage necessarily high to enable him to live through the winter months when work is scarce.

Just a word in regard to quality of cream. I think the day is not far distant when the dairymen will have an awakening much the same as the fruit growers are having at the present time. The care which would be necessary to deliver the cream in good condition, instead of the quality which we receive now, would be paid for twice over in the better returns for the cream. The improved quality in some creameries with which I have been connected has actually resulted in a trade which warranted an increase of one to two cents per pound.

The dairying industry in Canada has a splendid opportunity. Let us hope that the time is near when the farmers will realise their responsibility and their opportunity.

In one dairy record centre maintained by the dairy division, Ottawa, in 1914, there were such surprising contrasts in yields of milk and fat that they must command the attention of every progressive dairyman.

The best cow in one herd gave only 4,156 pounds of milk and only some 155 pounds of fat; the average of the whole herd was only 3,772 pounds of milk and 136 pounds of fat. In a herd near by the poorest yield of any one cow was 5,853 pounds of milk and 278 pounds of fat; the herd average was 7,255 pounds of milk and 342 pounds of fat.

There were several individual yields of over 8,000 lbs. of milk, while one good grade cow gave 14,400 pounds of milk, and 563 pounds of fat.

Coming to the cost of feed, plenty of herds had an average cost per cow of from $40 to $55; even at these high figures the profit above the cost of feed ran up to $46 and $50 as the herd average.

Such results are full of encouragement for the owners, and augur well for the future of cow testing in the Maritime Provinces. Other dairymen may well strive to emulate these records of $50 and $55 clear profit above the cost of feed as made by good individual cows. This sensible method of determining the respective merit of each cow as a profit maker lays a solid foundation for building up a singularly interesting herd from a modern business standpoint.

CAN'T FIND DANDRUFF

Every bit of dandruff disappears after one or two applications of Danderine rubbed well into the scalp with the finger tips. Get a 25-cent bottle of Danderine at any drug store and save your hair. After a few applications you can't find a particle of dandruff or any falling hair, and the scalp will never itch.

WHEN KINGS LED TO WAR

HENRY IV AT THE BATTLE OF IVRY.
GALERIES DE VERSAILLES

The King is come to marshal us, in all his armor drest,
And he has bound a snow-white plume
upon his gallant crest.
He looked upon his people, and a tear was in his eye;
He looked upon the traitors, and his glance was stern and high.
Right graciously he smiled on us, as rolled from wing to wing,
Down all our line, a deafening shout,
"God save our lord the King!"
"And if my standard bearer fall, as fall
full well he may,
For never saw I promise yet of such a bloody fray.
Press where ye see my white plume shine,
amidst the ranks of war,
And be your oriflamme to-day the helmet of Navarre."

Ivry, a Song of the Huguenots.

IT will be just one hundred years this coming June since the last great world monarch, a real ruler, really led his nation to battle. Napoleon Bonaparte, whether you fancy him in all his phases, possessed the kingly attributes—especially when the war trumpet sounded. He was the brains of his armies. He led his armies. He constantly visited the most dangerous parts of battlefields—and when the battle was hot. He was physically and mentally brave. His soldiers, on occasion, fought better if he kept his promise not to go too far front, so well did they know his tendency to seek the fiercest fighting spot.

At the battle of Lodi he dashed on foot across the famous bridge that had become the artillery target of the enemy, his hand on the colors, the dead falling by dozens every step of the way. His tendency was to war, but no one can deny that in his brief breathing spells of peace he governed France wisely—in fact, brilliantly. Waterloo witnessed the last achievements of his kinglike leadership. Since then the world has not beheld another ideal great ruler.

It is not to be implied that the rulers of to-day are not eager to fight. There is no doubt that they would shoulder a rifle, handle a machine gun or lead a cavalry charge, were it permitted them to do so. Those who are close to them in a human way no doubt appreciate the yearnings of the kings and emperors to bear the brunt of their nation's battles, but it cannot be so.

Were a modern ruler to declare his intention of taking his position in the foremost trench and squinting over the steel barrel of a rifle the government would cause him to be restrained; he would be sent to the rear, even if force were necessary, to take his place among the commanders where a bursting shell could not destroy in a second the brains of an army.

Even so, the rulers of the nations now plunged in war have been nearer to the field of battle than have rulers in most of the modern conflicts.

King Albert of Belgium has been especially close to the men in the trenches. According to despatches he has even been actually under fire. His troops worship him, and it is only because the greatest readiness is in another field and because his generals will not allow it that the gallant King of the Belgians is not serving as an actual fighting man.

Kaiser Wilhelm, who is King of Prussia also, is reported to have visited the trenches of hisarmies several times. So has King George of the United Kingdom of Great Britain journeyed to the trenches of the Allies. Now and then a bulletin says that the Tsar of Russia has taken a flying automobile trip for a talk with his generals. Of course the Emperor Franz Josef, who is King of Hungary also in his titles, is too aged to pay such visits. The Sultan of Turkey has not looked over things at the trenches. Neither has the Mikado of Japan. President Poincaré of France has.

Now, it will hardly be contended that these trench visits have placed the kings where medieval rulers went. The time of the visit is purposely arranged so that the monarch will run little risk. It is no reflection on the courage of the kings to say this. To-day the etiquette regarding the place of kings in war is such that rulers are pretty well guarded against death or excessive danger.

Of all history's great kings—and this assertion will include now those who sprang from kings—there is a preeminent something about Richard I. of England that impels the bestowal of the regal palm upon him. He was a very poor peace monarch, but he never drew other than a right kingly breath during every instant of his ten years he reigned.

He was the true boss of his realms—England, Normandy and an additional slice of France—and everybody else in those realms was acknowledged to be second to him in courage, enterprise, strength, spirit, governing power and rallying ability. He was a magnificent soldier and conceiver of campaigns and battles. He spent very little time in England—he was too busy fighting—but for all that Englishmen of his day were prouder of him and more devoted and loyal to him than the subjects of British sovereigns ever were before or since—with the possible exception of Henry V.

Richard was called Coeur de Lion, or Richard the Lion Hearted, in his day, and even after centuries of fine historical dissection it is not disputed that the name was well applied and well deserved. When it came to a battle he wanted no one in it ahead of him. His treatment of all matters concerning state or diplomacy was of the broad, open and high spirited character. Authentic history abounds with stories illustrating his kingly make-up.

Once when fighting Saladin in the Crusades word was brought to him that a troop of Knights Templar had been surrounded. Richard was in his tent resting. He sprang for his armor, ordering one of his earls and a body of men already prepared to gallop to the rescue in the meantime. While getting into the heavy metal harness a second call for help came, stating the need of the Templars was greater than before.

"Then must I go as I am," quoth Richard. "I should be unworthy the name of king did I abandon those whom I have promised to stand by and succor in every danger."

And go he did, leaping upon his charger and spurring alone to the danger point. There he fought so furiously and cut such a path among the Saracens with his mighty battle axe that the Saracens gave ground and the Templars were rescued. In those days a man who would fight without armor was deemed a lunatic, but the king in Richard was too great to be held back by the artificial accessories of combat.

During the siege of Acre Richard worked like a common soldier on the engines of war set up to batter down the walls of the city. Once during his campaigns in Palestine he delivered a swift and lusty kick—it might be termed a kingly kick—to the person of one of the princes among his allies, because the prince haughtily refused to dig and help construct defenses.

For three weeks before the battle of Jaffa, Richard manoeuvred his army so ably that finally he got Saladin at a disadvantage. He feigned attacks and held back until he had wearied the lighter circling bodies of Saracens. For an impetuous king this was much to do, as the Templars chafed and insisted upon being led to battle. But the result proved Richard's generalship was of the same high order as his kingship. At the proper moment he gave the signal.

The whole of Richard's army was inspirited by his reckless and headlong bravery in the opening charge of this famous fight. With terrific energy he dashed hither and thither, picking the places where there were most Saracens. Historians tell of the darts and javelins shot by the enemy glancing by the hundreds from the steel armor he wore, for he was a much sought mark by the archers, who hoped to luckily find a barb through some of the metal crevices or overlappings. Any of the enemy coming near enough to Richard to strike at him was invariably felled with one swing of the ponderous battle axe, and seldom fought again. This axe had its own history. Richard had it specially made to a weight of twenty pounds in the head. Historians tell of instances where in the hand of the royal wielder it descended upon the helm of a steel clad knight, on his horse and [illegible] through armor, [illegible] and horse to earth.

Richard proved himself [illegible] ditionary commander down to the smallest detail. When you consider that he gave personal direction to the assembling of his Crusade fleet at Marseilles, and that he sailed on ahead in his splendid galley, the Sea Cutter, with a huge lantern set in the stern at night so that the other vessels containing his army and that of his allies might follow where he led, it will be seen that he was the brains of the enterprise.

The human side of his nature was evidenced in his stopping at Messina on his way to Palestine to set things right for his sister Joanna, the Dowager Queen of Sicily, who had been unjustly imprisoned and robbed of her estates by the new King Tancred. Richard promptly whipped Tancred, took Messina and held it until his sister's wrongs were righted. Then on he went toward Jerusalem, deeming the Joanna incident just a little side matter nicely fixed up.

At the second taking of Jaffa large bodies of Saracens were lined up along the shore to prevent the landing of Richard's troops. Knights aboard the ships urged Richard against landing, but he swore roundly at his followers for their backwardness and leaping into the water near the shore, with blood-battle axe in his right hand and his shield hung round his neck to give his left hand liberty, he waded out of the sea and assailed the foe. His soldiers, quickened to obey his summons, were at his side. A path was cut through the Saracens and Jaffa retaken.

RICHARD OF THE LION HEART AT ACRE.
FROM RIDPATH'S CYCLOPAEDIA OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.
COURTESY OF JONES BROTHERS PUBLISHING CO.

This may seem too much of Richard, but he seems the premier king and cannot be dismissed with just a word or two. He reached a high plane when, after being conducted to the great hill from which Jerusalem can be seen, he held his shield before his eyes so that he could not view the city.

"Since I have not been able to redeem this sacred city, I am not worthy to look upon it," was the kingly reason he gave for shutting out the sight of the goal of the Crusades.

For those who often make use of the poet's expression "every inch a king" in describing the appearance or bearing of certain personages the description of Richard at the time of his marriage to Queen Berengaria may be interesting. He wore a satin tunic of rose color, fastened about his waist by a jewelled belt. A mantle of striped silver tissue, brocaded with silver half moons, went over the tunic. He wore a blade of the finest Damascus steel, the hilt of gold and the scabbard of silver, richly engraved. A scarlet bonnet, brocaded in gold, covered his head. He bore a truncheon in his hand, a sort of sceptre, finely adorned. His celebrated war charger Faunelle was near by. The king was a tall, well formed, fine looking man, of ruddy complexion and yellow, curling hair. Vale, Richard!

King Henry IV. of France had an undoubted right to his regal title. He was a scheming king, but nevertheless a true monarch. As King of Navarre he learned war. And, if we are to credit the chroniclers of the day, he came to his first battle a coward. By sheer force of will power he remained on the field of Moncontour, although he trembled so that he all but fell from his horse. He spurred several feet away from his aids so that he might hurl cowardly epithets at himself without being heard, and determined to conquer his craven desire to flee.

That he did conquer it is evidenced by the celebrated battle of Ivry, fought January 14, 1590. At that fight Henry said to his troops before engaging the enemy:—

"My friends, yonder is your foe, here is your king, and God is on our side. If you lose your standards, rally round my white plume; you will always find it in the path of honor and victory!"

The victory of Ivry was one of the most complete in the annals of war. And the soldiers of the king did indeed find that his plume was a true standard.

King Henry V. of England was without doubt the kingliest kind of king. He also had to conquer a weak side of his nature. He was a roystering prince, dissipated, reckless, the companion of the loose and low. Shakespeare's vivid portrayal of the future great king is not thought to be overdrawn.

It was at the battle of Agincourt, fought October 25, 1415, that this great king achieved his greatest fame and proved he well deserved to be classed with the true kings. At this battle Henry, although outnumbered four to one, met his French foe most cheerfully, good naturedly chiding one of his chiefs for wishing they had more men. The flower of French knighthood charged the English line. The famous English bowmen cut them down with a storm of arrows. Then the English charged in turn.

In this charge Henry V. outshone all of his followers, although many of them were renowned for brave deeds. The king bore all before him wherever he spurred his charger. On all sides his valorous blows fell, and when the French began to give way and retreat he was the foremost pursuer. Many times his life was in danger. Once he was beset by three knights together. His immediate bodyguard was so hot pressed it could give him no aid. Henry slew one knight with a straight sword thrust under the camail or neck mesh, piercing his throat. He turned his horse suddenly and caught his second foe with a back swing that threw him to the ground. At the same instant the third knight unhorsed the king. He plunged his sword into his last enemy's horse and brought the third knight to earth. There they fought it out on foot, with Henry V. a final victor.

A noble king in every sense of the word was John of France, and, as is frequently the case, he was noblest in adversity. He fought the English, under the celebrated Black Prince, at the battle of Poitiers, September 19, 1356. His force was three times that of the English, who had been raiding the south of France with 9,000 men.

The French charged but were so galled by a flanking fire of arrows that they gave ground. Then they made another attack, but were repulsed again. Then the Duke of Orleans, the King's brother, drew the remnant of his command off the battle ground, declaring that victory was impossible. King John indignantly refused to take that view and headed his reserve in a final attack on the enemy. A feint and a flank attack by the Black Prince threw them into confusion, and the battle became a series of detached encounters between the English and the groups of French that stood their ground.

To fight better at close range King John dismounted and went at his enemies most valiantly. And as he fought one of the most stirring pictures of history developed. At the King's side battling with him was his youngest and favorite son Philip, afterward created Duke of Burgundy, and known as Philip the Bold. When King John's foes had entirely encircled father and son, the boy, with flashing eyes, warned which way the next blow threatened, crying as the need indicated:—"Guard right, father! Guard left, father!" But finally both King and Prince were taken prisoners.

MADE IN CANADA.

"Made in Russia"

Mr. George Kennan, the well known traveller, thinks the Russian peasants, though not scientists, can work metal as skilfully as anybody, and tells a story of the Czar summoning a dozen peasants who had a reputation for skill in that way and exhibiting to them a steel flea of natural size.

It had been made in Germany, and had been sent to him to show the delicacy of the German smiths' work. He asked them if any of them could duplicate that steel flea. They asked permission to take the flea home.

They appeared a day or two later, and, with low bows, presented to their monarch the same flea, but without the expected duplicate.

"Why make another? I knew you couldn't." "Why make another? I knew you couldn't!"

"Will your Majesty deign to look at the flea through a magnifying glass?" replied the peasants.

A glass was brought, and upon close inspection it was found that the Russian metal workers had shod the German flea with steel shoes.

MEN IN THE RANKS PROUD OF OFFICERS

Command Courage of Their Leaders Who Share all Dangers—British Tommy Unemotional Fighter

Heavy artillery fire compelled us to abandon a short section of trench, which was afterwards reoccupied.

In some such bald phrase an official communique summed up the desperate resistance that was offered by a single brigade of British light cavalry holding some trenches a little south of Ypres to the attack of 5,000 German infantry, wrote a correspondent of the London Daily Mail. The three regiments forming the brigade were much reduced in strength—one of them counted only 164 rifles in the trenches; they were 400 at the most, against eight times their number, and the men who came out of the fight say that they had never known anything so terrible.

The German guns had the range of the English trenches to a yard and sent shell after shell that burst on the very parapets. Germans came on in extended lines; they have learned to abandon their old habit of attacks in column and dense masses. They lost enormously, a man for almost every English bullet, and the English fired as fast as fingers could load and press the trigger. But when at last they were a hundred yards from the trenches they fixed bayonets and came on at a rush, still five or six to one. The English troopers stood their their ground until the Germans were already inside the first line of trenches, and then, as one of them told the story, "we sloped."

It was, after all, the sensible thing to do, and when British reinforcements had come up to make a counter-attack it was not long before the temporarily victorious Germans did the same.

"I've had some narrow shaves," said a lancer who was there, "but I never thought I'd get out of this one alive. You had to creep over dead bodies to get out."

Entire Absence of Emotion

To hear a soldier talk of the men killed in an action by their names brings to one a keener realisation of the grimness of it all than the longest casualty list or the most vivid description. "There were five chaps in a small firing trench in front of the main one," went on the trooper. "Old Clarke and Tom Johnson and Brown and young Jefferson and another chap" (these are not actually the names he gave)—"they were firing like mad up to the very minute the Allymans jumped into the trench. We never saw them again. They wouldn't stand much chance of being taken prisoners."

There is an entire absence of emotion about the way in which the British soldier speaks of his friends who have been killed. His tone is as careless and off-hand as it might be if they had just gone home on leave. It sounds callous, but it is only the habit that comes from rubbing elbows with Death with a prospect of sharing his neighborhood for many months more.

"The chaps cod each other," said a soldier. "'Old Bill's gone under,' they say. 'Remember him swankin' about bein' lucky the other day? Copped it fairly this time, he has.'"

"It's not that they don't care," explained the trooper, who had the clay of the trenches still upon his spurs, "but you either get potted or you don't, but it soon don't come to matter a bit either way."

Army Short of Nothing

There is a magnificent spirit in these men who have been hardened by months of the most terrible and most continuous war in history. Danger and hardship have become, for them the normal conditions of life. "You just get used to it," said one of them. And the best symptom of all is that they are thoroughly pleased with themselves, with their officers, their food, their clothes—with the whole war. It is not the false confidence of vanity. The army has been tried by fire, tried and not found wanting.

"What do you miss most—what are you most short of?" I asked a soldier I met in a French railway station. "The British army's short of nothing," he answered, almost aggressively. "We've got everything we want and plenty to spare—from horses to jam."

The hundreds of young men to whom the War Office has given commissions will find that they have a very high standard to live up to when they come over here. The British officer is praised most highly by his keenest critics—the men he leads. "The finest officers in the world, sir, and that's what makes the British army what it is."

Physical courage and a readiness to share to the full the hardships of their men seem to be the qualities that most commend an officer to English soldiers. The men joke among themselves about one officer's thin legs, another's monocle, the lisp of one's subaltern, the silk underclothing of another, and his anguish at being unable to get a bath—all vividly related by his soldier-servant; but these very characteristics that under normal conditions provoke proletarian ridicule only throw up the officer's soldierly qualities into higher relief.

"They're good sorts," a cavalryman said. "They'll come along the trenches from one bosby-hutch to another to see if you're all right and they'll lie down right alongside you in the mud without thinking about their clothes. They'll let you have a look through their field glasses and follow you with a drop of rum. If you stay in the trenches all night they stay with you, share and share alike."

UNSTRUNG, UNSTEADY SHAKY NERVES

MAY BE TONED UP BY USING

MILBURN'S HEART and NERVE PILLS.

Mrs. John Harper, Toronto, Ont., writes: "I have used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills for the heart and nervous system. I was confined to a grocery store for twelve years, and had to give up business, as I became terribly run down and nervous, and had heart trouble, and I am sure I am gaining very fast now. I feel that nothing did me any good until I tried your Heart and Nerve Pills, and I am positive they will cure me. The nerves of one hand would tremble and then seem to go numb so that I could not write or sew. Now my hand is quite steady, as you can see by my handwriting. This is a big change which delights me so much for I thought all was done that could be done. I was about to give up in despair when I tried this last remedy, and even after I had only taken half a box the change started to come."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will restore the enfeebled, enervated, exhausted, overwrought system to full constitutional power.

THE PRUSSIAN IDEA

Might Before Right the Dominating Creed of Militarist Caste

"With the German people there is reasonable hope that when this war is over we may have a reconciliation, but with the Prussian monarchy there can be no peace," declared Mr. Cecil Chesterton, the distinguished English journalist, in the course of one of the addresses he delivered in Canada.

The atrocities in Belgium, he said, were not committed by unruly soldiers, but by soldiers only too well in hand. They were part of a deliberate German policy to create such a state of terrorism that no Belgian would attempt any act to endanger the poorly protected lines of communication through that country.

MR. CECIL CHESTERTON

Mr. Chesterton showed a preference for the use of the term Prussian rather than German, and justified it by a short review of the Prussian power, and made the rest of the German states the catspaw of Prussia. Prussian rulers had established a system of rigid militarism that was used not only for aggression, but for keeping the German people themselves under control.

"The Prussian idea," explained Mr. Chesterton, "is to make the Prussian soldier so much afraid of his officer that he is not likely to have more fear of any possible enemy."

He readily admitted that the Prussian policy of putting material force above everything and ignoring all right, had some material advantages for a time—burglary and theft were profitable up to a certain point. Probably Prussia had derived material advantages from this policy, but he did not think it an evidence of great intelligence to burglarise or steal.

"It is a little too much to expect us to admit his superior intelligence," complained Mr. Chesterton. "One German editor went so far as to say that when Germany triumphed all the world would bow down on bended knee to the beauty of the German soul. That rather makes civilised men impatient with Germans," he said amid laughter.

Mr. Chesterton had some fun with Germany's complaints that there is a conspiracy against her.

"There is," he admitted, "but it is exactly the conspiracy of the police against the burglar."

TRAINING ARMY BANDSMEN

Great Britain is the only country which undertakes the systematic training of its army bandsmen, and the selection of the band of the Duke of Cambridge's Hussars to provide music for the new recruits is a reminder that the present high standard of British army bands is entirely due to the efforts of the late Duke of Cambridge. After peace was declared at the end of the Crimean War a performance was given at Varna, in the Crimea, by the massed British bands there at the time, with results so painful that the Duke set to work at once to provide a proper training for the army musicians.

He enlisted a large number of officers in favor of the scheme, and with the money they subscribed he took over Kneller Hall, Hounslow, once the residence of the famous painter, Sir George Kneller, and established there the Military School of Music. For nearly twenty years the Duke carried on the school without any Government help, but in 1875 it was officially recognised, though it was not until within the last four years that the officers were relieved of the burden of supporting the bands of their regiments.

Tsuji Nishioka of the 9th Canadian Mounted Rifles is one of the very few Japanese in Canada who have been allowed to enlist. He was working as a bell-boy in the Empress Hotel at Swift Current, Sask., and tried to join the 2nd contingent but was turned down on account of his height, as he could boast but 5 feet 5 inches and the standard called for 5 feet 7 inches. However, he bided his time till the call came for recruits for the 3rd contingent and the standard being reduced, "Peter" as he is called, was accepted. He has an uncle who is a captain in the Japanese regular army.

Fine Old Gentleman Suffered 40 Years With His Kidneys

He even had Hemorrhages from the Kidneys, so you may know how bad he was. Yet today, at 67 years, Mr. Allen is able to do a good day's work or enjoy a long drive without the least pain. This is what Gin Pills did for him. They will do as much for you if you have any Kidney or Bladder Trouble.

Port Elgin, N.B. November 13th.

"I feel it my duty, for the sake of those afflicted with similar troubles, to send you these few lines about Gin Pills. I am about 67 years old and have been troubled with Kidney Trouble since I was 26 years old. This was brought on by my getting over-heated and then sitting on cold steps in a draught.

At last, I had Hemorrhages of the Kidneys. I went to three doctors and tried most everything on the market but got no relief. I got very weak, had pain and lameness in the Back; often, I had to lie down during the day and it hurt me to be on a waggon. I began to think there was no help for me. The bleeding continued for 16 months until I just happened to try Gin Pills which has now put an end to the trouble.

Now I can look back over 18 months at my relief from suffering and anxious care. I can do a lot of chores, drive all day, have no pain, although I am still taking 2 pills a week as they seem to make things easier."

Looking Ahead

A young wife, pitifully young, whispered one day to an old and tried friend, who had discovered the deep heart-sore of her married life: "What am I to do in all the years to come? Think of the lonely old age before me?"

With a caressing touch, the older woman told her that many years before she herself had had so serious an illness, that she had been unable to sit up for many months. When she was strong enough to walk again, it seemed as if she could never go around like other people, but the doctor encouraged her by saying, just think of one step at a time, no more, and if each day, she were able to accomplish that gain, she should be quite content.

So her young friend must not look ahead to the long stretch of years, but take each day as it comes, and make that day as full of joy and work as she possibly can.

It did not seem as if there would be any joy, but there can be and she must expect it, as God meant her to have and He will send it.

There must be some work in her life; if it were not in her own home she could find it outside for others. There would be joy in the accomplishment of that. If in some ways she were restricted in her own self development, she could still reach out and strive for it in other ways.

A man whose hobby is roses said, that each spring it was a continual source of surprise to see the tender shoots pushing their way out, though the whole bush was banked in ice. In this same way in every life, no matter how much it may contain of sorrow and tragedy, there is always the possibility of attaining character, strength and nobility, which would have been impossible but for these life-trials.

Thus this young friend must not let herself look forward with dread to the future, but calmly and trustfully believe. "As thy days, so shall thy strength be." — Deut. 33: 25. — I. H. N.

"Catarrhozone" Prevents Bad Colds Strengthens Weak Irritable Throat

Employs Natures Own Methods and is Invariably Successful

Few will escape a cold this winter, but alas! many colds run into Catarrh.

Neglected Catarrh is the straight gateway to consumption.

It heals and soothes, relieves the cough, gives throat and lungs a chance, cleanses the nostrils, clears out the phlegm.

You feel better in an hour.

No treatment so direct. Catarrhozone goes right to the spot—acts quickly, cures thoroughly catarrh, bronchitis and all throat affections.

"Nothing could kill a cold so fast as Catarrhozone," writes Amey E. Snelling, from St. Johns. "Last month I had a frightful cold in my head, suffered from itching nose, running eyes and torturing headache. Ten minute with "Catarrhozone" inhaler gave relief and in one hour I was well of my cold. Catarrhozone I consider a marvel."

Carry "Catarrhozone" inhaler in your pocket or purse —take it to church—to the theatre—to work—use it in bed. It prevents and cures all manner of nose and throat troubles. Complete outfit guaranteed $1.00, small size 50c.; sample size 25c.; at dealers everywhere.

ALDERSON PRAISES TROOPS.

Canadians Have Outdone Expectations Says Gen. Alderson.

OTTAWA, April 1. — "We have been holding some 6,500 or 7,000 yards of trenches since March 1, and I can safely say that all arms have settled into their work very well. I knew they would do very well, but they have really done better than I expected."

This is what Gen. Alderson, commanding the Canadian division in northern France, says in a letter received by Maj.-Gen. Hughes, Minister of Militia, yesterday.

Gen. Alderson praises particularly the good work of the Canadian heavy battery from Montreal, which is under the command of Col. Lacey Johnston.

"We have not, up to the present, been attacked," continued Gen. Alderson. "But we have been considerably shelled at times, and the casualties up to date are six officers and 164 of other ranks. I am sorry to say that Major Rigby, a fine officer in the Seventh Battalion, has been killed by a shell. He is a great loss to his battalion."

CITIES IN THE WAR ZONE

Much History Made Around Dunkirk, Ypres and Calais

Ypres is a very old town, dating from the ninth century. It has been the scene of many conflicts in the past, and in the great European Wars was subsequently besieged. At one time Ypres was one of the most important manufacturing towns in Flanders, being the capital of West Flanders; but like a number of other Belgian towns, it has steadily declined, its population having fallen from 200,000 to 16,000. The only remnant of its once flourishing existence was the Cloth Hall—now partially destroyed—the most beautiful edifice of its kind in Belgium. This Hall took 100 years to build, its chief feature being its massive belfry, 230 feet high, and its forty-four statues. The Town Hall, forming part of the Cloth Hall, contained among other treasures a series of mural paintings representing the chief events in the history of Ypres, beginning with the foundation of the Hospital of the Virgin in 1187. These have been damaged or destroyed by German shells.

Both Calais and Dunkirk are also very ancient towns, but, unlike Ypres, they are to-day towns of great importance. Two million sterling has been spent on the harbors of Dunkirk, the most northerly seaport of France. Not only because of its fortifications, but also on account of the ease with which the surrounding country can be laid under water, Dunkirk is a very strong place. The Gothic Church of St. Eloi, with its statue of Jean Bart, the French naval hero, is its chief feature. Dunkirk is said to owe its origin to the church built by St. Eloi in the seventh century, in the midst of dreary sand-hills or dunes. Hence its name: "The Church of the Dunes." England sold Dunkirk to the French for 5,000,000 francs four years after it had been placed in the hands of Cromwell in return for the services of 6,000 of his Ironsides in the great Battle of the Dunes, when France wrested Dunkirk from the Spanish. The result was that in the later Anglo-French wars the Dunkirk privateers, headed by Jean Bart, were able to play havoc with England's shipping. When peace was made England insisted on the demolition of the fortifications and the filling up of the harbor, in vengeance for Jean Bart's doughty deeds. There is a statue to Jean in the centre of the town.

The Dover Straits are only twenty-one miles wide at Calais, which has been connected with Dover by submarine telegraph since 1851. At a cost of $12,500,000 Calais made its harbor, which was nearly dry at low tide, one of the finest in Europe, and enabled it to become a chief port of debarkation for travellers from England to France. Calais figures in some of the noblest passages of history, the story of how Queen Philippa begged the lives of six of its citizens, whose self-devotion had aroused her admiration, after the town surrendered to Edward III., who had besieged it for twelve months, having often been told.

Barbed Wire is Deadly

In war barbed wire is used in various ways, but its main object is man-stopping. It is interlaced with ground pegs in front of trenches for the purpose of tripping charging troops; it is strung across bridges and main roads to prevent the passage of cavalry; and it is used for fencing in camps to guard against rushing tactics on the part of the enemy. Barbed wire concealed in undergrowth is particularly deadly where cavalry is concerned, for the wire grips the horses' hoofs, causing them to fall on the spike-strewn ground.

Don't buy clover seed that does not bear a label giving the purity and germination tests and information as to the weed seeds in it.

Don't buy clover seed of poor appearance, no matter what the source, until a sample has been sent to the experiment station for examination.

Don't buy the low-priced clover seeds. There is always a reason for the low price. Either the seed is low in vitality or contains foul seeds.

Don't use clover seed screenings for any purpose. They are almost certain to contain noxious weed seeds which may easily be scattered to cultivated fields.

Don't wait too long to buy your clover seed this year. The European supply is cut off and the prices are steadily advancing.

Don't forget that color is an indication of quality in clover seed. A high percentage of dark purple seeds in red clover, very dark green seeds in alsike, and orange seeds in white clover seed is an indication of high viability. Such seed should give excellent stands: A faded color indicates old seed or exposure to the weather.

Don't sow clover seed on acid soils or on a poorly prepared seed bed, and expect good results. Test the soil, and if acid apply lime in some form. —A. L. S.

Sensitive Plants.

There are plants so sensitive that if when standing by them you should suddenly put up your umbrella or sunshade it would be quite sufficient to cause them instantly to close together their leaflets and turn down their leaf stalks, just as if they were startled and alarmed by the movement. Indeed, on a sunny day when the temperature is sufficiently high you need not make even so decided a movement; merely your shadow coming in contact with their leaves will often cause them to fall slightly.—Strand Magazine.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A STRANGE WOOING

Action on a Sudden Impulse Lays the Foundation for Success.

By ELIZABETH SCHOEN COBB.

It was a strange wooing, if it could be called such. On the one hand was Bryce Wharton, with strong, earnest love. On the other, trustful, sympathetic Milly Dover. What she thought, what sweet words of encouragement she might have had in mind to speak to the ingenious, impetuous young man whose handsome face would appeal to any girlish imagination in a vivid way, she was not allowed to express.

"I have told you just what my heart dictated," Bryce had spoken. "I must not ask you to tell me what you think of it, for it would be unfair to yourself and to your family. I only ask you to allow me to hope you will once in awhile remember that I am going to work at an ideal, to come back and tell you of it when I have reached the goal."

"You will be regretted now, and surely welcome then," murmured Milly, and with a brief handshake he was gone. She was almost at the point of tears. "Oh, why did he not—did he not see that I am interested in him, and all he may do, and—and—" and then pretty Milly hid her blushing longing face in her hands, and only the mellow moonlight and the cooing nightingales saw and pitied.

Headstrong and resolute, set upon an idea and determined to carry it out, Bryce strode down the lonely country road in the direction of home. It had been a new home to him for the past month. It had been as well a new home to his cousin, Evan Gray. Both were orphans. Both had been summoned home from different colleges for an interview with wealthy John Gray, their uncle.

He was a generous-hearted, indulgent old fellow, but he had some practical ideas in that active mind of his. The Elms was a royal home of its kind. He had been a builder of note in his day, and the stately mansion was a sample of his own architecture. He was going on a long trip to Europe. His nephews had graduated. They were welcome to remain, young masters of the house, until his return.

"Then to decide on what you intend to do in the world for a living," was the ultimatum of the old man. "Enjoy yourself for the present, let your minds fallow through a year of ease and enjoyment. They will all the more clearly respond to the call for duty when you start out on the real business of life."

The cousins found comfort, luxury and ease indeed in their new life. They had cultured social surroundings and the Dovers were their nearest neighbors. The first time the young men met the fair daughter of the house, Milly, the peerless, they mutually decided they had found the fairest thing on earth.

Bryce found Evan lying in a hammock, dozing, when he reached the Elms. Evan was languid, settled down into the indolence of being an utopian at the world, and he reached the city with a pretty fair idea of the road he was about to pursue.

"You Give Me a Shock."

Once a well known packer and a multi-millionaire had made an address at college that had made a great impression on Bryce. He had told how, in his early days, he had given up a good clerical position to accept forty dollars a month in the operating department of the plant until he knew every cut of meat intimately. "Get the rudiments—know the foundation," was his slogan of enterprise.

That was just what Bryce did. He wasted no time in minor clerical capacities. He went to a large firm of contractors erecting a giant skyscraper in the heart of the great city, wore overalls, helped lay the foundation, helped setting the mammoth stone pillars, and found that he had learned something.

One day he was given charge of a portable forge.

His work was to stand above the set steel beams beside the portable forge and heat red hot the bolts used to clamp these and the girders together. It was wonderful, the expert skill acquired in setting these seething bolts in a pair of pincers, and swinging them so true to a line that the riveter was able to catch them always in the tin pail he held for their reception.

It was nearly noon one eventful day when Bryce held one of the heated bolts ready to swing it to the riveter. In the street below a sudden commotion attracted his attention. A man on horseback was urging up his steed. He had a leather bag on the saddle before him, a revolver menacing a shrinking crowd in pursuit. Even up at that distance from the ground where human beings below seemed to be mere mimes, Bryce could hear the shouts proclaiming the horseman to be a fugitive thief.

A sudden impulse inspired Bryce with the idea that he might be of some use in the situation. He believed he could halt the fugitive where others had failed. He gave the pincers a swing. Whiz! the flaming bolt cleaved the air and landed on the saddle directly in front of the horseman.

There was a flash as the saddle cloth burst into flame, a shriek of agony from the steed. Then horse and rider rolled to the ground, and some officers rushed up and the episode was over.

When Bryce was summoned below by the building superintendent, it was to learn that his promptness had halted a thief who had snatched a bag from a bank messenger containing a small fortune. His recognition by the bank led to a princely reward, but, more valued than that to an influence exerted in his behalf that gave him a position as manager for one of their clients who was the most prominent builder in the city.

The day that Mr. Gray returned home and Evan started out dolefully "to make his mark in the world," Bryce, with a fair bank account and established business standing, received a welcome from his proud old uncle that made him thrill with pride and pleasure.

And when he made his second love confession to blushing Milly and asked her to become his wife, she hid her timid head upon his shoulder and whispered sweetly:

"My answer is the same as it would have been a year ago—yes."

How You May Reduce Your Weight

Overstoutness is a very unwelcome condition especially in the present day, when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form and take one with each meal.

Oil of orilene increases the oxygen-carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1300 Montreal, Can.

GERMAN SPY SYSTEM IS FINELY GRADED

Members Rank From Polished, Highly Educated Specialists to Navvies and Bar-maids

What is perhaps the most authoritative work upon the German spy system that has yet appeared has been written by an English staff officer, formerly a member of the British Intelligence Bureau, whose duty it was to defeat the system's operations in the British Isles. At the outset he corrects some popular misapprehensions. While there can be no doubt that in England and in other European countries agents of the German Government numbering thousands held positions as waiters, barmaids, storekeepers, bookkeepers, instructors and so forth, they are the small fry of the service. The high-class German spy cannot afford to follow any occupation that demands regular hours, or that would prevent him from absenting himself from his post for days or weeks at a time. The high-class spy, therefore, usually poses as a gentleman of leisure, having plenty of money, and tries to move in circles where his movements are not the subject of comment.

He must be an educated man, and he undergoes a harder training than a German army officer. He must be a qualified surveyor, able to make plans of areas of ground from observation, and often without instruments. He must also be a capable photographer, and in addition able to judge distance under all conditions of light.

Talent is Necessary

The German Government does not accept as accurate information published about other countries. It suspects that in many cases statistics are given with the purpose of deceiving possible enemies. At any rate, it always checks up information that is at the disposal of the public. Probably it would not accept the official figures giving the population of any city without devising some more or less intricate scheme for verifying them. The military spy must not only be a surveyor, a photographer, a geologist and several other things, but he must be an expert upon all the different units of the army of the country in which he operates. He must know these units by sight, and must carry in his memory the code word corresponding to each of them. Similarly he must know the code words for the different kinds of guns and for each class of ship in the enemy's fleet. Should he by any chance be able to get a glimpse of a fortification from the inside he must be able from memory to draw a plan of the works.

Germany Hopes Spies

Moreover the information that he is able to secure must be absolutely reliable. Inaccurate information is worse than none at all. It is obvious that the chief spy must be a good linguist, and a man able to mix unsuspected in any society. He must be what is commonly called a "gentleman," though British people would not readily accustom themselves to the idea of a gentlemanly spy. In Germany, however, there is no prejudice against the spy. The end justifies the means, and the spy who succeeds is as greatly honored as the army or navy officer who distinguishes himself in the field of battle.

The number of really high class spies in the service of Germany is at no time very great, for only men of very unusual gifts are qualified for this sort of espionage. They rank above the spy who has a fixed post, and who becomes outwardly a French or British citizen, and establishes himself in business in an enemy country for the sole purpose of picking up information. Under this spy come the rank and file of the army of information, the waiters, the barmaids, the women in less reputable employments, workmen and even navvies. Their information is first given to the fixed post spy, and he forwards it to headquarters. He is paid a regular salary, and pays those who work for him according to the value of the information they can secure.

Royal Widow's Woes.

Poor old Francis Joseph, emperor of Austria, is again called upon to use his kindly offices by another distressed lady who desires the approval of the pope to the divorce recently granted to her by the civil courts. The lady is the Archduchess Isabella, who married Prince George of Bavaria, a union that was but for a day. Pius X has ratified the legal decisions, but has ordered as a penance for the lady that for six months she shall remain retired in the Red Cross convent and minister to the sick. The archduchess finds this prescription of the pope altogether too severe, as she desires to attend the wedding of her cousin, the prince of Croy, with Miss Nancy Leischman, daughter of the United States minister to Berlin. In the meantime Francis Joseph will do what he can to relieve the lady of the discipline inflicted by the church.

SPRING FEEDING

When spring work approaches, the feed can gradually be increased, not perhaps to a hard working ration, but materially above the winter ration. In horses which during the winter have acquired what we commonly call a hay-belly, the roughage ration must be shortened and the shortage compensated for by a corresponding increase above the normal increase of the winter ration.

In all horse feeding, we still must attach the greatest importance to hay and oats, and in preparing the horse for spring work, we should confine ourselves to these articles of diet. It is proper to add a little corn to the ration, after work is well under way and when the horses commence to show a little wear and tear on this account.

When work actually begins, the horses must be used with considerable caution, because no matter how judiciously we have fed and managed them during the winter, the lack of muscular strain will have produced a little "softness," which can only be overcome by bringing the animals by degrees up to their accustomed labor capacity.

One more word of caution, and the many losses from a disease known as azoturia during the spring season, prove that it is not superfluous. While we cannot here discuss this disease in detail, it should be remembered that it is most apt to occur in work horses, on a high working ration, which are suddenly permitted to be idle, without exercise and under continuation of the heavy ration. The rule should be that when such horses are kept in the stable (Sundays, holidays, and on account of rain) that the grain ration be immediately reduced to one-third or one-half, while the animals must be given some opportunity for exercise.

1915 Seed Trade

With the opening of the 1915 seed trade, seedsmen, farmers and gardeners may wish to review the conditions under which sales may be made. The Seed Control Act provides that timothy, alsike, red clover and alfalfa seed must not be put on sale for the purpose of seeding without being plainly marked with the grade, namely: Extra No. 1, No. 1, No. 2, No. 3. Farmers may sell seed below No. 3 in quality only to dealers to be cleaned and brought up to grade. All other grass, clover and forage plant seeds and those of cereals and flax must be marked in a plain and indelible manner with the common name or names of any noxious weed seeds present.

Seed of cereals, flax, grasses, forage plants, field roots and garden vegetables must have a germination of two thirds of the percentage standard of vitality for good seed of the kind or be marked with the percentage that are capable of germinating. "Papered seeds" must be marked with the year in which the packet was filled.

Representative samples of seeds for purity and germination tests may be sent to the Seed Branch, Ottawa. Two ounces of grass seed, white or alsike clover; four ounces of red clover, alfalfa or seed of like size, and one pound of cereals are desired. Samples under 8 ozs. may be sent without postage and are tested free of charge up to 25 in number for each person or firm.

"The Blood of Our Worst Soldier Has Greater Value For Us Than A Whole Town in Belgium"

Bavarian Physician Has Absurd Idea About Character and Quality of British Recruits—Concentrate Hate on All Things British—If Educated German Holds These Strange Views What of the Rest?

Sympathy and admiration for France and Belgium, but only bitter hatred for the English, such are the feelings of the Germans, according to a letter which a Bavarian officer, once a physician in Munich, writes from the trenches to a friend in England. An interesting insight into the feelings which govern the movements of the Germans is given in the letter, published recently in the London Times. In part, the writer says:

'I have fought in Alsace-Lorraine, in Belgium, before Antwerp, in Flanders and now I am in France. It is dreadful; The villages and towns burned and destroyed, the harvest spoiled in the fields. I hope that you and your husband, who know a bit of Germany, have never believed this stupid French theatre rubbish, that we burn all on purpose, kill women and children and steal all.

"My word, I have never seen anything of the kind. I have seen in Belgium the people coming for food and for the physician. Of course, as soon as any one who was not a soldier shot at us, and that happened especially the first weeks, when the spirit was still on fire, then the punishment is known. The men were shot and the village burned. The blood of our first soldier has a greater value for us than a whole town in Belgium.

'In the second month things like that did not hapen any more. Now everything is quiet. The people in Belgium are content to work and live in peace, and the French people are so friendly that I am astonished very much. Only—and this is the point I wish to aim at—with English people things are quite different.

"Let me tell you our feelings against the different nations. For Belgium and France, sympathy and admiration for their soldiers. They are brave fellows, and every prisoner is treated as well as possible, like one of our own men. Russia, Servia, Montenegro and all the other lot of fighters for civilization I despise. One has to fight against them like one fights against a disgusting animal.

"For England—hate and disgust. I hate I have never believed to be possible. I have this hate, too, not against ——, nor against you nor any other English acquaintance. But let me tell you. When I was in Belgium I told my soldiers, 'Five francs for a Belgian prisoner, but five days' prison for an English prisoner.' I have not given any pardon to an Englishman and I would not take any from him.

"You ask me why? Let me tell you an incident which has has happened. A comrade is killed. I ask, is he married? Yes, he is the owner of a big mill and the father of five children. Who killed him? An animal, one of those Indians. A human? No; a kind of human thing that lives the life of an animal, a dangerous animal at home, and which is employed at present to fight for civilization.

'He is hired to kill our men, and every one of us has a position at home—teachers, university professors, wealthy farmers, all kinds of men, wealthy and poor, high and common. Do you understand why we treat those creatures like dangerous animals? And those who let them fight for themselves? That is the wrost. They are ignorant; they don't know what they do—like animals. But your government knows what a highly civilized land Germany is; they know what we have done in arts and science—and in trade!

"At the beginning of this war there was nobody in Germany who was against it. In a fortnight we had 2,000,000 volunteers. Big lists with names in, everybody could see that the numbers were right. We know that it was different in England; that there were many 'who did not want this war, and that at present you must try all means to get soldiers.

"Your young men, educated and learned men, stay at home, and poor fellows who cannot find any other work must give their blood. That the English nation does not fight for itself, that the poorer of the land must fight, that they bring against use all he dirty and cruel and dangerous animals they can find on earth, that they sit shameless at home themselves — that's why we hate them so.

"Your English soldiers are very brave and fight very well, but they have no feeling for "fair play." Attack them and they throw down their rifles. When you have passed they shoot you in the back. They let you come in a distance of three or four yards, shoot like fools, and when you stand by them they throw down their rifles and expect you to give them quarter.

'Friendship and weapon brotherhip—they are in our eyes the highest things a man can give to another. And England's brother of weapons! Yellows, negroes, Indians, redskins, Russians — weapon brothers in the fight for civilization. We have proofs that this war was prepared against us for a long time. King Edward's war, it is.

"The English-French alliance, the French-English naval treaties, the ontrevus in Cronstad and Carlsbad are the proofs. It is, in our eyes—if right or wrong, this is not the place to discuss—an Anglo-German war. France and Russia and the other lot do not fight for themselves, they fight for England. Because our feelings are so sharp I do not want—to go to England. I am sure the war will come over to your island and I want her to be far away from it.

"You do not hear the truth about things on the Continent. The whole French report from November 15 to January 15 is a lie. Since this time have been in two places where Joffre pretends to have made progress. Not a word is true. Those poor, poor French soldiers have fought with a wonderful courage—but tiffey cannot succeed. They have terrible losses.

"Near the Perthes and Beauxjour and Soudain, places where Joffre has attacked since the middle of December, they have not won a metre. Their success is only in the newspapers. With very few soldiers and still fewer cases we keep our position until we finish with Russia and that will be soon.

"Do you know that we have more than 800,000 prisoners? And our own dead, wounded and prisoners, proved name by name, and date and place in official lists, is not yet 750,000. That you do not hear the truth, another example:— Soissons—the French lost 5,200 prisoners, thirty-five guns and we buried 5,000 French soldiers. Joffre does not mention it.

"I will only say that our position is excellent, and that it is far more probable that France, England and Russia are fought down than that they drive us out of Belgium and France. The war, when it shall reach England, will be terrible. There is a hate in our soldiers such that I do not want any of my people near this catastrophe. Instead of saying 'Good day' to each other, they say, 'May God punish England.'"

AN EASY WAY TO GET FAT AND BE STRONG

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes unheeded. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to the remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This master-stroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh - builders. Sargol aims through its re-generative, reconstructive powers to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this amazing transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappear and you take on from 10 to 20 pounds of solid, healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. Leading druggists of Peterborough and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution:—While Sargol has given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

LORD ROBERT'S WILL SENT TO MINNESOTA UNDER TAX LAW

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 29.—A copy of the will of Field Marshal Lord Roberts has been received by Attorney General Smith. Lord Roberts owned 1,578 shares of Great Northern Railway and iron ore properties. The State will levy an inheritance tax of $653 on his holdings in Minnesota.

The will disclosed that King Edward VII. granted, under permission of Parliament, the use of interest on $500,000 to Lord Roberts for services in the Boer War. The money was held for the distinguished soldier as a trust fund. It will be used by his widow and daughters.

The will was made March 4, 1913. His personal property amounted to $375,697. The affidavit filed with the will recited that Lord Roberts had no real property.

"If it is desired to write my life," said Lord Roberts in his will, "it is my wish that no steps be taken without the approval of my widow and daughters."

The fact that wills of Europeans are being sent to Minnesota for inheritance tax determination indicates that the war has caused properties to be transferred, said W. J. Stevenson, Assistant Attorney General, in charge of inheritance tax cases.

SAYS GERMANY HIDES LOSSES.

Paris Paper Gives Instance of German Family Deceived.

PARIS March 29—La Liberte attacks Germany's publication of the lists of German casualities as untrustworthy.

The Frenh Minister of War, the journal says, has issued strict orders that no killed shall be buried before the metal identification plate has been sent to the German Government throuh the Red Cross at Geneva and a copy of the information thus obtained is kept in France.

It has been found, according to La Liberte, that eGrmany publishes only 60 per cent. of the deaths thus recorded. The journal cites the instance of Otto Werner, who was killed on September 8, and whose identification plate was sent to the German Minister of War, who acknowledged the receipt of it The Werner family demanded news and was told, according to La Liberte, that Otto Werner was in a French hospital. The family made an investigation and traced the passed of the identification plate through Geneva.

War on Typhoid Fever.

Once more the relation of typhoid fever to the water supply has been demonstrated. During the flood of some weeks ago the Hudson river at Albany, N. Y., rose a foot above the city filtration beds, and the people received the untreated water of the river, containing the sewage of places upstream. An outbreak of typhoid followed, and it was found that 75 per cent. of the cases were in families where the warning to boil the water for drinking had not been heeded. The main reservoir was then sterilized chemically, and the typhoid ceased. Modern medicine has done great things in making preventable what in other days were reckoned to be the visitations of God. Our grandfathers wondered at the prevalence of typhoid after floods, but we know that the trouble comes from the contamination of water supplies, and so lives are saved where once human beings were doomed. Year by year the science of sanitation is reducing the peril from typhoid.

Russia's German Music.

One of the little ironies of the world's greatest war is the fact that the new official military march of the Russians was written by a German composer. About a year ago the czar instituted an international competition for a new march for his armies, offering a substantial award to the composer of the piece chosen. The composition that most pleased the emperor of all the Russias was the march, "Soldiers' Blood," submitted by a German, Franz von Blon. This march quickly became very popular in the Russian army and has become a favorite all through the country. But it is a rather striking fact that the Russians are now fighting the Germans to the strains of German music.

Vigilance the Price of a Good Complexion

To retain the natural beauty of the skin only proper care and treatment is needed. Our skins are naturally clear and healthy, but the demands of everyday life and unnatural living quickly spoil their freshness and beauty. So necessary is this care that no woman can afford to neglect it. The Nyal people have just issued a new booklet, "Your Complexion," which contains most useful and interesting information on how to care for the complexion in such a way that its beauty and freshness will be preserved for many years. It also includes directions for best methods of massage. The constant use of some good preparation, such as Nyal's Face Cream, is absolutely necessary to keep the skin really clean and healthy. It is a nourishing, oxygenated, greaseless skin-food which leaves no shine. Get a 25c or 50c jar and rub it gently into the skin. See how quickly it is absorbed, leaving the skin pleasantly refreshed and delicately fragrant. 1208

All Nyal preparations are justly famous, and none more so than Nyal's Face Cream, which we unhesitatingly recommend. Call or telephone us for your copy of this book, which contains most valuable information.

GERMANS THROW UP THEIR HANDS.—Russian troops capture a band of Germans who have surrendered in the fighting in Poland.

A REPLY TO ELDER JOHNSON

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In your March 16th issue was a report of a sermon by an Elder Johnston, in connection with which I would like you to print a reply.

I have no issue with Mr. Johnston concerning his interpretation of the Scriptures, because we are living in a free country, and as one of our Ontario editors put it the other day, "One who has a belief that he believes to be necessary or even desirable for others is only doing his duty in trying to spread that belief." Presenting the views of another religious teacher so as to make him appear to say the very opposite of what he really said, is another matter, and this is what Elder Johnston did. Hence this letter.

In referring to Rev. 20:3, Mr. Johnstone says that this text of Scripture Pastor Russell rules out, because it contradicts his theory of future probation. I ask Mr. Johnston to turn to page 208 of Vol. I of Scripture Studies, footnote, and read these words by the Pastor. "However, the repudiation of this clause is not essential to the "Plan" as herein set forth; for the rest of the dead—the world at large—will not live again in the full sense, in the perfect sense that Adam lived before he sinned and came under the sentence 'dying thou shalt die.'" Perfect life without weakness or dying is the only sense in which God recognizes the word life. 2 Cor. 5:14; Matt. 8:22. From Mr. Johnston's reference to the use ow the word "Vatican" in connection with manuscripts I hardly expect him to catch the depth of Pastor Russell's argument here, but at least be can understand the first clause of the quotation.

Mr. Johnston's next reference to what the Pastor writes is worse still. I cannot think that he had any desire in either case to misrepresent the Pastor, but prefer to think that he has quoted from some anti-Russell pamphlet, and taken for granted that these statements must be true because of their authorship. The paragraph purporting to be quoted from the Watch Tower of Sept. 15th, 1910, is to say the least of it a badly garbled quotation. Whole sentences, and words here and there are left out, so that the thought of the paragraph is made to appear the opposite of what it really is. The same article has a paragraph with the following subheading in black-faced type—"Scripture Studies" Not a Substitute for the Bible. Mr. Johnston is probably ignorant of the juggling that has been done in these pamphlets dealing with anti-Russellism, but if he had remembered that quotations marks are sacred things, and that a man that uses them is supposed to recognize their sacredness and be sure he uses them correctly, he would have escaped putting himself on a par with the man who said he didn't want anything to do with the Bible, because it taught hanging, and when asked for his proof said that he had been told it said, "Judas wene tnd hanged himself. Go thou and do likewise." Doesn't it strike a thinking person that a man must have a weak cause when he has to resort to subterfuge to prove that his cause is right?

As for the ladies that Mr. Johnston refers to, they need no defence, for the citizens whom they visited know that almost the first question they asked was concerning the Pastor Russell literature and whether those whom they were canvassing or intending canvassing, were interested in it and desired to get the Studies because they were written by Pastor Russell. Have we left behind the days of chivalry, that a man will publicly accuse two ladies of evading the truth, before he has made certain his charge is true?

We invite the closest investigation of the actual writings of Pastor Russell. In every case they will prove the charges against him false. The strongest proof of this is that, to keep people from reading his writings, his enemies have to misrepresent them.

Thanking you in anticipation, Mr. Editor, for your courtesy in publishing both sides of the question, I remain, Yours for the truth and the truth alone,

L. S. WARD.

REPLENISH YOUR BLOOD IN THE SPRING

Just now you are feeling "out of sorts"—not your usual self. Quite exhausted at times and cannot devote real energy to your work. Sleep does not rest you and you wake up feeling "all tired out." Perhaps rheumatism is flying through your muscles and joints, or may be your skin is disfigured by rashes, boils or pimples. Headaches, twinges of neuralgia, fits of nervousness, irritability of temper and a disordered stomach often increase your discomfort in the spring.

The cause—winter has left its mark on you. These troubles are signs that your blood is poor and watery, that your nerves are exhausted. You must renew and enrich your blood at once and restore tone to your tired nerves, or there may be a complete breakdown. The most powerful remedy for these spring ailments in men, women and children is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, because these Pills cleanse bad blood and strengthen weak nerves.

New, rich, red blood—your greatest need in spring—is plentifully created by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and with this new, pure blood in your veins you quickly regain health and increase your strength. Then your skin becomes clear, your eyes bright, your nerves strong, and you feel better, eat better, sleep better, and are able to do your work.

Begin your spring tonic treatment to-day for the blood and nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills — the Pills that strengthen.

These Pills are sold by most dealers, but do not be persuaded to take "something just the same." If you can't get the genuine Pills from your dealer they will be sent you by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BRITAIN STARTS BADLY

But Usually Comes Out of a War With Flying Colors

Military experts have always advocated the policy of getting a blow in first by carrying war into the enemy's country at the outset of hostilities and winning the first battle at the expense of an unprepared foe. In the case of Great Britain, however, the value of a winning start does not appear to apply, for time and again she has suffered defeat in the initial stage of a campaign, only in the long run to emerge victorious. Most people will remember the long run of disaster to the British troops, which was a prelude to the final success in the South African War, and in similar fashion the Germans forced the English to retreat when first they met the Kaiser's hordes on the continent.

In the Zulu War Great Britain made a disastrous start. At Isandhlwana her army was overwhelmed and defeated with a loss of six hundred men and fifty officers, and the Afghan campaign began in a similar disheartening fashion by the annihilation of a British army. In both cases defeat was eventually turned into overwhelming victory.

When Lord Kitchener conducted his famous campaign against the Mahdi his early efforts showed little signs of success. The armies under the command of Hicks and Baker were routed, but the genius of "K. of K." soon turned the tide and secured the triumph of the British.

Huge Krupp Establishment

Krupps' works cover 1,000 acres of ground. Even before the war rush commenced the firm was employing 60,000 men at their main works at Essen and thousands of others in their collieries, ship building yards, and private testing grounds. It is estimated that over 300,000 people depend on Krupps for their livelihood. At the Krupps' works 40,000 cannon are turned out every year.

KEEP URIC ACID OUT OF JOINTS

Tells Rheumatism Sufferers to Eat Less Meat and Take Salts.

Rheumatism is easier to avoid than to cure, states a well-known authority. We are advised to dress warmly; keep the feet dry; avoid exposure; eat less meat, but drink plenty of good water.

Rheumatism is a direct result of eating too much meat and other rich foods that produce uric acid which is absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine; the pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly cold weather the skin pores are closed, thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate the uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles, causing stiffness, soreness, and pain called rheumatism.

At the first twinge of rheumatism get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts, put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which helps overcome uric acid and is beneficial to your kidneys as well.

MINING WARFARE RESULTS IN SUCCESSES FOR ALLIED FORCES

Prisoners Taken by the French in the Forest of La Pretre--German Aeroplane Bombarding Rheims Brought Down By French Artillery---Another British Steamer is Sunk.

CREW OF LOCKWOOD ARE RESCUED

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, April 3.—French Official Communique—The War Office made the following announcement to-day:

"In the regions of the Somme, La Boiselle and Dompierre mining warfare continued with noticeable advantages for the Allies. The total number of prisoners taken at the Forest of La Petre, in these operations for two days, were two hundred, including six officers. A German aeroplane dropping bombs on Rheims was brought down by the French artillery and two aviators, unhurt, were taken prisoners. In Alsace we have made some advances. The situation in Flanders, where the Belgians and British hold the line, is practically unchanged.

HAD NARROW ESCAPE.

LONDON, April 3.—Captain Hensen, and 22 men of the crew of the British steamer Lockwood, torpedoed off Start Point lighthouse in the Channel, last night, narrowly escaped in the mountainous seas, according to the stories they told when landed by fishing vessels to-day.

The Lockwood ignored the submarine's command to halt, the crew said. Captain Hensen ordered full steam ahead and began to zig-zag through heavy seas, in an effort to dodge the German's torpedoes. For half an hour the chase continued; then the submarine overhauled the Lockwood and began shooting torpedoes at her. The first and second missed, but the third struck the steamer amidships. The crew quickly piled into the boats and had pulled away when it was discovered the mate had been left behind. He dove overboard just before the Lockwood plunged beneath the waves, and swam to one of the boats. The submarine disappeared without offering any assistance. The small boats were almost awash when the fishing boat Brixham appeared and took the crew aboard.

WAR SOON OVER.

DUNKIRK, France, April 3.—"General Joffre, the French Commander-in-Chief, in the course of a visit to Belgian headquarters to decorate certain Belgian officers with the Legion of Honour, told King Albert and Premier de Broqueville, that war soon would come to an end to the advantage of the Allies."

GERMANY'S PLANS.

COPENHAGEN, April 3.—Special Cable—From new headquarters, established near the Belgian City of Dinant, the Kaiser and his chief-of-staff are now directing the German army of nearly 1,500,000 men in operations preliminary to the opening of the spring campaign.

Telephones, telegraphs and wireless instruments have perfected such a chain of communications that the Kaiser can, in a few hours, move whole divisions of his army by railway and autos. The Emperor is reported to be in constant conference with his staff officers, realizing that the battles to be begun in a few weeks are to decide the fall of the German Empire. Gen. Von Bessler commands fuor army corps with headquarters at Dixmude, according to Copenhagen despatches. At Mauld, near Lille, the Crown Prince of Wurtemburg, heads three corps, in the vicinity of Cambria the Crown Prince of Baravia has three army corps. At Laferra, Gen. Van Heering has about four. Near Laon Von Kluck, who was wounded, has about three, and in the same vicinity Von Buelow and Von Ziers, combined, have about four army corps. Below Bozancy and Steinay in the Argonne regions, Gen. Von Sieren has three army corps in action and two m reserve. Near Verdun the German Crown Prince commands a fifty army corps, and two others in reserve, from at Miehels south of Mulhaven Gen. Von Faukenhazen commands an army made up of one army corps and several reserves.

NAVY OFFICERS HERE.

TORONTO, April 3.—Captain R. L. Elder and Lieut. H. R. Busteed, of the British Royal Navy, were in this city yesterday and went on to Buffalo. They declined to be interviewed, but it is stated here they are attached to the flying branch of the service, and are on their way to the Glenn-Curtiss aeroplane works in Buffalo.

ANOTHER STEAMER GONE.

LONDON, April 3.—The 1,143 ton British steamer Lockwood was torpedoed off Start Point in the English Channel, last night, according to press despatches to-day. Her crew reported that the Lockwood was attacked without warning and went down within a few minutes. Every member of the crew is reported rescued.

THE GERMAN REPORT.

BERLIN, April 3.—To-day's German official says: "The Belgian attempt yesterday to win back Klosterhoek farm, which the Germans occupied on March 31, resulted in failure. A French charge in the Forest of Le Petre was not successful. A French attack on the heights south of Neider Aspech west of Muelhausen was repulsed. Nothing of importance has occurred on the eastern front."

Mr. F. M. Randall of Staff of Bank of Ottawa Enlists With 26th Battery

Mr. F. M. Randall, ledger-keeper of the local branch of the Bank of Ottawa, who has enlisted for service overseas in the 26th Battery, C.E.F., was presented with a handsome wrist-watch by the staff of the bank on the eve of his departure. He has been most popular with his fellow employees and in the city generally. Gunner Randall joined the battery at Kingston on Thursday.

FATHER BRETHERTON'S NEPHEW DIED FROM WOUNDS IN FRANCE

Lance-Corporal Ward died on Feb. 23th, after being seriously wounded by a shell. He joined the 10th Liverpool Scottish early in September, and was drafted to Belgium. He volunteered as a stretcher-bearer, but he was shortly afterwards promoted on the field to lance-corporal for bravery during a heavy attack. Letters of condolence were received by his mother from the colonel and four officers of his regiment.

The late Mr. Ward was a nephew of Rev. C. S. Bretherton of town, and his sister was the guest of the latter last summer.—Hastings Star.

WORKMEN ARE NOT INDIFFERENT TO THE CONFLICT

British Working class Fiercest of Lot and Have Contributed an Enormous Proportion of Kitchener's Army

THE WEEKLY LETTER

(Copyright, 1915, Central News.)

By T. P. O'Connor.

LONDON, April 3. — If anything could diminish the ferocious indignations created by the latest manifestations of savagery on the part of the Germans, it would be the outspoken condemnation cabled from New York. It is a remarkable fact, indicative of the severe self restraint of the Englishman, that the language of the American press much exceeds in vehemence and in condemnation the language of any of the English papers. Nevertheless, the latest atrocities have enormously strengthened the already fierce war feeling and also strengthened still more the universal determination to see the war through until German militarism receives its final crushing blow.

A False Impression.

The complaint of some English newspapers about the self indulgence of the workmen, the slowness of recruiting, the continuance of racing, and other amusements, is calculated to give a false impression of the real feeling of the British public. I see every day not the slightest diminution in the strengthening of their iron determination. Many of these exaggerated reports are due to the tendency of certain papers pledged to conscription to exaggerate the difficulties of voluntary recruiting. They do not represent the temper of the majority of Englishmen. Talking with an elderly gentleman on the train this week I found that he had lost one son in the war and has two others serving in the navy. He assented immediately to my statement that the war must go on to the bitter end. Many members of the House of Commons who have lost sons make the same statement.

Not Indifferent.

The working classes are not open to the indictment that they are indifferent to the war. Generally speaking they are the fircest of any class. The best proof of this is the enormous proportion they have contributed to Kitchener's army; the miners alone being represented by two hundred thousand. The increased cost of living and the neglect of some employers to consider the demands for increased wages have produced some disturbance, although less than the newspaper accounts would lead foreign opinion to suppose. The most potent cause of labour troubles is the cruel overwork, such as the men especially in the armament and khaki works are subjected to. The men sometimes become so exhausted that they go to bed for two days at a time and no amount of persuasion can induce them to work. Overwork as well as the demand for increased wages are responsible as much as drinking for the labour troubles, although stories of drinking are greatly exaggerated. I regard the demand for drastic restriction in connection with the drinking hours as one of many symptoms of the growing ferocity of the concentration on war feeling, rather than as justified by proved necessities.

Getting More Optimistic.

My own opinion regarding the prospects of the duration of the war gains rather than loses in optimism. I am now convinced that the cry for armaments has produced its effect. Kitchener's army is rapidly approaching the time when a million men, fully equipped, can be sent to the front. As far as shells are concerned, the Allies' supply has already overtaken and will soon surpass the German supply. Shells are going to decide this fight when fine weather enables the advance to begin. All news from the eastern frontier continues to confirm the conviction that the Russians are able to hold a sufficient number of Germans to prevent a large reinforcement of the western front. The official summing up of the war issued by the French war office, although written in

HOME FROM THE FRONT

Mr. Louis Houedry Returns to Peterboro' After Eight Months Absence—Was Injured When Trainload of Ammunition Exploded.

HE MAY RETURN

The first Peterborough man to return home from the shell ridden battlefields of Europe is Mr. Louis Houedry, Lock Street. Eight months ago to-day Mr. Houedry, who is a French reservist, left Peterborough for the front, and later received an appointment as interpreter to the British army. Yesterday he arrived in New York on the steamship "Chicago," and at twelve fifteen to-day surprised his wife and family with a telephone message announcing his arrival in Peterborough. If in three months Mr. Houedry is physically fit to return to the front he will be called out to live over again some of the horrors that he has experienced during the past few months.

Sole Survivor.

Mr. Houedry is still suffering from injuries which he received while accompanying an ammunition train to the front. The train was made up of five cars loaded with ammunition for the artillery and was in charge of twenty-four men. While proceeding along in a casual way a German shell hit the first car, with the result that the entire train disappeared into the space. Out of the twenty-four men that was in charge of the train, Mr. Houedry was the sole survivor. He remembers being blown some considerable distance, but as to what actually happened, as car after car of ammunition exploded, Mr. Houedry is not in a position to tell. He was removed to the hospital suffering from severe wounds in the back and other parts of the body, where he remained for nearly two months or until his return to Canada. During that time he was almost entirely deaf and the roar of the explosion rang in his ears for weeks afterward.

Germans in France.

On their way over to France, the passengers were inofrmed that the Germans had not entered France. Upon their arrival they found out for themselves that the Germans were within fifty miles of Paris. It was then that the order to advance was given and every French soldier knew in his own heart that there was no alternative but to go ahead or die in the attempt. In his duties as interpreter Mr. Houedry was frequently required to accompany droves of Geramn prisoners to concentration camps in France. He was surprised to note the youthfulness of some of the men. It was apparent that all classes were pressed into service irrespective of age.

Ammunition Wanted.

According to Mr. Houedry, the allied commanders have repeatedly stated that more ammunition must be supplied before a forward movement can be undertaken. Every industry capable of manufacturing ammunition both in France and England is assisting in the work. Mr. Houedry pays a glowing tribute to the work of the French and English gunners, which he says is superior to the Germans. He also claims that the German artillery is beginning to suffer from the effects of constant use. A shell that "staggers" while in flight is said to

A REPLY TO ALD. DOBBIN

"Only a Volunteer" Does Not Agree With His Description of the Barracks Accomodation at Belleville.

ASKS SOME QUESTIONS

Belleville, April 1st.

Editor Examiner—

Sir,—Reading the article in Wednesday's issue, under the caption, The Peterborough Boys in Belleville, one naturally concludes the writer must hold a brief for Belleville. He certainly displays a vividness of imagination worthy of Jules Varnes in his palmiest days.

"Something has been written," he writes, "which would lead one to suppose the building is a firetrap. Nothing is further from the facts."

Which, put into plain English, means your correspondent is a liar. He further says everything possible for human ingenuity to devise has been done to ensure perfect sanitation. His distroted vision has seen room in each lavatory for 30 men to bathe at once. He has also seen in the same lavatory a plentiful supply of towels. He has also seen the ultra comfortable sleeping accommodation equal to the luxuries of the "black hole of Calcutta," which so magnified in his opinion to resemble comfortable accommodation.

Now, as Ald. Dobbin is such an authority upon the subject will he kindly answer the following questions:

1. How far does his opinion of the fire trap coincide with Col. Preston, the C. O. of the Battalion, who openly cautioned his men on parade that they were living in a fire trap?

2. How does his view of perfect sanitation tally with lavatories, etc., being above the cook house, where any leakage which will, and does occur from the latter, runs into the place where the soldiers' food is prepared.

3. How will he explain the profusion of towels, since the only towels are the two provided for each man, one of which will be at the wash and the other securely tucked away somewhere when not in use, to ensure safe custody?

4. And the lively piano, the delightful harmony dispensed at meal time. Oh where and oh where did he dream them?

The piano is O.K., the harmony might be, but believe me, Mr. Editor, there is more discord than harmony in first obtaining a wee bit of grub, and then elbowing your way without catastrophe to a seat where you may get breathing room to eat it.

And the greatness and luxury of the "sleeps." If Alderman Dobbin, awakened in the morning with a lively tongue, a taste in his mouth that made him wonder if it was really "a morning after the night before" or not, I feel he would not labour under the misapprehension that the quarters were perfectly sanitary.

And whether he holds a brief for Belleville burg or not might he not at least make sure that he himself is not unduly distorting facts, and that he does not go out of his way to insinuate his brother is a liar, even if that brother does happen to be a Peterborough soldier.

All of us are ready to admit that we have the best Belleville had to offer in the accommodation line. But that is saying so little.

Will not Ald. Dobbin take pity on our ignorance and enlighten us why we are exiled and interned in these luxurious quarters in Belleville, with no library, no place to smoke in peace or write in comfort in and oblige,

Yours truly,
Only a Volunteer.

39TH SOLDIERS THREATEN TO GO BACK TO HOMES

Sensation at Belleville When Men Stampeded as Result of Death From Spinal Meningitis and Objected to Their Quarters in Canning Factory.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

BELLEVILLE, April 3.— Belleville was the scene of much excitement tonight when some two hundred soldiers of the 39th Battalion, just mobilized for the third overseas contingent, stampeded as a result of a death in their camp from spinal meningitis, broke bounds and made for the station with the intention of returning to their homes. Since their mobilization on Tuesday last twelve hundred members of this battalion have been quartered in the cannig factory. When the fatality occurred to-day they were seized with the fear that they were in great danger and apparently decided on flight in a body, at least to that extent. The officers heard of the intended action and resistance was offered, which resulted in something of a melee before the men left their temporary barracks. They, however, proceeded to the station and at midnight four hundred men were sent after them. A parley took place at the station, with the result that a compromise was reached and the men were promised and accepted billets at the various city hotels, to which they returned shortly after midnight.

To-day's Developments.

BELLEVILLE, April 3.—(Special to The Examiner.)—There was no further recurrence to-day of trouble among the members of the 39th overseas regiment, third contingent, who yesterday objected to the arrangements made for their quartering here, when they discovered that there had been spinal meningitis and went back to the station, declaring their intention to return to their home towns. Satisfactory arrangements for their billeting have now been made. The men were this morning given severe lectures on discipline, and it is likely that with the dismissal of a few ringleaders all the trouble will be over.

Lt.-Col. Preston's Statement.

Lieut.-Col. Preston, officer commanding the 39th Battalion, when interviewed by the Toronto Globe over the long-distance telephone early this morning, said that the situation was entirely under control. He did not think that more than fifty men were concerned in the disturbance, and this he believed had all been rounded up by the picket he had sent out. The men concerned in the trouble were new arrivals at the camp, having come in as recently as last Saturday and some of them even later. They had come without officers, and were unorganised and undisciplined. Yesterday, he said, they had come into possession of some money, drinking had resulted, which led to the trouble last night.

Complaints General.

The Examiner learns that it was the death of Pte. Davis, who was in the Lindsay detchment, that caused the excitement. From a Belleville correspondent writing yesterday it was learned that fumigating had been done and mattresses burned which no doubt was responsible for the excitement. Several communications published by the Examiner have called attention to the conditions in Belleville. The men unanimously pronounce the canning factory where they are quartered as unhealthy and unsanitary. It is complained that some of the bunks are alongside the lavatories and furthermore that the latter are over the room where the food for the battalion is prepared. Every Peterborough private interviewed by the Examiner has the same complaint.

TRENCHES HAVE A FASCINATION SAYS LIEUT. ACKERMAN

Writes of Another Spell in the Trenches and Heavy Bombardment—Finds Target Training Helpful.

ALSO MENTIONS NIGHT WORK

Billets, France, Mar. 15, 1915.

My Dear Mother,—At last I have time once more to write to you. Every day I have started to write, by that I mean I started to look for something to write upon, but before I could find the paper I had something else to do.

We came out again the other night for another session of rest and clean up before going in again. I must say, mother, that I like the trenches better than the billets, although our present quarters are very comfortable. There is a certain fascination about the trenches that seems to grow on one; the long hours of watching and the wet, sticky and slimy mud are not half so tiring as one would imagine who has not had the unusual experience. Every now and then a shot rings out, then four or five, and before long there is a fusilade of shots seasoned with a little machine gun fire and then a few star shells are thrown out just to see who is responsible for the firing of the first shots. It almost always turns out that the Germans have got their "wind up," or in other words imagine they see some of our men up cutting their wire, preparatory to an attack.

I do wish I could tell you of some of our doings. I think I could make a very interesting letter, but as I am myself a censor it wouldn't do for me to deviate from the narrow path that headquarters has set for us to follow.

Early the other morning we had our first taste of really heavy fire, and for a while the fun was great. It was great because our casualties were practically nil, while I feel certain theirs were quite heavy, as our artillery just kept a stream of assorted shells flying over our heads and our fellows could be seen sticking their heads over the parapets shouting, "How do you like that Frits?" One would naturally suppose they would get picked off by snipers, but at that time there were very few Germans engaged in that sport. Their shells came back, of course, but burst behind our trenches. One shell madea a hole in the top of a parapet in my section, but did not burst, while another burst on the safe side of the parapet and threw some earth over us, but didn't touch any person. The excitement lasted for about two hours, but was kept up at intervals lasting nearly all day. I saw Arthur the other night out behind my trench with a fatigue party improving a new trench and had quite a little talk with him. His company is in reserve behind us.

I spent most of my time during the day making use of the training I got at the rifle matches in Toronto and Ottawa by sniping, using a very strong telescope and a good safe loophole to shoot through. I would not care to say how many I have succeeded in getting, but I do know I have picked off some.

I received your letter the other night dated Feb 2 and last night I received an Examiner with Sir Kenneth McKenzie's poem in that I sent home. How did you like it? I have not had very much time lately to write letters, but I guess the people to whom I should have written will understand.

I guess you will find the train of thought somewhat broken in this letter, mother, but since I started to write I have been called out twice to try and locate some apparently illegitimate signalling and think I will go out again, but I expect it will be very hard to locate without a lot of very careful and steady waiting.

Your loving son,
Charlie.

P.S.—March 16th, 1915— Dr. Greer has just come in and asks to be remembered to you. C. H. A.

GLADYS SEWARD, Piano Recital, Conservatory Hall, on FRIDAY, APRIL 9th, assisted by Miss Jeanette Kilmaster.

Is it not remarkable how some tea merchants reduce the quality of their teas in sympathy with the rising markets? Admittedly the auction prices of teas on the London, Calcutta and Colombo markets have risen to an extraordinary level and there seems little respite ahead. Nevertheless, we will continue to supply the public with the same high standard of quality that they have learned to rely upon in Salada packets. Salada has always been kept "up to a standard" and never "down to a price" and we will never depart from this principle which has earned us such appreciation. If market prices make it impossible to supply Salada at present prices then the cost to the retailer and consumer must go up.—The Salada Tea Co. in the "Canadian Grocer."

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1915

EASTER.

Easter comes to us with a double significance; it tipyfies hope and fruition. In it are fulfilled the hope founded on the divine assurance, and the fact that death is not death but the portal to new life. The mystery of the resurrection is no mystery to the believer in the divine omnipotence. It is the rule of nature. When we see the dainty threads of grass and flowers lifeless in the embrace of winter, it seems little possible, that they should be anything but dead. Yet, in the cycle of the seasons the spring comes, the imprisoned growth is released, and there is a glorious resurrection from the dead. We celebrate to-morrow the great type of all resurrection, the fruition of Calvary, and are cheered with the more than hope it brings—the certainty, that our lives that lapse from earthly environments; our hard lives, our lives of struggle and sad shortage of earthly reward and enjoyment, will appear again in a better and brighter world, one step nearer the embrace of the divine arms. This Easter marks for us another resurrection. It dawns upon us this year in the midst of the blight and desolation of war, the fruit of the resurrection of the dead days, and doings of savagery, and a barbarous ambition, we thought dead and past. But out of all this reek of ruin will come, in the ordered course of divine planning, a new world, a new civilization, consolidate by common suffering and heightened by ideals baptized to new force by the blood of thousands, and the sacrifices of millions. As Easter comes to us to-morrow with new hope and confirmed promise, so will a resurrection of a new order of human affairs come to the world with the triumphant end of this war, which dreadful as it is, is but the agonizing labour of a birth of a new life for the world of humanity.

THOSE MOBILIZATION CENTRES.

Whatever influence, political or otherwise, led the military authorities to select Belleville instead of Peterborough, as a mobilization centre, it appears by results that the selection was an unfortunate one. When soldiers penned up in an old canning factory, stampede as a result of one of the number dying from spinal meningitis, the condition must be very bad. That conditions were unsatisfactory, is shown by letters that have been published in The Examiner from Peterborough members of the battalion, which revealed frightfully unsanitary conditions. In another column will be found an account of the mutiny against meningitis conditions. Billetting soldiers in hotels as has to be done in Belleville, would, one would think, be unsatisfactory and unduly expensive. If the contingent had been mobilized in Peterborough the Cordage Works buildings would have easily accommodated the 1,100 men under training, and under sanitary conditions. It is to be assumed that the member for Belleville had both the pull and the desire to exercise it in the commercial interests of Belleville, no matter how the members of the canned contingent might be placed at disadvantage. If any form of favouritism, led to the selection of a mobilization centre with conditions that brought about even one death, a heavy responsibility rests on somebody. Providing soldiers with "rotten" boots, is only a companion action to herding soldiers in a place that is in many ways unfit for the purposes to which it is put.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

In all the activities that crowd upon us at this time, we must not forget the most important in its sphere of influence, the Horticultural Society. The membership of the society is not at all large enough in comparison with the size of the city, nor with the place of influence the society occupies in relation to the most important interests of the city. We should not have fewer than a thousand members; and it is possible that this number could be reached, if a systematic effort were made. Abstract appeals in behalf of any cause generally fall upon deaf ears. We all need to have matters of many kinds pressed personally upon use to secure our attention. It only needs to have the advantages and duty of membership in the Horticultural Society brought directly and personally to individual attention to insure practical recognition of them. The prime advantage is the opportunity it presents us to have a practical share in the work of beautifying the city. This is not a mere sentimental question. If we make the city more attractive we do a great deal in making it a desirable place to live in, and to accomplish this, in a comprehensive way, is to achieve the ideal of all civic ambitions. At this time when unemployment is so prevalent, and when the cultivation of the city garden and vacant lots is so urgently desirable, the activity and influence of the society are especially demanded. The Horticultural Society is warmly commended to the practical attention of all good and progressive citizens. It is an admirable medium for the practical expression of our interest in promoting the most important interests of the city.

UNDER WHICH KING?

When Hon. Mr. Hearst, Premier of Ontario, claims to be the heritor of the Whitney tradition, he can easily claim that there is one item short—courage. As a temperance man and a friend of temperance, his accession to the premiership was hailed by temperance interests as a rainbow of promise. But there is no pot of gold at the end of the irridescent arch Personally he may practice and believe in temperance, but officially he is a deadly negation. He had the chance of a century to distinguish himself, and has distinguished himself—as potentially the fast friend of the liquor traffic; as witness his legislation of the past session. He has done nothing in the way of advance, Mr. James Haverson, the legal custodian of the liquor traffic, is satisfied. In regard to the new license legislation, he says:

"I do not think any serious change has been made either in the way of restriction or in the nature of temperance reform."

If Mr. Haverson, representing the liquor interests is satisfied, it is evident that Mr. Hearst's new legislation is not a very important temperance measure. Hon. Mr. Hanna claims that the new legislation is in line with temperance reform because it is in line with the past policy of the Government. He claims that this has been endorsed at several, especially the last, general, elections, this claim is not tenable. At the last election the "banish the bar" policy was met with the assertion that the Government was and always been, a staunch friend of temperance, and the electorate was assured that if the Government was given the power, advance measures of temperance, more effective than abolition of the bar, would be enacted. The friends of temperance were treated to the assurance on the temperance question, that, as in the case of "Little Nell" — "Codlin's your friend, not short"—the Whitney Government, not the Liberal party, was the true friend of temperance. Many, and enough, weak-kneed temperance men, whose partizanship does not need much encouragement, heeded the party voice and voted party against temperance; no doubt—in many cases—with the honest feeling that the Government would keep its implied promise, that if the electors would knock the banish-the-bar policy on the head, it would introduce measures of temperance reform that would astonish the friends of the cause. And they have literally kept their word; for the new legislation is astonishing—in its weakness and vapidity. A temperance measure conceived in the interests of the liquor traffic and moulded and influenced by the traffic, is astonishing in respect of a government with a "temperance" premier at its head. To perpetrate a pun, whose atrocity is justified by the truth it involves—Hearst has hearsed the temperance cause so far as his official influence and action go. The King and Kitchener can come out flat-footed in favour of temperance. Mr. Hearst is not courtier enough, nor courageous enough to follow the royal example. Loyalty to King George and King Alcohol seem to be incompatible.

THE LIBERAL MONTHLY.

The Liberal Monthly for March is full of matter of great interest and importance to those following political developments at Ottawa. Full reports are given of the speeches of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. A. K. Maclean, M.P., on what is the most extraordinary and burdensome budget that has ever been introduced into the Canadian Parliament. The speech of the Hon. G. P. Graham on the party truce, and the remarks of the Hon. A. E. Kemp, Conservative M. P., on "No party truce" are also given. A synopsis is given of the regimental courts of inquiry into the boot and shoe affair; silent points in the questions and answers in the House of Commons this session are brought out; the work of the Liberal Club Federation is dealt with; and there is the usual diary. Any person wishing to receive a copy of this number may have one by applying to the Central Information Office of the Liberal party, Hope Chambers, Sparks Street, Ottawa.

HEARST WILL NOT FOLLOW THE KING AND KITCHENER

Surely Premier Hearst must see that he is sinking to the rear with the reactionaries! Surely he must understand that he is dishonouring Ontario, and surely he must know that some day, some day soon, this black brood of barroom chickens will come home to roost! What is proper for the King and for the Royal household, and what is proper for Kitchener and his home—a banished bar and a prohibited drinking habit during war time— is surely proper for the intensely loyal Government and people of the Province of Ontario!

It puzzles one to explain Premier Hearst's weak and self-contradictory conduct in these serious days. Those who know him commend his "sincerity" as a temperance man. Major Tolmie passed that commendation across the floor of the House on Wednesday night. But sincerity must express itself not merely in the high-keyed and over-strained speech of Tuesday night, but in some strong, resolute, positive action on Wednesday morning. If Mr. Hearst is indeed sincere it must be that he does not understand.

Not in this generation has any Ontario Premier had such a "man's chance" as Mr. Hearst is letting slip past him this week. Here we are, every citizen, entering the darker shadows of the war. For Canada these coming months will be Gethsemane. Every ounce of power will be needed. Every call of energy will be drained. Not at the battle-front alone, but in every industry and trade, in every factory and shop, in every office and school, the utmost every man and woman can do will be required. The burdensome and brutalizing barroom is out of place

The call to Britain is the call to Canada. The sacrifices of Britain are the standard of sacrifices for Canada. There the King sets the British price. Drink is denounced by the great leaders as the Empire's most dangerous enemy. Drink is doomed by Royal example; the nation is gathering itself together for the prohibition of Drink so that the Empire may stand. Here in Ontario's Legislature our leaders have been shouting loyalty with their mouths but acting disloyalty with their votes. And the new Premier sets the Ontario pace. What a chance he is missing!

If Premier Hearst were as sincere as Major Tolmie thinks he is, and if he were freer than Secretray Hanna thinks he isn't, there would be just one play for him; he would cut loose from the Cochrane leading-strings, and break the cobweb bands of the Federal dictators, and defy the whiskey league to do its worst; he would risk his all on following the King's lead, close every Ontario barroom and liquor shop and drinking club until the war is over; and take his chances with the people. Fail? No, not if he is of Premier stuff.

But if he is not free, if he is indeed, as many say, a tied-Premier, if Hon. Frank Cochrane is his mother and master, if his freedom was compromised in any "deal" which involved campaign funds and pledges, if a messenger from Ottawa came to him, say on Monday—not to Hanna this time but to Hearst—insisting with authority that the "soldier" clause be immediately struck out of the Hanna amendments because of the campaign fund "deal" and the looming election, and if he made the promises which sent the messenger back to Ottawa on Tuesday morning with grateful assurances to the federal party leaders, so that even before Hanna made his back-down speech in Toronto "there was joy in the home of the ravens in Ottawa—if this is the situation and these the conditions, then Premier Hearst would have made just the speech he did make on Tuesday night, feverishly patriotic in words, but safeguarding the barroom in all its devastating privileges, in defiance of the King's example, in defiance of Kitchener's warning, and contemptuous of Canada's gravest peril. He has done this week exactly what a tied-Premier would do.

And he had such a chance to play the man! to act the Patriot! to be the Premier! That is the tragedy of it. One more tragedy in Ontario politics!

ONTARIO SESSION ENDS.

Official Prorogation of Legislature to Occur Next Thursday.

TORONTO, April 3.—The Ontario Legislature stands adjourned and formal prorogation will take place on Thursday. In the small hours of yesterday morning the flow of oratory ceased, the last few bills were whipped through third reading and the strenuous seven-weeks' war session was brought to a close. With the members singing patriotic strains and showers of bluebooks flying through the air the mace was lifted from the table and the House rose from its annual session.

Hon. W. J. Hanna made a very significant reference to the first year's work of the commission. In speaking of the British Government in restricting sale during war time, he stated that the Government was not oblivious to conditions and demands. The powers of the board would be found much more important than at first was understood.

One amendment revised in committee now grants full power to the commission to suspend or cancel licenses at their own discretion, and without consent of the Government.

ONE YEAR TERM FOR SCHOOL TRUSTEES

Did Not Meet With Approval of Legal Committee—Peterboro City Council Might Favour Such a Scheme

Mayor Church of Toronto is disappointed at the lack of sympathy shown towards the city's proposal to cut the term of the School Trustees to one year. The Legal committee of the Legislature bowled it out with little consideration despite the vigorous protests of the Mayor, who pointed out that the annual election of the trustees would put a check upon their ever increasing expenditures.

"There was a big lobby put up against it," said the Mayor. "We didn't even have the support of our own members. I propose to take a referendum on this question next New Year's Day and then they can't say that the people don't want it.

"Under the present school law there is no responsible government and they spend what they like. The people voted down the two-year term for the mayor and aldermen by an overwhelming vote, and the one-year term in the school boards would have the same effect on the school board as it does upon the City Council. Then we will have uniformity if we get that.

The rural members didn't understand this, and said that there was no demand for it. We can take it to the people and then they will see if there isn't a public demand for it. About 15 ratepayers' associations are in favour of it."

In Peterborough.

Toronto's attempt to cut the term of the school trustees to one year was watched with considerable interest by some of the members of the Peterborough City Council. It was realized generally that a similar measure might be employed here. More than one alderman is of the opinion that the School Board is too autocratic when it comes to demanding money. As one alderman put it. "The Board first decide what amount is required and then frame a carefully worded resolution to the City Council asking for the desired amount. The Council has no option but to pay, as refusal might result in the government grant being stopped."

EASTER.

In the cold grave yesterday,
Prostrate still the Saviour lay,
Pallid death in terrors there,
Swayed a septer of despair,
Sorrow, silence, deepest gloom
Gathered round the lonely tomb.

But at last the sun's bright ray
Scattered far night's shadows grey.
And at radiant dawn He rose
Glorious from that calm repose,
Death and hell combined in vain
Their great Conqueror to detain.

All His weary sufferings o'er
Now He lies to die no more,
Death was of His terrors shorn,
Vanquished that glad Easter morn,
Pluming now triumphant wings
Faith and hope exultant sings.

Where the frown on death's pale brow
Where oh grave thy victory now,
Through the still our path way lies
To the life beyond the skies
But when Jesus through thee passed,
Light upon thy gloom He cast.

Joyful, too, with one accord,
Nature hails her risen Lord,
Dons her beautious verdant dress,
Decked in vernal loveliness.
Witness forest field and flower,
Of His resurrection power.

CONEYBEARE IS STILL AT LARGE

Reward is Offered For Recovery of Stolen Bills

By offering one dollar and a half for Dominion Bank of Canada one dollar bills, January, 1911, issue, in the following numbers and series, 269,001 to 269,500, series M, check letter A, the Canadian Express Company hopes to obtain some clue to the whereabouts of Coneybeare, the young Lindsay driver in the employ of the express company, who disappeared a week ago last Monday night after a shipment of $3,000 in bills, consigned from Toronto to Lindsay, had been stolen. The stolen money included five hundred single dollar bills of the foregoing numbers. Advertisements are appearing in numerous newspapers throughout the Province offering $1.50 for any one of these dollar bills. The offer holds good until April 12. It is expected that, should anybody come forward with one of these bills, it will be possible to learn from what source it was received and might thereby lead to the tracking down of the thief.

The Canadian Express Company states that the five hundred bills are those that were stolen, and so far not a single one has been turned in. They hold out hope that somebody may come forward with at least one before the time expires. Nothing has yet been seen or heard of Coneybeare, although numerous detectives have been scouring the country for him. It is expected, however, that sooner or later he will be run to earth.

Graphic Picture of Life in the Trenches—Test of Endurance

LONDON, March 20.— The tremendous advantages which the defensive has over the offensive in modern warfare, and the natural instinct of man to retire underground when he can no longer dwell in safety above ground—just as our primitive forefathers used to do—have brought about the result in France and Belgium, after six months of the bloodiest fighting in the world's history.

From the point of view of the Allies, the situation is to be deplored at the present time because it prevents the French and English armies from taking the offensive at a moment when the Germans are straining every effort to crush the Russian centre in Poland.

In France and Belgium the troops in the front lines are intrenched just where they were last able to hold their ground. They have covered their front with barbed wire where available and simply sit tight to resist any attack.

Some distance back is a second line of reserves, but success to the front can only be obtained by marching over exposed ground. This renders the work of the troops in the firing line far harder, and also gives a sense of isolation, which is apt to have a depressing effect on the mind.

Test of Endurance.

This isolated underground warfare requires the highest qualities of courage and endurance. The hostile armies, dug deep into the earth, live separated from each other at a distance which varies from 300 to as little as fifty yards, according to the character of the ground.

It is a curious sensation to live or walk along these trench lines, knowing that the enemy is engaged in a similar occupation only a few yards away. The life soon becomes monotonous and gets on the nerves. It is well to relieve the troops in the front line every twenty-four hours, but in the recent fighting around Ypres some regiments have been obliged to remain in their trenches for days on end.

In the trenches night is often turned into day and day into night; for the chances of either side attempting an attack or sorties by day are remote, and both sides are able to relax their vigilance somewhat, and the worn-out soldiers eagerly seek such opportunities for repose. At night it is very different, for then sorties are made to destroy a half-completed sap, or to find out the strength of the enemy, or the engineers press forward to push one nearer the enemy's line, or to fix the wire along the front.

Nerve-Destroying Work.

Incidents of this sort keep both armies along the immense front on the qui vive almost every night. If firing breaks out at any point along the line the men everywhere will spring to attention, and stand ready to repel an attack. This nerve-destroying work at last comes to such a pitch that, frequently, if a single shot disturbs the peace and quiet of the night, soldiers along the trenches will fire volleys indiscriminately toward their opponents, and for several minutes a furious fusillade will awake everyone for miles around, suggesting that a serious attempt is being made to carry part of the position.

Very often this rifle fire will get on the nerves of the gunners, and they will commence to bombard that section of the line from which the sound comes, as a hint to the combatants that they would better cease fire and resume their slumbers, and not arouse the guns to fury.

It is strange to see the shells bursting at night, because it is quite impossible to tell from which battery a shell is fired. If you fix your eye on the trenches during one of these nocturnal bombardments you will suddenly see a burst of red flame, followed by a white smoke, and no sound will be heard until some seconds later.

When night casts her friendly pall the scene is one of supreme grandeur Then the searchlights cut great lanes of pure white through the surrounding gloom, as, flitting from trench to trench, they seek to discover the approach of the dreaded infantry. Between the intervals of light the beautiful star shells often burst, casting a reddish purple glow all around.

Ingenious Devices Employed.

Life in trenches given an opportunity to the ingenious mind to devise all sorts of means for discomfitting the enemy and annoying him. Small parties creep out at night and hurl hand grenades into the enemys' trenches, relying on the confusion and darkness to enable them to make their escape. The Germans are now using trench howitzers, which throw heavy explosives short distances at a high angle.

The demoralizing effect of this life in trenches is seen, even with the bravest troops when the moment arrives when the officer commanding a particular section of the line considers the time has arrived to assault the enemy's works in front. Soldiers who have lived for days in front of an intrenched position, and who, during this time, have never dared lift their heads above cover, through fear of sharpshooters, acquire a horror of advancing to the attack such as you never see in troops charging over fresh and unknown grounds.

Life under such conditions has evil results on the imagination, and each soldier believes he is doomed before he starts. All such movements partake of the nature of forlorn hopes.

OLD TRADITION LOSING ITS GRIP

Month of March Was Very Mild Throughout

For the tenth time in the last fifteen years the old tradition about March, the lamb and the lion, was shattered. Yesterday was certainly a lamb-like day, and March 1 was fair and sunshiny.

Rich Men Insure

INSURED FOR $412,403

The largest life insurance claim paid in 1912 on this continent was $412,403, on the life of Charles Silverson of New Ulm, Minn., and the second was $350,000 on the life of T. T. Reid, of Montclair, N. J.

The largest in Canada was $143,750 to the beneficiary of Benjamin F. Pearson of Halifax, and the second $135,352 on the life of Frederick W. Thompson of Montreal. The payment of $80,212 on Charles M. Hays was third.

The above extract is from a recent issue of a Toronto paper. All those men knew the value of life insurance, and availed themselves of its benefits—and what is true of them is true of almost every successful business man.

Since you must realize the necessity of making provision for your old age, if you live, or for your family in the event of your early death, can you do better than follow the example of such shrewd, prosperous men?

Our booklet, "A Few Facts," explains why you should place your insurance with The Imperial Life. Write for a copy to-day—it is very interesting and it's free.

Robert Barr, Dead.

WINDSOR, April 3.—Robert Barr, 68 years old, father of Robert Barr, the famous novelist, and a resident of Windsor for thirty-five years, died last night at his home, 60 Dougall avenue. Mr. Barrs health had been gradually failing since the death of his wife five years ago, and the death of Robert Barr, his son, which occurred three years ago, also told heavily upon him. Mr. Barr crossed the Atlantic sixty years ago. He first located at St. Thomas, where for many years he conducted the business of a general contractor. After taking up residence in Windsor he took an active part in Federal and municipal politics.

FRECKLES

New is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength — from any druggist and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than an ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckle.

Mrs. Wiseneighbour Says:

"I should have told you the other day when I was speaking of 'Eddy's' washboards, that it is just as necessary to have an Indurated Fibreware Tub to hold your clothes if you want to make a success of Washday."

Mrs. Newlywed says: "I've heard of 'Eddy's' Indurated Fibreware. What's the difference between Fibre and Woodenware?"

"Fibreware is made from compressed fibre baked at extreme heat. All in one solid piece, it cannot warp or fall apart. No chance of splinters, wears much longer, looks better and is light to carry. The latter point you should always take into consideration," concludes Mrs. Wiseneighbour.

Annual Sale Of Holsteins

Seventy-one Fine Animals Bring About Average of $142.

BELLEVILLE, April 3.—The annual April sale of Holsteins by the Belleville District Breeders' Club took place Thursday afternoon. Seventy-head were offered for sale, and sold for $10,060 by auction, an average of about $142. The stock was excellent and mainly young, and the breeders consider the sale successful. The buyers were mostly from the district of eastern Ontario. Norman Montgomery of Belleville, was auctioneer. The Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, bought a number of the cattle.

Band Grant Will Not Be Changed

According to Decision of Finance Committee on Thursday Afternoon.

The Band grants will remain the same as last year, namely, the 57th Regimental Band $500 and the Salvation Army Band $225. This was the result of the deliberations of the Finance committee at the meeting on Thursday afternoon. The Council had referred the matter to the Finance committee again, this time for action.

The chairman had a letter from Adjutant McElhiney, withdrawing the first application of the Salvation Army Band to have the sum divided equally between the bands. He said that it had came to his notice that there was likely to be some trouble in music circles if the request was granted, and sooner than cause any trouble of this kind he would withdraw the application which he had made on behalf of the Temple Band and that they would leave themselves entirely in the hands of the members of the committee for consideration. He added that they had at least found out where some of their practical supporters were and whether they got any assistance from the Council or not, the Salvation Army Band would go happily onward.

Meeting Was Short.

The meeting on Thursday afternoon was a particularly short one. There was not much business to be taken up and what did come up was handled in short order. The aldermen seemed to be imbued with the holiday spirit and were all in a hurry to get through. Ald. Weir, who has been added to the personnel of the Finance committee in place of ex-Ald. Johnston, resigned, made his debut, but as one of his brother aldermen remarked, they did not have time to properly conduct the initiation and he could look forward to this at some future night session of the committee.

$25 to Terminate Grant.

A communication was received from the Industrial Association of Ontario acknowledging the grants which were to pay for services up to April 1. The committee recommended that a further sum of $25.00 be granted to this Association and that the Secretary be written to the effect that its services would not be needed after April 15.

To Borrow $200,000.00.

It was decided that a recommendation should go to the Council that a by-law be prepared to permit of borrowing a sum of money up to 200,000.00 to run the city until such times as the regular revenue was collected.

BELLEILLE NOTES.

BELLEVILLE, April 2.—The only parades to-day, Good Friday, were a voluntary church parade and also one at which there was more joy than grouching, viz., the parade for pay. At dinner fish was served for those who preferred it and the remainder of the day has been largely devoted to taking in the sights of Belleville. There is only one Peterborough case in the hospital at present.

The Examiner has received some interesting postcards from a former employee, Mr H. E. Browne, who is quarteramster of No. 1 General Hospital, Canadian Expeditionary Force at Netherharon, Wilts, Eng.

Lieut. C. Ross Cameron of the 30th Battalion is spening the week-end at his home here.

Mr. Wilfrid Stratton has been made provisional lieutenant in the 57th Regiment and leaves on Monday to attend the Provisional school at Belleville to qualify as subaltern. Lieut. D. Shook of the 57th will also attend the school.

Captain Carruthers, Quartermaster of the 39th Battalion, is spending a few days at home. He will return to Belleville on Monday.

There were many khaki-clad soldiers in sight on the street yesterday. A large number of the boys of the 39th are home on leave from Belleville, as well as a number of the 26th Battery from Kingston and the Engineers from Ottawa.

Corporal Frank Roberts of Peterborough who is attached to the Army Medical Corps of the 21st Battalion is here for Easter.

There is a strong suspicion that the Sergeant Cook is a native of Boston, judging by the daily appearance of beans on the breakfast menu.

After reading Ald. Dobbin's description of our barracks, we have decided that the only thing the King Edward has on us is an elevator.

The Scouts of the battalion are already down to business, getting some practical work in trying to locate the sugar in the tea.

Somebody looted the cheese the other night and the battalion went without any. Took he whole pound, too.

They seem to think a lot of the "Lindsay" recruits, down here. They generally have some of them under guard for fear some one will steal them.

The Lindsay Situation.

The Kingston Uhig is evidently not aware of the manner in which Lindsay brought carloads of recruits in. The Whig accounts for the large number recruited in another way, which may have some effect. It says:

"The medical examination of recruits for the 45th Regiment," said a Kingston officer on Wednesday, "is the slackest in this division." There are a large number of "floaters" in this district. Men have tried to enlist in every branch of the service, and were rejected when they were found to be drunkards or to be medically unfit. When it was first learned that the 45th Regiment medical officer was slack in his work there was a rush of recruits who had been rejected at other places. As a result the 45th Regiment was recruiting as many as fifty a day. When these men were re-examined by the medical officer at Belleville a large percentage were rejected. The same thing happened in Kingston. Thirteen men came down from Lindsay to be taken on the strength of the 21st Battalion. Eleven of them were rejected. This was about a week ago. The men arriving here on Monday were of a splendid type, however, as they were properly examined and when examined here only one of the forty-seven were rejected as unfit. If the regulations are carried out the medical officer at Lindsay can be made to pay the transportation of every man who was rejected at Belleville.

Representative Needs Of The North Ward

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—I see by our local press that Messrs. G. H. Duncan, W. S. Todd, D. H. Kerneghan, G. O. Cameron and Dr. Holloway are aspirants for municipal honours in the North Ward. I think it would be but right and proper that each of these gentlemen should issue an address to the electors of this Ward, setting forth exactly the policy they intend to pursue if elected. This Ward, for some reason, has always been badly neglected by our City Fathers, and I think it is but fair that the voters should know exacly where these gentlemen stand before polling day.

George Street, from McDonnel to Smith Street, one of the principal thoroughfares in the city, is a disgrace to Peterborough, and with the exception of the concrete sidewalks, (which are built on a grade about six inches lower than that on which they should have been built), remains practically as it was forty years ago, without grade or drainage. The effluvia, offensive gases and infection-laden dust of this street is quite sufficient to cause an epidemic at any time, and certainly if there is any street in Peterborough that is badly in need of a proper pavement. This is the one.

I am sorry to see that Mr. Wm. Langford, Jr., has decided not to face a contest in this Ward, as I consider him one of the brightest aldermen Peterborough has had for many a year.

Unless all signs fail, Peterborough is on the eve of one of the most stupendous and costly blunders in its municipal history, and it beehoves the electors of Ward No. 4 to put a man on the aldermanic board who has independence, foresight and ability, and not, as has been the invariable rule, because of his affiliations.

Yours truly,

North Ward.

An Amateur Who Wants Some Advice

Needs Some Practical Information on Gardening

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I have been interested in the recent newspaper agitation on city gardening, but unless it is supplemeted by practical (not theoretical) instruction it will fail to accomplish much, or, worse still, turn out a dead loss to the great majority of those who try it, and in most cases, will not pay for the seed.

We read a great deal of what can be done, but practically nothing on how to do it. I have three plots of ground that I need information in regard to preparation, culture, and what to plant. These three plots are typical of many more in this city.

Plot No. 1 is 90 x 150 feet; has been in pasture for ten years or more; soil, sandy loam, with coarse sandy subsoil; water will not lay long on surface, even in hot weather. The grass is a species very hard to kill and little use as pasture.

What kind of crop should I plant there? How prepare the soil? Is it possible to have a reasonable return the first year. I would have to hire plowing done and if fertilizer is necessary would have to purchase it.

Plot No. 2, size 18 x 30 feet, with high board fence on west side; a very gravelly soil. Is it possible to grow anything here without spending twice its value in fertilizer?

Plot No. 3, 28 x 90 feet; part of this is fairly good soil, most of it mixed with a lot of coal ashes. High fence on west side; buildings on east side. What can I grow in shaded portions and what should I plant in ashy portion?

I would appreciate information on these plots from the "man who knows," as I do not care to risk a summer's work on such conditions, and perhaps find, as amateurs often do, that radishes cost 20 cents a dozen or potatoes, $2 per bush, home grown.

Yours truly,

Amateur.

Allies Have Proven That They Can Penetrate It

Operations at Neuve Chapelle and Perthes Go to Show That the Allies Can Break Through Anywhere They Please, Says Eye-Witness—German Ammunition Supply Is Running Short.

LONDON, April 3. — The official British Observer with the French army compares in his latest report, which was issued last night, the results achieved by the French offensive in Champagne with the object with which the operations were undertaken. The object, he says, was to keep a constant pressure on the German first line defences in order to affect the use by the Germans of the railway from Bazancourt to Challefange, and to wear down their reserves of men and ammunition.

"As regards the first object," says the report, "the pressure continued for thirty-one days, with the result that the enemy has lost the fortified area which he had been holding and continually strengthening for five months. His use of the Challerange and Bazancourt line has not been materially affected, for, although at certain points it is within range of the French guns, he can, without difficulty, continue to run the trains required for the maintenance of the corps on that part of the front, and the junction at Challerange is secure. The using up of his reserves has been achieved in a very marked manner. At the beginning of the operation there were some eighteen regiments in that part of the line. At its conclusion thirty-three have been identified. Fifteen that had been called up to withstand the French offensive were drawn from many parts of the German lines, which indicates that the enemy has no central reserves that he can call up in case of an emergency.

"As regards ammunition, the German artillery has practiced economy, which is unusual with him. On many days they made no effort to keep down the fire of the French guns, although this meant heavier losses for their infantry in the trenches. This showed clearly that their supply of ammunition was not all that they could have wished, and an extra expenditure may well have made itself felt in the amount available on all parts of the German front.

"Two valuable lessons, therefore, have been learned from these operations. The first is that the German front can be pierced. There were moments both in Champagne and Neuve Chapelle when the way was open, when nothing more formidable than the weak resistance of sorely tried troops faced the attackers, and it does not follow because the hole was closed before advantage could be taken of it that this will be the case every time.

"The second lesson learned is that a serious attack on one point has an effect on the enemy's plans and fighting power at every other point. The British attack at Neuve Chapelle ruined the enemy's chances of success at St. Eloi. The French attacks at Perthes helped the British attack at Neuve Chapelle. Both of these assisted the Russians to withstand the German offensive in the eastren theatre.

Speaking of inspection by Gen. Joffre in March of several divisions which had been through the whole of the fighting, the Observer says that it was the biggest inspection he has held, and he was accompanied by many foreign observers. "We must not forget that these regiments have had to be brought up to strength, sometimes almost reorganised, after each of their attacks, of which they carried out several during the last thirty days. What we really are looking at is the French system of reinforcements and the system which keeps army corps not only up to their strength, but up to their full standard of fighting efficiency. It is one which plainly is answering well."

THESE OFFICERS LIVED HIGH

While Common Soldiers in Permysl Ate Cats and Dogs.

LONDON, April 3.—The Times this morning prints the following:

A scandalous story of the siege and surrender of Permysl is told by our special correspondent with the Russian armies, Stanley Washburn, who by the courtesy of the Russian high command is the first foreigner to visit the great Galician fortress since its fall. The garrison, which numbered three times more men than were needed for the defence of the forts, was doomed to starvation from the moment of investment. To this initial act of incompetence on the part of the Austrian commander is added the outrage of allowing his officers to swagger about as if they were in Vienna, and to parade their gluttony before the population, which was glad to subsist on cats and dogs, and in the face of the ravenous soldiery, which, when the fortress was surrendered, devoured the raw carcases of the officers' chargers.

While the garrison became thin and half-starved the mode of life of the officers in town remained unchanged. The Cafe Sieber was constantly well filled with dilettante officers who gossipped, played cards and billiards, and led the life to which they were accustomed in Vienna. Apparently very few among them shared any of the hardship of their men or made any efforts to relieve their condition.

In the Hotel Royal, until the last, the officers had their three meals a day, with fresh meat, cigars, cigarettes, wines and every luxury; while, as a witness informed me, their own orderlies and servants begged for a slice of bread.

There can be no question that the ultimate surrender was due to the fact that the garrison was on the verge of starvation, while the officers diet was merely threatened with curtailment.

Witnesses state that private soldiers were seen actually to fall in the streets from lack of nourishment.

LAXATIVE FOR OLD PEOPLE—"CASCARETS"

Salts, Calomel, Pills Act on Bowels Like Pepper Acts in Nostrils

Get a 10-cent box now.

Most old people must give to the bowels some regular help, else they suffer from constipation. The condition is perfectly natural. It is just as natural as it is for old people to walk slowly. For age is never so active as youth. The muscles are less elastic. And the bowels are muscles.

So all old people need Cacarets. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect this gentle aid to weak bowels. The bowels must be kept active. This is important at all ages, but never so much as at fifty.

Age is not a time for harsh physics. Youth may occasionally whip the bowels into activity. But a lash can't be used every day. What the bowels of the old need is a gentle and natural tonic. One that can be constantly used without harm. The only such tonic is Cascarets, and they cost only 10 cents per box at any drug store. They work while you sleep.

PENSIONS FOR TEACHERS

Ontario Government Take Steps Towards Creating a Fund.

TORONTO, April 3.—The Ontario Government is prepared to go half way in providing a superannuation fund for school teachers in the province. One important clause in the draft bill submitted by Hon. Dr. Pyne in the closing hour of the session provides for a Government contribution of two per cent. of the teacher's annual salary, a similar amount to that which the teacher himself will pay. The opinions of trustees and teachers will be sought and action taken next session.

Local school boards will be obliged to shoulder considerable responsibility. In addition to being required to pay one per cent. of the teacher's salary as their contribution they will collect the teacher's contribution monthly, and will be responsible for it.

If the bill goes into effect it will be made compulsory and every teacher, whether counting on spending his life in the profession or not, must yield up his salary percentage. The Minister stated that it would be necessary for all local pension funds to be swallowed in this greater one, and that to become workable, compulsory contribution would be imperative.

Large Easter Market To-day

Eggs, Butter and Potatoes Sold at a Moderate Level—Syrup Was Fairly Plentiful.

A LIST OF PRICES

A big Easter market this morning! Supplies were quite plentiful and most prices favourable. Butter at 34 cents, eggs at 18 and 19 cents, potatoes 50 cents, chickens 35 cents, these were the average prices at eleven o'clock.

A breezy spring wind whirled the dust on the square to the discomfort of the traders. If the first dry spell would only show a little patience it could synchronize with the first watering carts. Arriving to-day it is at least a couple of weeks ahead of the schedule and even though the dust does blow into the syrup and on to the meat, it can't be helped.

Syrup by the way, was fairly plentiful at 40 and 50 cents a quart. There may be some in next week, but the season is practically over.

Potatoes were sold at 50 and 60 cents, but the presence of the former price is an indication of the tendency to weakness.

Pork, beef and vegetables showed no change in prices. It is not known whether expectorating on the floor of the upstairs market as a general practice or not, but there are some men who do this and the Sanitary Inspector or police, should have some authority to summarily apprehend them. There are some persons so utterly devoid of imagination that in one sense they are not responsible for this sort of thing, especially in view of the laissey-faire attitude on the part of the general public. The market has always been regularly cleaned, and it may be that the persons referred to are exceptions. The fact remains that there is no place in the market for these individuals, no matter how few they may be. There was a lot of opposition to the common tasting for butter, but the present custom is now established and appreciated.

Butter opened at 38c, dropped to 36 and sold at 34 cents. There was a big demand for eggs at from 18 to 20 cents. Poultry was not plentiful.

A list of prices follows:

Eggs—18 and 19 cents.
Butter 34 and 36 cents.
Potatoes—50 to 60 cents.
Maple syrup—40 to 50c a quart.
Pork—12 and 13 cents.
Onions, per peck—30c.
Cabbage, each—5 and 10 cents.
Turnips—10 cents.
Parsnips, peck—15 cents.
White beans, quart—10 cents.
Beets, peck—10 cents.
Carrots, peck—10 and 15c.
Veal—12 and 14c.
Pigs, per pair—$7.00.
Hay, ton—$24.00.

A Brilliant Peterboro Pianist

Music lovers and all interested in the development of musical talent on the artistic side will be delighted to know that Miss Gladys Seward, a Peterborough girl, will give a piano recital in Conservatory Hall on Friday evening, April 9th.

This is interesting in both a musical, and locally patriotic, sense. Gladys Seward was born in Peterborough and had developed to a high degree the splendid musical spirit inherited from her father, the late Lewis Seward, one of the finest musical spirits in the history of the town, before she went to Germany to pursue her studies. These have been interrupted by the war and Miss Seward is home till the war clouds roll away. She has been studying in Germany with Mr. Harry Field, one of the most successful pedagogues of the time.

Miss Seward has developed a wonderful virtuosity which has won warm praise from the exacting critics of a great musical centre like Dresden. A Peterborough lady who visited Germany last summer and heard Gladys Seward, though she is in one sense a rival musician and highly competent to judge, declares that "Gladys Seward is a wonder," as other good judges have frequently predicted she would become.

An opportunity is given the public to hear her in recital, next Friday night, when they will hear something that will not only give enjoyment and make them proud of Peterborough musical talent, but at the same time, help and encourage a young artist whose career has for the moment been interrupted by the war.

LAID AT REST

The funeral of the late William Fair, who passed away on the morning of March 30, at the residence of his son, Mr. Robert Fair, 505 Dickson Street, city, was held on Thursday, April 1. The remains were transferred to Millbrook on Thursday morning, per the 8.10 G.T.R. train, and placed in St. Thomas' Church, where service was conducted at 2 p.m., by Rev. Canon Allan, Rector of the Parish, assisted by Rev. Mr. Westwood, also of Millbrook, who was a warm friend of the late Mr. Fair. Rev. Canon Davidson of St. John's Church, city, also assisted.

There was a large and representative number of people in attendance, among whom were Ald. G. W. Green, Messrs. J. H. Ferguson and R. M. Waddell of Peterborough, Col. McLean, Messrs. Geo. N. Patterson, John Walker and A. G. Waddell of Port Hope and Wm. F. Allen, a nephew, of Bowmanville.

The mourners were Mr. Robert Fair, a son, and two grandsons, Walker and Allen Fair.

The floral tributes which were many and beautiful, testified to the esteem in which the deceased was held in the communiy. Among the many floral tributes were two from the employees of Messrs. Robert Fair and Company, Peterborough.

After the service at St. Thomas' Church, the funeral cortege proceeded to St. Paul's Church Cemetery, Cavan, where interment took place in the family plot.

Six nephews of the deceased, Messrs. James McCamus, James Fair, Thomas Wood, W. B. Campbell, Robert McCamus and George Fair, were the pall-bearers. As a tribute of respect to an old friend the merchants of Millbrook dropped the blinds of their stores during the passing of the funeral cortege.

MEAT FOR SALE HAD FILTHY COVERING

E. G. Mullen Was Fined $10 For Not Living Up to By-law

For not having proper covering for meat which he was offering for sale about the city, E. G. Mullen, Smith township, was fined $10.00 in police court this morning by Magistrate Dumble.

The information was laid by Sanitary Inspector Spence. He saw the waggon load of meat on George Street on March 31, in front of a butcher shop as the defendant was in the act of unloading it. The covering, which was of light texture, was covered with filth, as was also the canvas upon which the meat was lying. He called the attention of P. C. Lawrence, who happened to be passing and had him as a witness for the prosecution this morning.

Mr. G. N. Gordon conducted the case in behalf of the city. Mr. Mullen did not have a lawyer.

Mr. Mullen went into the witness box in his own defence. He said he came to town on the day in question with two carcasses of beef and three calves. He made one stop to sell a calf and then came south to another shop. He had delivered meat only once previous to this since the top cover was washed. He could not tell how long it was since the tarpaulin was washed.

Mr. Gordon in summing up the case said it was one in which the whole city was interested, namely, in the danger of contamination from dirty clothes which were being used to cover the meat. He asked for a conviction, claiming that the evidence was sufficient to show that the by-law was not being lived up to.

His Worship said the microbe business was much talked about lately. They were in the air and so fine they could not be seen. He had often shuddered at the dirty old stained things that looked like horse blankets which he had seen about the meat market. There was nothing to prevent the coverings being washed every day.

When asked if he wished to pay the fine at once, Mr. Mullen thought he would sooner wait and get some one to defend him properly. He believed he would appeal the case. He has ten days in which to pay the fine or decide to appeal.

Fight Cost $5.75.

For fighting on the street Thomas Donaghue was fined $2.00 and costs, amounting in all to $5.75. Donaghue was let out on Wednesday evening upon his promise to appear in Court on the following morning. He failed to put in an appearance and gave as a reason this morning that he was sick

REMOVAL NOTICE.

For some time the local representatives of the London Life have been labouring under the disadvantage of inadequate office accommodation, owing to rapid increase of business and the necessity of making additions to the staff. New quarters were found at 140 Simcoe Street, in the store lately occupied by G. A. Gillespie, just west of W. H. Hamilton's grocery, and these have been thoroughly overhauled and refitted, making a fine three compartment suite of offices, completely furnished with modern office equipment.

The staff has just vacated the old office over 339 1-2 George Street, and are about settled in the new quarters, where, with an increased staff, they will be able to handle their business with much greater comfort, both to themselves and their policy holders.

Act Governing Movie Shows

Children Being Admitted Who Are Not Properly Accompanied

There are liable to be some prosecutions amongst the moving-picture theatre proprietors in the city if they do not pay more attention to the keeping of the by-law in connection with admitting children under the age of 15 years to their shows. There has been an amendment to Section 10 of the Cinematograph Act, added in 1914, which it would be well for moving picture men to read over. The act, previous to 1914, read that children under the age of 15 years, accompanied by an adult, would be admitted. The amend ment is as follows:

"Unless accompanied by its parents, guardian, or by an adult member of the household to which it belongs, no child under the age of 15 years shall be permitted to attend any theatre or any exhibition by cinematograph, moving picture machine, or other similar apparatus, at which theatre or exhibition an admission fee is charged."

Several instances of the law having been broken here under this amendment have been brought to the attention of the Police Department.

The parents of children can assist the picture houses by paying more attention to where their children are spending their time. A favourite stunt of some of the children is to wait outside a picture show until someone comes along, often an entire stranger, who will buy them a ticket and take them in. Under the old act this was not breaking the law, as it merely required that they be accompanied by an adult. Such is not the case now, however, and Chief Thompson announces that if there are any more complaints against moving picture proprietors prosecutions will follow.

"THE CRUCIFIXION" AT ST. JOHN'S

Last night at St. John's, the united choirs of St. John's and All Saints' sang Stainer's Crucifixion, a composition in spirit and musical texture, eminently adapted to the solemn character of the anniversary. There was a large congregation, representing most of the churches, and the work of the choir was excellent throughout, with practical appreciation of the musical as well as devotional spirit the composition demanded. At intervals hymns adapted to the composition were sung by choir and congregation. The concluding hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," in its ringing and robust melody forming a triumphant and seemly climax to the music of the evening.

CROWN ATTORNEY HAS EVIDENCE HE LOST TREES AT CHEMONG

Crown Attorney Hatton has investigated the reports from Chemong Park regarding the cutting down of some forty trees on lots belonging to Mr. Alex. Elliott, R. J. Soden, J. A. Jobe and others.

Certain evidence of an incriminating nature has been obtained, but it is understood that the lot owners are not eager to prosecute and are trying to arrange a settlement. The Crown Attorney stated to-day that he is contemplating proceeding with the matter himself, and an action may be instituted within the next few days.

CATCHY SONGS AND CHORUSES

"The Drum Major" will be Presented Monday and Tuesday Evenings.

The popular operetta, "The Drum Major," which is to be presented to the theatre-goers and music-loving public on Easter Monday and Tuesday, will be a delightful treat. This charming musical comedy is full of catchy solos and choruses which will linger on the memory, and every one will be whistling the airs on the streets in the weeks to come. Some of the principal numbers are as follows: "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," the Sound of Soldiers' Feet," "Citizens Your Country Calls," "Frenchmen Up and on to Glory," "Cuddle Down," "One Little Bird Built a Cosy Nest. The gay and rollicksome "Danse Joyeuse" is a number to be remembered, and the whole audience will be wishing that they too were dancing. The opera is adapted from the French and depicts the stirring times in the recruiting days of the first empire, under Napoleon, the costumes of that day making a charming stage setting.

The principals are "Clarice," Miss Lettie Drope, a winsome actress of great personality. This is her first appearance in Peterborough. "Babette," Mrs. A. A. Petrin, whose sweet and sympathetic contralto voice will be heard at its best in her solos. "Jean," Mr. Ed. Hanrahan, "Sergeant Leroux," Mr. Harold Lee, gentlemen who are well known by their splendid work done in the past.

WORKINGMEN ARE NOT INDIFFERENT IN THE CONFLICT

somber terms and oftimes admitting serious French mistakes, confirms the report that the German shells to-day are inferior to those used at the commencement of the war.

Among the Neutrals.

Dr. Dillon, the famous correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, who from Rome cautiously reports the ups and downs of the war fever in Italy, day by day, is convinced that Italy's intervention becomes more probable daily. However, it is yet to be seen how far bold Venizelos, the ex-Premier of Greece, will be able to force the hands of his successors. Greece's action, as well as that of Roumania, depends on Bulgaria, where, according to recent reports, everything points to a growth of friendly feeling for the Allies. The great ovation tendered to General Paget, the head of the English mission to Bulgaria, is evidence of this. I regard it as impossible that Germany can give enough of Austria to satisfy Italian aspirations, or that Italy can afford to let pass the opportunity of satisfying her ambitions and increasing Italian territory and prestige. The main factor, in my mind, that is keeping Italy back, is the deep snow along the Austro-Italian frontier. On the other hand the anxiety of every neutral in Europe to see Germany get a knockdown blow will convince them that Germany is doomed and that on the back of a conclusively beaten Teutonic nation these same neutral powers are burning to make a tiger-like leap. Germany's latest performances on the sea, added to the atrocities in Belgium, have made the European states, especially the smaller ones, feel that her destruction is their only salvation.

War Fever in Ireland.

No country has shown a greater kindling of the war fever than has Ireland during the last few weeks. Every difficulty that Redmond encountered at the beginning of his campaign, which was of a greater character and magnitude than people outside of Ireland supposed, has finally disappeared. The heroism of Michael O'Leary and other Irish soldiers inflamed the martial spirit, but the German atrocities here as well as elsewhere have been the most potent factor in bringing about the solidarity of Ireland. The recruiting campaign in the south of Ireland is proceeding along popular lines, both Unionist and Nationalist speaking from the same platform. A striking event in North Ireland was a combination meeting of Unionists and Nationalists which occurred in the typically Unionist county of Armagh. Here, for the first time in modern history, Catholic and Protestant stood marched side by side, and on the same platform there appeared Catholic priests, Protestant rectors, Presbyterian ministers and a Belgian priest, while the whole town turned out to cheer the Irish Fusiliers who led the recruiting procession. In Waterford which is represented by Redmond more than 300 enlisted in two days in addition to the many who have already gone. Finally at a great meeting in Claremore, County Mayo, which was addressed by both Dillon and Devlin, resolutions were adopted declaring for adhesion to Redmond's policy. Dillon again declared that Ireland is bound by every consideration of honour as well as self-interest to stand with England in the hour of her desperate danger. Devlin said that not only national honour but policy dictates an attitude of friendship, co-operation and unity with the British. Both men in alluding to the fact that the meeting was held close to the grave of Davitt declared that that patriot's dream of the reconciliation of the British and Irish is about to be realised.

A Rabbit Proves Dandruff The True Cause of Hair Loss

One of the earliest experiments following the discovery of the contagious nature of dandruff was by Doctor Sabourand of the Pasteur Institute, Paris. This doctor inoculated a rabbit with human dandruff germs and the rabbit in time was completely denuded of its fur.

But what to us is of more direct interest—this experiment proved that dandruff kills the life and beauty of the hair and causes it to fall out.

Union Service On Good Friday

Held by Protestant Congregations in George Street Methodist Church

The Protestant congregations of the city united in one service at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon (Good Friday). George Street Methodist church was crowded almost to capacity by members of all the Protestant congregations.

The illness of Rev. Canon Davidson and Rev. R. Pogue prevented them being present, but almost all the other ministers of the city took part in the service.

Rev. Leonard Phelps and Rev. J. R. Webb delivered brief addresses, suitable to the day.

Miss Dorothy Allen sang a solo, while the joint choirs of George Street Methodist and St. Paul's Presbyterian rendered two numbers.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I might say that the "Anxious Parent" who was afraid to sign his name to the article that appeared in the Review must be of an evil mind, as he wrote his letter before the rink was open. He speaks of other parties being interested in the rink. I would like to inform the party that there is no one else but F. Grenish and he alone is responsible for the announcement respecting the opening of the roller rink. "Anxious Parent" would also like to know the names of the physicians who endorse roller skating as a healthful pastime. I do not propose to use the Review as an advertisement, but if "Anxious Parent" will come to me in person I will furnish him or her with all the information they require, and besides, "Anxious Parent" will only have to look at the crowd to know what I mean by exclusive patronage.

Yours truly,
Jack McNish, Manager.

Dr. Kelly is Going to Front

Service of Local Physcians Have Been Accepted

Some time ago a number of Peterborough physicians offered themselves for service at the front. Dr. J. B. Kelly has received word that his services have been accepted, and he is to report to the Assistant Director of Medical Services at Halifax. Dr. Kelly does not know yet what corps he will be attached to.

The Easter Preacher At St. John's To-morrow

The Rev. Prof. Cosgrave, M. A., of Trinity College, Toronto, will be the special preacher in St. John's Church to-morrow. Prof. Cosgrave was born in Ireland and is a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin. He is a scientific and scholarly man and also earnest and devotional. His influence has been widely felt at Trinty College. He was pursuing a course of study in Germany during last summer and had a narrow and difficult escape when the war broke out. He will preach in St. John's Church at both 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.

Social Evening at Rev. Mr. Connors' Home

On Thursday evening last about forty members of the City Mission assembled at the home of their pastor, Rev. F. A. Connors, 504 Bolivar Street, for a social evening. The time was pleasantly spent in a musical programme of vocal and instrumental selections, after which refreshments were served. An offering in aid of the Mission was suggested, and in a few minutes the sum of fifteen dollars was placed on the table.

Learned of Son's Death on Way to Visit Brother

It was learned yesterday that Rev. John Kenner, of London, Ont., while travelling to Peterborough to visit his brother, Rev. Wm. Kenner, received a telegram at Fraserville, conveying the intelligence of the sudden death of his son. Rev. Wm. Kenner has been ill for some time at his home in this city. The incident was a particularly sad one. Rev. John Kenner returned immediately to his home without reaching Peterborough.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

WILLARD HAS ENDURANCE AND SIZE, JOHNSON IS SKILLFUL

That Youth and Stamina of White Challenger May Overcome Cleverness of the World's Negro Champion is One of the Possibilities of the Big Struggle for the Heavyweight Title at Havana the Day After Easter.

A summary of Johnson and Willard in Monday's mill, at Havana, seems to show that Willard has youth, size, reach and endurance in his favour, with Johnson possessing the skill and aggressiveness. In forty-five rounds, such as is the limit set for this bout, Willard, if he can live through the punishment Johnson will give him, should be able to wear down the champion. It sems impossible that Johnson will be able to carry the weight of Willard around the ring for twony-five rounds let alone forty-five. Therefore it now seems that the bout will be determined by just how much of Johnson's energy can be sapped and how much punishment Willard can take.

Willard has never been knocked out. He never has been hurt in the ring. He has fought every prominent white heavyweight who has performed in the last three years. He has decisions over every white heavyweight excepting "Gunboat" Smith, and his splendid constitution with his good ring record undoubtedly makes of him the most formidable opponent that has been matched against Johnson in all the negro's career.

Johnson is Overshadowed.

In physical size Willard overshadows Johnson in every particular. He is five inches taller; he weighs, in condition, twenty pounds more; he measures forty-four and a half inches around the chest to Johnson's forty-two, and his legs are larger, as they should be to carry such an amount of weight. Decidedly in size Johnson, for the first time in his career, is handicapped, and how big a handicap this will prove may decide the issue of the fight.

As a boxer Willard cannot hope to compete with his more experienced opponent. If it were a question of endurance and strength then the bout might just as well be put off, for in this department Johnson is outclassed; but skill and aggressiveness play a big part in the ultimate finish of every struggle, and here Johnson has the edge.

Willard in all his bouts heretofore has looked aggressiveness beyond anything else. He lost a twenty-round decision to "Gunboat" Smith in San Francisco for no other reason tha that he refused to take a chance with his smaller opponent. True, Willard has learned of the knock-out punch carried by Smith, and maybe because of this he was not over anxious to leave himself open, but Johnson can sting harder and more often than Smith ever will be able to.

Willard, from the standpoint of the give and take game, seems poorly matched. Johnson is a past master at giving punishment. He has an uncanny judgment of distance, and can send one of his ripping punches into a mark that apparently is well covered and protected by the other fellow. His upper cuts are delivered without drawing the arm back, and they land solidly and with all the weight of his shoulder behind them. Jeffries was felled by a well-delivered upper-cut, and Jeffries was noted for the punishment he could assimilate without dropping.

Endurance Big Factor. Willard is Stronger.

In strength Willard must be conceded the advantage. His life up to the present has been simple, close to nature and all that sort of health-giving, muscle developing environment. Willard, too, is massive, a veritable giant, with a super-structure that means only power. With every ounce of superfluous flesh worked off his gigantic frame. Willard tips the beam at 235 pounds. This means 235 pounds of fighting bone and muscle, 235 pounds of endurance, stamina, and living strength. And along with this Willard is at the top of his career, only twenty-eight years old and in possession of every faculty with which nature endowed him.

Johnson, just after defeating 'Jim' Jeffries in that memorable bout at eno, Nev., was examined by several prominent physical directors and many physicians, and they were unanimous i their statement that he was a perfect man, perfect in physique, in proportionate strength, perfect in all his organs, a man built along powerful lines. That was in 1910, when ohnson was thirty-three years old. Since then he has taken on five years of worry, trouble and fast living, and while the magnificent build is still there itis only in the outer shell that he can appear the same. Age alone must have drawn upon his energy, if his other frivolities and care have not.

Jack Johnson to Box McEvey To-day and Backers Are Worried

HAVANA, April 2—Jack Johnson caused the promoters of the big bout here to call a hurried meeting this afternoon, when it was learned that the big negro had announced a "practice" bout with Sam McVey at the Stadium on Saturday afternoon. Jack Curley, Harry Frasee and others connected with the fight were in a state of terror, fearing that Johnson might be injured in some manner during the four rounds scheduled. Curley insisted that 48 hours before the fight was too close to his star show to take any chances of Johnson injuring his hands. Johnson was called before them, but he stubbornly refused to back down in the matter.

Besides the money that the bout will draw, Johnson said that he was anxious to see how he performed in fast company. Some of the rail-birds who claim to know that McVey and Johnson have been boxing in the wee hours of the morning say that there is not one chance in a thousand of Johnson getting hurt. It is simply a question of money, they say. Johnson has been gathering it in at every turn. Many of his training bouts, which to the old-timers looked slow and spiritless, were in reality only catch-penny affairs, arranged by Johnson to gather in training expenses. As he boxes daily before great crowds, this little set-to has been quite a financial success.

The management still harps on the great advance sale. They sent out word to the press today that a great force of clerks had worked far into the night in allotting and distributing tickets.

It leaked out to-day that the actual fighting space of the ring will be 19 feet. This is decidedly in Johnson's favour. He never moves about much in a fight, and this small ring will serve to keep Willard right under the fire of his big guns.

Heavy rains fell last night, and this has given the promoters something else to worry over. As matters now stand the people who occupy seats in the grand stand of the race track will be fortunate ones should there be a downpour. The people sitting in the choice ringside seats will get a drenching should it rain. To guard against the ring becoming soaked the managers have erected four high poles, which will support a great canvas roof that will be spread from post to post in case of rain. This will not protect the ringside spectators nor members of the press.

As in the case of Jeffries, Promoter Frasee has planned a world tour for Willard before the fight has been fought. Frasee had Jeffries booked all over the world, and Johnson stepped in and spoiled things.

U. S. Artillerymen Killed.

COLON, April 3.—Corpl. Langdon, of the United State. Coast Artillery, was shot and killed and three other American soldiers were injured, one of them seriously in a riot here yesterday. The soldiers were engaged in patrol duty in the tenderloin district. The shooting, which resulted in a general fight was the outgrowth of an argument between a soldier, who is alleged to have been drinking and a Panama policeman.

The "Holy City" To Be Repeated

COBOURG, April 3—John Freeman of Campbellford, who has been drilling with the 45th Durham Regiment at Port Hope, has been committed for trial on a charge of bigamy.

Roller Skating Always Popular

Roller skating seems to be more popular than ever this season. The rink was crowded on Good Friday. This place is run in the right manner. Everything is first class, and if anything new comes out in the skating line, which tends to make an improvement, it is quickly adopted. The Brock Street Rink is under new management and will be known as a classic rink. The many new features here makes skating different than it used to be. The people patronizing the Rink are quite surprised at the difference here. You find a clean floor, not slippery; the ventilation is good; the band renders excellent music, and no public amusement in Canada is conducted in any better maner than this rink. The manager, J. McNish, through this paper, extends a hearty welcome to the mothers and fathers to come at any time to the rink and see for themselves how this rink is being conducted—then judge for themselves if roller skating is not a high-class entertainment and healthy exercise. Rink open every afternoon and evening; exclusive patronage. — J. McNish, Manager.

GOING TO FRANCE WITH MEDICAL CORPS

Mr. J. R. Patterson, third year medical student at Queen's University, is visiting at his home 675 Water street for a few days before leaving for France. He is going with No. 5 Medical Corps, which includes 100 Queen's men and 35 nurses. Their date of departure is not known, but it is expected that they will leave soon for work at a medical base with the Canadians in France.

come from a gun that has become defective owing to constant use. Many of the shells never explode and others explode some time after they strike the ground, providing the mud does not interfere with the business end of the shell.

Trophies of the War.

Mr. Housdry brought home some trophies in the form of a German ammunition basket and two 75 millimetre shells. He says that the German snipers are bad, which is to be expected, considering they have been doing nothing else for about eight months. Sometimes a shell from a big gun will flop in the mud and if it doesn't explode a soldier will run out with the object of bringing it in. If the timing has not become defective the shell is liable to explode in the soldier's hand with dire results. British destroyers, accompanied the steamer on which Mr. Housdry sailed to New York for a time after the vessel left Havre. No submarines or hostile craft of any kind was sighted throughout the entire trip.

Scheme of Kaiser Frustrated.

OTTAWA, April 3. — The postal authorities here have held up a number of iron finger rings addressed to German sympathizers in Canada, and at the same time have unearthed a peculiar scheme to assist the "fatherland." The plan is being carried out by certain German newspapers in the United States. People are asked to send in their gold rings, which are said to be forwarded to Germany, ostensibly to assist the Red Cross fund, but it is believed to help swell the Kaiser's gold reserves. In return for the gold ring the donor is sent an iron band, to be worn as a mark of devotion to his country. The rings are inscribed in German: "To the Old Fatherland, my faith to prove, I give in time of stress gold for this iron."

The scheme is understood to have been worked extensively in the United States.

WORST GROUND IN EUROPE.

Strategists Never Dreamed of Carpathians as Battlefield.

LONDON, March 31. —The battle of the Carpathians continues to be regarded as the most important development of the war by the allied countries and the Teutons. Both sides are daily augmenting their forces and the battle line has been prolonged until it now stretches over 200 miles of home of the roughest country in Europe and along this line sections are being fought daily, where neither General Staff nor military strategists ever dreamed a battle would be fought.

CAPTURE IS IMPORTANT.

Botha's Occupation of Aus Gives Him Big Advantage.

LONDON, April 3.—The capture of Aus, an important trading station in German Southwest Africa, is likely to have a strong bearing on the campaign says a Reuter's despatch from Cape Town. The place is situated at the end of a ninety-mile stretch of desert from Luderitz Bay and stands at the gateway of a fertile region where the Union forces will be able to operate with greater freedom, less hampered by the lack of water and pasturage.

Aus is the principle resting place on the great caravan route from north to south. It was strongly held by the Germans who were prepared to offer stubborn resistance but were obliged to evacuate, the despatch says, when union forces threatened their flanks and line of retreat to Kestmannshoop.

Relief For Canadian Teachers.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., April 2.—Relief for alien teachers whose situation was the subject of telegraphic correspondence Wednesday between Governor Johnson and Secretary of State Bryan is supplied in a bill which passed the Senate without a dissenting vote Thursday.

Under its terms no alien teacher could be removed from office if declaration of intention to become a citizen was made. The bill specifically exempts the University of California from restrictions against alien teachers.

It was said many Canadian teachers will be affected.

The action taken by the Senate of California is a sequel to a protest made recently in the Dominion Parliament by William Gray, member for London, Ont.

Despondency Causes Suicide.

MONTREAL, April 3. — Martin Baker, secretary-treasurer of the Township of Dunham, Missisquoi County, and chairman of the local school commission, died Thursday morning from a gunshot wound in his head, "self-inflicted while temporarily insane," according to the verdict at the inquest. Despondency over the death of his father was given as the cause.

Anti-War Riots In Vienna.

ROME, April 2.—Advices received here from the Austrian frontier describe the internal situation in the dual monarchy as increasingly grave. Opposition to a continuance of the war is said to be growing stronger among the classes which are suffering most from the scarcity of food. Violent anti-war demonstrations are reported to have occurred in several cities especially Vienna, where a crowd attempted to stone the windows of the War Office, but was charged by the police and troops.

HUMPAGE—HOPKINS.

A pretty wedding was solemnized on Thursday at 3.15 p.m., between Mr. Edward Humpage of Peterborough, formerly of Wednesbury, Staffs, England, and Miss Ada Isabel Hopkins, of North Monaghan. Miss Hopkins was attended by Miss Lillian Conquest as bridesmaid, and was given away by her brother, Mr. Wm. Hopkins. Mr. Humpage was attended by Mr. John Smith as best man.

The Rev. Jas. Mackenzie was the officiating minister.

Mr. George Kenyon played appropriate wedding music.

After the ceremony Mr. an Mrs. Humpage left for Toronto, and upon their return will reside at 518 Wolfe Street.

MANLEY—DRUMMOND.

A pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. John A. Drummond, Otonabee, on Wednesday, March 17th, when Miss Jean Thomson was united in marriage to Mr. John E. Manley, of Otonabee. The bride, who was given away by her father, entered to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by the bride's sister, Miss Lottie Drummond.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. T. W. Goodwill of Keene.

The bride looked pretty in a gown of blue silk, trimmed with shadow lace, and carried a beautiful bouquet of white carnations and hyacinths.

The groom's gift to the bride was a sunburst of pearls and to the pianist a gold brooch set with pearls.

After the ceremony the guests retired to the dining room, where refreshments were served. Mr. and Mrs. John E. Manley left later for their home in Otonabee

OBITUARY

MR. JOHN GREER.

The death of Mr. John Greer, 767 George street, removes a well-known resident.. The late John Greer, who was seventy-two years of age, was born in Cavan Township, and farmed there until about twenty-five years ago, when he moved to Peterborough. He is survived by two sisters, Miss Maria Greer, who is dangerously ill, and Mrs. Graham, of Smith Township. The funeral will take place on Monday at 10 a.m. from 767 George street, to Centreville Presbyterian cemetery. The service will be at 9:30 a.m. with Rev. Jas. Rollins officiating.

MR. JOHN PILLAR.

An old and most highly respected resident of Peterborough has passed away in the person of Mr. John Pillar, 29 Argyle Street. The deceased was born in Armanagh, Ireland, on Jan. 6, 1833, and had lived in Peterborough for the last forty years. Mr. Pillar was associated with the Engineers who laid out Jackson and Nicholls Parks and afterwards continued as Superintendent. He was a Liberal in politics. He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Frank Wise and Miss Rebecca Pillar of Peterborough, and two sons, James of Saginaw, Mich., and Sam of Brown City, Mich. The funeral, which will be private, will take place on Tuesday at 2.30, to Little Lake Cemetery.

What are we Doing to Improve the Physique Of Growing Children?

The great republic south of us is getting busy along this line. They have established a children's bureau at Washington. In nearly all their cities they have medical inspection in schools, district nurses and depots for babies, where pure milk is supplied to them and free medical attention given.

Another important move they are making, is the establishment of model playgrounds. These have been so successful, and have done so much good, that already many Canadian cities are following their example. But what are we doing in Peterborough for the rising generation?

Our medical inspection consists of one solitary nurse; our babies, as far as municipal attention goes, are absolutely neglected; our children play upon the street.

An effort, however, is now being made by the Local Council of Women to have a model playground in our city, under the supervision of a capable man and woman, where boys and girls can play merrily and happily all through the summer months, and mothers can sit contentedly at home, knowing their children are in good hands. The use of a school ground has already been promised, and if all goes well, the Women's Council hope to have the playground in full swing during the months of July and August.

STUNG AGAIN.

Carriage dealers have been stung by buying their carriages out of some foreign country. Now they have to pay 35 per cent. duty, 7 1-2 per cent. war tax, but we were lucky to secure Canada-made carriages, with no duty or war tax on them, which enables us to sell carriages at such a price that has never been offered in the city. BEAUTIFUL BUILDING LOTS.

Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald is offering for sale some beautiful building lots on Benson, Geraldine and O'Carrull Avenues. This property lies within two minutes' walk of the Street Railway and ten minutes' walk of the heart of the City. The City water, gas, light and sewer services are installed, the property being already completely surrounded by beautiful homes. The site is an ideal one, with a gentle south-easterly slope, and being considerably elevated above the city, and not in the immediate vicinity of any manufacturing industries. The air is always pure, healthy and invigorating. Nearly all the lots are already beautifully wooded with foreign and domestic shade trees. Two handsome residences are already under construction on this property and several more will be erected this season and for anyone contemplating the erection of a home there are certainly no lots in the city that offer equal advantages. Copies of registered plan No. 149, which covers this property, may be seen, and all other information may be had at the offices of Mr. R. J. Kidd, J. T. O'Connell & Co., C. J. Carroll & Co.; also at the office of the owner, Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald, Ontario Land Surveyor, 428 George Street. 'Phone 886. d.s.t-1-73

BUCKHORN BOY IN THE TRENCHES

Private Montgomery Writes of Experiences at the Front

Mr. Y. Montgomery of Buckhorn, has received an interesting letter from his brother, Private Osborne Montgomery, No. 1 Company, 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Contingent. Private Montgomery says:

Just a few lines to let you know I am well and getting along fine. We have been having our turn in the trenches, but are out for a rest now. I like the the trenches fine, only it is not very comfortable when the bullets are flying around your head. However it is not as bad as you might think it would be. There is a steady roar from the big guns all day. We got a German shell that did not burst and it weighed 80 pounds. If one of them hit you, you would have a merry ride. The weather is getting better and not quite so much mud. Most of the time I have a good full stomach, so I have no kick coming. I only wish you could see some of the outfits and the people around here. Some of them have wagons with three wheels and the horse hitched about four feet from it. Most of the people have wooden boots on and are the dirtiest people I ever saw. If I live to see home again I will be able to tell you a lot of things that will make you laugh.

BANDAGES NEEDED

Lieut. Wilkins Says His Wound Had To be Dressed With an Old Sock

Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—In a letter written by Private Wilkins, of Norwood, to his mother, he says that they have all the knitted things they require, except perhaps socks, but what they do want is hospital supplies, such as bandages, cotton batten, etc. The only thing they could find to cover his wound was an old sock. Surely we should not allow our brave boys to suffer unnecessarily. Come ladies! I know you only want to know what is wanted. Send your bandages and other things necessary for wounds to the Red Cross Society, and they will forward them. I am sure.—Yours truly.

'ROUND THE STORES

At W. E. Lech's.

Men's millinery, in the latest spring blocks, are shown by W. E. Lech, 266 George street, in correct spring styles. You know there is no better place for men to be fitted with handsome headwear than at this natty fur and hat store because its customers know that their best interests are served. Whether you wish to dress conservatively or prefer that "snappy" look, see what they have to show. All the favourites are there, in softs and felts, and the new caps, too.

At Parker's Cleaning Works.

It is better to be safe than sorry. Who hasn't sympathized with a friend who has taken his or her suit or dress to be cleaned and pressed, and found when it was sent home that it was "almost ruined?" If you want to insure against such annoyances, ladies will recommend you to Parker's Cleaning Works, Charlotte street. Their experience has been that the work is well done and promptly executed. Mr. Beach and his assistants take pains to guard against mistakes, and use the right remedies and cleaners for the different materials. The ironing is good and carefully done. And if any repairs are necessary, they will be attended to. Men's suits and outer garments receive the same care and attention.

At Smith's Shoe Store.

Easter footwear is one of the most important articles of wearing apparel. Easter calls for the newest and smartest, as it is the first gala day of spring—a "dress up" occasion from the top of your head to the soles of your feet. C. E. Smith's Shoe Store, 264 George street, has a display of the advanced shapes and styles in spring footwear. The sensations of the spring in footwear is the new military boot for wear with short, flare-skirted military costumes and frocks. A natty, regimental affair, is this spring boot, with trim slender lines of toe and heel, a top of light coloured cloth, and with a dozen or more buttons. The Smith store is showing the ratest in vogue in ladies' and gentlemen's fine footwear.

GERMANS REALIZE THAT ARMY CAN NEVER ENTER LONDON

RUSSIANS ARE IN POSSESSION OF CHIEF PASSES

GERMANS ARE DISAPPOINTED WITH THEIR ZEPPELINS

London, Enemy Declares, Must be Bombarded—Majority of Germans Are Glad to Hear of Killing of English Citizens

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 5.—A "neutral observer," writing in The Times of his latest visit to Germany, says:

"The Germans are utterly disappointed with their Zeppelins. London, they repeat, must be bombarded. Not all, but a majority of the Germans, are glad to hear of the killing of English citizens, no matter whether they are women or soldiers, but London is the place they aim at and want to destroy.

HOW MANY ZEPPELINS HAVE THEY?

"It is fully realized now that the German army will never be able to enter London, because they understand at last the impossibility of landing an army. At the end of 1912, Germany possessed more than thirty airships of different models. What the exact number is at present nobody outside the highest military circles knows for certain. I had the other day an interesting conversation with a business man who holds a patent for the manufacture of a special article necessary for Zeppelins. He said:

"Even I do not know the exact number and present strength of Germany's air fleet, but I cannot believe that it has increased since the beginning of the war. On the contrary, I am of the opinion that we have just been able to replace our losses, which have been much greater than were expected. But the coming six months will enable us to build fifteen to eighteen new Zeppelins of a greatly improved model, better armed and able to carry more than two tons of explosives.

BUILT FOR REACHING LONDON.

"This air fleet is most likely being built for the purpose of reaching London. That city will not be approached by one or two airships, but by many and quite regardless of possible losses. If we have not yet made an attempt on London, it is because our Zeppelins needed special improvement, as shown by experiments during the war. It is also of the highest importance to the leaders of the aerial expedition to have before they start an exact knowledge of the meteorological conditions. It has hampered us greatly that the English authorities have not sent out any news about meteorological conditions since the war began.

'If the war lasts another year I should not advise you to remain in London, and, if you do, remember my warning. But, personally, I do not think there will be any Zeppelin raids on London before late in the summer."

STRANGEST EASTER SINCE PARIS BECAME WORLD'S FASHION CENTRE

PARIS April 5—Frances sublime patriotism, the noble, self sacrifice of her women was weirdly and wonderfully demonstrated by the strangest Easter recorded since Paris became the world's fashion centre.

The heavens, moved to pity, wept throughout the day. The clouds cooperated with the colourless feminine attire and the absence of flowers to produce a black Easter sharply in contrast to the gayety and the colourful scenes of normal days.

There was no fashion parade in the boulevards. Bois Boulogne was deserted. The scenes o fthe fashionable Madelaine and of the poorer quarters of Sacre Coeur and Notre Mame were virtually duplicated. The usual contrast between wealthy and poorer dressers was lost in the black pall.

The only relieving colours were occasional splotches of blue grey coats, red trousers and white bandages of wounded soldiers. The only young men in sight were those in uniform. The other males were old men and little children. Ninety-five per cent. of the women were gowned in black.

Taper lighted Notre Dame's vast audience seemed composed entirely of swaying shadows. Sex was undeterminable because of absence of colours until the wave of sobs from fem inine worshippers mingling with soprano carols, revealed the actual sufferers of war's cruelties.

At the dismissal of the services women were dry-eyed again. Their buoyancy not only offset the black pall, but also revealed inspiration for noble deeds of France's sons.

SATURDAY NIGHT AND SUNDAY DESPATCHES

BERLIN, April 3. — The United States steamer "Green Briar" struck a mine and was sunk in the North Sea. She was returning from Germany to the United States. All the crew was saved. This was the vessel taken charge of by the British navy on her trip to Germany with cotton some weeks ago, and was later released.

LONDON, April 3.—The Admiralty to-night declared that the mines which sunk the Green Briar were of German origin.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Government officials to-night stated that the United States would undoubtedly protest against the sinking of the Green Briar. She was bringing a cargo of German products to the United States.

NISH, Serbia, April 3.—The War Office to-night officially announced that the Bulgarians have crossed into Serbia and occupied Valandovo blockhouse and heights of that neighbourhood. Fighting is in continuation. No declaration has come from Bulgaria.

LONDON, April 3.—Vienna despatches claim that forty thousand Russians have been captured in recent fighting in the Carpathians, but it is not believed here.

WASHINGTON, April 3. — All United States military attaches with German troops are being sent home.

NEWPORT NEWS, April 4. — Prinz Eitel Frederich is still at her pier at 1:30 this morning.

PARIS, April 4.—The Servian Government has protested to Bulgaria because of invasion by irregulars of Bulgaria.

AMSTERDAM, April 4.—There is official denial at Vienna that Austria has opened peace negotiations with Russia.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 4. — No change of importance has taken place at the Dardanelles in the last three days according to official announcement.

FECAMP, France, April 4.—The three-masted fishing vessel "Pacquerette" was torpedoed by a German submarine yesterday nine miles south of here. All the crew was saved.

Work has been begun on the electrification of the railroads in and around Sydney, Australia.

A Photograph of one's self carries with it the personal element so essential to Easter Giving—and it is so inexpensive.

The Situation Is Unchanged

"There is Nothing to Report" is the Laconic Message That Was Issued From Paris on Sunday Evening—Turkish Cruiser Reported Sunk

SUNDAY BULLETINS

VIENNA, March 4.— It is officially announced that all the Russian divisions which were before Przemysl are now on the Carpathian front.

PETROGRAD, April 4.—(Official).—On Thursday in the Carpathians the Russians took more than 7,000 men, 100 officers and 10 machine guns. The Russian offensive is developing successfully everywhere.

PARIS, April 4.—(Official).— There is nothing to report.

PETROGRAD, April 4.—A despatch from Sebastopol says that the Turkish armoured cruiser Medjidieh struck a mine near the Russian Black Sea coast and went down.

VIENNA, April 4.—The War Office announced that the Austrians were forced to retreat in the region of the Carpathians during heavy fighting for the possession of the passes leading into Hungary, owing to large Russian reinforcements.

Loss of "Medjidieh" Is Confirmed

Crew of 320 Officers and Men Were Saved by Turkish Warship

Examiner Special:

CONSTANTINOPLE, via Berlin, (wireless), April 5.— The loss of the Turkish armoured cruiser "Medjidieh" in the Sunday engagement off Odessa was admitted in the official statement of the Turkish Admiralty to-day.

The Medjidieh's crew of 320 officers and men were saved by other Turkish warships, the Admiralty announced.

In the same engagement two small Russian vessels, the Provident and Vastochnaja were sunk according to the Turkish statement.

Great Loss of Life and Property

As Result of a Terrific Storm Which Swept the Atlantic Coast

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, April 5.—Seventy more lives and property worth several million dollars, was the toll of a terrific storm which swept the Atlantic coast Saturday and Sunday, according to belated reports to-day.

A score of vessels are known to have been sunk, and reports of many more missing are anxiously awaited to-day.

From all parts of the coast came reports of thrilling rescues from sinking vessels by life saving, revenue cutter and volunteer rescue corps. The coast was strewn with wreckage, particularly off the Virginian capes, where the fury of the storm was centred.

SON OF EX-PRESIDENT KILLED IN ACTION IN FRANCE.

PARIS, April 5. — The family of Claude Casimir-Perrier, son of the former President of France, has been informed that he was killed in battle and was buried near Rheims. He was a lieutenant in the 106th Infantry Regiment and was reported missing on January 29. Previously his relatives had been informed that he had been severely wounded and taken prisoner.

RUSSIANS LOST 140 IN MEMEL RETREAT

PETROGRAD, April 4.— An official communication concerning the recent Russian retreat from the Memel district of East Prussia was issued to-night. It says:

"During the retirement of our troops from Memel our casualties were only 140 men, including killed, wounded and missing.

AUSTRIANS FORCED TO LEAVE POSITIONS ON THE BESKIDS

Russians Take Prisoners in Droves—No Fewer Than 5,000 Daily Falling in Czar's Hands.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, April 5.—Driven from their strong fortified positions in the passes of the Beskid range of the Carpathians by the strong army of fresh Russian troops brought southward from Peremysl, the Austrians have commenced a retreat into the plains of Hungary. This fact is officially admitted in the Austrian official statement issued in Vienna Sunday, and official information from Petrograd indicates that the scene of this Russian success is in the Uzsok Pass, to the north of Bartgeld, one of the chief strategic gateways to Hungary.

The decision in this battle was reached on Friday, and on the same day the Russians also broke down the Austrian offensive further west, near Laborcz, which is south of the Lupkow Pass. At Laborcz, however, the Austrians renewed their efforts on Saturday, and, according to their own account, succeeded in re-establishing themselves in some of the positions on the heights.

The Russian official statement last night gives no details of the Austrian defeat, but announces that "a great success" was gained on Friday by the Czar's troops north of the roads leading to Bartfeld. It is stated that over 2,000 prisoners, three cannon and three machines guns were taken during the day's fighting. Petrograd says also that the Russian success extended to the operations in the Laborcz region, where the Austrians claim to have later secured the advantage in the engagement.

SUCCESS ON THE NIEMEN.

It is also announced in the Russian statement that the fighting in the Niemen region is developing very favourably, the Germans being expelled from the positions they were occupying in North Poland after a stubborn cavalry engagement. The enemy is said to have lost heavily by the sabres of the Russian horsemen in a dashing charge.

The Austrian official statements of Saturday and Sunday report that the Austrian army was compelled to withdraw from the Beskid region because of "the presence of large Russian forces arriving from Peremysl," and also that "it has been ascertained that all the Russian divisions which were before Peremysl are now actually on the Carpathian front."

Against the retreat in the Beskids the Austrians make the offsetting claim that they are successful in the fighting in the Laborcz valley of the Carpathians. The Vienna statement asserts that they have dislodged the Russians from several strong positions in this region, taking 2,000 prisoners on Saturday.

Men In Third Line Trenches Suffer From Artillery Fire

Says Mr. Louis Houedry Who Has Returned to Peterborough After Eight Months Service With the Allied Armies—the Uninitiated Duck When Exposed to Fire For the First Time—Deafness Often Results

"It doesn't necessarily follow because a man is located in the third line of reserve trenches, he is not exposed to danger. When the enemy's artillery is in action the men in the third line trenches have more to fear than those who are actually facing the Germans in the first line trenches." The speaker was Mr. Louis Houedry, Lock Street. On Saturday last Mr. Houedry returned to Peterborough after having served as interpreter to the British Army in France. As stated in Saturday's "Examiner," Mr. Houedry, who is a French reservist, was wounded while in the discharge of his duties. He was confined in the hospital for two months and subsequently invalided home. Mr. Houedry claims that the German artillery will do more damage to the third line of trenches than they will to the first. This applies to both sides. When an artillery duel is in progress it is usually an issue between the big guns which are located back of the third line trenches. An exception to this is a case where one side undertakes an offensive movement and shrapnel is sprayed on the first line trenches with the object of dislodging the occupants. As a general thing the machine gun, aided by the rifle and bayonet, are reserved for the use of those occupying the first line trenhes. Mr. Houedry's experience is that the big guns are more deadly to the men in the reserve trenches than those in the first line.

Men Will Duck.

Another peculiarity that was brought home to Mr. Houedry on more than one occasion was the tendency of the men to duck whenever the big guns went off. This usually happens when a man makes his debut at the firing line and invariably wears off in the course of a few days. Some of the men will even go so far as to turn up their coat collars and will even duck at the sound of rifle or machine gun fire. This they do sub-consciously, such as a man might do if he were expecting a blow from an unseen quarter. This wears off after a few days, and in many cases the men have to be warned of danger that they instinctively fear when they first enter the trenches. The din of the gunfire is almost unbearable at time and is responsible for considerable deafness among the troops. This is only a temporary condition, however, and will soon wear off. Mr. Houedry himself was rendered almost totally deaf as a result of an explosion that wrecked an ammunition train and brought about the disability from which he now suffers. He is almost cured of the deafness but suffers considerably from wounds in the back and other parts of the body.

Speaking of the inferiority of the German shell fire Mr. Houedry said that not only was the ammunition bad but the German field guns were beginning to show the effects of the hard usage they have undergone during the past eight months. The rifling of the guns was partially destroyed as indicated by the snake-like course of the shells. Then again a shell that was set to explode at fifteen hundred or two thousand yards would drop at one thousand yards and would fail to explode. If a venturesome soldier attempted to remove it from the mud it might have the effect of disturbing the timing appartus with disastrous results to the soldier. Orders were issued forbidding the men from handling shells that failed to explode in this manner One man attempted to remove one in a wheel barrow. The shell exploded and man and wheelbarrow faded into oblivion.

A Sea of Mud.

Mr. Houedry also referred to the conditions brought about by the rains which turned the countryside into a veritable sea of mud. He was eight months away and consequently encountered the season of the year when the mud was at its worst. It was bad enough for the few days that he was in England, but actual conditions at the front were indescribable. The men lived for days in the trenches when the water was waist high. To have raised up or left the trenches for higher ground would have been to invite certain death. Mr. Houedry's duties as interpreter brought him in contact with both British and French commanders. He also saw both General Joffre and General French at close quarters.

A French inventor claims to have discovered a substance more sensitive to wireless waves than any now in use, and to have perfected receiving apparatus which does away with all outer wires and antennae.

Absinthe Dealers Lose Their Stock

Suppression of Sale in France Leaves Terrible Trail of Wrecks

PARIS, April 5.— Suppression by parliamentary action of the sale of absinthe is not setting France agog.

The retail liquor dealers are making no opposition, insisting only that the government reimburse them for the loss of their stocks on hand. These alone amount to some 5,000,000 litres, valued at $6,000,000, this figure includes the duties already paid the government on the liquor.

The suppression of the sale which has left a terrible trail of mental and physical wrecks behind it in France is one of the direct results of the war. A temporary suppression as a precautionary war measure met with such universal approval, and so little opposition owing to the state of war, that the fighters of the insidious liquor saw their opportunity for pushing the fight onto the floors of parliament.

M. Henri Schmidt, appointed by the chamber of deputies, to draw up a report on the proposed suppression law, resented startling figures on the havoc wrought by absinthe in France. The liquor, he stated, is the most highly alcoholized of all drinks. It contains from 65 to 72 per cent. of alcohol besides strong essences that make it particularly harmful.

Out of 9844 cases of delirium tremens examined, 1925 were found due to absinthe alone.

A combination of telephone, microphone and phonograph has been invented in France for transmitting sounds from the last to distant points or to several points at once.

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Frost

There was the old languid mockery in his voice, but his friend, looking at him closely, could see that the face had become a trifle thinner, that beneath the dirt that befrimed it there were haggard traces that betrayed worry and sleeplessness. Fairfield had thought much of Robert Grell lately, but he had never dreamed that the hunted man would come to him—come to him in broad daylight, without a word of warning. Did Grell know that he was in touch with the police? Had he come, a driven, desperate man, to fling reprotches at the friend who had joined in the hunt? That was unlikely. Grell, murderer or not, was not that type. He did nothing without a reason. He was Fairfield reflected, a murderer — a murderer who had not dared stay to face the consequences of his deed. That surely severed all claims, whatever their old friendship might have been.

"What do you want?" he asked, with a hard note in his voice. "Why have you come to me?"

The man in the chair lifted his shoulders.

"That is fairly obvious. I want you to do what, if our situations were reversed, I would do for you. I want money. If you can get me a few hundreds I shall be all right."

A spasm contracted Fairfield's face for a second. He had not asked for explanations. Grell had volunteered none. It seemed as though he were taking for granted the assumption that he was guilty of the murder. Surely an innocent man would have been eager to assert his innocence at the first opportunity. When Sir Ralph answered, it was slowly, as though he were weighing each word that he spoke. "I would be willing enough to help a friend — you know that, Grell. But why you should think I would lift a finger to help you evade justice I fail to see. I know enough of the law to know that I should become an accessory to the fact."

"You really think I killed that man?" The words came quick and sharp, like a pistol shot. "I thought you had known me long enough——"

"Words," interrupted Fairfield bitterly. "All words. You were the last man I should have thought capable of such a thing; but all the facts are against you. Need I go over them? Let me tell you that if ever a jury knows what Scotland Yard knows and you stand in the dock, no earthly power can save you. If that crime is on your conscience it seems to rest lightly enough."

Grell stood up and rested one hand lightly on the sleeve of his companion. "Fairfield, old chap," he said earnestly, "we have been through enough together to prove to you that I am not a coward. I swear on my honour that I had nothing to do with that man's death—though I have had &&&& ¾&&& thm thm arf thm thm reason enough to wish him dead, God knows. Do you think it is fear for myself that has driven me into hiding?"

Fairfield shook his head impatiently, and shaking himself clear paced quickly up and down the room. "That's all very well, Grell," he said more mildly, "but it is hardly convincing in the face of facts. You disappear immediately after the murder, having got me to lie to cover your retreat, and the next I hear from you is when you want money. It's too thin. If I were you I should go now. For the sake of old times I will say nothing about your visit here, but to help you by any other means—no. If you had no hand in that murder, come out like a man and make a fight for it. I will back you up."

"Thanks." There was a dry bitterness that did not escape Sir Ralph. "I couldn't have got better advice if I'd gone to Scotland Yard itself." His voice changed to a certain quality of harshness. "Look here, Fairfield. Suppose I do know something about this business; suppose I know who Harry Goldenburg was, and how and why he was killed; suppose I had stayed while inquiries were being made, then I should either have to have betrayed a friend or taken the burden on my own shoulders; suppose I say I was honest that night when I asked you to conceal my absence from St. Jermyn's Club; that I did nothing which I would not do over again"—he banged his fist on the table and his eyes glowed fiercely—"I tell you I have had no choice in this matter. Even you, who knew me as well as any man, do not know what I had been through until that man lay dead. Since then I have suffered h——. The police have been at my heels ever since. I carried little enough money away with me, and I dared not attempt to change a cheque while I was thought to be dead." He drew a gold watch from his pocket. "I dare not even pawn this, for even the pawnbrokers are watched. They stopped all my efforts to raise money in other directions, and have isolated me from my friends. I have fifteen shillings left, and yet since they routed me out of cover the day before yesterday I have not dared get a lodging for fear that I might arouse suspicion. I slept on the Embankment last night."

He paused breathless from his own vehemence. Fairfield had seen him in moments of danger, yet never had he seen him so roused out of himself. He could see one of the sinewy actually trembling, and that alone was proof enough of the violence of the hunted man's emotion. He went to a side table, and pouring out a generous dose of brandy from a decanter, squirted a little soda-water in it and handed it to Grell. But his face was still hard and set.

"Drink that," he said. And then, as the other obeyed: "It is no use fencing with the question, Grell. If you want me to help you you will have to give some explanation. I am not going to dip my hands in this business blindly. Don't think it's a matter of you and I simply. This concerns Eileen."

Grell put down his empty glass and stared into the other's eyes.

"Ah yes, Eileen," he said quietly. "What about her?"

"This," Fairfield spoke tensely, "that if you are guilty you have ruined her life; if you are innocent and cannot prove it you might as well be guilty. I'll not conceal from you that I have given Scotland Yard some measure of assistance in trying to find you. Do you know why? Because I judged you to be a man. Because I thought that if put to it you might prove your innocence or take the only course that could spare her the degradation of seeing the man she loved convicted as a murderer."

A grim unmirthful smile parted Robert Grell's lips. He understood well enough what was meant. "You always were a good friend, Fairfield," he retorted. "Perhaps you have a revolver you could lend me."

"Will you use it if I do?" burst impulsively from Fairfield's white lips. He was sincere in his suggestion. To his mind there was only one escape from the predicament in which his friend found himself. Anything was preferable, in his mind, to the open scandal of public trial.

"Don't be a fool," said Grell, making a gesture as though waving the subject aside. "I shall not commit suicide—at any rate, while I've got a fighting chance. "Let's get to the point. Will you lend me some money?"

The clear-cut face of Fairfield had gone very pale. When he answered it was with dry lips and almost in a whisper.

"Not a farthing." And then with more emphasis—"Not a farthing."

A mist was before his eyes. The lock of the door clicked and Grell shambled out. For ten minutes or more Ralph Fairfield remained, his fingers twitching at the buttons of his waistcoat. A revulsion of feeling had come. Had he done right? Was Grell's course the wisest, after all? How had his own feelings towards Eileen influenced him in his decision not to help the man who had been his friend?

He resolved to try to shake the matter from his mind, and his hand sought the bell-push. Twice he rang without receiving any reply, and he flung open the door and called imperatively—

"Roberts!"

Still his man failed to answer. He walked quickly through all the rooms that constituted his apartments. There was no trace of the missing servant. A quick suspicion tugged at his brain, and he wondered why he had not thought of it before. Of course, Roberts knew Grell, but the disguise of the explorer was not absolutely impenetrable. In spite of his clothes, his missing moustache, and his tousled hair dyed black, Fairfield had known him. Why not the servant? And if Roberts had recognized him and was missing—

Fairfield began to hurriedly put on an overcoat.

CHAPTER XLI.

The police court proceedings in connection with the gambling-joint in Smike Street had opened satisfactorily so far as the police were concerned. All the prisoners but the principals and those involved in the attack on Heldon Foyle had been subjected to small fines, and were, as the legal phrase goes, "bound over." The remainder had been remanded for a week at the request of the prosecuting solicitor, a half-hearted request for bail being refused.

For the first time since he had attained the rank of superintendent, Foyle himself had gone into the witness-box. That was unavoidable, as he was the only man who could give direct evidence of the character of the house. Hitherto he had arranged so that the court work fell on his subordinates while he gave his attention to organization and administrative detail; for the giving of evidence is only the end of the work of a detective. There are men behind the scenes in most cases that come into the criminal courts who are never told off, happenings never referred to. They are summed up in the phrase "Acting on information received, I——" The business of a detective is to secure his prisoner and give evidence, not to tell how it was done.

"Still no news from Liverpool," said the superintendent as he left the court with Green. "I begin to wish I'd sent you down there. That woman has got the knack of vanishing."

"Yes," agreed his lieutenant, producing a well-worn brier and pressing the tobacco down with a horny thumb. "And yet people think we've got an easy job. Lola knows her business, and I'm open to bet she'll not be found before she wants to be found."

Foyle chuckled at this enunciation of rank heresy. Only a veteran of Green's experience would have dared question the ability of Scotland Yard to maintain a scent once picked up. The superintendent did not take the pessimism too seriously. In theory it is not difficult for one person to disappear among forty millions, but to remain hidden indefinitely, in the face of a vigorous, sustained search by men trained to their business is not so simple in practice.

"You've got a habit of looking on the worst side of things," he laughed. "I've never known us want any one we knew badly but that we got 'em at last. Besides, Blake's down there, and he's a good man. He's got a personal interest in running her down now."

"H'm," commented Green, in the tone of one not entirely convinced, and lapsed into a stolid silence which would have irritated some men, but merely amused the superintendent.

They separated at the door of Foyle's room at headquarters, and an impatient detective-sergeant, whose duty it was to weed out callers, promptly headed Heldon Foyle off.

"A man's been waiting to see you, sir," he said. "He refused to give his name, but said he had some important information which he would only give to you personally. He wouldn't hear of seeing any one else."

Our Talents

Christ's illustration of the servant's hiding his talent in the earth, and of his lord's anger, is a well-known one. He not only made no use of that talent, but on his master's return he lost it altogether, and as an unprofitable servant, was cast into outer darkness.

Though responsible for that talent, he had no realization of the privilege that was his. Many modern people in real life do not realise their responsibility, as they have never taken time to think whether they have a talent or not, but they have, and God will hold them accountable, just as that master did his servant.

One of the wonders of the Southern States is the Lost River. Like an ordinary one it flows for miles above ground, then disappears at a certain spot. Beyond that place there is no trace of it above ground, but in subterranean passages it is still winding along, often causing the ground above to fall in. Dauntless men interested in such phenomena go down these "case-ins" and follow its course in the depths below. Where it reappears again, fish have been caught with eyes which have become mere spots in the head, so long have they been of no use in the darkness.

In the same way many people know that they have a certain talent, but they neglect it, until they have lost all command of it, and it is theirs no longer. It is heartbreaking to think of all the satisfaction and pleasure and joy that has been missed in the wasting of talents and the sorrow and regret that must follow.

Not only do the owners suffer, but all those whom they might have helped to life's nobler realizations.

A woman with a voice-talent sang to a shut-in. She knew not in the least what it meant to that one to carry those grand sweet notes in her own soul, and in the hours of loneliness and pain, hear them over and over again.

Thus hitherto unrealized, and however small or however great they may be, all ought to do their best with these God-given talents, and then instead of the dread "outer darkness" of failure there will be the grand "inner light" of joy in accomplishment—I.H.N.

Suffered Intense Pain in Her Back.
Could Hardly Do Her Housework.

If a pain attacks you in the back "stop and think" what it is and what causes it.

If the kidneys are at fault—and in a large majority of cases of pain in the back they are—doctor them at once, and doctor them persistently, as it is impossible to have a well strong back unless the kidneys perform their functions properly.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure all forms of kidney trouble, and cure them to stay cured.

Mrs. H. F. Jacob, Lavant Station, Ont., writes: "I take pleasure in telling you how much good your medicine has done me. I had suffered from intense pains in my back, and was so bad I could hardly do my housework. My kidneys were also bothering me a great deal. I tried several kinds of patent medicines, and was almost discouraged, and was looking for some other kind of medicine to try when I noticed your advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills, so I thought it could not hurt to try them. I noticed a great difference when I had used one box, and to my great relief when I had used three boxes I was entirely cured, and I have not been bothered since. I will not hesitate to recommend them to all I know."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c a box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont. When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

HOPEVILLE'S BOOM

Town Failed to Get the Railroad, but Prosperity Came Another Way.

By GEORGE ELMER COBB.

"We've missed it! We're nothing but a way-back settlement now."

Thus Jared Bross, of the board of trustees of the neat, picturesque, but isolated town of Hopeville.

"You mean the railroad has missed us," corrected Phillip Dawes, president of this same board of trustees. "Well, gentlemen, that shall not prevent Hopeville continuing to do itself proud, I trust, as a model village without a blemish."

Very proud of the community he had helped build up was Phillip Dawes, and he spoke with enthusiasm. He had always predicted great things in store for Hopeville. Never a village of fairer location and environment. A rare trout stream bounded one of its limits, a dream of a lake bounded another. There were hills, dales and lovely undulating meadows, a thrifty farming community surrounding, and the town people ideal, morally, socially and as to their municipal harmony.

"Some day Hopeville will forge to the front," was his optimistic slogan —"some day values will go up, and each man come into his own."

When the new railroad was talked of, old residents began to boost their acres and town lots as to values. Enormous fortunes were figured out. In fancy they saw a busy traffic, crowds of summer visitors, picnickers from the city, scattered farm trade centered at the new shipping point. Hopes rose high, then they were correspondingly depressed, for the railroad made a detour, and Byron, quite a busy little city eight miles distant, was made the terminus of the new branch line railway.

"Wish I'd settled there as I intended to ten years ago!" grumbled disloyal and disagreeable Jared Bross. "There's some go to Byron. I don't care if they do encourage a riff-raff crowd—stir and sensation bring in the dollars, don't they?"

"But we don't want the dollars that way," insisted Dawes. "We go in for schools, and rational amusements, and clean, healthy children. Do you ever find any riotous crowds in Hopeville? No, sir!"

Bross had a strong personal reason for being disgruntled with Hopeville. He was a man of some means and his son, Bradley, had married a poor humble girl. The old man had railed at the secret match, and had promptly discarded his disobedient son. Nellie Horton, whom Bradley had married, was an orphan, but her parents had left her a small farm just out of town. There the wedded pair settled down. It was a poor place, however, situated near a sterile ravine, soil not fertile, and affording a bare living.

"That boy will rue the day he disregarded my advice!" the elder Bross had said one day to Dawes.

"Oh, nonsense!" retorted his neighbor, "Bradley is a good boy. The poor young pair have hard scratching, perhaps, but they're happy and contented as two birds in a nest."

"Humph!" commented the iron-hearted father, and went his way sullen and unlovely.

So Byron got the railroad and what went with it, both good and bad. There was a good deal of grumbling in Hopeville, and in a measure Phillip Dawes looked upon as a disappointing founder and builder. The pride and ambition of the old man were touched. Then he began to plan to retain his prestige. Neighbors noticed that he went to a city fifty miles distant a great deal. Also, that he brought distinguished-looking business men back with him, whom he showed all over the district.

"Not at all," retorted Dawes, with an enigmatical smile. "We don't want one—why, I intend to explain to you weak sister growlers at the annual."

The "annual" was a time honored institution of Hopeville, and now again close at hand. Every year Phillip Dawes had insisted that the representative residents of the place meet at the town hall to celebrate the founding of the village. Speeches, congratulations, suggestions for civic improvements comprised the features of the program. Then a banquet. Dawes was always the chairman of the functions, and so felicitous was his handling of the various toasts proposed, that he had won the title of "The Cheer Master."

They could hear the distant echo of an engine whistle across the valley as they sat in the town hall on the present occasion. It reminded some of the sore ones of their disappointment. Dawes, however, was in great fettle that evening, and when the banquet board was reached his buoyant, optimistic air communicated itself to others.

They never had anything stronger than clear, sparkling water at these celebration functions. They had nothing stronger, because in the first place no one seemed to want it, and furthermore the big artesian well that supplied the town ranked third in the state as to purity of outrush, so, as a matter of local loyalty, the toasts were drunk in aqua pura.

"Hopeville—her splendid past and her glorious future," was the toast read.

"Humph!" grumbled Bross, "I think Dawes will have to take a back seat this time."

But Phillip Dawes arose, looking brighter and prouder than he had ever seemed. He took no back water on the buoyant predictions of past years. He looked quite dazzled as he spoke of the golden stream of good fortune now knocking at their doors. And then they drank the toast. And then most everybody made a grimace, set down the unfinished libation, and looked queer.

"Something the matter with the water, friends?" smiled Dawes. "That's the merit of it. It is Hopeville water, though not from the home well. Gentlemen, you have drank of the soon-to-be-celebrated Lithia-Magnesium water, specially presented to you to introduce the last requirement this beautiful district needed to make it famous."

"Say, what are you driving at, anyhow?" inquired Bross bluntly.

"Just this," explained Dawes. "I reasoned from the first that the new railroad would open up a popular outing resort somewhere along its line. The noisy railroad has spoiled Byron. Besides, they have no such magnificent scenery as Hopeville, nor a lake, nor a trout stream, nor the model town. Again, tourists like to ride from terminus in a stage—think they're diving into the primeval wilderness. Well, gentlemen, for two months I have been negotiating with wealthy promoters in the city. The deal is closed, a big hotel is to be built at the head of the lake, and people will come to Hopeville next season, dead loads of them."

Voices arose in eager demands for more detailed information. Property and rents would go up! The town stores would quadruple their business! The rich golden harvest was coming at last!

"But what about this horrible tasting water?" queried Bross, with a wry face.

"Pronounced by chemists the most healthful beverage in the world," boasted Dawes proudly, "a true mineral water. When the promoters learned that, they offered ten thousand dollars cash for the spring it came from."

"And where is that?"

"Down in a forgotten corner of that poor, neglected farm your boy lives on over in the ravine. Now, Neighbor Bross, as all the town is happy over the grand general prospects ahead of us, suppose you go down to the ravine farm and congratulate your son, Bradley, and his wife on their share in the general good luck?"

And thus it was that the name of the popular Cheer Master became a household word in Hopeville for all time to come.

Three Birthdays Yearly.

There is apparently plenty of fun for the child in Sweden in the matter of birthdays, but the parent can hardly be expected to feel the same, for the children there do not confine themselves to one birthday, but they must have three.

Of course, the first one is the real birthday, and the other two are those whose names the Swedish boy or girl bears.

For every day in the year of the Swedish calendar has its own separate name, besides the weekly names which other nations have. Sometimes if the parent gives the child a second name or a first one that cannot be found in the calendar the child loses out on one birthday. And considerable protest must follow, too, when the child becomes old enough to realize what he is missing.

In the German calendar every day has a name also, but the observance of these days is not at all common in the latter country.

"Hadn't I better put in the items?"

"There are no items. They weren't bought."

"My goodness; He'll say we're swindlers."

"No, he won't. He won't say a word."

"Why not?"

"Well, you see, kleptomania is very fashionable now, and he'll think his wife has got the sundries."

Annoyance.

She—These reporters are so careless. This paper says I have been "for years one of the handsomest women in society."

She—Why, I never said anything about "for years."—Puck.

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed With Sulphur It Brings Back Its Lustre and Abundance

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns grey and looks dry, wispy and scraggly, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay grey! Look young! Either prepare the tonic at home or get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully and removes dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair; besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the grey hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural colour is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

Cattle Plague Eradicated.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Practical eradication of the foot and mouth scourge disease of live stock in the United States is announced by the department of agriculture.

Officers in charge of the campaign waged against the plague said that with the single exception of a herd of animals near Syracuse, N.Y., which has been ordered slaughtered, the disease is now wiped out.

Clocks Are Moved On.

REGINA, April 3.—Last night at midnight Regina adopted fast time, following the experiment of last year. All clocks were put ahead one hour, the postoffice department, under orders from Ottawa, following suit.

Lobdens In Disfavor.

NORWICH, Eng., April 3.—Public opinion here is so strongly incensed over the attitude of some of the labor leaders on the war that the Independent Labor party was unable to secure a suitable hall for a conference which had been arranged for Monday and Tuesday.

Cities Are Transients.

What cities, as great as this, have once triumphed in existence, had their victories as great, joy as just and as unbounded, and, with short sighted presumption, promised themselves immortality? Posterity can hardly trace the situation of some; the sorrowful traveler wanders over the awful ruins of others; and, as he beholds, he learns wisdom and feels the transience of every sublunary possession.—Oliver Goldsmith.

Swallow It Quick.

Impatient people water their miseries and hoe up their comforts; sorrows are visitors that come without invitation, but complaining minds send a wagon to bring their troubles in. Many people are born crying, live complaining, and die disappointed; they chew the bitter pill which they would not even know to be bitter if they had the sense to swallow it whole in a cup of patience and water.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

Who Ever Heard of Such a Thing?

"Hobson," said Muggins, "they tell me you've taken your boy away from the graded school. What's that for?"

"'Cause," said Hobson, "the master ain't fit to teach him."

"Oh," said Muggins, "I've heard he is a very good master."

"Well," replied Hobson, apologetically, "all I know is he wanted to teach my boy to spell 'taters with a 'p.'"

"DIGGING IN" UNDER FIRE

Immediately Ground is Gained the Soldiers Start to Burrow

It is practically impossible for soldiers, to remain in the open and live under modern artillery fire. When a column of soldiers advance until they can go no farther they hold the ground they have gained by burrowing into the earth. Each soldiers lies flat on the ground and, by means of trenching tools, or failing them his bayonet, makes a shallow trench at his side, carefully placing the loose earth in a pile at his head. This hole is sufficiently deep to safeguard him from stray bullets, and under cover he begins to dig another and deeper trench at his side. This is known as a "lying down" trench, and, being about 2 feet deep, hides the soldier's body from the enemy when he crawls into it.

In these roughly constructed shelters the troops lie until darkness sets in, when the engineers, with a formidable array of pick-axes, saws, and spades, set to work to enlarge the "lying down" holes until they are deep enough to shelter a standing soldier. The dirt taken from the trenches is carefully piled up in front of the shelter to form a parapet which penetrates up the force of bullets.

At a short distance behind the trenches, actually in the firing line, shelters are constructed for the troops to fall back on in case of retreat. These, not being built under fire, can be carefully made on selected ground, and tucker-drawn ploughshares are used to break earth for them. Barbed wire interlaced with branches cut from trees is placed in front of these shelters, and wooden beams piled with earth cover them to protect the troops below from shells bursting overhead.

NOT HONORABLE OPPONENTS

Captured Submarine Crews Must Be Treated Differently, Says Grey.

LONDON, April 3. — A German protest and threats of reprisals on account of the treatment by Great Britain of the prisoners taken on board German submarines was made public here yesterday. This protest was transmitted by Germany to Great Britain through the United States.

The reply of Great Britain also was made public.

The German Government, in its protest, asked whether Great Britain intended to accord less favorable treatment to captured German submarine crews than to other war prisoners, and if so, what form this discrimination would take. Germany stated that if Great Britain adopted such a course, a British army officer held prisoner in Germany would receive correspondingly harsher treatment for each member of a captured German submarine crew.

The Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey, in his reply, said that the prisoners from German submarines had been placed in naval detention barracks and segregated from other war prisoners, but were being treated humanely and permitted to take exercise. Furthermore, the Foreign Secretary said, German prisoners in England are better fed and clothed than are British prisoners of equal rank in Germany, and the Germans are not subjected to forced labor.

As the submarine crews have been engaged in sinking neutral merchant ships and unarmed British vessels, Sir Edward said they could not be regarded as honorable opponents, but were "offenders against the law of nations and common humanity."

The Foreign Secretary said that 1,000 officers and men of the German navy had been rescued during the war, and that none from the British navy had been rescued by the Germans. However, he made no suggestion for a change.

NO PEACE FOR SUBMARINES.

British Aviators Continue to Bomb Hoboken and Zeebrugge.

LONDON, April 3. — While the German submarines continue their activity around the coasts of Britain the naval wing of the Royal Flying Squadron keeps up its attacks on the German submarines which are being built at Hoboken, and on the submarine base at Zeebrugge.

It is believed that two of the underwater craft lying at the mole of Zeebrugge were damaged by British aeroplanes.

The Admiralty's statement is:

"The following report has been received from Wing Commander A. M. Longmore, R.N.:

"'I have to report that this morning Flight Sub-Lieut. F. G. Ardrese carried out a successful air attack on the German submarines, which are being constructed at Hoboken, near Antwerp, dropping four bombs.

"'Also Flight Lieut. J. F. Wilson, while reconnoitering over Zeebrugge, observed two submarines lying alongside the Mole and attacked them, dropping four bombs with, it is believed, successful results.

"'These officers started in the moonlight this morning. Both pilots returned safely'."

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Wm. Stitt, general passenger agent of eastern lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway, died suddenly in Montreal on Thursday.

The Daily Mail's Copenhagen correspondent telegraphs that the German Crown Prince has left Berlin to take up his duty with the fifth army corps in the vicinity of Verdun.

Telegrams received from Las Palmas, Canary Islands, say that the Hamburg-American steamer Macedonia has succeeded in making her escape and has evaded British cruisers.

An Austrian steamer loaded with arms and ammunition on its way from Semlin to Pancsova, both ports on the Danube, struck a mine in the river Thursday night, says a Havas despatch from Nish.

War Secretary Kitchener is among the first of the prominent men in England to respond to the suggestion of abstinence from the use of alcohol contained in the letter sent by King George to Lloyd George.

Premier Asquith temporarily has taken charge of the British Foreign Office, Sir Edward Grey having been compelled to take a short holiday. Sir Edward will be away from the Ministry about three weeks.

Lt.-Col. W. G. Hurdman, inspector of technical equipment for the Canadian Militia Department, has been suspended by Gen. Hughes, Minister of Militia, and the Militia Council, pending further enquiry into the purchase of binoculars.

PETITIONS IN PAPERS.

Prohibition Sentiment in Britain Results in Press Campaign.

LONDON, April 3.—Several of the London morning papers appeared yesterday with full page advertisements presenting petitions with the request that supporters of the movement to cut them out and send them to Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George These petitions read:

"I am entirely in favor of the suspension of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the war, which I consider imperative for a quick and successful termination of the war. I shall heartily support the Government in any such measure."

The petition idea is backed by merchants and business men and other employers of labor, who disclaim any save a war interest in the proposed measure.

A MAN'S WORK.

To get good is animal, to do good is human, to be good is divine. The true use of a man's possessions is to help his work, and the best end of all his work is to show us what he is. The noblest workers of our world bequeath us nothing so great as the image of themselves.—James Martineau.

Many Women Watch Johnson in His Gymnasium Work at Havana

HAVANA, April 3. — Warm weather to-day gave Jack Johnson and Jess Willard the first opportunity in several days to work in the open air in training for their battle for the world's heavyweight championship on April 5th. Both pugilists drew large crowds of people, who were anxious to see them work.

Willard trained at Miramar in the presence of 500 spectators, a third of whom were women. Many tourists were among those who watched the challenger do an hour and a quarter's hard work at the pulleys, punching the dummy, throwing the medicine ball and boxing twelve rounds. He faced John Pentz for three rounds, Walter Monaghan four, and Jim Savage five, and later wrestled with Tom O'Rourke.

Willard Raw Yet.

Willard has developed a good straight left. His wind is only fair. His sparring partner landed freely today, and despite the fact that they are smaller men, the challenger was easily thrown off his balance in the clinches. Willard hits a terrific blow when he lands, but is still far from a finished boxer. Without defending himself he took punishment about the head and body, apparently not being discomforted. During the morning Willard did six miles of road work.

Johnson likewise took a six-mile run this morning. The champion boxed nine rounds with Bob Armstrong, Colin Bell and Dave Mills, without intermission. Willard took a minute's rest between rounds while he was boxing, and Johnson's partners are huskier and more experienced than those of the challenger.

Johnson declared that he could fight to-day, if necessary, and said that in another week he would be in perfect condition.

Odds Favour Johnson.

Americans have begun to bet in favour of Johnson, offering small sums at 11 to 5. Thus far there is only a fair demand for seats at the championship fight.

Harry N. Frazee, principal trustee of the fight syndicate, is in personal charge.

Germany Continues Embargo.

WASHINGTON, April 3. — Efforts of the U. S. Government to obtain concessions from Germany which would permit the importation of German potash fertilizer, failed yesterday, it became known, when American officials were advised that Germany would make no alteration of her embargo. Negotiations had been in progress since the outbreak of the European war.

Hamilton Man Electrocuted.

CHATHAM, April 3.—Charles Balmer, an electrician of Hamilton, met instant death by electrocution yesterday afternoon when he came in contact with a live wire while adjusting wires at the Griffin Theatre. Physicians worked over the body with a pulmotor for two hours, but without success.

Emperor Joseph Well Says Tisza.

LONDON, April 3.—Count Stephen Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, in speaking yesterday of his recent trip to Vienna, during which he had an audience with Emperor Francis Joseph, said that the Emperor appeared to be surprisingly well and had gone through the winter without the slightest cough or cold. The ruler showed the liveliest interest in all the affairs of state, said the Premier.

The Hungarian Government is requisitioning all grain and flour in the country. Count Tisza yesterday announced that Hungary intended to withhold foodstuffs from Austria, and declared that any surplus would be sent to her.

JUST SUITS MY NEEDS BUILDING UP THE SYSTEM

This is the Way Thousands of Women Are Speaking of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"I want to state that I have never taken anything to do me so much good as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food," writes Mrs. Edson Brock, Trenholmville, Que., "and I am never without it in the house. I was so nervous I could not sleep, but now I sleep soundly at nights and wake up feeling refreshed and ready for the day's work. I used the Nerve Food for months and found that it just suits my needs and has built up the system wonderfully. I know it is Dr. Chase's Nerve Food that has brought about the great change in my condition and am thankful for it.

"My husband was a great sufferer from itching piles and has been entirely cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

We are constantly receiving letters like this in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Everywhere it is being used because of its great restorative and reconstructive influence on the nervous system. Men and women who are run down in health, tired, nervous and discouraged, find in this great Food Cure the means of nourishing the exhausted system back to health and vigour.

Headaches, indigestion, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, lack of energy, and vigour — all tell of nervous exhaustion, and indicate the need of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Instead of affording mere temporary relief by stimulating the nerves, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food builds up the system by supplying the ingredients from which Nature forms new rich blood and revitalizes the wasted nervous system. Put Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test when you are feeling tired out and discouraged, fill the body with new rich blood and new nerve force and you will realise again the joy of good health. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

FAKING WAR PICTURES

German Public Sees Only What the Government Allows It to See

So far as regards the war and all its side issues, the moving picture in Germany is practically a branch of the government. In the home office at Berlin there is a high official who devotes his entire attention and that of a large staff to supplying the moving picture needs of the nation. Cinema photographers form as distinct a unit of the armies in east and west as machine guns. There is no such thing as individual pictures obtained by private operators at their own expense. Every war film and every film dealing with topical occurrences of any kind, even of a fictional character, is made by the government, and supplied at nominal rates, or given away free, to the cinema houses all over the country. Nothing is thrown on the screen in Germany unless it bears the official stamp showing that it comes from the home office.

An American newspaper photographer, who was arrested in Belgium and sent to Berlin, asked permission to go to the front as a moving picture operator. His request was refused, but he was handed 5,000 feet of film depicting war scenes for use in America. Being a somewhat unscrupulous youth, he then calmly demanded that the government make a special series of pictures for him, portraying him as the victim of a British naval shell, while dining in a hotel in Ostend. Such a scene, he said, would add to the interest in the lecture with which he intended to accompany the presentation of the films. So he was taken to a cinema studio outside Berlin and the incident he had suggested was "faked up" in most realistic fashion, even to the extent of providing a young and pretty "heroine" for the drama of which he was the hero. The climax of the film shows the photographer desperately wounded, in the arms of his fair companion.

Having myself seen these pictures, says a correspondent of the London Chronicle in Germany, I can testify as to the absolute truth of the above story. It is the most striking illustration I could give of the reliability of the German government's moving picture propaganda.

GENERAL SIR ARCHIBALD HUTER
Commander of Britain's Third Army

INVISIBLE FIGHTERS

Four years ago there was at Aldershot an ordinary field gun which looked as though an insane artist had used it for a palette.

Every color from a paint box had been lavished upon it. Blue, brown, yellow, red and green had been laid on in the most haphazard blobs and daubs.

It was not until you began to walk away from the gun that you realized there was method in the painter's madness. At two hundred yards the violent colors had all run together, at three hundred the gun seemed to be fading out of sight, at five hundred it was practically invisible.

The armored train, manned by British soldiers and British guns, which caused such havoc among the Germans near Dixmude, was painted in precisely similar fashion. The Kaiser offered a reward of $5,000 to the battery which will knock out this engine of destruction, yet this Royal reward has not been claimed by anyone.

To give the War Office its due, it was the first to realise that the thin red line of Crimean days was quite out of date with rifles that would carry a mile, and just before the South African War khaki became the universal wear.

At first the Tommies hated khaki and in August, 1902, it was announced that it was to be abandoned, and "Atholl grey" substituted. But it was pointed out that grey would stain terribly, and that it would not be as invisible as khaki, and in the end practical use won the day.

The Germans followed Britain's example, but their khaki has a greenish tint which is extremely and unnecessarily ugly.

THE CONGESTION FROM A BAD COLD LOOSENED UP IN ONE HOUR

If Rubbed on at Night You're Well Next Morning.

Nerviline Never Fails.

When that cold comes, how is it to be cured? This method is simplicity itself. Rub the chest and throat vigorously with "Nerviline". Rub it in good and deep. Lots of rubbing can't do any harm. Then put some Nerviline in the water and use it as a gargle; this will ease the cough, cut out the phlegm, assist in breaking up the cold quickly.

There is no telling how quickly Nerviline breaks up a hard racking cough, eases a tight chest, relieves a pleuritic pain. Why, there isn't another liniment with half the power, the penetrative qualities, the honest merit that has made Nerviline the most popular American household liniment.

A large 50c bottle of Nerviline cures ills of the whole family, and makes doctor's bill small. Get it to-day. The large size is more economical than the 25c trial size. Sold by all dealers everywhere, or direct from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

MOST FURIOUS BAYONET BATTLE IN HISTORY

TWO MORE BOATS SUNK---CREWS ARE RESCUED

BIG FRENCH ADVANCE HAS BEGUN IN CHAMPAGNE

Gain Top of Slope Leading to the Great Plain---Heavy German Losses Are Reported---Prussian Guard Has Been Cut Up Severely.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 6.—The Morning Post has the following from Champagne, France: The French advance in the Hurlus district and the Camp de Chalons, which is one of the great training grounds for the French army, has altered and is daily continuing to alter the entire aspect of affairs in the Champagne, while in other parts of the line we have been content to keep pounding at the Germans and wearing down their effectives in men and material, snatching from time to time local success as occasion may offer. Here it really seems the forward movement has been begun with promises that it will be continuous. We have now gained the top of the slope leading to a great plain of barren land rolling gently into the low hills and sprinkled freely with plantations of scrubby pine trees. Naturally it has been costly business, and the fighting, which continues unceasingly, is still sending back long trains of wounded to the bases, but the Germans have lost still more heavily. They have some of their finest troops here, including detachments of the Prussian Guard, whole regiments of which have been cut up.

FRENCH BAYONETS EFFECTIVE.

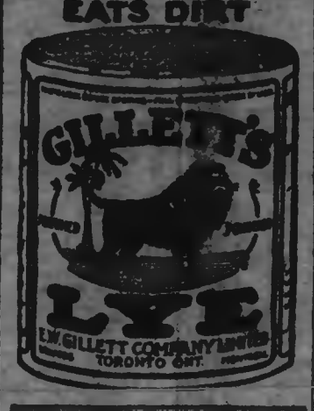
So terrible has been the effect of the concentrated artillery fire, and so frightful from the German standpoint the French bayonet work at close quarters, that many of the prisoners who have been so fortunate as to be taken are insane. It is no mean force that the French have to face here, for, with recent reinforcements that have been rushed up to the danger point, full seven army corps are calculated to be in the district. In several instances so desperate has been the defence offered by the stubborn German infantry that they actually have built parapets of their dead behind which they have disputed every inch of the French advance. Now that they have been driven from what may be termed their prepared positions, the Germans are adapting themselves to warfare on the plains of Champagne, which consists in the rapid fortigcation of each of the little pine plantations that dot the open country with trenches and machine guns.

THE "75" A BIG FACTOR.

These might well have proved formidable obstacles—but there is the "75." In the preliminary fighting towards the plains at the commencement of the second phase in the Champagne operations the famous French field gun is doing some of its most spectacular work. It is mowing down brittle pine trees in swaths. Little woods disappear under the withering fire, leaving a space of stumps and tangled and smashed branches untenable to the defenders, in which they are entrenched like trapped vermin. No part of the country has been more ravaged by war than the districts round the Argonne forest. In the eastern part of the Champagne villages and farms are utterly destroyed to an extent almost inconceivable. The fields are so laid waste that scarcely a blade of grass is to be seen. Trees are smashed down, and the landscape expresses in poignant fashion the conditions of confusion and desolation. In these small villages one can perceive with tragic emphasis the economic effects of the war. I know of one place in particular where out of forty male inhabitants who were called to the army thirty-nine have been killed, most of them leaving families.

RHEIMS STILL SHELLED.

Though the communiques seldom refer to Rheims, the bombardment of that unhappy town goes steadily on intermittently night and day. It is probable that one-third of the houses have been destroyed and one-third damaged, but there still remain undamaged portions and still a remnant of the population clinging almost desperately to their homes. At present there is a renewed rush to getaway, and the means of transport are inadequate to cope with it. Belated orders for the removal of furniture are so numerous that even in normal times it would take transport companies months to fulfill them. Every day there are a dozen or so casualties from German shells. The public buildings and the cathedral are favourite targets, and to these the damage is now irreparable.



More Steamers Are Torpedoed

"Northlands" Sunk Off Beachy Head Yesterday—Crew Was Rescued—"Alantha" Sunk To-day

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, Eng., April 6.The steamer "Northlands" has been torpedoed off Beachy Head in the English Channel Monday afternoon. Her crew was rescued according to despatches from Cardiff to-day.

A despatch from Blyth to-day reported that thirteen members of the crew of the Grimsby trayler 'Atlantha," sunk in the North Sea, landed at that port to-day. The message did not state whether the trawler was the victim of a torpedo or a mine.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir—Inasmuch as L. S. Ward, evidently a Russellite, after nearly three weeks finally mustered up courage to contradict the sermon delivered March 15th in the Woodmen Hall against Mr. Russell's teachings in his books entitled "Scripture Studies." I wish to give a brief answer to his feeble reply. It is admitted in Par. 2 that Mr. Russell repudiates Rev. 20:, where it says: "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. Mr. Russell is the first, no doubt, to dispense with this text, and well he migh, for it doesn't fit his theory. Any one can see that as only the Saints are going to be raised at the beginning of the one thousand years and be taken to live and reign with Christ, as it says in the same chapter, verse 6: The rest of the dead, being the wicked, who will not live again till the thousand years are finished, cannot possibly have a chance during that period. So away goes Russell's future probation theory. There is no probation after Christ leaves Heaven. Proof: Rev. 22:11, 12 says, "He that is filthy let him be filthy still, and he that is holy let him be holy still, and behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be." Can you not see from this text that the destiny of every man is sealed by this decree before Christ comes. How then can be that is filthy have a chance then when the Lord says the opposite? We hope that no one will be deceived by this "will o' the wisp" doctrine of Mr. Russell's.

L. S. Ward thinks that the quotation read in Woodmen Hall from the Russellite paper called the "Watchtower," September 15, 1910, is not a correct quotation. Well, here it is if he wants it, and any one can see that these Russellites claim that their six volumes of "Scripture Studies" are practically the Bible, topically arranged, with Bible proof text given, we might not improperly name the volumes "The Bible in an arranged form." That is to say, they are not merely comments on the Bible, but they are practically the Bible itself. . . ."

Furthermore, not only do we find that people cannot see the divine plan in studying the Bible by itself, but we see also that if any one lays the "Scripture Studies" aside, even after he has used them, after he has become familiar with them, after he has read them for ten years—if he then lays them aside and ignores them, and goes to the Bible alone, though he has understood his Bible for ten years, our experience shows that within two years he goes into darkness. On the other hand, if he had merely read the "Scripture Studies" with their references, and had not read a page of the Bible, as such he would be in the light at the end of two years."

We desire to ask the public where can we find greater blasphemy than this where the writings of a man is placed above the word of God. If Russell's writings are better than God's word we would like to know what Pastor Russell must think of himself. Perhaps the next thing we will hear is that Pastor Russell is Christ Himself. We would like to ask the Russellites if, as they claim, that Christ came in 1874, where is His headquarters? They say they are the saints who have the eye of understanding and can see things clearly. Surely they will tell us where Christ's headquarters are. Is it in Brooklyn, New York, I wonder, or where? This is not asking too much, I am sure, if their claims be true. Perhaps L. S. Ward can tell us. Why keep it a secret any longer. This is a fair question. We would like also to hear L. S. Ward or any Russellite examine the other points of the sermon given in Woodmen Hall. Why did this writer evade the other points?

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your valuable space, I remain,

Yours for the truth only.

Speaker.

RUSSIANS AND AUSTRIANS IN FIERCE FIGHT AT LUPKOW PASS

In Snow Filled Gulleys and Up and Down the Slippery Mountain Sides, the Struggle is Going On.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PETROGRAD, April, 6.—(Special Cable).— The most furious bayonet battle in the history of the world is being fought to-day on the southern ridge and slopes of the Carpathians at Lupkow Pass ,according to despatches reaching here to-day.

In snow filled gulleys and up and down the slippery mountain sides, the struggle is going on. The Austrians in their retreat southward from the railway, abandened their artillery. The Russians moved up the heights supported only by small mountain guns.

Neither side has been able to put its artillery to effective use in these mountain ranges. Guerilla warfare, with fierce struggles between small groups in narrow defiles with Austrian and Slav clashing with cold steel, is strewing the Lupkow region with thousands of dead.

The Czar's troops have not yet passed Lupkow, according to the best information available at the War Office to-day. They have driven the enemy from each successive height, dominating the railway, the Austrians making their stand on the last ridge. Because of the nature of the fighting at this point despatches are conflicting, and it is possible that with both lines broken by intervening mountain peaks, a few small bodies of Russians have made their way down the southern slope and through the Austrian lines.

Heavy reinforcements have been thrown into the attack on the Lupkow. The War Office believes that once the way is cleared through this pass, the right wing of the enemy north of Usok will begin to withdraw.

THROWING A HAND GRENADE.—The use of hand grenades at close quarters has been one of the features of the battle of the trenches. A British soldier is here photographed in the act of throwing a grenade.

Germany Not So Optimistic As They Were A While Ago

LONDON, April 6.—The Daily News correspondent telegraphing from Rotterdam says Paul Michaelis in his weekly review of the war in the Berliner Tageblatt is evidently in an exceedingly gloomy mood regarding the present position of the German armies and speaks of the spirit of modesty that now reigns in Germany today. He says: "We only see how tremendously difficult it is made for us to preserve our national unity and freedom. Many dreamed too easily of our victory over our enemies. The people thought to gather in a harvest when really the first preparations for final result still had to be created. In the meantime we have become more modest and it becomes clear to us that even with the greatest self-sacrifice it will only be with difficulty that we shall be able to conquer the opposition of the world of enemies.

"Everybody already has long ago abandoned the expectation that between to-day and to-morrow the world could be healed by the German spirit. We have had to be convinced unwillingly and by hard facts that in this war it is not a question of putting through a fantastic world policy, but the question of protecting our houses and home. As the war has begun to-day a new yoke upon the world; so certainly will it have to be carried on for self-preservation of the German Empire. It would be idle to try and fix details of what the final peace will be, but in any case our object must be the making certain of our national existence for the longest possible time."

After referring to the course of the submarine war the writer concludes: "We are confident that this winter of our discontent will be followed by a glorious summer."

LIQUOR BANISHED FROM THE KING'S HOUSES

LONDON, April 5.—Teetotalism will be enforced in all the King's households beginning Wednesday. An official announcement, just issued, dated April 6, says: "By the King's command, no wines or spirits will be consumed in any of his Majesty's houses after to-day."

Canadian Wounded Soldiers Had Exciting Passage in Channel

LONDON, April 6.—While crossing the Channel on Saturday the British hospital ship Navassa, with several hundred wounded soldiers, including some 30 Canadians aboard, was chased by a German submarine for 45 minutes. When the pirate was sighted the Navassa fled, developing a speed of 20 knots, and thus escaping. Wounded men tell the story, which is vouched for by officers who talked with the crew.

Several remarkable cases are among the latest batch of wounded. Private J. Gilk, of Hamilton, Fourth Battalion, was shot through the body while bringing up rations. The bullet pierced his liver, but his life was saved and he now is rapidly recovering.

Sergeant Aldridge, of the Princess Pats, a former North-West Mounted Policeman, has nearly fifty wounds between his ankles and thighs. A shell burst right at his feet. He also is wounded in both hands. Others nearby were unhurt.

The case of Private George Bye, of Woodstock, First Battalion, is in sharp contrast. A shell dropped in a trench and exploded a yard from him, but the only effect was to blind him temporarily. Three other men were killed and five wounded.

The Alberta Dragoons, the only cavalry with the Canadian division, are doing all the work, which is chiefly despatch riding. They formed part of a big cavalry force in reserve at Neuve Chapelle.

Wounded men say the Canadians have located many snipers. One was found concealed under the roof of a house with food enough for three months. Another was caught in the clock tower of a town behind the line.

Fearing that pictures might reach the enemy the authorities have deprived all Canadian officers and men of cameras. A stricter censorship is being imposed on letters.

The boys are urgently asking for cigarettes, and want their people at home to send them.

Word reached here last night that at least one brigade of the Canadian division is again in the trenches.

RETURNED "PAT" HONOURED.

People of Forest Welcome Private Jennings, Invalided Home.

FOREST, Ont., April 5—The people of Forest and district turned out en masse to-day in a 'welcome home' to Private Harry Jennings of the Princess Patricias, who was invalided to his home here after being severely wounded in the fighting in France. Forty automobiles were in a huge procession which wound up at the Town Hall, where Jennings was presented with a handsome gold watch and an address of appreciation in behalf of the citizens of the town. Mayor Baillie presided.

HANGING OF LOCK GATES NOT TILL AUGUST.

Mr. Arthur Stephen was down from Washago last week looking over the R. M. Co's. fleet and expect that fitting up for the final cleaning up will commence at once. It will take a couple of months to finish up here.

The lock gates from Healey Falls to Trenton are all made, but will not likely all be hung before August 1st as the bridge at Campbellford is likely to hold the work until then.—Hastings Star.

WAGERING 20 TO 1 WAR WILL END BY DEC. 1.

LONDON, April 5—On the stock exchange bets are being offered of 20 to 1 against the war lasting until December 1st.

500,000 BEDS ADDED TO LONDON HOSPITALS

LONDON, April 5—The military authorities have instructed the London hospitals to extend the accommodation for wounded. It is expected that half a million beds will be added by next month.

GIRLS! DRAW A MOIST CLOTH THROUGH HAIR

Try This! Hair Gets Thick, Glossy, Wavy and Beautiful at Once

Immediate?—Yes! Certain?—that's the joy of it. Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as a young girl's after a Danderine hair cleanse. Just try this —moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt or excessive oil, and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair. A delightful surprise awaits those whose hair has been neglected or is scraggy, faded, dry, brittle or thin. Besides beautifying the hair, Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair, but what will please you most will be after a few week's use when you see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair, and lots of it, surely get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and just try it.

A Photograph of one's self carries with it the personal element so essential to Easter Giving—and it is so inexpensive.

EASTER

Florence T. Robinson

As pearl shafts pierce the shades o'er yonder night
Slowly the King of Earth's glad life appears,
And with his radiance doth dispel the fears,
With all the shapes of terror and affright,
That wait upon the sombre steps of night.
And still from dawn to dawn, thro'out the years
Echoes the Word that yet the spirit hears:
God said, "Let there be light,' and there was light.
So from the blackness of the grave's dark skies
Gleams the sweet radiance of the coming day;
Behold the Sun of Righteousness arise,
And with His beams drive Death's wan fears away.
Again the Word: "I am the Light,"
He saith,
"Behold, I vanquish the dread night of Death."

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Frost

"Yes, of course. They've all got important information, and they all want to see me personally—or else the Commissioner. Well, where is he, Shapton? Show him in."

"I can't. He's gone, sir. He'd been waiting here half an hour or so when he was taken away by Sir Ralph Fairfield."

If he had not been trained to school his feelings, Heldon Foyle might have started. As it was, he picked up a pen and toyed idly with it. The man, who had a fair idea that his news was of importance, was a little disappointed.

"I see," said the superintendent. "What happened?"

"Why, Sir Ralph asked to see you and was shown into the waiting-room with the other man. They both seemed a bit upset, and the first chap's jaw dropped. 'So you are here,' says Sir Ralph, a bit angrily. 'Yes, sir,' says the other, and he had become sulky. 'This is my man,' says Sir Ralph to me, 'and I would like a word with him alone, if you don't mind.' Of course, I left 'em alone. In a quarter of an hour they came out, and Sir Ralph told me that there had been a little misunderstanding — that neither of them wished to see you after all."

"Thank you, Shapton," said the superintendent, resting his chin on his hand. "Ask Mr. Green if he can spare a moment, will you?"

In the interval that elapsed before the chief inspector came, Foyle did some quick thinking. Criminal investigation is always full of unexpected developments, and this seemed to him to offer possibilities. It was clear to him that a man had come to Scotland Yard to give some information, and that Fairfield had followed post-haste to shut the man's mouth. For the moment he put aside all speculation as to the baronet's motive. The question was, who was the man he had taken away? Who would be likely to know something? It must be some one intimately associated with the baronet, some one who probably lived with him. There was only one man—his servant.

The line of reasoning became clear. What would a servant know which he would recognize as of obvious importance? Fairfield might have received a letter from Grell, but if he did not wish to let the police know of it, he would scarcely have been careless enough to leave it where his man might have obtained access to it. The second solution was more probable. Suppose Grell had paid a visit to Fairfield and the man had recognized him?

Foyle was not led away by theories. He knew that the most ingenious deductions often led to failure. But in this case he had nothing to lose by putting the matter to the test. He had not taken off his hat or coat, and when Green came in he was ready to put his plan into execution. In a few words he told what had happened and his conclusions.

"What I want you to do, Green, is to ring up Fairfield and get him out of the way on some pretext. Keep him here till I come back. I'm going to have a talk with that servant. If you can't get him on the 'phone, you'll have to go round and get him out somehow. I want a good man whom he doesn't know to come to the Albany with me. Give me a chance to get there before you ring up."

"Very good, sir. Maxwell is free. I'll tell him you want him."

In a quarter of an hour Maxwell, an unobtrusive, well-dressed man, had taken up his station and was casually loitering where he could see all who entered or emerged from the Albany. Foyle himself was out of view, but he had a fine sight of his subordinate. Ten minutes elapsed. The well-dressed detective dropped the stick he was listlessly swinging between his fingers, and Foyle knew that Sir Ralph had risen to the bait. It remained to be found out whether the servant was still in the chambers.

Waiting just long enough for Fairfield to get a reasonable distance away, Foyle whirled up in the lift to the baronet's rooms. His first pressure on the bell remained unanswered, but at a second and longer ring he was confronted by the upright figure of Roberts. The servant gave a little gasp of astonishment as he saw his visitor.

"Sir Ralph is out, sir," he stammered.

"Yes, I know," said the detective pleasantly. "I did not come here to see Sir Ralph, but to see you. You know who I am. Let me in, won't you?"

He pushed his way into the place and entered the sitting-room, Roberts following closely behind him. The man was evidently very nervous. Foyle sat down.

"Now, my man, you needn't feel nervous. Your master won't be back yet awhile. You came to my office to see me this morning, and left before I got back. I've come to see what this important information you've got for me is."

Roberts shifted his weight from one foot to the other and rubbed his hands together nervously. His eyes never met the superintendent's. "It's all a mistake," he asserted unsteadily. "I—I——"

"That won't do, my man," said Foyle brusquely. "You know something which it is important I should know. Sir Ralph has told you to keep your mouth shut. But you're going to tell me before either of us leaves this room. I want you to speak now. Never mind about thinking of a lie."

His blunt manner had its effect. Roberts drew himself together. "Right, sir, I'll tell you what I came about. You're a gentleman and won't see me a loser. Sir Ralph he promised to look after me if I kept my mouth shut."

It is no part of a detective's duty to allow personal feelings to interfere with his business. Foyle's contempt for a man who was ready to bargain to betray his master's confidence was sunk in his content at so easily obtaining his ends. "That will be all right," he answered. "You'll be paid according to the value of your information."

"Then it's this, sir," blurted out Roberts. "Mr. Grell, whom you thought was murdered, is not dead. He came here an hour or two ago, and was in with Sir Ralph for quite a time."

"Oh." The detective smiled incredulously, and snapping open his cigar-case selected a smoke, nipped off the end, and deliberately struck a match. "You've got hold of some cock-and-bull idea. I suppose you've deceived yourself with some fancied resemblance."

"It was Mr. Grell himself, I tell you," averred the servant earnestly. "Don't I know him well enough? He was roughly dressed and had shaved off his moustache, but I'm certain of it. He came up by the lift as large as life with a note for Sir Ralph. I didn't notice him much at first, because I thought he was a street messenger. But when Sir Ralph told me to bring him in I had a good look at him. I knew I had seen him before, but the change in him threw me off for a while. It was only after I left him with Sir Ralph that it came on me like a shot. I knew that there was a reward out in connection with the murder, and I came on to you at once. If you had been in I should have told you all this then, but Sir Ralph came after me and promised to pay me well to keep my tongue between my teeth. But right is right, sir, and I hope you'll do what you can for me. For I'll take my dying oath that the man I saw here was Mr. Grell."

With calm, expressionless face Foyle listened. His inferences were justified. It would be necessary to keep Roberts from gossipping, and for that reason it was policy to discount the importance of his information. The detective puffed a cloud of smoke to the ceiling.

"You seem pretty sure of yourself. I think you've made a mistake, but we'll go into the thing fully and you'll get whatever your information is worth. How long was this chap in with your master?"

"I don't know. I didn't see him come out. He had been in there about ten minutes when I started out to see you."

"Right. Now I'm going to wait here till your master comes back. You can deny that I have questioned you, or that you have told me anything, if you like. I shan't give you away. Where's the telephone?"

With a little breath of relief the servant conducted Foyle to an inner room and pointed out the instrument. A few seconds sufficed to put the superintendent in communication with Green, and in a quick, low-voiced conversation he was told what device had been practised to keep Sir Ralph away.

"I'll let him go now, then?" said Green, and his superior assented.

When Sir Ralph Fairfield returned to his chambers, he found Heldon Foyle seated before the fire engrossed in a paper and with his feet stretched out to the cheerful blaze.

"Good morning, Sir Ralph," said the detective, rising. "I just dropped in as I was near here to tell you how things were progressing, and to see if you'd got any news."

That Racking Persistent Cough

Can Be Quickly Cured By

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

All obstinate coughs and colds yield quickly to the general action of "Dr. Wood's" for the simple reason that this valuable preparation combines all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree with which is combined Wild Cherry Bark, and the soothing, healing and expectorant properties of other excellent herbs and barks. This makes it, without any chance of denial, the best cough medicine on the market to-day.'

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that it is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark, and that the name, The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont., appears on the wrapper. Price, 25c and 50c.

Mrs. H. C. Kingston, Meota Jaw, Sask., writes: "I wish to recommend Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup as being the best cough medicine on the market. A few months ago I took a severe cold which left me with a racking cough. After trying several cough remedies, with no result, I decided to get a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and after taking the first two doses it began to effect a cure, and after continuing its use for a short time, I was entirely cured. I cannot say too much in its praise."

The only man who should not advertise is the man who has nothing to offer in the way of commodity of service —and— such a person is a dead one—whether he knows it—or not.

MRS. WINN'S ADVICE TO WOMEN

Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and be Restored to Health.

Kansas City, Mo.—"The doctors told me I could never be a mother. Every month the pains were so bad that I could not bear my weight on one foot. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and had not finished the first bottle when I felt greatly relieved and I took it until it made me sound and well, and I now have two fine baby girls. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I always speak a word in favor of your medicine to other women who suffer when I have an opportunity." — Mrs. H. T. Winn, 1225 Freemont Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Read What Another Woman says:

Cumming, Ga.—"I tell some suffering woman every day of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it has done for me. I could not eat or sleep, had a bad stomach and was in misery all the time. I could not do my housework or walk any distance without suffering great pain. I tried doctors' medicines and different patent medicine but failed to get relief. My husband brought home your Vegetable Compound and in two weeks I could eat anything, could sleep like a healthy baby, and walk a long distance without feeling tired. I can highly recommend your Vegetable Compound to women who suffer as I did, and you are at liberty to use this letter."—Mrs. CHARLIE HAGLEY, R. 3, Cumming, Ga.

TEMPERANCE URGED.

Archbishop of Canterbury Preaches Against Drinking During War.

LONDON, April 5. — The Archbishop of Canterbury in his Easter sermon at Canterbury Cathedral said: "Unless we can decisively destroy the insidious lure to intoxicating drink, the whole issues of the war, we are told, may be affected. Can it be so? Is it thinkable that for want of effort and discipline brought to bear upon ourselves at home, we shall let the splendid devotion of our brothers and our sons in the trenches and on the battleships be wasted? To every thoughtful man and woman such a notion is intolerable, and we have set ourselves to see whether there be any way in which, by example or by fellowship, we can help to ease the stress or temptation and to carry our part of the common burden. We are considerably assured that if in British households generally the use of alcoholic drink is voluntarily suspended during the continuation of the war, the effect would be so startling as to change the whole situation. If that be so, are there any of us who will, willingly, hold back?"

CANADIAN CASUALTIES.

OTTAWA, April 5.—The casualty list issued last night by the Militia Department is as follows:

First Battalion — Reported killed, Pte. Sidney Preston.

Third Battalion — Dangerous ill, Pte. Robert J. MacLean. Reported killed, Pte. Robert Gilmore.

Twenty-Third Battalion—Seriously ill, Pte. J. Barrazina.

Princess Patricias — Died of wounds (formerly reported wounded), Pte. William McB. Robertson, Pte. Joseph Lorette. Reported missing, Pte. John Burns. Dangerously wounded, Pte. Stephen Findlay. Dangerously ill, Sergt. D. Stirling.

Letters Pouring In.

LONDON, April 5. — The first morning mail to reach Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George Saturday brought about 15,000 letters, virtually all dealing with the abstinence from drinking in England. This number indicates that the day's total of letters will be in excess of 35,000.

These communications were received by the Chancellor in answer to the full-page appeal appearing in the newspapers of Friday urging citizens to write him in favor of absolute prohibition.

Last of Three Women Hymn Writers of World Wide Fame

Fanny Crosby.

Alice Holmes.

Annie Sherwood Hawks.

Fanny Crosby's Best Known Hymn.

Safe in the arms of Jesus,
Safe on His gentle breast,
There by His love o'ershaded,
Sweetly my soul shall rest.
Hark, 'tis the voice of angels
Borne in a song to me,
Over the fields of glory,
Over the jasper sea.

Safe in the arms of Jesus,
Safe from corroding care,
Safe from the world's temptations,
Sin cannot harm me there.
Free from the blight of sorrow,
Free from my doubts and fears;
Only a few more trials,
Only a few more tears.

Jesus, my heart's dear refuge,
Jesus has died for me;
Firm in the Rock of Ages
Ever my heart shall be.
Here let me wait with patience,
Wait till the night is o'er,
Wait till I see the morning
Break on the golden shore.

Alice Holmes' Best Known Hymn

Oh! hallowed day of peaceful rest,
We joyful greet Thy morning blest,
And to Thy holy courts repair
To offer up our fervent prayer.

To Thee, our heavenly Father, King,
Glad author of sweet praise, we sing,
And for the Book of life divine,
Wherein Thy priceless treasures shine.

We listen to instruction given
How we may reach yon blissful heaven,
Where all is love and perfect peace
And earthborn cares and sorrows cease.

And tears are wiped from streaming eyes
By angels' hands beyond the skies.
Oh! God in heaven, hear our prayer
And kindly grant we enter there.

Dear Lord, while here below we live
Our constant thoughts to Thee we give;
And search with truthful earnestness
To gain eternal happiness.

Then may we reach that verdant shore
And dwell with Christ forevermore;
With tuneful verse to sing God's praise
And happy be through endless days.

Mrs. Hawks' Best Known Hymn

I need Thee every hour,
Most gracious Lord;
No tender voice like Thine
Can peace afford.

I need Thee every hour,
Stay Thou near by;
Temptations lose their power
When Thou art nigh.

I need Thee every hour,
In joy or pain;
Come quickly and abide,
Or life is vain.

I need Thee every hour;
Teach me Thy will,
And Thy rich promises
In me fulfil.

I need Thee every hour,
Most Holy One;
Oh, make me Thine indeed,
Thou Blessed Son!

WHO can measure the far reaching effects of a hymn?

No influence has been more potent in religious life than that exerted by the hymns of successive ages. And as no one has had a larger share in keeping the lamp of religion brightly burning than women it is especially fitting that they should have a high place in the list of hymn writers, that their words should have been carried to the ends of the earth to turn the hearts of men to God, should have been sung in the great revival meetings where men and women are moved to cast away the base things of earth and turn to a Higher Power for help, should find a place in the services that from week to week comfort and uplift men and women who meet together for praise, petition and thanksgiving.

This part women have played well, many of the most familiar compositions in hymnology being due to them, although comparatively few who hear or sing them know the authorship. Within a little more than a year two venerable women hymn writers, both of them blind, have passed away, Miss Fanny Crosby, who died a few weeks ago, and Mrs. Holmes, of Jersey City, who preceded her to the world beyond by about a year.

There is still living in Bennington, Vt., the author of many hymns, one of them, "I Need Thee Every Hour," said to have been translated into more foreign languages than any other modern hymn. Mrs. Annie Sherwood Hawks will be eighty years old May 28, and owing to her advanced age and feeble condition she seldom leaves the house, but she carries on an extensive correspondence with friends in all parts of the country and receives many visitors.

Mrs. Hawks belongs to New York State, having been born in Hoosick and educated in the public schools and in Troy Seminary. Her ancestry was Dutch on her mother's side and English on the paternal. In 1850 she was married to Charles Hial Hawks, of Hoosick a man of much culture and very sympathetic with his wife's literary work.

In January, 1893, Mr. and Mrs. Hawks removed to Brooklyn, Mr. Hawks being connected with a New York banking firm, where they lived until his death in 1898, when Mrs. Hawks went to live with her son-in-law, one-time Surgeon General Warren E. Putnam, and Mrs. Putnam, her only daughter. For the last twenty-two years she has lived with them in Bennington, Vt.

She was always passionately fond of books, and from childhood her reading took a wide range. In her fourteenth year she began to write verses, her first poem being published in a Troy newspaper. It attracted immediate attention and soon was followed by others, which were published in other newspapers and periodicals.

In 1868, at the request of her pastor, the Rev. Robert Lowry, D. D., she turned her attention to hymn writing. Among others she wrote "The Cross for Jesus," "Good Night" and "Why Weepest Thou?" Dr. Lowry setting all of her words to music. Although she is known most widely for her hymns she has written many poems.

Of her most famous hymn, "I Need Thee Every Hour," she says:

"Whenever my attention is called to it I am conscious of great satisfaction in the thought that I was permitted to write the hymn 'I Need Thee Every Hour' and that it was wafted out to the world on the wings of love and joy, rather than under the stress of a great personal sorrow, with which it has been so often associated in the minds of those who sing it.

"I remember well the morning, many years ago, when in the midst of the daily cares of my home, then in a distant city, I was so filled with a sense of nearness to the Master that, wondering how one could live without Him either in joy or pain, these words, 'I need Thee every hour,' were flashed into my mind, the thought at once taking full possession of me.

"Seating myself by the open window in the balmy air of the bright June day, I caught my pencil, and the words were soon committed to paper, almost as they are being sung now.

"It was only by accident, as it would seem, that they were set to music a few months later and sung, for the first time, at a Sunday school convention held in one of the large Western cities. From there they were taken further West and sung by thousands of voices before the echo came back to me, thrilling my heart with surprise and gladness.

"For myself the hymn was prophetic rather than expressive of my own experience at the time it was written, and I did not understand why it so touched the great throbbing heart of humanity. It was not until long years after, when the shadow fell over my way, the shadow of a great loss—that I understood something of the comforting power in the words which I had been permitted to give out to others in my hours of sweet security and peace.

"Now when I hear them sung, as I have sometimes, by hundreds of voices in chorus, I find it difficult to realise that they were ever, consciously, my own thought or penned by my own hand.

"Copies of the hymn have been sent to me in a number of different languages, but the one I prize most highly is the one printed in the, to me, queer and untranslatable characters of the Burmese print."

Such, briefly, is the simple story of "I Need Thee Every Hour."

A hymn that has brought thousands to the "mercy seat" in great revivals is the one which asks pertinently, "Who'll Be the next to follow Jesus?" When a great audience has been stirred by an evangelist and the response to the "call" surges forth there is often a reaction. To set the next wave in motion some one starts this hymn or something similar to it, and the converts begin to go forward:—

"Who'll be the next to follow Jesus?
Who'll be the next His cross to bear?
Some one is ready, some one is waiting!
Who'll be the next a crown to wear?

Refrain:
"Who'll be the next?
Who'll be the next to follow Jesus?
Who'll be the next to follow Jesus now?
Follow Jesus now?

"Who'll be the next to follow Jesus,
Follow His weary, bleeding feet?
Who'll be the next to lay every burden down
At the Father's mercy seat?

"Who'll be the next to follow Jesus
Down through the Jordan's rolling tide?
Who'll be the next to join with the ransomed
Singing upon the other side?

The hymn "In the Valley," with its pathos and its comfort, had touched many who were approaching the valley as well as the hearts of those who mourned for friends who have already entered it:—

"A few more prayers, a few more tears;
It won't be long, it won't be long;
A few more months, a few more years,
Will hush my song, this earthly song,
And then I shall sleep in the Valley.

"A little pain, a little joy,
And less, or more, it matters not;
Some mingling yet with earth's alloy,
And then forgot, ah! soon forgot,
While I sleep, calmly sleep, in the Valley.

"A little gathering of the loved,
Whose patient hearts were always true,
Some tears to mingle with the sod,
A very few—a very few,
When they lay me to rest in the Valley.

"But Jesus' love, His precious love,
Will be my stay, my only stay,
And radiance gleaming from above
Will light the way, the lonely way,
When my soul passes through the dark Valley."

Miss Fanny Crosby, who died at the age of ninety-four last February, had written more than eight thousand hymns, some of the best known being "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," "Saved by Grace," "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Saviour," "Keep Me Near the Cross" and "Rescue the Perishing."

Miss Crosby was blind from infancy, a hot poultice that had been applied for some slight trouble with her eyes having destroyed the optic nerve. She was always happy, however, and when only eight years old wrote:—

"Oh, what a happy soul am I.
Although I cannot see
I am resolved that in this world
Contented I will be."

She was educated at the New York Institution for the Blind and remained as a teacher until she was forty years old. While there she wrote ballads, using the money received from them to pay for little charities in which she wanted to indulge herself. Some of these ballads are still well remembered—"Proud World, Goodby," "Hazel Dell," "Honeysuckle Glen" and "Never Forget the Dear Ones."

She used to take her ballads to W. H. Doane, a noted musical composer, and hum the tune that she thought would fit the words. He would then write the music and soon they would be published. Mr. Doane started her in her career as a hymn writer. When composing she had the habit of holding an open book across her eyes, "Golden Hymns" being a favorite one for this purpose.

One day Mr. Doane came to her and said that he wanted a hymn written in great haste, as he was about to take a train for the West and wanted to take it with him. Miss Crosby said that she thought she could do it, and, going upstairs to her own room, she sat down to think about it. In fifteen minutes she seemed to arouse herself from a trance-like state, and there, on a paper before her, was the completed hymn, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," which Mr. Doane took West with him and which was sung with tremendous effect at great religious meetings. Ever since it has been a favorite expression of the religious fervor which sweeps over bodies of people subject to revival influences. Miss Crosby always believed that she had been inspired to write the words:—

"Safe in the arms of Jesus,
Safe on His gentle breast,
There by His love o'ershaded,
Sweetly my soul shall rest."

In 1912 Miss Crosby addressed a large evangelistic meeting in Carnegie Hall and led the singing of one of her hymns. She made a little speech, saying that she "hadn't grown old one particle and didn't intend to." She believed that "the Lord was going to give her many more years to write many more hymns." Then she repeated her well known poem, "Some day the silver cord shall break and I shall see Him face to face," and the great audience wept and cheered and the little blind woman smiled back sweetly to the friendly faces that she knew were turned toward her, although she could not see them. Her birthdays in Bridgeport, Conn., where she spent the last years of her life, were public festivals and her birthday was given an official place in the Methodist calendar.

Although Miss Crosby was usually known by her maiden name, she was married when young to Alexander Van Alstyne, a blind music teacher, who has been dead many years. Miss Crosby had good reason to believe that she would have a long life, for her mother lived to be 102 years old and her grandmother 106.

There was a very tender friendship between Miss Crosby and Miss Alice Holmes, known as the blind poetess of Jersey City, who died a little more than a year ago at the advanced age of ninety-three. The two were roommates at the New York Institution for the Blind. Miss Holmes often referred to that time as the happiest of her life. She wrote a poem when she left expressing her feelings.

"Adieu, adieu, my long loved home,
Where genial spirits dwell,
For I must bid thy hearth and hall
This day a sad farewell.

The vesper bell will peal at eve,
But not, alas, for me,
For I shall be alone and sad,
Far, far away from thee."

A few years ago Miss Holmes had the felicity of receiving Miss Crosby in her own home, and the two sat down and held each other's hands, becoming young again as they talked of the days of long ago just like any old schoolmates, except that there was added the bond of their common affliction. Miss Crosby was the more active of the two. She had gone to Jersey City to address a meeting in a large church there, as she often went about the country on such missions, and she brought into the more quiet life of Miss Holmes new interests and enthusiasms. Miss Holmes wrote a tribute which expressed something of the deep affection in which she always held her old friend:—

"When grief or pain oppressed my heart
Thy tender care, thy counsels sweet
Would to my soul new joys impart.
And though those days fled fast away,
Of them bright visions oft return,
And cherished sparks of friendship still
For thee on my heart's altar burn.
And, Frances dear, may I not hope
In all thy life, through good and ill,
That she who treasures sweet thy name
May sometimes be remembered still?"

Miss Holmes wrote fewer religious poems than her friend. She was very patriotic and during the war wrote many poems relating to battles and enlisting officers. She was also the local laureate and many a Jersey City incident and personage received tributes from her pen.

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat Less Meat, Also Take Glass of Salts Before Eating Breakfast

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a teaspoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

THE FIELD TELEPHONE

The field telephone plays an important part in the operations of modern armies on active service. By means of it the whole army is kept in touch with the headquarters, and orders that in the old days would take perhaps an hour or more to send from one part of the fighting line to another by an orderly officer, can now be transmitted in a couple of seconds.

The line is laid in sections, each section being of greatly varying length, from a mile to ten miles. At the end of each section an officer takes the message and communicates the order he receives over the line to the officer at the next section.

Directly the place for headquarters is fixed, after any movement of the army, the telephone linesmen begin laying the line. The work is done very rapidly. I have seen the lines laid from one wing of the army to the other and connected up with headquarters in half an hour when the right and left wings lay a hundred miles apart, says an observer.

In this war the work of laying the wire has sometimes been carried out under tremendous difficulties. I was with a party of linesmen who were laying the line along a ridge of high ground about a couple of miles in length when the enemy suddenly began to shell the ridge.

This was about four o'clock in the morning, when it was just getting light. We had to finish the last quarter of a mile under severe fire, and we did it in record time.

The Honorable Artillery Company of London was founded in the reign of Henry the Eighth.

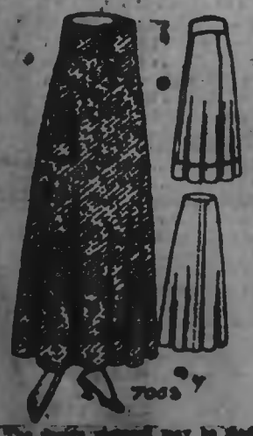
Floating mines have figured in naval warfare for nearly 300 years.

Just One Application and the Hairs Vanish

(Toilet Talks)

Any woman can keep her skin free from unsightly hair or fuzz if she will follow these simple instructions: When hairy growths appear, apply a simple paste, made by mixing some water with powdered delatone. Apply this to hairy surface and after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This is a harmless treatment, but be sure you get the real delatone.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE



The Girdle pictured may be made up in three or four parts, as preferred. The three gored style is plain in the front and the four gored with the wide hipped seams or joining. Another feature of this flare skirt is the hem facing, a revived fashion that is very smart just now, and the wide belt and the pocket add not a little to the good effect. The pattern, No. 7,033, comes in sizes from 20 to 32 inches waist measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

FIGHTING IN THE DARK

Tremendous Strain Upon Men in Engine Room of Warships

Deprived of the steadying satisfaction of at least seeing the enemy, the men below decks in warships are keenly conscious of the struggle which may be going on without.

Blinded, they are not deaf. The keen artificer knows full well the significance of the signals which the bells announce and the dial records, and the knowledge makes the greater the strain of fighting "in the dark." The recorded experiences of an artificer in a vessel which has seen much action prove how accurately the engineer may follow the course of a struggle.

"As you know," said the engineer, "we encountered submarine attack. We had a great time, and it fairly took it out of us. You want a special breed of man for a job of that kind, for the strain is something to remember. We came out of it all right, however, and I am trying not to be too proud of being one of the boys.

"We had a good notion of how the racket was going, shut off as we were in our own little world. First it was 'Full ahead,' and we opened her out and let her go, perhaps her best. We don't know what that is, and neither did the other side. Those of them who were left to make calculations might be reckoning what their vessels were doing—and they nearly 'bu'st' themselves trying to get away—might arrive at within a few knots of our speed, but they would still be .. bit off. I reckon we had still a bit up our sleeve when the first gun went, after which we got a hint not to overpress her.

"That meant that we were comfortably within range with our left, so to speak, and could keep them there as long as we chose, and hit. And hitting we seemed to be and no error. I could feel the ship quiver a bit as the big guns fired, but the drone of my turbine and the gauges on the dial were my chief attention. At least, they should have been. I must confess, however, that from first to last I was on the quiver for more signals, and it was a God-send that we had the gauges, and the dial, and the signals upon which we might attempt to concentrate, for the strain was absolutely tremendous. It was the absolute horror of something coming to disable our engines. My ears were a-cock all the time for the roar of a steam 'main' hit and carried away; for the shot that might wreck a boiler; for the rattle of steering gear gone."

Famous Athlete Trains Sailors

Lieut. C.B. FRY.

Lieut. Fry is the British cricketer, athlete and journalist, whose famous training ship, the Mercury, on the River Hamble, has given more than 1,000 boys to the Royal navy. He is still acting as honorary director of the Mercury and helping to turn out future British naval heroes.

A CANADIAN HERO

Winnipeg Youth Badly Wounded But Delivered His Despatches

In a long, barn-like building that in times of peace is a freight shed, but which the exigencies of war have caused the military authorities to commandeer for use as a hospital lies a young Canadian soldier, wrote a special correspondent of the Toronto Mail and Empire from Boulogne-Sur-Mer, France. His name is R. F. Bobby and his home is Fort Osborne, Winnipeg. When the glowing embers of unrest in Europe spread to a world conflagration he was in England. Being a soldier (he was a member of Lord Strathcona's Horse) his first thought was of enlisting, and he applied to the military authorities. He was given the opportunity of either returning to Canada to rejoin his regiment or of joining the Royal Garrison Artillery as a despatch rider. Eager to be in the thick of things without delay, he chose the latter alternative, and now he is lying wounded in a Boulogne hospital, one of the heroes of the war.

The scene of his exploit was a road between La Bassee and Le Venture. One afternoon he was given an important despatch to carry from one part of the field operations to another, involving the crossing of an area swept by heavy fire. Mounting his horse, he started carefully and soon was close to the most dangerous place. The Germans were directing a particularly heavy artillery bombardment against the British position on this particular day and things were warm for all concerned. But the task before the Canadian was hazardous in the extreme and called for unbounded nerve.

Bobby was equal to the occasion. Bending low over the neck of his mount he dashed forward, and, in spite of the withering fusilade, it seemed for a time that he would fulfil his mission unhurt. But just before reaching shelter his horse was hit and went down headlong, pitching the rider heavily. The Canadian was stunned for the moment, and when he recovered consciousness it was only to find that he was so badly hurt that he could scarcely move.

All around shells were bursting and it seemed impossible that the injured despatch rider could escape for much longer. But the man himself was far from giving up. With infinite difficulty he managed to raise himself and to crawl slowly in the direction of cover. After a period that seemed to him like an untold age, and during which he suffered agony, he succeeded, and his despatch safely reached its destination.

By one of the oddest coincidences he chanced to be taken to the one hospital among dozens and placed in the one part of that hospital where he would be attended by both a Canadian doctor and a Canadian nurse.

Turkish Holidays.

In nothing is the natural soberness of the Turk more manifest than in his holidays. He keeps fewer of them than his Christian compatriot, and most of them he celebrates in such a way that an outsider would scarcely suspect the fact. This is partly, perhaps, a matter of temperament and partly because Islam has not yet passed a certain stage of evolution. A holiday, that is, is still a holy day. Secular and patriotic festivals are everywhere of comparatively recent origin. In Turkey, where church and state are one to a degree now unknown in western countries, there was no real national holiday until 1909. Then the first anniversary of the re-establishment of the constitution was celebrated on the twenty-third of July (July 10, old style). A highly picturesque celebration it was, too, in Constantinople, at least, with its magnificent array of rugs and medieval tents on the Hill of Liberty, its review of troops by the sultan, its procession of the guilds of the city and its evening illuminations.

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED SWORN STATEMENT

Of Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Who Gratefully Gives All Credit to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

It is one thing to make big claims for a medicine and quite another thing to produce irrefutable evidence that it actually cures in serious cases.

We prefer to let the cured ones speak for themselves, and that is why you find in almost every newspaper the report of someone who has been cured by the use of Dr. Chase's medicines. To-day we present the sworn statement of Mr. Wesley Maxwell. When a man goes to this trouble in expressing his gratitude there can be no question of the benefit he has received. Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Orangeville, Ont., writes: "I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I must tell you that before I started using them I could only make water with the greatest difficulty, and had many severe pains in the back. I am completely cured now by the use of these pills. Before that I used a lot of doctors' medicine without any benefit that I could see. I am thankful for being cured, and can recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills very highly."

SWORN STATEMENT.

"This is to certify that I, Wesley Maxwell, of the Township of Caledon, was cured of kidney trouble by taking Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

"Wesley Maxwell."

(Sworn before me as correct this 6th day of January, 1915. — Wm. Hawkins, Sen. Justice of the Peace).

This statement is also endorsed by the Rev. Geo. W. Robinson, who is Mr. Maxwell's pastor.

This cure will interest a great many people who are suffering as Mr. Maxwell was with kidney and urinary troubles. It will only cost you a quarter to buy a box of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and put this medicine to the test. We are sure that you will be thankful to the writer for describing his cure to you. A Musical Feat.

The old farmer and his wife live near the village church. One warm Sunday evening, while they sat dozing on the porch, a cricket set up a loud chirping.

"I just love that chirpin' noise," said the old man, drowsily, and before the cricket had stopped he was fast asleep.

Soon after the church choir broke into a beautiful chant.

"Yes," remarked the old farmer, sleepily. "They do it with their hind legs."

THE SOLDIER'S SONGS

Strange Scientific Reason For Popularity of "Tipperary"

Why do trashy songs, composed by crude musicians and caught by ear from performances by vaudeville artistes, "catch on" with the public when good music that ought to become popular remains practically unknown? Mr. Thomas Henderson, a well known English teacher, has propounded the theory that the rate at which a composer breathes has a great influence on his composition and on the ability of others to sing or whistle them, which, of course, affects their popularity. Speaking at University College, Nottingham, to the members of the Nottingham and East Midlands Branch of the Music Teachers' Association, he said, as reported in the "Hospital":

Judging from their works, Handel and Beethoven respired more slowly than Mendelssohn. Most people breathe about twenty times a minute, and he saw in that a reason why, quite apart from the melody, the most popular music was that in which the rhythm was even and the accent always came on the beat. The song, "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," was a case in point. It had been asked why it should be more popular than Elgar's patriotic song, "Land of Hope and Glory." The reason was that "Tipperary" was in agreement with the theory of natural respiration, while Elgar's song was not. The phrases were too long and were apt to exhaust the breath before the end of them was reached.

The editor of the "Hospital" goes on to note that a British officer, referring to the sentimentality of the soldier, remarked recently that "the favorite songs" were not only slushy in sentiment, but "sung to dirge-like tunes so slowly that it seems as if the singer were unwilling to part with each note." He continues:

"Are we to draw the conclusion, however, that the 'theory of natural respiration' requires sentimentality of the slushiest kind in song and music? Since Mendelssohn was more sentimental than Beethoven, who had a good deal of rollicking fun in him, slow breathing would seem to be in favor of bracing rhythm and words. Why then, again, should 'natural respiration,' naturally preferring short phrases, yet love to drag them out as if soldiers preferred a wake to a concert?"

Many Wounded Recover

Statistics recently issued by the French authorities go to show that only 3½ per cent. of soldiers die from wounds. Nearly 60 per cent. are sufficiently cured to be able to return again to the front. The percentage of deaths from wounds, indeed, is lower in the present war than it has been in any war, thanks to the wonderful advance in medical science.

In time of peace Germany produces on an average 26,000 tons of copper a year.

NO MORE FRANCHISES TO PRIVATE COMPANY

While the Hydro-Electric Radial Railway Association of Ontario is waiting for the answer of the Dominion and Ontario Governments to the request for a cash bonus, the Railway Committee of the Ontario Legislature made it clear that the Hydro was in the saddle, and no further franchises or extensions will be granted to private companies in this Province. Six bills for extensions of franchises came before the committee and six bills were thrown out. The companies seeking extensions were the Forest Hill Electric Railway Co., the Toronto & York Radial Railway Co., the Eastern Ontario Electric Railway Co., the St. Lawrence & Ottawa Electric Railway Co., and the Toronto, Barrie & Orillia Electric Railway Co.

Trust Goes Into Liquidation.

NEW YORK, April 5.—The International Mercantile Marine Co., organized by J. P Morgan & Co., and controlling a great fleet of steamships plying between the United States and Europe, was placed in the hands of a receiver yesterday by the Federal court.

The receiver named was F. A. S. Franklin, vice-president of the company. Action against the company was taken by the New York Trust Co., trustee of its $52,744,000 4 1-2 per cent. collateral trust bonds, interest in which has been defaulted.

The proceedings are understood to be friendly.

Mr. Franklin was placed under a $50 000 bond and empowered to continue the business of the company.

Shot Wife, Killed Self.

LONDON, Ont., April 5.—In a fit of jealousy, Levi Corcoran, aged 35, a colored barber, late Saturday night whipped out a 32-calibre revolver and shot his wife, Gertrude Corcoran, through the shoulder. Thinking the woman dead, he shot himself through the head, dying instantly. The woman will recover.

Gen. Alexiev Commands In North.

PETROGRAD, April 5. — Gen. Alexiev has been appointed commander-in-chief of the army on the northern front in place of Gen. Russky, who retired recently on account of ill health. Since 1908 Gen. Alexiev has been chief of staff of the Kiev military district.

Trying To Starve Montenegro.

ROME, April 5. — Despatches received here from Cettinje, the capital of Montenegro, indicate that Austria-Hungary is endeavoring to cut off Montenegro from all communication with the outside world and thus starve her.

The dual monarchy is described as surrounding this small state with overwhelming forces of Croats on the mountains, in addition to a garrison of 40,000 men at Cattaro, which prevents any communication with Herzegovina and the Adriatic.

Against about 100,000 Austrians Montenegro can oppose only 15,000 men, with limited artillery. Something like 70,000 people from villages in Bosnia, burned by Austrian troops, have taken refuge in Montenegro.

Italy Will Enter, Says Bevoine.

PARIS, April 5. — Guiseppe Bevoine, editor of The Turin Stampa and also a member of the Italian Chamber of Deputies, told the Associated Press yesterday that he had a deep conviction that Italy would begin war against Germany and Austria before the end of April.

"Signor Bevoine said Italy's military preparations were almost complete. The Italian Government, he declared, was not waiting for a decisive battle in favor of the allies, but desired to become engaged in the war before such a battle, as Italy would then be in a position to realize her aspirations in accord with the allies.

ALLIES ON OFFENSIVE AROUND VERDUN

DISTINCT PROGRESS MADE BY FRENCH

FRENCH ADVANCING IN MEUSE-MOSELLE REGION

Series of Important Engagements is Being Fought East and South-East of Verdun---Along the Meuse Heights the French Have Made Distinct Progress and are Bringing Forward Artillery to Support New Offensive.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, April 6.—(French official.)—A series of important engagements is now being fought in the woods between the Meuse and the Moselle, east and southeast of Verdun, according to the despatches from the front to-day. In every engagement in this region the allies are on the offensive and driving home their campaign to pierce the enemy's line extending to St. Mihiel. Along the Meuse heights the French have made distinct progress, according to the official communique from the war office this afternoon. Stubborn fighting is going on near St. Mihiel itself and near Regneville, northwest of Pónt-a-Mousson, where the allies are maintaining their positions.

Southwest of Vauquois, in the region south of Varennes, the allies are also on the offensive. They have gained a footing in the enemy's fortified works in the hills, and are bringing forward artillery to support the new offensive.

A SUBMARINE TRAPPED

DUNKIRK, France, April 6.—A German submarine has become securely entangled in a net specially designed for that purpose and placed off Dover. The French naval authorities expect to capture the submarine when it comes to the surface.

ROME, April 6.—Increased activity on the part of the Italian fleet may be presaged by incidents reported from various ports which while of no great importance in themselves are regarded here as significant.

Fears are felt in shipping circles at Naples that the steamer Pina has been sunk by a German submarine. The Pina left Naples in February for Cardiff to take on a cargo of coal and nothing has been heard of her since.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—More than 400,000 men, in 28 states, will be thrown out of work in from 30 to 60 days unless the government can persuade England to permit America to import German dyestuffs, according to a delegation which appeared through Secretary T. U. Multy to President Wilson to-day for relief.

THE GOSSARD CORSET ABLY DEMONSTRATED

Interesting Lecture and Corset Exhibition at Richard Hall and Sons

It has been long agreed amongst well-dressed women, that no feature of the entire costume is so important in obtaining that well-groomed, trim appearance, which is the aim of every smart woman, as the corset. And an unique opportunity of learning many necessary details in the buying and fitting of this toilet necessity was offered the women of Peterborough on Monday and this afternoon at 3 p.m., when Mrs. C. S. McMichael, an expert demonstrator from the H. C. Gossard Corset Company of Chicago, gave lectures and demonstrations in the ready-to-wear department, of the Hall store.

A good sized space on the spacious second floor had been curtained off for the demonstration, and during both afternoons it was kept well filled with interested women, all of whom obtained a wealth of invaluable corset knowledge absolutely necessary to the woman desirous of both beauty and comfort. The demonstrator used a living model on which to illustrate the many and varied styles of corsets made by her company—the model, tall graceful figure being admirably suited for the purpose, and the demonstrator being remarkably skillful in showing how the acme of comfort and style could be obtained by every type of woman.

The Gossard Company are the pioneer exponents of the front-lacing corset, and Mrs. McMicheal gave many excellent and convincing arguments, showing the advantages of this feature over the old-fashioned back-lacing style. When corsets with this feature were first put on the market they were sold at prices that made them more or less of a luxury, but so great was their success, that an effort was made to bring them within the reach of all, and now Gossard front-lacing corsets can be obtained at as low a price as $3.75 for a comfortable, stylish corset for an ordinary figure, while most attractive higher priced models are shown in every conceivable style.

The demonstrator paid particular attention to the necessity of careful fitting in the selection of a corset and to the great importance of knowing how to properly don and adjust the garment. She went into the most minute details in this manner, giving a practical illustration of the enormous difference made by proper adjustment. The day when a woman bought her corset according to the size she thought she ought to wear and never dreamed of having it fitted or altered to suit her particular needs, has been relegated to the past, and careful fitting and adjustment are now recognized as necessary for this foundation of stylish appearance.

Mrs. McMichael also showed a number of styles of that useful little garment, the "Brassiere," which is so necessary in obtaining smooth, correct lines. These, of course, varied in price with the materials used in their production, but all were calculated to be of the greatest service to their purchaser.

Mrs. McMichael announced that the young lady at the head of "Hall's" corset department was receiving instructions in the fitting and adjustment of Gossard corsets and would be fully competent to look after the needs of the women of Peterborough in this respect.

Major Fletcher Said to Have Substituted Three of His Own Horses For Three He Purchased For The Government

ANOTHER DRUG CASE

Special to the Examiner.

OTTAWA, Ont., April 6.—There was some horse trading done with the government when the first contingent was being supplied with animals.

The government did not know that it was trading, but one of their buyers knew, Major Fletcher, of eastern townships, bought horses for the Government. Among others he bought three fine Clydesdale mares. For he substituted three horses off his farm and no one was the wiser until the neighbours began to talk.

The story just reached the Public Accounts committee this morning.

The Minister of Customs objected to Mr. Stewart McClenninghan being called to make a statement on his sale of a hundred thousand "housewives" to the contingent.

Another drug store got into view. Mrs. Plamondon, sister of Deputy Speaker Sevigny, who runs a little drug store, sold $23,485 worth of drugs to Valcartier.

Hawker Did Not Have License

He Sold Spectacles and Was Arrested—Police Court News

David Hendry did not know whether the spectacles he was offering for sale were made in Germany or not. At any rate he did not have a license, and he was arrested as a hawker.

He did not know he needed a license. His home was in Chatham, N.B., and he did not have any money to buy a license or pay a fine. It took him all his time to keep the pot boiling for his wife, children and mother-in-law, who were now in Belleville.

The Chief thought he recognized in Hundry a former acquaintance, who had been before Magistrate Dumble before. The accused admitted spending 15 days in Castle Nesbitt, but denied that he was sent to Central for six months. He was remanded a week while some information will be looked up via the finger-print route.

On a charge of being drunk in a public place he pleaded guilty and was fined $2.00 to be paid forthwith, and in default ten days in jail.

A license will cost Hendry $50.00, he being a non-resident.

David Anderson, of Lindsay, was on his way to Ottawa to enlist. He bought a ticket and went to the station last night to wait for the train. He fell asleep and was arrested by a policeman for being drunk. As he proposed to leave for Ottawa as soon as he could catch a train, His Worship discharged him this morning.

Robert Kellat came here from Toronto on Saturday looking for work. Yesterday he met some friends and was given a few drinks. He was arrested and charged this morning with being drunk in a public place. He wanted to go back to Toronto and promised to leave town at once. He was discharged.

REGULAR DRILL WILL BEGIN THIS EVENING

Record Attendance is Expected at the Opening of the Drill Season at Armouries

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The members of the 57th Regiment and the young men of the city generally, are reminded that the regular drill season of the regiment will commence to-night at the Armouries. A big attendance, the biggest of the season, is expected, as there has been an awakening of interest in military affairs recently, and the young men of Peterborough have come to a realization of the importance of joining the Rangers. No one on the roll should be absent from to-night's drill.

A number of the men of the 39th Battalian, who have been home on leave, returned to Belleville this afternoon.

Western Military News.

Congratulations are due Lt.-Col. Dennistoun, formerly of Peterborough, who has recently been recalled from England and given command of the 53rd Battalion, Third Contingent, with present headquarters at Prince Albert.

Col. Dennistoun's eldest son, Capt. J. A. Dennistoun, is in cavalry training at Tidworth, and his second son, Lt. John R. Dennistoun, is with the Cyclist Scouting Corps of the Canadian Mounted troops now in France.

It is expected that the 33rd will shortly proceed to Sewell Camp for training along with the 5th Artillery Brigade, the Army Service Corps, the Army Medical Corps, the R.C.M.R.'s of Brandon, the 43rd and the 44th Battalion, as well as a regiment from Moose Jaw.

TORONTO, April 6.—The success which has attended the fight against meningitis among the troops in this division has led the authorities to lend assistance to the medical officers of the Third Division in dealing with the outbreak of the disease among the troops quartered at Belleville. With this object Lieut. L. CC. Palmer, A.M.C., and Ptes. Hodges and Fraser, of No. 2 Casualty Clearing Station, have been sent to Belleville to do laboratory work in connection with the meningitis outbreak there.

Lt.-Col. Duff, A.D.M.S., has been to Belleville, and finds that there has been one death from cerebro-spinal meningitis, and two men of the 39th Battalion are down with the disease. The Colonel found local conditions perfectly satisfactory, and there is no cause for alarm or complain as far as the quarters of the battalion are concerned. The presence of the disease is due to "carriers," and every effort will be made to find out if any are among the men of the 39th. A rigid medical examination of the battalion will be made at once.

Kingston Standard: The 21st Battalion is purchasing two tons of tobacco to take overseas, one ton of chewing tobacco and one ton of smoking. All the tobacco is Canadian made, and has been bought out of the regimental funds. Col Hughes and his officers are determined their men shall not suffer in the trenches for a bit of tobacco. In all other cities they are raising a tobacco fund but the 21st will buy their own.

GLADYS SEWARD, Piano Recital, Conservatory Hall, on Friday, April 9th, assisted by Miss Jeanette Kilmaster. Tickets on sale at Medill's, Fair's, Cressman's, and Hall & Sons, stores.

New Ventilating System at TIZ-IT

Messrs. Lee and Clayton, proprietors of the Tiz-It Theatre, are installing a modern system of ventilation in this theatre. The work is being done by Grant & Thorpe. The method employed has a capacity of 2,800 cubic feet of air per minute, and is guarantee of fresh air in the new Tiz-It. The system provides for constantly changing air and is an assurance to patrons of good, healthful fresh air in future. The management desire to make the house as complete and comfortable as possible, and are eager to give the public the best conditions and pictures that can be obtained.

Remember always that if a dealer offers you a substitute for "SALADA" he has only one object in view and that is greater profit. If you have ever used "SALADA" it is natural that you should always want it. Do not accept any substitute.

THREE CANUCKS ON LAST LIST OF CASUALTIES

Two Members of the Fourteenth Battalion and Another From the Fifteenth Are Wounded

ONE IS SERIOUS

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., April 6.—The casualty list announced to-day was as follows:

Fourteenth Battalion.

Seriously wounded — Private Edward James Coombes, in hospital at Netley. Gunshot wound in the head. Next-of-kin, A. H. Coombes, Pontypridd, South Wales.

Wounded—Private Michael Gould. Next-of-kin, Mrs. Mary Gould, Cork, Ireland.

Fifteenth Battalion.

Wounded—Lance Corporal William Matches. Next-of-kin, David Matches, Stenners, Scotland.

Kultur for Chicago If German-Americans Line Up Compatriots

Chicagoans are balloting to-day for municipal representatives. A former Peterborough resident has forwarded to his brother here a copy of a circular letter distributed among the hyphenated Americans of German and Austrian parentage calling for their unanimous support of Robert M. Sweitzer. The letter is in part:

Germany and Austria were driven into a war last year with nearly every nation in Europe. The war was forced upon Germany and Austria. They did not seek it. Germany and Austria are sure to win, but need the united support of Germans and Austrians everywhere and under all conditions. You, your relatives and friends can be of great assistance to Germany and Austria next Tuesday, by electing Robert M. Sweitzer, an honest, efficient, loyal and energetic German-American, Mayor of Chicago.

Chicago has a larger German population than any city in the world, excepting Berlin and Vienna. . . . Stand shoulder to shoulder in this election as our countrymen in the trenches and on the high seas are fighting for the preservation of the Fatherland. The election of a German-American would be a fitting answer to the defamers of the Fatherland, and cause a tremendous moral effect throughout the United States and re-echo in Germany, Austria and Hungary. Our countrymen in the Fatherland are bitterly complaining about the unfair treatment accorded them by the majority of American newspapers.

Let us on Tuesday, April 6, flash the message throughout the world that the second largest city in the United States has elected for its Mayor a German-American, etc., etc.

BUY YOUR TAG

Dog owners are again reminded that they are required to purchase their 1915 tags on or before May 1. Though there are numerous members of the canine family running about our streets, the police announce that but very few owners have purchased the required tag. Of course, there are twenty-four days yet, but if there are not a good many tags purchased in that time the incinerator is likely to be kept busy, also the policemen. So unless you want to lose that dog, Mr. Owner, take heed.

Brother of Ald. Green Is Dangerously Ill

Alderman Green was the only absentee City Father at last night's banquet at the Empress. He left early this morning for the vicinity of Chicago, called to the bedside of his brother, who is dangerously ill.

BRITISH SHOW THEIR SUPERIORITY OVER FOE

Near Labassee They Have Scored Victories General French Reports to the War Office To-day---Explode Mines in German Trenches Destroying One Hundred Yards of Earthworks.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 6.—The British troops operating near LaBassee have scored victories in the recent fighting that show marked superiority over the enemy, and hence are of great military value, according to an official report from General French, the British commander, received to-day.

On the morning of April 3rd the British troops exploded mines in the German trenches, destroying 100 yards of earthworks. The Germans were forced to retire and were unable to resume their activity in this region. In retaliation the German artillerymen stationed at LaBassee have been bombarding the French front heavily. Surprise attacks by both armies are nightly occurring, General French reported. The weather has limited aerial reconnaisances for several days.

PETROGRAD, April 6.—The Russian right wing, which crossed into Hungary through Dukla, has begun a forward movement against Bartfeld, according to an unconfirmed report which reached here to-day. It has clashed with the Austrians a few miles north of the railway head and a great battle is developing.

SWEDISH STEAMER SEIZED

COPENHAGEN, April 6.—A Swedish steamer that was bound from Gothenburg to England with a cargo of corn, was seized by a German warship and taken into a German port, according to Stockholm advices.

REINFORCEMENTS IN EAST

PARIS, April 6.—A Geneva despatch received here this afternoon said that Germany is now rushing an army corps from Flanders to the Carpathians and that Austria has suddenly withdrawn her troops from the Tyrol and is hurrying them to the defence of the Uszok Pass. Other Geneva despatches reported a battle as raging south of Bartfeld and near Eperges.

Paris military experts branded this report as ridiculous, pointing out that the last official statements from Petrograd put the Russian army several miles north of Bartfield.

A LABOUR PROTEST

NORWICH, Eng., April 6.—The Independent Labor Party to-day approved a resolution calling for a world-wide protest against secret diplomacy and "a reconstruction of the machinery by which the democracy of Europe will forever abolish war."

The resolutions declared that an obvious attempt is being made by the capitalistic employers to break down the labour movement in England and throughout the world.

BERLIN ADMITS ATTACK

Berlin, via wireless, April 6.—In a 20 mile wooded strip between the Meuse and the Moselle rivers, the French have launced the strongest offensive movement along the western battle front since their vigorous attacks in the Champagne region six weeks ago. Tenacious struggles are now going on northeast, east and southeast of Verdun and west of Pont-a-Mousson, the war office announced this afternoon. In spite of the heaviest losses in several weeks of fighting the enemy is redistributing his forces and preparing for a general forward movement.

BLAMES BRITAIN

WASHINGTON, April 6.—The German embassy issued a statement to-day blaming Britain for the destruction by a German submarine of the British steamship Falaba, on which the American, Thresher, lost his life.

WE CAN DO IT.

Who says that Canada cannot build warships? Only those who have less faith in the industrial resources and mechanical skill of Canada, than they have zeal in promoting the success of a party fad. At the Polson Iron Works, Toronto, a private enterprise, there was launched on Saturday, Ontario Car-ferry No. 2, to ply with the sister ferry of the Grand Trunk between Cobourg and Rochester. What shipbuilding skill and resources, were involved in the construction of this ferry may be gained from a few details of her composition. She has a length of 310 feet, 54 feet beam, with a gross tonnage of 5,469 tons; by the way, about the tonnage of protected cruisers of the Melbourne class, (5,400 tons), such as the Australian cruiser Sydney, which sank the German pirate, Emden. The new ferry has a speed of 18 miles an hour. She will carry 30 loaded cars, of 2,100 tons total weight, and 300 passengers. Now, if a private shipbuilding firm can, in less than five months, with ordinary facilities, turn out a craft like this, could not a Canadianshipyard, specially equipped, successfully build cruisers such as the bulk of a Canadian fleet unit would chiefly comprise? There is no earthly reason why Canada could not, with patriotic statesmanship on the bridge, build her own warships, as Sir Robert Borden once demanded, "of Canadian material, by Canadian workmen, and Canadian skill." Thus Canada, off her own bat, is as able as Australia, to take her share in building up the naval strength of the Empire, and in the process developing her own resources, in material and skill, and at the same time develop a marine of hardy ocean-seasoned Canadians, which would have the superior in stamina and courage, in any naval force in the world. Wouldn't such a practical and patriotic, and productive policy of Canadian contribution to naval defence, be better than borrowing money from Great Britain to build warships, whose only Canadian character would be, the interest Canada pays on the money borrowed, with no Canadian material, no Canadian skill, no Canadian workmanship, no Canadian seamanship. Such a policy would give employment to workmen in British shipyards, with wages paid by the taxes of Canadian workmen, who would only stand idly by and see their money spent away from home. The policy of a Canadian navy, as has been proven in this war, by the exploits of the Australian navy, would be the best, the most effective contribution to imperial naval defence this country could give. If we are to retain our self-respect, retain our autonomy, and work out our destiny, instead of having it worked out by proxy, we shall in the end have to come to the adoption of such a policy.

WHERE ARE THE LOYAL ORDERS?

Under the above heading the Ottawa Citizen, which has for nearly half a century, been a strongly, and staunchly Conservative newspaper, prints the following article, which can be read with interest and profit as it reveals a condition of whose baleful existence we have too much daily evidence:

"There is a maggot eating at the heart of Canadian national life: and independent citizens of this country are standing by in silence, witnessing the work of the greedy maggot without a murmur. Materialism has burrowed into the body politic so deep that even things most dear to the honour of a nation do not escape it. Young men, young soldiers, are voluntarily giving their all, their lives, in defence of British freedom, British honour and British tradition: and the political maggot is eating into the health of the citizen army through the sales of its rotten booze.

Having eaten into the health of the soldiers who were staying and will, the maggot is now fastening on the sick and wounded, broken in the Empire's war. Pure dressings, even the calm and hope and happiness for the poor broken limbs and diseased bodies of Canada's wounded men and boys, have been made a medium for the cursed maggot to ply its loathesome business. Where are the upholders of British tradition, the loyal orders, the sons of England and the sons of honour in Canada? Must their remain for ever silent while such damnable maggotry is being held here?

Here it has been demonstrated and confessed before a committee of members of parliament that a junior clerk in the Carleton Drug Company—of which William F. Garland, M.P. for Carleton, is principal owner, has made a profit of $9,000 on an order for forty thousand dollars worth of field dressings and other necessities impended for the brave men at the firing line. The drug clerk, a mere inexperienced youth, paid about $25 a week, is introduced to the militia department under the scoundrelly political patronage system tolerated by the pinchbeck political practice of this country.

It is pretended that the junior clerk of the Carleton Drug Company is allowed to appropriate this patronage-begotten $9,000 of public money without hint or interference regarding its disposal by his political masters. Taking the pack of patronage middlemen at their political word, and assuming that the $9,000 of profit on the field dressings and necessities for wounded men is to be disposed as pretended, is it not enough to bring tears of shame and indignation to the eyes of every lover of Canada and British honour?

The Red Cross fund is having to appeal for more help; and many good people are giving of their scant earnings et do what little they can for the tender nursing of the Empire's poor broken men. For the sum of $9,000 eighteen trained nurses could have been sent from Canada and maintained at the seeing line for a whole year—perhaps till the end of the war—to wash the wounds and soothe the pain-racked bodies of Canada's injured soldiers. One hundred and eighty Red Cross beds could have been sent to the saving line to lay weary shell-torn and shattered men upon, in cleanliness and comfort, so far as comfort is possible. But the $9,000—just one instance of the work of the maggot eating at the heart of Canada—is now deposited to the account of a junior clerk of the firm of the Carleton Drug Company, of which William F. Garland, M.P., is principal owner.

And the political colleagues of the honourable member for Carleton glose over the work of the maggot by asking smooth questions. Field dressings and first aid necessities for the wounded are made to yield up a profit of 28 per cent.—$9,000 of public money—to a politically appointed agent; and Mr. Blain of Peel glibly asks, "Is that regarded as high in your business?" And Mr. Fripp, of Ottawa, says to the Carleton Drug Company's junior clerk, "You do not have to account to anyone for the amount?" The clerk answers, "No." Says Mr. Fripp, honourable member for this Capital and royal city, "You are going through college and this will help you!" And the obedient clerk answers, "Yes." And the loyal citizens of Canada are quite calm and unmoved about it!

Within a few weeks the political packs will have scattered across the country, and if the ring-leaders have their way Canada will be plunged into the swirl and swill of a general election. Such patriot gentry as the head of the Carleton Drug Company, and the sophist members of the committee investigating the profits over the bodies of wounded soldiers, will be expanding themselves upon political platforms and appealing for the support of the loyal orders and believers in British tradition and honour! They will vow themselves to be the saviours of the Empire. What will the loyal orders and independent citizens say? Britain would surely abhor and repudiate such professed aid. Will it seem well in the sight of the Great Architect of the Universe?"

The above gives ground for some reflection to the thoughtful Canadian who has faith in the Scriptural assertion that "righteousness exalteth a nation." If Canada is to endure and grow great, we must build on the rock-bed foundation of honesty, upright dealing, and righteous administration.

It Is No Laughing Matter--- The Ruin Wrought by Drink

It was round about midnight. The Ontario Legislature was in for an all-night session. Speaker Jamieson was in the chair, Premier Hearst was in command with his government supporters ready for any emergency. The third reading of the Hanna liquor license amendments was up. On that night a last chance was offered the Legislature to break the combine of the Government and the liquor traffic, by which all the special privileges of open bars and late selling were continued to all the barrooms of the Province during war times. The fact that Premier Hearst had surrendered to the liquor monopoly was no longer any secret, and the terms had been the talk of the corridors. Even though it might mean one more defeat, the members who would follow the example of King George and heed the warning of Lord Kitchener took for themselves, and offered to their Conservative fellow-members, one more chance to close all barrooms, all liquor stores, and all drinking clubs everywhere during the recent course of the war. Once more their efforts were defeated by the unanimous vote of the Government and their party majority. Then Mr. Sam Carter of Guelph moved the closing of all liquor-drinking places at 7 o'clock in the evening. That, too, was voted down by the Government, with evident satisfaction. Then he moved 8 o'clock closing. The Government members laughed uproariously. Some of the Ministers threw mocking jibes across the House at the man from Guelph. Others catcalled to him. The Prime Minister smiled blandly as one might at a minstrel show. One Government supporter asked mockingly: "Why not move all the hours together?" At which exquisite humour even the Minister of Education shook with laughter.

But their noisy laughter was like the crackling sound of burning thorns. While they were yet jumping up their hilarity the burly radical from Guelph, with his unmistakable English accent, broke in upon their mirth with a prophet-rebuke:

"You laugh to-night. You mock at our amendments. Our concern for the boys of this country makes great sport for you. But I know, and you now, what is happening this very night in the barrooms of this city and other cities; our men and boys are being ruined; their money is being wasted; their homes are being destroyed; their lives are being blasted. All our efforts to save our sons and to safeguard our soldiers of the King you greet with jeers and mocking. I warn you and your Government that I will go through this Province and I will tell the people, no matter what their party, that you sneered when we tried to shut the bars; that when we moved to cut down the barroom hours you mocked as you mocked a moment ago. Sir, this accursed liquor business has damned one Government in Ontario, and I warn you it will damn yours, too."

The gayety died out of the Government faces. Even the loudest of the liquor stand-bys forgot to laugh. It was as though a Daniel had come to judgment as though an Amos had come back from among the herdmen of Tekoa; as though a Nathan blazed again, "Thou are the man."

And when the people of Ontario next speak it may be so.—The Globe.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED BY CONSERVATIVES

Special to the Examiner.

TORONTO, April 4—Following is the summary of amendments to the Liquor License Act proposed by the Liberals on the third reading, and rejected by the Conservatives:

(1) Close all bars and clubs at 7 o'clock in the evening during the war. (Shops already closed at seven o'clock under the new Government bill.)

(2) Close all bars and clubs at 9 o'clock in the evening.

(3) Close all bars and clubs at 9 o'clock in the evening.

(4) Close all bars and clubs at 10 o'clock in the evening.

(5) Close all bars, clubs and shops on Saturday at 1 o'clock.

(6) Add New Year's Day to the list of prohibited days.

(7) Making local option county-wide.

(8) Substitute majority vote for three-fifths in local option contests.

(9) Strike out clause making it necessary for municipalities in which a vote for license reduction has been defeated to wait three years before the submission of a similar vote again.

(10) To add shops and clubs to the bars in the clause authorizing the board to prohibit the sale of liquor to any particular class of persons.

(11) Giving the Board power to appoint its own inspectors and officers, instead of their being appointed by the Government, as under the Government bill.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

A private cable from Warsaw announces the death there of Isaac Gerets, greatest Jewish poet of modern times, aged 63 years.

Gen. A. G. L. D'Amade, commander of the French expeditionary forces at the Dardanelles, has lost his youngest son, aged 18, who was a second lieutenant of infantry.

Otto Zinn, a New York restaurant keeper, and two of his employes, a porter and a cook, were killed early yesterday in the cellar of Zinn's restaurant, supposedly by burglars.

An Anglo-Belgian force attacked German troops eight miles north of Abercorn, Rhodesia, on March 17, driving the enemy across the border into German East Africa after a sharp fight.

Five more Prussian casualty lists containing the names of 31,715 privates and officers were issued in Berlin yesterday. This bring the total Prussian casualties to date up to 1,133,031.

Word was received by Cornwall friends yesterday of the death yesterday morning at St. Petersburg, Florida, of W. J. McDonald, aged 65, a prominent railway contractor, whose home was for many years in Manitoulin, Ont.

The 13-year-old son of Mr. D. A. Wheeler, a farmer of Glen Ross, Sidney Township, near Belleville, died yesterday as the result of injuries by a horse. The boy was in its stall when it viciously knocked him down and trampled upon him until life was nearly extinct.

Mother—"Why did ye strike my child for nothing?"

Teacher—"I attuck him because he wouldn't tell me where the River Thames was. He only stood and looked at me."

Mother—"He wad be dumfounded at, yer ignorance, likely."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

WAS TRUE TO HIM

Convict's Mountain Sweetheart Clung to Him Through All His Troubles.

By GEORGE A. BAFFIN.

He crouched in the undergrowth, cautiously parting the bushes with one hand to peer out down the mountain side. He was a ragged giant of a man, clean-limbed, yet with a strange pallor upon his face. Upon each wrist, too, were half healed scars. These had been caused by the heroic efforts which he had used to free himself from his manacles. But he was free at last. He had escaped from the state penitentiary three weeks before and his pursuers had never been able to discover his secret hiding place upon Bear mountain.

He had heard them seeking for him internally; on the very day after his escape he had come upon one of the guards dozing under a fir tree. He had taken his rifle and then, awakening him, scornfuly ordered him to depart. The man had obeyed fearfully, and the rifle and a box of matches had enabled the fugitive to live. But every time he brought down a rabbit or partridge the sound of the shot, echoing through the valleys, at once informed his pursuers of his whereabouts.

He looked round cautiously. No one was in sight. High up on the opposite hill he saw the outlines of a tiny cabin. It was his sweetheart's home—Mollie Stark's. It was to avenge an insult to her that he had shot and crippled Seth Baldwin. That was two years before, and he had been sent up for ten. Mollie had sworn to be true to him.

But since his flight he had not dared go near her home. It was too desperate a chance to take. But a visit on his part to the wild glen in which they had plighted their troth had resulted in the finding of a package of food placed there by Mollie. In it was a little note.

"Dere Ben," it ran. "I hid this and brout it here thinking you would come here. Come to the cabbin on Monday nite at nine. Lovingly, Mollie."

The full moon gave almost as much light as the sun. The fugitive crawled down the slope and approached the opposite height, worming his way up through the ferns and close-clinging vines. At last he emerged upon a little rocky eminence a hundred yards distant from the cabin. From Mollie's window a rag fluttered. The fugitive understood that sign. She was alone. Grasping his rifle he went forward boldly.

He was within ten yards when the door opened. His heart leaped. Mollie stood in the doorway, her arms outstretched, to welcome him. Behind her was the flickering candle. But as he drew near, suddenly a sight froze his blood. The shadow of a man had passed the candle; another, and another. He halted in his tracks. Behind Mollie he saw a rifle barrel.

With an oath he flung back into the brushwood. He would have fired, but, treacherous though she was, he could not bring himself to kill her. He heard yells behind him, Mollie's screams, the shouts of his pursuers.

An hour later he dropped exhausted upon the ground inside his cave. It was a bear's hole, cunningly hidden on the mountain side. Among that waste of burned-over pine stumps none could hit upon it save by accident, and that even did not anticipate. It was not fear that made him pant like a marathon runner, but wrath and self-contempt.

Mollie was a traitress! He had been fooled by a chit of a girl, for whose sake he had suffered two years in the penitentiary. Anger overcame all other feelings. He would show her! He would show them! What should he do?

For an hour he lay thinking, gnawing his lip in rage. His passion for her had been so strong, his love so large a part of his existence, that the revulsion was terrible. He must contrive some punishment commensurate with the crime. Among the hill women there could be none other so base as to betray her lover, as Mollie had sought to betray him. He had recognized one of the men in the parlor as Frank Merriman, the sheriff. He had been a suitor for Mollie's hand before she promised herself to Ben. Doubtless he had persuaded her.

Ha! He had his plan. It flashed into his brain ready-forged in the furnace of his wrath. Doubtless Merriman would be at her home the following night. Her father, the bedridden old man, would be helpless. He would steal in and shoot the man before Mollie's eyes—and then—then—cut off her hair, leaving her to the derision of the hill folk.

His plan consumed him. He passed the outstanding hours like a man in a delirium. Day dawned, the sun blazed upon the wild-eyed man who paced to and fro upon the mountain side. The shadows lengthened as the sun declined; at last the fiery orb touched the horizon. Shouldering his rifle he marched doggedly through the scrub until once more he saw Mollie's cabin outlined against the darkening sky upon the further ridge. Even as he watched a tiny spark flashed out from the parlor candle.

An hour later he was lying upon his stomach outside the cabin. Inside he saw Frank Merriman, smoking in one corner. Mollie was laying the supper table. Occasionally she stopped before the sheriff and seemed to plead with him. Ben gritted his teeth.

If only Merriman would lay aside his rifle. But he kept his clasp of it even at the supper table; it was only later when he arose that he placed it for a moment against the mud wall. The watcher knew that his time had come. Mollie's hands were on Merriman's arm and she was pleading very earnestly. Ben fancied that she was crying.

He sprang to his feet and rushed through the open door. He saw indistinctly; the world was revolving in a fiery mist, through his weapon.

Next moment, too enraged to fire, Ben had dropped his rifle and his hands were on the sheriff's throat.

To and fro they wrestled. The table was knocked down. The clumsy chairs went spinning across the room. The candle was dashed to the floor, and in the bewildering night each only knew that he was fighting for life with an implacable adversary. Ben dug his knuckles into the hollow space between the point of the jaw and the great cord behind the ear—an old woodsman's trick, to compress the carotid and produce unconsciousness. He felt his enemy weakening. He had him at his mercy now. Suddenly a tremendous blow fell upon his head from behind. He heard the shivering of the cheap rifle stock, flung out his hands, felt for some stable hold in the encompassing darkness, and tumbled to the ground. The last thing that he saw as his senses left him was the faint glimmer of the relit candle and Mollie's agonized face, in its aureole hair.

"Ben!"

"Mollie!"

He started out through the whirling phantasmagoria that surrounded him. He was dizzy and deathly sick. Gradually, as the fog cleared from his brain, he realized that he was lying in a little room. He lay in Mollie's room, upon a bed, and the face that he loved best in all the world was bending over him.

"Thank God he is coming to, Frank!"

"You had better leave him for the present." It was the voice of Merriman. He came into the circle of Ben's vision, a mighty man, his face swathed in bandages. Looking upon him, Ben dimly wondered how he had ever had the strength to wrestle with such a fellow. He was too weak to lift a finger now.

"Well, young fellow!" Merriman was scowling down at him. "You've done for yourself pretty well now," he continued. "If my nephew, Walt, hadn't had the gumption to come up at the right moment and snatch my rifle you'd have had a murder charge against you. I thought you were gone when I saw the whack he gave you that night."

"That night! When?"

"Two weeks ago tomorrow. Yep, I reckon you've kind of lost count of time," he continued, smiling less evilly. "You've been mighty near death, young fellow, let me tell you."

"Well, I guess you've won," said Ben feebly. "When are you going to take me back to the penitentiary?"

Frank Merriman scratched his head, then, fingering his bandages, he scowled; at length a smile broke out upon his face.

"When will you be ready to start?" he asked.

"You'l have to put me in a cart, I reckon," answered Ben. "Frank," he continued, "I'm likely to get a life sentence now and we aren't likely to meet again. I want to ask a promise of you. Treat Mollie well. She's the finest girl in the world, and if she was false to me—well, I reckon it was for your sake, Frank."

The sheriff stared at him. Then he turned abruptly away. "The—devil—you—say!" he muttered.

He went to the door and called the girl. Ben heard them whispering outside. And presently he was aware, in his weakness, that Mollie was bending over him again.

"Ben!"

"Mollie!"

"Ben, dearest. Did you think I had betrayed you, Ben? Did you dare to think that I was untrue to you?"

He felt her tears drop on his hand. He listened dumbly, in an agony of anticipation and doubts he dared not utter.

"Listen, Ben! You are free. Free to go where you will. When you escaped the newspapers took up your case. They demanded that you should be set free. The governor was appealed to. He said that you had been punished enough. Your pardon arrived the week before you first came to the cabin. That was why I went to the mountain. I should have told you, but I wanted it to come as a surprise. That night Mr. Merriman was waiting here to hand it to you. You are free, Ben, free to go where you will—free to—to marry me—if you want to!"

RUSSIAN PHILOSOPHY

When Trouble Comes Ivan Merely Says "I Should Worry"

Nichevo! That's the magic word of Russia. The moujik grunts "Nichevo!" and pushes forward; the Cossack screams "Nichevo!" and hurls his biting snapping pony against the oncoming enemy; Capt. Orfsky smiles "Nichevo" as a rain of shells finds his outposts; Lieut. Maklinoff, the regimental adjutant, sings "Nichevo" as he pounds the piano in the colonel's tent; Ivan led away to be shot finds his solace in "Nichevo."

And what is this peculiar word that banishes everything from the Russian mind? It means much the same as the famous expression "I should worry." In Russian it means, "What does anything matter"—"Why worry?" "Don't bother," and for centuries it has been used in exactly the same sense as was that famous slang phrase.

In that one word—"Nichevo"—the Russian temperament is explained. You can't keep the Russian from being a devil-may-care creature. He would willingly give his life for the little white father and pass away with the byword as his last remark.

Bismarck as a young man was in the Prussian diplomatic service. His first post was at St. Petersburg—now Petrograd. It was before the introduction of railways into the land of the Muscovite, and, as winter was on, Bismarck had to travel by sleigh. He knew no Russian. But whenever there was an accident which delayed him he noticed the driver was unmoved and philosophic and accepted the situation with "Nichevo." When the sleigh was pitched over a bank it was "Nichevo!" When the horses were lamed it was "Nichevo!" At last the remaining horse broke its leg; starvation and death were before Bismarck and the driver. The driver raised his shoulders and said, "Nichevo!"

Bismarck was impressed by this word. He kept the shoe of the dead horse, and later on, at St. Petersburg, he had an iron ring made, and on it was inscribed in Russian characters "Nichevo." He wore the ring till his death, and he often admitted it was a solace to him. In turbulent years, when the chancellor scarcely knew which way to turn, he would glance at his ring, repeat "Nichevo!"—what did anything really matter?

Mention has been made of a piano at the front. Many of the officers have them. It is not unusual to see officers playing for their men, who gather round and sing Russian battle songs in their simple reckless way, occasionally breaking up the chorus by slipping a piece of food or a pebble down the officer's neck. This prank, which would be followed by severe punishment in the British regular army is taken good naturedly by the officer, demonstrating that the word "brother" with which he addresses the privates has its full meaning.

In the hospitals wounded officers read to the wounded men, and the men interrupt them with little jokes, of which the officer is usually the target. The fact that he can read and they cannot is enough to make them obey his orders instantly, even though he does willingly take part in their horse play.

What a Stamp Tax Means

There are about 760,000,000 letters and postcards posted in Canada every year. A war tax of a cent on each means about seven millions revenue. Ontario sends half of the mail of the Dominion.

Nervous Prostration and Heart Troubles

Nervous Prostration, or Neurasthenia, is one of the worst forms of nerve trouble and brings about a general weakness of the whole nervous system.

The symptoms presenting themselves are headache, a feeling of depression, disturbed and restless, unfreshing sleep, often troubled with dreams, fright when in crowded places, dread of being alone, horror of society, fright of travelling, muscular weakness, sense of fatigue upon effort, etc.

When the nerves become affected in this way the heart generally becomes affected too.

All are curable if taken in time.

Milburns Heart and Nerve Pills are just what you require at this time. They strengthen the nerves and build up the whole system.

Mrs. John Hewson, Caledonia, Ont. writes: "I feel it my duty to let you know the great benefit your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. I suffered for four years with heart trouble and nervous prostration. I was so bad I could not go up stairs without sitting down at the top before I could go to my room. I could not sleep nor could I lie on my left side, for it would seem as if my heart would stop. I thought my time had come. I was doctoring with the doctor, but didn't get any benefit. I took eight boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and am enjoying good health.

Price, 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

SECTION OF SOUTH WARD NEEDS CLEANING UP SAYS ALD. EDGAR

Populous Block South of C.G.E. Works Said to Need Garbage Collection and Other Things.

The following letter from Sanitary Inspector Spence was read at the Council meeting last night:

Alderman Edgar has called my attention to the insanitary condition of the lane running between Jackson and Layfeyttte Avenues and the lane at the rear of the west side of the latter. This district is without exception, the worst, from a sanitary standpoint, in the city, and is due primarily to two causes—the need of a garbage collection system and sewer connection. The Board of Health some time ago recommended to the Council the laying of a sewer on Layfayette Avenue, and I would respectfully urge upon you the necessity of undertaking this work this Spring, and also of extending the garbage system to take in this district."

Ald. Edgar—One of the ratepayers on Jackson Avenue asked me to visit that section. I did so. It is in very bad condition. Everything that comes out of the houses are deposited in that lane. There were four cases of diphtheria in the Isolation Hospital from one house. There is a sewer on Jackson Avenue, but no water. The Board of Health ordered a considerable time ago that a sewer be constructed on Layfayette Avenue.

Ald. Edgar intimated that the garbage from his block should be collected. He mentioned other details.

Ald. Saunders — "Why does the Sanitary Inspector not report on this?"

Ald. Edgar—"He has done so; but you must afford some remedy there."

Mayor Buller observed that the Board of Health was the proper body for the consideration of this matter.

Ald. Green remarked that if the matter comes up in the ordinary way before the Board of Works it would receive immediate attention. The supervision of the cleaning of lands does not come under the Board of Works attention.

British life insurance companies have about 30,000,000 policies in force.

Labour Council Wants City Employees To Be Residents

The following resolution from the Trades and Labour Council was read at the City Council meeting last night:

Resolved—Seeing the heavy burden of taxation borne by the taxpayers of the city, the Peterborough Trades and Labour Council objects to non-residents being employed in official positions in the several departments of the city and calls upon the City Council to take steps to remedy a state of affairs that is unfair to resident taxpayers.

R. Mitchell.

Ald. Evans said it might refer to the Sanitary Inspector.

Ald. Green moved that the Council write the Labour Council for a list of names and any information they may have; also that they provide similar information from time to time. Ald. Duffus seconded it.

Mr. Mitchell responded when the Mayor asked the gallery if any Labour men were present. He said that the city had a by-law requiring labourers, teamsters and others to reside in Peterborough. The Labour Council wants this to apply to all other city officials. Mr. Mitchell mentioned Mr. C. A. G. Spence, one or two policemen and some school teachers.

Ald. Stratton— The Council should pay Mr. Spence enough to enable him to live inside the city.

Mr. Cox, a teamster, was mentioned at this stage. Ald. Edgar said he understood Mr. Cox was not a ratepayer, but to get in on the work he had at this stage. Ald. Edgar said he unplaced against himself.

Mayor Buller—That won't work.

September Morn

Special War Prices for This Excellent Musical Comedy — Big Chorus—Many New Songs

The attraction at the Grand next Saturday, with matinee at 2.30 p.m., will be the musical comedy "September Morn," with all its tuneful, catchy songs, girls of the pretty kind, who can sing, and a cast of musical comedy artists far above the average, including such recognized stars as Frank Minor, Lou Kelso, Maude Potter, William Cameron, Arline Bolling, Kathryn Bowen, Clarence Nordstrom, Edgar Murray and forty helpers, mostly girls. Among the song hits are "When a Little Boy Loves a Little Girl," "In Berlin," "Oh, You September Morn," 'Everybody's Tango Crazy," "A Spare-Rib from the Butcher Shop of Life," "Beautiful Dreams, I'm Dreaming,' "The Sun-Shade Girl," "Where is the Pleasure in the Wine and Song if the Woman is not there?"

Summing it all up it is a great big musical attraction of the regular 1.50 variety, but for this engagement special war prices of $1.00 high for the evenng performance and 75c high for the matinee, will prevail.

The Council Speeded Up Their Machinery To Get Away Early For Banquet

Transacted Regular Business With Economy of Words—Ware Street People Oppose Sewer—Extra Mill For Provincial War Fund Expenditure—Pay for Scrap Electric Signs.

SOME OF THE WORK DONE

A blanket invitation to the Blacksmith's Banquet last night inspired the City Council to suspend unnecessary verbiage in the discussion of the various items of business on the Mayor's slate. As a result they were in a position to turn out the lights shortly after 10 p.m., and betake themselves to the Empress with an appetite edged by visions of fancy food and more or less Lenten abstinence. His Worship Mayor Buller glowed with a resplendent, dark-red tie, delicately touched with gold; and with a roseate word picture with which he anticipated the toast to the City of Peterborough, wherein he would expatiate in reply upon the advantages and possibilities of "Homeburg," with special colourings for the golden age to follow the establishment of Rural Radials. It is safe to say that if His Worship were accorded this opportunity—and surely he was—he must have sent the visiting members of the ancient craft of smithing to their homes saddened by a realization that they had been born a generation too soon. The Mayor is a grand little booster, but up to the past year he has been cabined and confined by ordinary prospects. Rural Radials, however, afford him unlimited scope, and with the magic of Puck he touches the vision of the near-sighted dissolving the film which shuts out the promise His Worship so clearly beholds. Hence it is to be hoped that the Mayor was permitted to discourse upon his favourite subject.

Don't Want Sewer.

A number of Ware street ratepayers submitted a petition objecting to a sewer on that street. Referred to Board of Works.

Statement of Roll.

The following statement of the roll submitted by Tax Collector Green, was referred to the Finance Committee:

Total am't on roll	$302,992.46
Total am't deposittd	287,191.35
Balance	$ 15,741.13
April deposited in March	8,892.05

Cheque for Maintenance.

G. N. Gordon submitted a letter from Robinette, Godfrey & Co., enclosing a bill for one year's treatment and attention to Bessie Montgomery, amounting to $278.10, or at the rate of 70 cents a day, at the King Edward Sanatorium for Consumptives at Weston.

Alderman Stratton moved, seconded by Alderman Dobbin, that the above account be paid. Carried.

For Park Meetings.

Mr. Gilchrist on behalf of Gospel Hall, asked for permission to use Central Park as usual this summer for Evangelistic meeting. Granted on motion of Alderman Duffus, seconded by Alderman Green.

Private Bill Expense.

G. N. Gordon wrote that he had personally paid $73.92, the balance due on the Private Bills and asked for a cheque to cover this disbursement.

Alderman Stratton moved a resolution to provide for this sum.

Dry-Sweeping Pavement.

Alderman Edgar—Is there a by-law preventing dry-sweeping on the streets?

Mayor Buller—Yes.

Alderman Edgar — I have heard many complaints against the dry-sweeping of the street pavement. The law that applies to merchants and the sidewalks should also prevent dust raising on the paved roadway.

Alderman Green replied that there had been no sprinkling because of the frost which it was felt would make thin ice on the paved street if water were applied up to the present.

$210.00 for Scrap Signs.

City Solicitor Gordon reported that $210.00 should be paid the Peterborough Light and Power Company for electric signs in stock.

Alderman Edgar—Are those signs worth anything?

Mayor Buller—We've got to pay for them anyway. We ought to be glad to get out that easy.

Alderman Edgar—Just scrap iron?

Mayor Buller—Yes.

Alderman Edgar moved, seconded by Alderman Greene that the sum be paid.

Mr. Colville's letter to Mr. Gordon on this matter said that $516.00 should be collected. The city should pay, he wrote, the money turned in by the lessees of the signs in use during the past five months.

Another Mill on Taxes.

A by-law was passed authorizing the levying of the provincial war tax rate of one mill on all the rateable property in this municipality.

Alderman Green—Have they any authority to collect this?

Alderman Saunders—I suppose they have.

Alderman Stratton pointed out that the city will have to put any taxes not collected.

A few minutes before, during the reading of the by-law to grant the Salvation Army $225.00, a ratepayer in the benches asked Mayor Buller what authority the Council exercised in granting this sum.

The Mayor replied that it was simply a grant, implying the city's power to make it.

Frontage Indemnity.

Mr. Gordon reported that Mrs. Gagnon had agreed to accept $200 and Mrs. Murphy $100 for damage to their land on Smith street caused by the approach to the bridge over the river.

Alderman Green moved that the treasurer be authorized to issue cheques for the above, the city securing permission to raise the road to the necessary height. Alderman McIntyre seconded and cautioned that care be taken to see that the city is paying for the entire property affected.

Borrow $200,000.

Ald. Stratton moved the reading of a by-law to borrow $200,000 to provide for current expenditures until the taxes come in.

Simplifies the Investigation to be Made by Judge

Messrs. Gordon and Hill Agree to Accept Judge Huycke's Finding — Council Adopts the Idea

The report of the special committee appointed in regard to the investigation asked for by the Board of Education was presented to the Council last night by Ald. Dobbin, as follows:

"We waited upon His Honour Judge Huycke, who agreed that if the members of the Board of Education referred to in the resolutions asking for an investigation consented to accept and abide by his decision and laid the facts before him, he would hear them and give a decision.

"We communicated with the members of the Board of Education, mentioned, and received letters from Messrs. W. H. Hill, G. N. Gordon, and John Crane. Messrs. Hill and Gordon agree to abide by the Judge's decision in the matter.

"We recommend that copies of these letters be forwarded to His Honour Judge Huycke and that he be asked to hold the investigation in accordance with the suggestion made when your Committee waited upon him."

The report was adopted on motion of Ald. Dobbin, seconded by Ald. Stratton.

INQUIRY IS REFUSED

German Officials Refuse to Admit Mr. Pinchot into Belgium

WASHINGTON, April 6. — Gifford Pinchot has been expelled by the German military authorities from the territory of Belgium, which is in control of Germany.

The State Department has been advised of the fact, but Secretary Bryan says no protest will be made and that Mr. Pinchot will be given other work.

About ten days ago the State Department announced that Mr. Pinchot was to go to Belgium and look into the conditions of prisoners within the German lines. Nothing more has been heard of him until yesterday, when Dr. Van Dyck, the American Minister at The Hague, cabled that Mr. Pinchot had been asked to leave. The German excuse is that Pinchot is related to a former British diplomat.

It is not known here whether the Germans assigned true reasons for their request, or whether they were unwilling to have the condition of the prisoners investigated.

PLENTY OF WORK FOR MEN WHO WILL GO OUT AS FARM HELP

T. Howell, special representative of the Ontario government will be in the city from Wednesday until Friday to receive applications from unemployed men who wish to take up farm work. Applicants may be experienced or inexperienced. They will be received by Mr. Howell in Room 12, Bank of Commerce building, at the corner of Hunter and Water Streets. Many farmers in the province need help this year, and this method is being employed to attempt solve two problems, need of work in the city and help on the farm.

ADDRESSES TO FARMERS

Arrangements Completed for Meetings in Peterboro' County

Arrangements have practically been completed for the meetings to be held in Peterborough county this week, which are to be addressed by Mr. J. J. Morrison, secretary of the United Farmers of Ontario, and of the United Farmers' Cooperative Co., Limited. During the past few months, Mr. Morrison has addressed meetings in all parts of Ontario and has had wonderful receptions at every point. Already several thousand farmers of Ontario have identified themselves with the United Farmers of Ontario as a result of the meetings which have been addressed by Mr. Morrison.

The United Farmers' Cooperative Co., Limited is a cooperative concern which is enabling farmers' clubs to buy their goods cooperatively and thus save large sums of money. The United Farmers' Cooperative Co., Limited this year for instance, united with the Grain Growers' Grain Co., of Western Canada and gave an order for binder twine to a firm in Ireland which supplies the twine last year for the grain growers in western Canada. In ways such as this the company is working to advance the interests of the farmers of the province. Mr. Morrison has some startling information relating to the methods being employed by various combines in Canada to control prices and bleed the public. At several meetings he has had documents with him showing private circulars sent out by these combines and revealing how they manipulate prices.

Mr. Morrison is to speak at Zion in Smith township at 2.30 o'clock Thursday, April 8, and at Stewart's Hall in Otonabee at 8 o'clock the same evening at; Selwyn Friday afternoon April 9, at 2.30 o'clock and in the Temperance Hall on the fourth line of Smith the same evening.

ALL LONDON THEATRES CROWDED TO CAPACITY

Amendment Voted Down

Hon. Mr. Pugsley Sought to Place Premium on Election Purity

OTTAWA, April 6. — The House yesterday passed a number of Government bills of minor importance and debated at considerable length in committee of the whole Mr. Doherty's bill to amend the Controverted Elections Act. The bill is designed to expedite the trial of election protests by cutting off preliminary objections and appeals. Curiously enough, the Minister of Justice yesterday introduced a bill permitting provincial elections trials to be further extended than at present by appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada. The legislation will apply to the cases growing out of the recent provincial elections in Manitoba.

The principal discussion yesterday was upon an amendment proposed by Hon. Wm. Pugsley. It provided that, in the trial of Dominion election cases, the court might not only deprive the successful candidate of his seat if corrupt practices were proved, but award the seat to the candidate receiving the next highest number of votes, provided the latter were able to prove that neither he nor his agents had been guilty of any corruption.

There is no encouragement, he said, for a man to be scrupulously clean in election methods. If he was beaten by corruption and spent thousands of dollars in proving that fact, he got nothing in return and the candidate corruptly elected was re-elected usually as a matter of course.

Sir Robert Borden objected that such a provision would work great injustice to a constituency. The people might overwhelmingly prefer John Smith to John Jones and yet because some friend of Smith's had been guilty of a corrupt practice they would be compelled to accept John Jones as member of Parliament.

The amendment was voted down and the bill itself was left in committee.

Small Girl: "Please, Mrs. Jones, mother wants to know if she can borrow a dozen eggs. She wants to put them under a hen."

Mrs. Jones: "So you have got a hen, have you I didn't know your mother kept hens."

Small Girl: "No, she doesn't; but Mrs. Smith is going to lend us a hen that is going to sit, and mother thought if you'd lend us the eggs we could find the nest ourself."

STUNG AGAIN.

Carriage dealers have been stung by buying their carriages out of some foreign country. Now they have to pay 35 per cent. duty, 7 1-2 per cent. war tax, but we were lucky to secure Canada-made carriages, with no duty or war tax on them, which enables us to sell carriages at such a price that has never been offered in the city. See our display before you decide on one. You will benefit by it greatly. Home Furnishing Co.

LOCAL MAN ON EXECUTIVE OF THE MASTER HORSESHOERS ASSOCIATION OF ONTARIO

Mr. M. S. Donoghue Elected 1st Vice President—City Fathers Were Guests at Banquet of Visiting Delegates Last Night—Next Convention to be Held at Ottawa

The first day of the annual convention of the Master Horse Shoers' convention of Ontario was brought to a successful close by a banquet in the Empress Hotel last night, at which the members of the City Council were honoured guests.

About one hundred delegates were on hand at 2 o'clock in the Victoria Hall when Mr. Thos. R. DeGreer, the Provincial President, opened the meeting, and judging from the enthusiasm displayed throughout this convention, which is the fourth annual convention of the Association, it was a very successful one indeed. Amongst the delegates were to be seen some veteran horseshoers who, when called upon, were able to give some good advice, based upon their experience in the craft, and in this way for one the meeting should prove profitable to some of the younger members of the Association.

The delegates were welcomed on behalf of the city by His Worship Mayor Buller, who extended to them the freedom of the city.

President's Address.

The President in presenting his first annual report had a few words of praise for the commercial men, a number of whom were present, styling them as the backbone of the Association. He was pleased to be in a position to say that the Association was now getting on a firm working basis, and though it had been a hard year for the horseshoers throughout most of the Province, there was nearly $200.00 in the treasury. He also praised the loyalty of those horseshoers who had closed up their shops and came to the convention, leaving their non-union competitors to have things their own way during their absence.

The treasurer reported a balance on hand of $169.03, the books having been audited and found correct.

The election of officers was the most important item of the evening session, which opened at 7 o'clock. Before proceeding with the election the salary of the secretary was fixed at $50.00 a year, to be paid quarterly and the pay of executive members attending any meetings was reduced to $2.00 per day with expenses.

New Officers.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows:

Provincial President—Mr. Thos. DeGreer, Toronto, re-elected by acclamation.

1st Vice-Pres.—Mr. M. S. Donoghue, Peterborough.

2nd Vice-Pres.— Mr. C. Summerhayes, Brantford.

3rd Vice-Pres.—Mr. Robert Heslop, Hamilton.

Provincial Organizer — Mr. J. W. Black, Merivalle.

Gift For Secretary.

Mr. DeGreer was desirous of getting out of office this year, but from the enthusiasm shown in his re-election by acclamation there was no doubt but that the delegates realized the value of his leadership to the Association. The secretary and treasurer received like treatment when their names were offered as nominees for the respective offices. The secretary was the recipient of a beautiful Waterman fountain pen, the gift of his fellow members of the Association as a slight token of their appreciation of the services he has rendered during the past year.

Mr. S. Groves of Hamilton, a veteran shoer, who was present, was unanimously elected as an honourary member of the Association.

The next annual convention of the Master Horseshoers' Association of Ontario will meet in Ottawa and the annual picnic, which is always held on the first Saturday after the second Monday in August will go to Brantford. This will be the first time for the Association to go as far east as Ottawa, but it has been promised to the Ottawa representatives for a couple of years.

Each delegate was presented with a souvenir anvil by the Capewell Nails representative.

The Banquet.

The banquet at the Empress Hotel at 10 o'clock, at which the members of the City Council were guests was a fitting climax to a successful day in convention. The menu was all that could be desired and the toast master, Mr. Jas. N. Carroll, of Newark, N.J., had a lengthy list of names on his programme. It developed upon Mr. Jos. Batten, a horseshoer and ex-Alderman of this city to introduce the city's representatives and welcome them as guests of the evening. He was followed by His Worship, Mayor Buller, Ald. Dobbin, Mr. M. S. Donoghue, the Peterborough representatives on the Executive of the Association, Mr. S. Groves of Hamilton, Ald. Duffus, Mr. J. Gardiner of Brantford, Mr. G. N. Gordon, Mr. J. W. Black, Merivalle, Mr. Kelly of Kingston, Ald. Stratton. Ald. Edgar, Mr. Robert McGill, Ald. McIntyre, Mr. Kingan and Mr. Adair of Peterborough, and others in short speeches.

STREETS BEYOND THE BUSINESS SECTION WILL BE OILED SOON

The Council committed itself to oiling the streets last night.

Ald. Green moved that oil be used this year instead of water.

Ald. Stratton—"The centre ward will be watered in the usual way?"

Ald. Green—Yes, the business section will be watered.

Ald. Edgar seconded the motion.

Ald. Weir moved an amendment that five miles be oiled this year.

Ald. Duffus—It is impossible to get the streets ready and oil fourteen miles of them.

Mayor Buller.—We will have to keep within the appropriation, anyway.

Ald. Stratton—Will Alderman Weir state what streets he has in mind. Are they all in the East Ward?

Ald. Weir—One mile in each ward. There are streets in the south end from which if you remove the dust you will never reach the bottom.

The original motion carried.

The Mayor remarked that the preparing of the streets for the oil would give considerable work for unemployed over this Spring.

The Precious Tires.

Ald. Green read a letter from S. J. Keyes, secretary of the local Automobile Association, presenting replies from auto clubs in Strafford, St. Thomas, Berlin and other towns where the streets are oiled. They were unanimous in reporting that rubber tires had not been injured by the oil. Hence the local Association registered no objection.

THE LATEST WAR MACHINE

There are many types of automobiles devised to meet the particular requirements of various services of the great European war-field ambulance autos, field guns on auto carriages, auto ammunition trains, auto soup kitchens in great numbers, operating rooms on autos, balloon and anti-air ship guns on autos, etc.

A very recent development is an armoured auto car of special construction, and carrying rapid fire guns. It is designed for quick dashing raids and to act as a rescue when troops are hard pressed by the enemy. It is built with a very long, narrow chassis and has a solidly enclosed and heavily armoured drivers compartment with only a narrow opening through the front, from which the driver may watch the road. There is an entrance in the back of the driver's cab so that any man of the party may enter the driver's cab without exposing himself to the enemy. This is very essential in case of death or injury to the driver. If the man taking the driver's place had to expose himself in any way as is the case in all other autos, the usefulness of the machine would clearly be greatly reduced. The side walls and end of the body are made up of a series of panels, each somewhat higher than a man when kneeling to fire. The lower edge of each panel is provided with two pins or lugs which fit into staples or sockets on the side of the chassis, while the upper end is solidly secured to the upper pan of the panel. When the panels are all in place, the car body has very much the appearance of a long box with V shaped openings about one foot deep and at regular intervals in its upper edge. These are formed by the tapering parts of the panels and provided with peep holes or sight openings through which the occupants may fire at the enemy. The plates or panels are of bullet proof armour, and are especially designed to be used as shields. So, if the truck gets disabled, or the pursuit gets too hot, the occupants slip the panels and their braces from the sockets, and leave the truck, using the panels as shields to form a small temporary breast work.

Most of these trucks also carry a pair of rapid fire guns mounted on pedestals and arranged to be fired in any direction. They are so mounted that they and their supports may be readily removed from the truck body, in case of need. So, even if the enemy compels the abandonment of this truck, it gains little in the capture, because the deserted truck will be so completely unprotected that no enemy could take it away. Even if they could take it away, it would be of no use except as a simple auto freight truck, as a war engine it would be valueless.

This truck is being manufactured in considerable numbers for the Russian army and the allies by the Dreadnot Motor Company of New York and Montreal.

"Let me see, now," said the minister at the christening, dipping his pen into the ink to record the event. "Isn't this the 27th?"

"I should say not," retorted the indignant mother; "It is only the ninth!"

TWO EX-FIREMEN WERE BANQUETED

By the Members of the Fire Department—Have Enlisted in the Battery—An Interesting Event

Amid scenes of festivity and felicitation two former members of the Peterborough Fire Department in the persons of M. J. Clancy and E. Munden were on the eve of their departure for the front, presented with a couple of handsome Morris chairs, and incidentally the good wishes of their former associates. The affair took place last evening in the Central Fire Station and assumed the form of a banquet, followed by the presentation and speeches by Fire Chief Howard and Adjutant McElhiney, chaplain of the Fire Department. Ald. J. J. Duffus, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee, presided, and Ald. G. W. Green performed the duties incident to the presentation. The recipients who have joined the battery were present in uniform. Their leave of absence was extended by the commanding officer of the Battery at Kingston in order to permit of their being present at the valedictory function. Ex-fireman Munden has been with the Peterborouhg Fire Department for upwards of seven years, and M. J Clancy for a period of two years.

The Address.

The commissary department was in charge of the firemen and needless to say they more than sustained their reputation as caterers of no mean ability. Each man was expected to consume a large overgrown bowl of soup, a plate of chicken, besides various salads, cakes, ice cream and a number of other incidentals. This disposed of, Ald. Duffus after a few appropriate remarks, called upon Ald. Green to deliver the presentation address, which contained the following:

To Firemen Munden and Clancy—

Dear Comrades,— We, the officers and members of the Peterborough Fire Department, regret exceedingly the loss the Department will sustain by you severing your connection with us. We feel, however, that you have chosen a higher calling, and trust that your services in connection with the Military Department will be equally successful.

During your term of employment in this Department, you have shown yourselves to be manly men, and always faithful to duty. The consciousness of this fact ought to be a source of gratification to you; it is to us.

During the years that are past you have shown yourselves to be kind and considerate to your fellow firemen, and we wish you to know that we entertain the very kindest regards for you. Your actions have been such as to command our respect.

We will follow your future with a good deal of interest, as we are confident that you will not only do honour to your king and country, but that your future good behaviour will be of a source of pride to us.

We are taking advantage of your temporary leave of absence to express to you our good wishes and we ask you to accept these chairs as a slight token of our respect and esteem.

We sincerely hope and trust that you will be spared to return safely at the conclusion of the present war, and shall look forward to the coming of the time when we shall be re-united.

Signed on behalf of the Department,

J. A. McElhiney,
Fire Department Chaplain.
Jos. J. Duffus,
Chairman,
Fire, Water and Light Committee.
W. Howard,
Chief Fire Department.

Both ex-Firemen Munden and Clancy replied in a few well chosen words, which were followed by short eulogistic addresses by Firemen H. Johnston and F. Downton.

A Patriotic Address.

Fire Chief Howard in a patriotic address commended the two men for the spirit that had inspired them to take up arms in defence of the Empire. This was Canada's fight as well as Great Britain's and only by the sacrifice of men and munitions of war would the present homeric contest be brought to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion. He assured the men that they would carry with them the best wishes of their comrades for a safe return and that in volunteering for overseas service they had shown patriotism of a practical form.

Adjutant McElhiney followed with "some good advice" which had for its object the elucidation of many of the responsibilities that confront a man when he enlists. These involve respect for the officers under whom they may be placed and in the case of married men, a dutiful regard for the dependents whom they may leave behind, and last but by no means the least a proper recognition of the Divine Being.

The affair was brought to a close by the rendition of the National Anthem and a flashlight photo taken by one of the firemen.

ZEPPELIN DISSATISFIED

The Count Thinks His Airships Can Do Better Work

Romanshorr, Switzerland, April 6. —Count Zeppelin is not satisfied with the manner in which his airships are being handled. He called together one day last week his engineers and the captains of the dirigibles now at the Zeppelin works at Friedrichshaven, and criticised them on several scores.

The count said that the full power of Zeppelins had not been employed, and that longer raids than any made heretofore were possible. He also said that there was too much of a disposition to await favorable weather conditions, instead of responding without delay to military requirements.

He believed that an attack upon London and the lower Thames had been delayed unnecessarily. The count also is understood to have criticised his captains for retreating from hostile airmen.

The "Drum Major" Last Night

The presentation of the delightful operetta, the "Drum Major" at the Opera House last night gave a fine example of the capabilities of home musical and histrionic talent, and demonstrated the possibilities of development of the abundant dormant musical and dramatic ability we have amongst us. The operetta is a dainty, sprightly musical comedy with the mise en scene laid in the time of the first French Empire. It is a romance of war and love such as always appeals. Almost necessarily the music is of light texture, but of tuneful liveliness and typical of the gayety and piquancy of French character. Like most light operas there isn't much plot, but large opportunity for display of some fine singing and picturesque spectacular effect. The principal characters are only four in number, but they are well complemented by large and effective choruses and ballet, which gives the opportunity of some very graceful and taking dancing.

The prima donna was Miss Lettie Drope, a charming young girl, who took the role of Clarice. The play, a little one-sided in this regard, throws a great deal of heavy work on Clarice, rather more than her fair share, but she did her work splendidly, with the aplomb of a professional. Miss Drope has an excellent messo-soprano voice, and she used it last night with splendid effect. Not only was her musical interpretation good, but her dramatic action was of a very effective quality. She scored quite a triumph all through the action, in which she took a part as creditable as it was prominent. Mr. Harold Lee made a very capable "Sergeant Leroux." His singing and action were quite up to the mark. The closing duet, between "Leroux" and "Clarice," was not the least pleasing and spirited item on the programme. Mr. Ed Hanrahan as the 'Drum Major,' and Mrs. A. A. Ferrin as Babette, his adoring sweetheart, furnished the chief comedy of the play, and excellently, too. Mr. Hanrahan's splendid voice was heard to excellent effect in his several solo numbers, as well as in his duets with "Clarice" and "Babette." His acting was also excellent, and his love scenes with Babette were marked by excellent acting. Mrs. Ferrin made a charming and piquant Babette, furnishing a sprightly type of the grisette in love and her singing and dramatic work were charmingly in keeping with her role. The choruses were well taken, and especially the closing chouses of the Orpheus Society. Altogether the entertainment was a really good entertainment, and reflects the highest credit upon all the participants, and the conduct, Mr. J. Edward Fisher, director of the society and oragnist of the Charlotte Street Methodist church.

Mr. Fisher deserves credit not only for the success of last night's entertainment, but for his deep interest in the development of the home talent of the city, a work for which he is well qualified by his musical attainments and experience. To the advantage of thorough study and training abroad, he adds a large experience, in the capacity of organist and choirmaster of prominent Canadian churches, and has shown that he was able to hold his own in the highest company. He was organist at a cathedral music festival in the Metropolitan Methodist church, Regina, given under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge. He has in the west been in request as the director of Philharmonic Societies and Glee Clubs. He is also a finished pianiste as well as organist, and he may well be regarded as a decided acquisition to the musical forces of the city.

The "Drum Major" will be repeated to-night, and it is hoped the public for their own sakes will make a point of being present.

Putting The Park Into Shape

Work Commenced on Victoria Park This Morning

The work of putting Victoria Park into shape for the spring and summer months was commenced this morning. The past week or two has had a destructive effect on the award in that people crossing the park would invariably deviate from the proper paths. The first day's work will be productive of considerable improvement. The cinder paths will be cleaned up and paths that have been cut in the award will be levelled up, and a little grass seed sown on the paven places. The rest will be left to nature.

At Castle Nesbitt.

The seasonal spirit has even extended to the chateau on the hill. This morning a squad of men attired in the conventional garb and in charge of Turnkey Ray, were out with rakes, shovels, wheelbarrows, and other implements of garden warfare. They passed a rake over everything in sight, including the roadway in front of the courthouse. The result as a whole presented a marked improvement. A few sunshiny days and Victoria Park will begin to assume that appearance for which it is noted throughout the summer months.

COUNCIL SEEKS A SOLUTION FOR COMPENSATING WORKMEN

Have Several Methods Under Consideration and Must Provide Some Means of Meeting New Law's Demands—Different Opinions Held by Aldermen.

The Council has not yet evolved a working basis for the compensation of their employees as required by the Workmen's Compensation Act. Ald. Green reported verbally last night that the members of the committee entrusted with the consideration of his matter held divergent opinions.

Ald. Duffus said he favoured insuring in the regular way the men employed by the City, thus making absolutely sure that the city was protected.

Ald. Green reported that insurance brokers had submitted figures showing the cost of the insurance required. Men on sewer work would be covered at a rate of 6 per cent of their wages. Thus the city would have to pay 72c a week to insure him. Ald. Green said the committee had $2,000 to work with. He supported the idea of expending $1,000 on insurance to cover part of the city's employees and retaining the $1,000 as the nucleus of a fund to cover accidents, etc., and which might by yearly accumulation grow into a sum sufficiently large to enable the city to protect its workmen without the cost of regular line insurance companies.

Two thousand dollars as a protection fund would not take care of many accidents, Ald. Green remarked. He felt, however, that with the ordinary number of accidents it might suffice.

Ald. Stratton moved that the matter be referred back to the committee for their further consideration, and that they present a report showing the best and most economical method of dealing with the requirements.

Ald. Green replied that the committee desired to know how much the Council was willing to spend. He did not like the idea of paying $3,300.00 a year insurance to companies for protection when, by some other means, a fund might be begun which would enable the city itself to look after the protection.

Ald. McIntyre and Ald. Weir favoured the idea of creating a civic fund.

Ald. Edgar—If a sewer workman, at $12 a week were injured and incapacitated for three or four months the city would have to pay 55 per cent of his wages, or $6.40 a week.

Not Many Accidents.

Mayor Buller pointed out that usually there were not many accidents among civic employees. Hence $3,300 a year, insurance, might be regarded as wasted money. Of course the city would be taking a chance by following a scheme other than insuring with companies, but in an ordinary year there would not be many accidents. If a labourer were killed his widow would receive $40 a year while she remained a widow; but there have been few deaths in municipal work throughout the province.

His Worship laid stress on the suggestion from St. Thomas that legislation be asked for to permit the municipalities to unite and establish a common fund. In this way the fund would provide for accidents in Peterborough, St. Thomas or any municipality, but the cost to the individual municipality would be light. Mayor Buller favoured the idea of a local fund. With few demands on it at the outset, the money would soon good into an appreciable amount and would provide an easy solution of the problem. "Unless a cyclone or tornado hits the workmen, and we don't anticipate that" concluded the Mayor.

Ald. Stratton's motion carried and the special committee will again deal with the question.

Firemen as 'White Wings'.

Ald. Edgar asked about the feasability of employing the firemen to push the streets.

Ald. Stratton—"Would you make them "white wings".

Ald. Edgar—"I do not understand your phraseology."

Ald. Stratton—"Dress the Chief and his men in white suits, as they do the street cleaners in the large cities?"

Ald. Edgar did not go into details, and Mayor Buller said the matter would be taken up at the next meeting of the Board of Works.

By-laws were passed authorizing the grants of $500 to the 7th Band, the grants of $500 to the 57th Band, Band.

ANNUAL EASTER VESTRY MEETINGS

Of All Saints' and St. Luke's Church —A Successful Year

The annual Easter vestry meeting of All Saints' Church was held last evening and was largely attended. The rector, Rev. R. B. Grobb, M.A., occupied the chair.

The financial statement was presented by H. P. Morgan, the people's warden, and that of the missionary fund by the rector's warden, Mr. C. E. Sisson. It was shown that during the past year the amount raised for all purposes was $3,742, a most creditable showing for a year of such peculiar difficulty. The missionary statement showed a substantial increase in missionary giving, $405 having been contributed during the year.

High Water Mark.

The Sunday School report was very encouraging, showing an annual attendance for this year of 252. The largest attendance was 350. This is the high water mark in the history of the school.

The choir report was presented by Mr. Chandler, and was most satisfactory. The membership of the choir has grown almost to the capacity of the new chancel.

The reports of the other organizations were presented as follows:

The Women's Auxiliary, by Mrs. Gilbert.

The Junior Branch of the W.A., by Mrs. Blois.

The Women's Guild, by Mrs. Haskill.

The Chancel Fuild, by Miss Cairns.

The Talent System, by Miss Rush.

Mr. Chas. Lacheur presented the auditor's report.

The Rector's Report.

The Rector in his report took occasion to thank the many workers who had charge of the various branches of the church's activity and expressed his gratitude for the success which had crowned their efforts. He drew attention to the great change that had taken place in the church building. Last Easter the matter of chancel and vestries was still in the discussion stage. This Easter it is an accomplished fact, and the congregation has the joy and privilege of worshipping in one of the most beautiful churches in the diocese. This change had been wrought during a year of widespread financial depression and general discouragement, and was therefore, a cause for special thankfulness.

Election of Officers.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

Rector's Warden—Mr. A. Smeaton.

Peoples' Warden—Mr. H. P. Morgan.

Vestry Clerk—Mr. R. E. Clarke.

Envelope Secretary — Mr. E. L. Davis.

Lay Delegates to the Synod—Mr. W. G. Howden, Mrs. Jas. Edgar, Mr. G. W. Worth.

Advisory Committee—Mayor Buller, Mr. H. P. Morgan, Mr. A. Smeaton, Mr. C. E. Sisson, Mr. T. H. Hooper, Mr. F. H. Dawson, Mr. Jos. Mulholland, Mr. E. L. Davis, Mr. R. N. Jones, Mr. Robt. Cottrell, Mr. Rogers, Mr. R. E. Clarke.

Many votes of thanks were passed and a good deal of interesting discussion took place on several matters of interest which were brought before the meeting.

Owing to a new system of presenting the aduditor's report at the annual Easter vestry, there will be no adjournment meeting this year.

St. Luke's Vestry.

The annual Easter Vestry meeting of St. Luke's Church was held last night, the rector, Rev. W. H. White, M.A., presiding. The report of the peoples' warden, Mr. George Curtis, was presented, and showed the finances of the church to be in a healthy condition.

Mr. Wm. Manjece was elected peoples' warden, while Mr. R. H. Parsons was appointed rector's warden.

Messrs. Arthur Moffatt and H. Wickenden were elected assistant wardens.

Messrs. J. J. Turner, Jr., E. A. Peck, and F. Adams, were elected lay delegates to the Synod.

Mr. Stephen Gaskins was elected representative to the Charity Board, and E. A. Peck, the representative to the Nicholls Hospital Board.

The Advisory Board was re-elected with the additional members to it, of the retiring wardens. Messrs. Stephen Gaskins and George Curtis, R. Northcote and Capt. Copperthwaite.

A Vote of Thanks.

Rev. Mr. White spoke of the pleasure it gave him to be present at this first vestrey, as rector, while Messrs. E. A. Peck and J. J. Turner expressed the hope that Mr. White's pastorate at St. Luke's would be a very happy one, and that the church would continue to grow and prosper as heretofore.

Votes of thanks were tendered the organist, Mrs. Greenslade and the choir, the retiring wardens and the officers of the Sunday School.

At the Theatres

THE EMPIRE.

The "movie" fans were introduced to Marie Doro at the Empire, last night, in "The Morals of Marcus," a romantic comedy of contemporary times. The star is new to this city, but some at least have read of her various successes, especially in the theatrical production "The Butterfly on the Wheel." Many have read "The Morals of Marcus," and to them the photo play will be of special interest, but the entire theatre-going public should like this film. It is from William J. Locke's celebrated novel, and deals with present day affairs. The settings are splendid and the whole play is a good one.

THE TIZ-IT.

Mary Pickford, in "Sweetheart Days," is one of the prettiest films that have come come to the Tiz-It since its opening. It is romantic all the way and the little favourite is at her best. The war film is devoted to the Italian army, navy, cavalry, etc. and is very timely in so far as public attention is directed toward Italy's attitude in the war. The feature film is a good detective story entitled "Under the Black Robe." It is in four parts with many interesting and thrilling cuts. "Carter's Lost Scout" in two acts, explains itself. It is a corking good western story, with Indians galore and plenty of action.

Combing Won't Rid Hair Of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this to-night, and by morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

LIKE A SCHOOL BOY WITH NEW SLATE IS JESS WILLARD

Special to The Examiner:

HAVANA, April 6—Happy like a schol boy with a new slate. That was the evident disposition to-day of Jess Willard, the new and white champion world's heavyweight. The new king of the ring was up early. He roamed around the streets, the centre of a jostling, admiring throng. Such crowds followed him that at times this morning his jaunt was absolutely blocked. The temperamental Cubans went into raptures of demonstration. Willard was absolutely unhurt. Only a few scratches were the evidences of his winning battle. Jack Johnson, the dethroned champion, on the other hand, was sore in mind and body. His ebony frame was racked wih pain from Willard's pummelling. But the big black, wincing yet from the terrific body punches of the cowboy champion, showed sportsmanship in seeking recognition for a game, though losing, fight.

"Give me what credit is due" Johnson told me, "no other heavyweight in the world could have stood Willard off for 26 rounds. I gave Jeffries credit for gamely taking a beating from me at Reno; now give it to me."

Tom Jones, Willard's manager, shared to-day in the felicitations over the wresting of the big prise from the negro. Jones is the real "power behind the throne" of the new fistic king. He deserves the greatest credit for his part in returning the championship to the white race.

SAY LONDON CLUB WILL HAVE TO BE WATCHED THIS YEAR

HAMILTON.—Unless present signs fail, there is an interesting time in store for the officials of the London Canadian League Club. This much is intimated by an official of the Hamilton ball club, and it all comes as a result of the manner in which George O'Neill, the London magnate, has been juggling players and ball franchises recently. Speaking of O'Neill and his action in turning over eight players to the London club after he had sold his Erie Canadian league franchise to Guelph, a local officer said: "Unless I am mistaken the London club will have to be watched very closely this year. If anybody steps over the salary limit it will be that crowd in London. They have been working in pretty well with O'Neill recently, and I have no doubt but that they will make some deal with him for the players he is turning over to them. It is beyond me just how any one individual can sell two franchises in one season where he only had one to start with and can then retain possession of players after he has disposed of these franchises or even attempt to sell players when he is no longer a franchise holder. To make it worse, there is no doubt but that O'Neill has been a shareholder in the London club right from the time that that club was organised. To my mind, the article in the Spectator which drew attention to the manner in which the London man has been juggling franchises and players was most timely. Recent actions by the London outfit should be enough to bring about a careful tab of their actions for the balance of the season."

There is no doubt but that the local magnate hits the nail on the head. The strange part of it all is that O'Neill has been permitted to go as he has recently.

Executive Committee—Robt. Quinlan, A. Armstrong and T. J. Dineen.

Messrs. Lancaster and Andrews were appointed delegates to the O.A.L.A. meeting at Toronto on Good Friday.

It was also decided to try and arrange exhibition games for the 24th of May, and the matter of entering teams in the different series of the O.A.L.A. was left over until the next meeting, it being understood, however, that the Juveniles would be entered in any event.—Havelock Standard.

LACROSSE NOTES.

Marmora, Tweed, Hastings, Norwood and Campbellford will again be on the lacrosse map this year.

Millbrook is anxious to play lacrosse this year and an effort will be made to form a district in that vicinity.

Madoc will enter both intermediate and juvenile teams in the O.A.L.A.

Stirling will enter the fold this year and put an intermediate team in the running.

HERE'S A REAL AMATEUR TEAM

Port McNicholl junior lacrosse team gave the best example of real amateurism that has been seen in sporting circles for some time. At a meeting of the lacrosse enthusiasts it was decided to enter an intermediate team in the O.A.L.A., and as expenses will be heavy, not to have a junior aggregation. This did not satisfy the youngsters, however, and they decided to enter a team of their own under the following conditions. They will buy their own equipment, pay their own and the visiting clubs' travelling expenses, and turn over to the intermediate aggregation any funds they receive from their share of any gate receipts.

HASTINGS LACROSSE TEAM UNDER WAY

The organization meeting of the Lacrosse Club for 1915 took place on Wednesday night of last week.

A goodly bunch of fans were in attendance, and heard the reports of last year and elected the officers for this year. It looks like another good lacrosse year for Hastings as most of last year's men are ready to get into the game. The Club's expenses were about $390 last year and the receipts about $8 less. The following officers were elected for 1915:

Hon. President—A. B. Spellman.
President—Alex. Wilson.
Vice-President—J. M. Thomson.
Secretary-Treasurer—J. J. McPhee.
Executive Committee—J. F. McCarthy, T. A. Coughlan and W. A. Baker.
Manager—Geo. Hormel.—Hastings Star.

REPORT OF THE TYPHOID OUTBREAK AT THE Y.W.C.A.

Dr. McPherson, Medical Officer of Health, is Inclined to Think That the Infection Originated With the Drinking Water Which was Obtained From Wells in the Vicinity—Sanitary Inspector's Report.

The Board of Management of the Y.W.C.A. wish to make the following statement with regard to the outbreak of typhoid in their boarding home on Simcoe Street. Upon the first indications of the presence of typhoid in the building the Board, anxious to immediately locate the cause, telephoned the Medical Health Officer, requesting him to make a thorough inspection of the building and particularly asked for an examination of the drinking water, which had chiefly been procured from a well in the vicinity. Unfortunately it was close upon two weeks before any report from him on this head was available. The M. H. O. also had the source of the milk supply inspected. The Board has had the smoke test applied to all plumbing in the building.

The following certificates have been issued by the M. H. O., the Sanitary Inspector and the Plumbing Inspector. G. M. Stevenson, Sec'y of Board.

Health Officer's Report.

Peterborough, March 31, 1915.

Miss M. Dickson,
President Y.W.C.A.

In reply to your request for a report of the outbreak of typhoid at the Y.W.C.A. I would say that from information that can be obtained I am inclined to think that the infection was obtained from the drinking water.

A supply was obtained at different times from three wells. Two of these showed contamination and the other one, which is a shallow well, may be contaminated from time to time and show free from infection between times.

Yours very truly,
A. W. McPherson, M.H.O.

Sanitary Inspector's Report.

Peterborough, April 1st, 1915.

The farms from which the Y.M.C.A. milk supply is derived have been inspected by me with the object of ascertaining whether the recent typhoid cases could be traced to that source. As a result of this inspection I have no hesitation in stating that in my opinion the milk supply is quite above suspicion. Exhaustive enquiries were made as to any cases of sickness around the farms and the water supply tested and found free from infection.

(Signed) C. A. G. Spence,
Sanitary Inspector.

Plumbing Inspector.

5th April, 1915.

Miss M. Dickson,
Care Y.M.C.A.

Having examined the plumbing work in the building, I find that since being first tested till final test, where leak was found, there was no chance of sewer gas as there is nothing but fresh air passes through those pipes from outside up through the roof. There is no chance for typhoid from that source. I guarantee your work is well and truly tested and found O.K. Enclosed find certificate.

P. Thompson,
Plumbing Inspector.

THE CITY GARDEN.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I have been reading with interest the correspondence in your valuable paper re Gardening, and would beg to advise Amateur to take the advice given by Mr. Mills, concerning his lots, as I have had a life experience in most branches of gardening. I feel that Mr. Mills has taken the right stand in advising anyone, not to rush into much expense on vacant lots for one year, as I consider it would take two or three years to get a good profit on the average vacant lot, as they seem to be full of thick and rank weeds.

Yours truly,
A. YOUNGS,

In The Case of Election Appeals

Sir Wilfred Laurier Calls the Proposed Change Dangerous Legislation

OTTAWA, Ont., April 6.—There was an interesting discussion in the House this morning on a bill to amend the Supreme Court Act which will in future make possible appeals from the provincial election cases to the Supreme Court of Canada, when provision is made for the same by the Provincial Election Act.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier thought that this was dangerous legislation. If there is fault in our laws it is that we have an excess of appeals. He did not think it desirable that the Federal and Provincial matters should be mixed up in this way. Provincial courts should have supreme jurisdiction in Provincial election cases. R. B. Bennett of Calgary, said he was in agreement with Sir Wilfrid. He did not consider such appeals desirable.

GOOD TIME AT THE LYCEUM

The first "At Home," under the auspices of the amalgamated Total Abstinence Societies, held last evening in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum, was a splendid success. The early part of the evening was spent in progressive euchre, after which there was dancing to music by Misses Marian Gorman and Margaret McDonald.

The winners at euche were Miss Anna Grady and Mr. P. Lafavre.

The dance broke up shortly before midnight and everyone reports a good time.

THE ONTARIO EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION

Annual Meeting Was Commenced This Morning

TORONTO, Ont., April 6. — The Ontario Educational Association gathered at Toronto University this morning early and by ten o'clock seventeen "sections" were hard at work in the different class rooms. The programme for this morning embraced every activity of public and high school life in the province, and many of the papers presented by active educational authorities were of general, as well as academic interest and importance.

New Type of Submarine?

SPECIAL CABLE:

LONDON, April 6.—It was a big new submarine that dashed through a heavy sea at incredible speed which torpedoed and sank the steamer Northlands, off Beachy Head in the English Channel. While some of the crew landed at Deal to-day, believed the attacking "unterseeboote" was the famous U-12, others believed it was of newer and far more powerful type.

ASKS CITIZENS TO CONTRIBUTE

His Worship Mayor Buller asks as many citizens as possible to take part in the sock and handkerchief shower for the soldiers, to be held on Friday afternoon in Mr. T. Barrie's store.

SAW'S TEETH FLEW INTO WORKMAN'S EYE

Mr. Bert Davidson of Trent Bridge met with a serious accident on Tuesday. While working with a circular saw, a metal chute from below caught in the whirling saw teeth and was thrown into Mr. Davidson's face. One eye was cut through and bones in his face broken. The unfortunate man was taken to Peterborough that evening and had his injured eye removed. While his case is serious it is thought he will recover.—Hastings Star.

This Hen a Pointer Has Regular Ears

SCOTTDALE, Pa., April 6.—The curiosity of residents for miles around has been aroused by the discovery of a hen with ears which stand erect like those of a dog, on the farm of John Bowser, near here, and hundreds of persons are visiting the farm to get a glimpse of the freak.

The ears are about three quarters of an inch long and are growing from each side of the chicken's comb.

The hen is an excellent layer and is otherwise normal. There is a great demand for the hen's eggs, as residents are anxious to set the eggs in an effort to duplicate the eared fowl.

Drug Clerk Tells How To Cure Indigestion

Recommends to Sufferers the Best Stomach Remedy in Peterborough To-day.

"It is a wonder some of us have stomachs left," remarked a well-known drug clerk recently. "While all drug stores sell a score or more of stomach remedies for which there is a wide demand, most of them are just pepsin pills which aids digestion of the food that is in the stomach at the present time. They have no curative or strengthening effect on the stomach at all, and of course do not reach or cure the cause. So the same people keep on coming here and buying and using them until they are real chronic dyspeptics. When anyone really asks my advice, I swear by and recommend ordinary bisurated magnesia, which doesn't digest the food at all but acts as an antacid and sweetens the sour, fermenting contents of the stomach. That stops the pain, heart-burn, sour rising, wind, bloating, fullness, etc., in just a few minutes, and the stomach digests the food without help or trouble, which is the proper way."

"Doctors make mistakes sometimes, too," he continued. "My own aunt had all kinds of trouble with her stomach for years. She bought and used several styles of digestive pills but got worse right along, as naturally she would. Finally she went to a doctor, who nearly scared her to death by telling her she had cancer of the stomach. She came to me with his prescription and told me what he said. I thought it was nonsense. I sent her to another doctor whom I knew very well and he didn't tell her anything, but just gave her this same thing, bisurated magnesia. She took it two weeks and never has had any stomach trouble since and that's three years ago. She's my own aunt and I know this for a fact. Yes, a lot of bisurated magnesia is sold in Peterborough. All the druggists have it, I suppose, and all you take is a teaspoonful after every meal. It's all right."

Censored by Discretion.

"Oh, dear," groaned the young wife, "I don't know what to use to raise my bread; I've tried everything."

"A derrick and a couple of jackscrews ought to do it," thought her husband, but he didn't say it aloud.—Boston Transcript.

SHELLING OF SMYRNA FORTS IS RESUMED

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 7.—The Reuter Telegram Company has received a despatch from its correspondent at Athens, saying that British warships again bombarded the forts at the entrance to the Gulf of Smyrna Monday, according to the report of the captain of the Greek steamer Arcadia. Hydroplanes of the allies dropped a number of bombs, the captain declares, and the Vali of Smyrna ordered Europeans to leave town.

A British hydroplane first reconnoitred over the Smyrna forts Saturday morning, dropping several bombs, according to reports brought here. A destroyer passed in close to the harbour, while warships engaged the forts at long range.

Later in the day a British battleship, accompanied by several destroyers, conveying a transport, appeared off Chios Island and bombarded the Turkish towns of Kastro and Diodelfia. The transport carried several aeroplanes and several thousand troops, according to reports received here. When last seen she was steaming toward the entrance to Smyrna gulf, conveyed by the battleship and destroyers.

RUSSIANS CAPTURE THOUSANDS OF AUSTRIANS AND GERMANS

Offical Statement Announced That in the Baligied Uszok Pass Section Alone the Captives Totalled 3,890 Officers and 33,155 Men.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PETROGRAD, April 7.—The Russian armies rolling down upon Hungary have captured more than 30,000 Austrians and Germans in the last week of fighting in the Carpathians according to official figures furnished by the War Office to-day.

An official statement announced that in the Baligred Uszok Pass section alone, the captives in seven days' fighting, totalled 389 officers and 33,155 men, and that 37 cannon and 101 rapid firers, as well as large quantities of ammunition had been taken. Westward, in the fighting for Lupkow Pass an equal number of prisoners have been taken, the War Office announced, but the figures were not available to-day.

Official despatches received here early to-day reported important victories for the Slavs in the new offensive against Bukowina. They were received several hours after the War Office announced decided gains for the Russians by the capture of Rostok Pass and the villages of Smolnik and Ross Ruszka, the latter town on the Hungarian side of the mountains and midway between the Lupkow and Uszok Passes.

After the battle that began last Wednesday, the right wing of General Ivanoff's army captured the village of Okna, 18 miles northwest of Kolomea.

"By a furious attack with fixed bayonets our detachment captured the enemy's positions, annihilating two hundred battalions," said the official statement. 'We took 25 officers 5,000 men and eight guns."

Stock Ticker Heralded the Coming War

And it May be Heralded of Coming Peace—C.P.R. as a War Barometer

HOW IT FLUSTRATED

When did the stock market show the first indications of war in 1914? The date is not easily fixed. Germany's resolve to fight would be indicated first any attempts to turn securities into money. A double motive would inspire these attempts. First, Germany would want to fill her own war chest with the gold that other countries would exchange for German-owned securities. Next Germany would want to disarm Britain and the allied nations by breaking the price of stocks and causing a run on the banks.

Germany's declaration of war was operated on the stock market before war was formally declared. Germany mobilized her brokers before she mobilized her soldiers.

The first whisper of the storm that was to shake the world reached the ear of the stock market months before war was declared. Big European selling orders began to hammer down the price of C.P.R. Everybody wondered who was selling C.P.R.

The Silent Panic.

"London," read a cable, representative of the news sent abroad from the money markets of the world, last May, "is in a silent panic. It is difficult to ascertain a reason, but compare believed tobe at the base of the plications in the European situation trouble."

Early in May increased liquidation of C. P. R. gave rise to numerous reports.

"What is the matter with C.P.R.?" asked an anonymous New York speculator, who flooded the Dominion with circulars. "Somebody should investigate the road."

"Who is selling C.P.R.?"

From May 5 to July 25 the question was flashed from client to broker, from Stock Exchange to Stock Exchange.

"Europe," was the invariable answer.

"Why is Europe selling C.P.R.?"

"Because Europe needs the money," was the answer of the thoughtless.

The Kaiser's Silent Agents.

"What part of Europe is selling it?"

Germany's brokers and financiers were organized to sell within a limited space of time an enormous volume of foreign securities at the best available prices, and they did not select agents in New York who would be likely to reveal their identity or disclose the source of the selling. They were successful up to a certain point, but the truth that the whisper had come from the throne room of the palace in Berlin eventually reached Wall Street.

The selling continued, and events proved that the fear of an international war was really at the foundation of the selling. The German campaign to liquidate foreign investments can be traced from month to month in the following sale and price movements of C.P.R.:

The Last Awful Week.

July 24	181
July 25	177
July 27	175
July 28	170
July 29	159
July 30	154

Is It a Barometer?

Who is doing all the selling of C.P.R.? It was a mystery that was not solved until war was declared. That mystery is now explained by the theory that the whisper from the throne shaped the policy of the kings of German finance. These magnates as early as April, 1914, realized that was was inevitable and began to sell C.P.R. A multiplicity of selling orders made the stock ticker the herald of coming war. A multiplicity of buying orders will make the stock ticker the advance agent of coming peace.

COMPENSATION OF $70,000 ASKED

By the Norwegian Government for the Torpedoing of a Steamer.

CHRISTIANA, April 7.—The Norwegian Government to-day addressed a note to Germany asking compensation of $70,000 for the torpedoing of the Norwegian steamer Belridge in the English Channel on Feb. 19. An official inquiry, it was stated, proved beyond a doubt that the steamer was a victim of a German submarine.

GENERAL JOFFRE DRIVES STRAIGHT TOWARDS METZ

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 7—From the German frontier fortress of Metz, on the Moselle, to the French fortress of Verdun, on the Meuse is a little less than forty miles. The two cities are connected by a first-class road, and a railway which before the war was one of the chief points of entrance from Germany into France. The Germans fully expected to open a way through French Lorraine into eastern France via Verdun. To-day the tables are turned. The French, after retiring almost to the vicinity of the Meuse, have headed east once more in force, and, assisted by what the Berlin official report speaks of as "strong forces and a large amount of artillery," General Joffre is driving straight toward Metz. Gussainville, on the Orne, occupied yesterday, is some distance southeast of Etaine. There are no formidable obstacles in the way of a French advance toward Conflans, the nearest important town to the border. The high land to the east of Verdun has all been occupied and the woods which so long delayed the French advance have been passed.

He Waited Until Grandmother Died

Kaiser Swore Not to Fight Britain While Victoria Was Alive

The Paris correspondent of the London Evening Standard says:

"Few of the accounts of the Kaiser's premeditation in launching the European war equal in interest the revelations published by Le Matin from the pen of Mr. J. Pawlowski.

"It was towards the end of the year 1900," relates Mr. Pawlowski, "that there took place a brilliant reception given by the then French Ambassador at Berlin, M. de Noailles. The entire Diplomatic Corps was present, and the Kaiser himself honoured with his presence the residence of the French Ambassador. The Kaiser was very gay that evening, and he laughed immoderately at his own witticisms. Finding himself near the Baron Osten-Sacken, then Russian Ambassador at the Berlin Court, the Kaiser asked him brusquely: 'Then you will not join in the affair of the Boers?'

"The old baron did not know what to say. He did not expect such a question, and had no instructions on the subject. But the Kaiser persisted in developing his idea. 'You will have to wait a hundred years before another opportunity like that occurs,' he concluded.

Russia's Offer.

"Baron Osten-Sacken, on returning home, sent immediately a telegram to Petrograd, reporting his conversation with the Kaiser. A few days later he received his instructions and demanded an audience with the Emperor.

"'It is agreed, your Majesty,' he said, 'we shall follow you.'

"Taken somewhat aback, the Imperial diplomat hesitated a moment and then exclaimed: 'You see, I have sworn not to do anything against Great Britain during the lifetime of my grandmother.'

"The Russian Ambassador was moved by such devotion, but immediately later the devoted grandson added: 'Still, it could be arranged. But on a condition sine qua non: the contracting powers must mutually guarantee the integrity of their European possessions.'

"'But, your Majesty,' protested the aged baron, 'to give such a guarantee would be equivalent to breaking our alliance with France. This alliance will lose all its raison d'etre.

"Thus the Kaiser's intrigue came to naught, as was rightly expected from the very beginning in Petrograd that it would."

"THE GRELL MYSTERY"

By Frank Froest

CHAPTER XLII.

But that his breath came a little faster, Fairfield gave no sign of the perturbation that Heldon Foyle's presence caused him. That the summons to Scotland Yard had been a pretext to get him out of the way was now obvious. The only question was whether Roberts had divulged anything to the detective during his absence.

It was quite impossible to allow Grell's visit to him to be used in the investigation. That was not in the bargain with Foyle. Innocent or guilty, his friend had trusted him, and to use that trust to hound him down would savour of treachery. There was no doubt that Foyle knew something. He wondered how much.

He returned his visitor's greeting. "Always glad to see you, Mr. Foyle, though I'm afraid there's nothing fresh so far as I am concerned. I see my man's made you comfortable. There's been a mistake somewhere. I've been to Scotland Yard waiting for you."

His head was in the shadow and Foyle could not see his face. He could not be sure whether the words were a challenge, and made a little gesture with his hand.

"That's a pit " he said. "Things have got muddled up somehow. However, now we're here it's all right. By the way, we narrowly missed laying our hands on Grell an hour or two ago."

Although he was staring placidly into the fire he did not fail to note the quick start that the baronet gave. And it was not a feigned start. Fairfield could not understand this indirect method of attack.

"What!" he stammered. "You nearly arrested him?"

"It was touch and go," said Foyle languidly. "Some of our men got on his trail and followed him until he reached here. They never saw him come out."

"So you mean to say that Frell has been here—here to-day?" demanded Fairfield, putting as bold a face on the matter as was possible.

"I do," said Foyle quietly.

"Without my knowledge?"

Heldon Foyle shook his head, and thrusting his hands into his jacket pockets faced the baronet squarely. "That's what I want to know. Was it without your knowledge, Sir Ralph?"

Fairfield met that searching gaze unflinchingly. There was a touch of hauteur in his tone when he replied, "Do you suggest that I am hiding him?"

Had Foyle not been sure of his facts the manner of the baronet might have convinced him that he was in error. As it was, he ignored the evasion. It was essential to know whether the fugitive had been supplied with any money and whether he had given any indication of his plans. "I feel quite certain that you have had a talk with him lately," he said. "I thought you were going to do what you could to help us clear up this mystery. Why deny a fact that is plain?"

Sir Ralph clenched his teeth. It was clear that Foyle was certain of his ground; that it was no use any longer trying to throw dust in his eyes. "Well?" he demanded icily. "I suppose I am not entirely a spy at your disposal, Mr. Foyle. I am like most men, I have my limits. I prefer to remain master of my own actions."

"I should be the last to dispute it," said Foyle, with a slight bow, "or to take advantage of the good-nature that has led you to assist us hitherto. Of course you could not foresee that Grell would come to you, and you naturally do not want to take advantage of his confidence. But we already know of his visit, so there is no breach of trust there. All I ask is that you should simplify the matter by telling me what occurred at your interview. Perhaps you have forgotten, Sir Ralph, that there is a punishment for assisting a man to escape—by lending him money or otherwise. That is merely for information. It is not a threat."

"Thank you," said the other. "It would make no difference to me whether it was a threat or not." He remained in thought for a moment. The fact that Grell had entered the place and apparently got clear away had led him to believe that the police knew nothing of the visit, that the only risk of the interview being disclosed lay with Roberts. If the detectives had really been close on the heels of the fugitive, as Foyle said, it could do no harm to admit the truth. His promise to say nothing could hardly be considered to cover the contingency. "Has Roberts been talking to you?" he asked abruptly.

"Roberts?" repeated the superintendent, with a puzzled frown. "Oh, of course, he's your servant. I asked him one or two questions, but he didn't seem to understand me."

The answer was so quick, so naturally given, that any suspicion that remained in Fairfield's mind was lulled. He shrugged his shoulders. "Well, for what it is worth, I don't mind admitting that Grell did come to see me. All he wanted was money. He is frightfully hard up, and apparently the operations of your people have harassed him dreadfully."

"Did you let him have any money?"

Fairfield shook his head. "No; I absolutely refused unless he would come out of concealment and try to justify himself. With that he went. He was here less than twenty minutes or half an hour."

The detective played with his watch-chain. "Yes, yes. I don't see that you could have done anything else. I suppose you made no suggestion to him?"

"In what way?"

Gently stroking his chin, Foyle answered in a soft voice, "The other day a man came to see me. He was a man of high social standing and had fallen into the clutches of a gang of blackmailers. He wanted us to take action, but he absolutely refused to go into the witness-box to give evidence. I pressed him, pointing out that that was the only way in which we could bring home anything against them. 'It will ruin me,' he declared. 'Is there no other way it can be put a stop to ' I replied that we were helpless. 'What can I do?' he cried. 'Is the thing they accuse you of true?' I asked. He flushed and admitted that it was. 'Well,' I said, 'if you ask my advice as a man and not as an official, I should meet with an accident.' But he would not take my advice," he concluded, with a keen glance at the baronet, on whom the parable was not lost.

"I did suggest that way out," admitted the baronet reluctantly. "He wouldn't hear of it. And Grell is not a coward."

"He gave no hint of where he was going when he left you?"

"Not the slightest."

Foyle picked up his hat. There was nothing more of value to be gained by prolonging the interview. "I am very much obliged to you, Sir Ralph," he said. "Perhaps you will keep in touch with me in case anything arises. Good-morning."

Long ago Foyle had made up his mind as to the probable course that would be taken by Robert Grell. The man was evidently driven into a corner, or he would scarcely have taken the enormous risk of going to see Ralph Fairfield. There remained two things, the detective reasoned, which he might now do. Penniless and without help, he might try to plunge back into the obscurity of underground London, or he might try some other friend or acquaintance. But every person he confided in would increase his risk. Fairfield was his closest friend, and yet he had declined to lift a finger. Would he go to men he was less intimate with—or would he endeavour in person to enlist the aid of the woman he was to marry?

No one knew better than Heldon Foyle the danger of jumping to conclusions. Inferences, however clever, however sound they may seem when they are drawn, are apt to lead one astray. The detective who habitually used the deductive method would spend a great deal of his time exploring blind alleys. Yet Foyle, with the unostentatious Maxwell at his right hand, hurried in the direction of Berkeley Square with a hope that his theory might not be ill-founded.

A little distance away from the Duke of Burghley's house he crossed the road and spoke to a cabman who was lounging on the seat of his motionless vehicle. Curiously enough the constables patrolling the beat did not order that particular cabman away to a rank, although he had been there for several hours, creating a technical obstruction.

"Have you seen a man call over the road lately?" asked the superintendent.

"No, sir," answered the cabman alertly. "The only person has been a messenger-boy with a note for Lady Eileen Meredith. He told me it had been handed in at the district messenger office at Victoria. Lady Eileen came out shortly afterwards, and walked away in the direction of Piccadilly. Phillips has gone after her."

"Right. Report to the Yard directly she returns, and keep a sharp lookout."

"Very good, sir," said the cabdriver, and Foyle turned away to mount the steps of the house. The footman who answered the door replied that both His Grace and Lady Eileen were out. He could not say when they would return. The superintendent tapped the step impatiently with the tip of his well-polished American boot, and his brow puckered. Finally he produced a card.

"I think I had better wait," he said. "My business is important." That procured his admission into the house, but he had no idea of waiting in idleness in one of the reception-rooms. Eileen had received a note which had taken her out—he shrewdly suspected that it was from Grell. It was conceivable, though it was not probable, that she might have left it about. It was for him to learn the contents of that note if possible. "Look here, old chap," he said, with an assumption of familiarity that flattered the frigid footman, "I want to see Lady Eileen directly she comes in, and I don't want to be announced." He winked as though from one man of the world to another. "You understand, don't you?"

The footman grinned knowingly as he thrilled all over with the knowledge that the Scotland Yard man was making a confidant of him. It was one of Foyle's ways always to attach as many people as he could to his object. He had an extensive acquaintance with waiters and hotel hall-porters.

"Yes, sir, I think I can arrange that," said the footman. "I can put you in her own sitting-room, and she'll most likely go straight there when she comes back."

Sprains, Bruises Stiff Muscles

Sloan's Liniment will save hours of suffering. For bruises or sprains it gives instant relief. It arrests inflammation and thus prevents more serious troubles developing. No need to rub it in—it acts at once, instantly relieving the pain, however severe it may be.

Mere's Proof

Charles Johnson, P. O. Box 106, Lantam's Station, N. Y., writes: "I sprained my ankle and dislocated my left hip by falling out of a third story window six months ago. I went on crutches for four months, then I started to use some of your Liniment, according to your directions, and I must say that it is helping me wonderfully. I threw my crutches away. Only used two bottles of your Liniment and now I am walking quite well with one cane. I never will be without Sloan's Liniment."

EASTER JOY

"He is not here; for He is risen." —Matt. xxviii., 6.

Easter with its joy and its gladness is here again. Let us imagine ourselves back through the centuries, in Christ's time. When the news was spread that their beloved Saviour had risen, what the joy and gladness must have been of those whose faith had been shaken, of those whose hearts had been wrung, of those whose hope had been crushed, of those whose trust had not wavered! As they marvelled and rejoiced over the wonder and the greatness of the power that had been triumphant over death and the grave, so have people been doing during all the years that have since passed. At this time that same joy and gladness should reign in every heart.

This wonder and power is even being shown in the world of Nature. Close by, is a vase filled with pure, exquisite, fragrant lilies of the valley. Our hearts can but be awe-inspired, as we try to think of the creative force represented in those tiny flowers, each year springing to fresh life from the cold, dark ground.

This wonder and power is ever being shown in the spiritual world in every conquest of self, in every act of renunciation, in every deed of heroism, in every service for others. As the spiritual transcends the material, so does the marvel and the beauty of self-mastery surpass all world-creations.

As Christ has shown His power over all forces, both temporal and spiritual, we may know that our dear ones, who have just gone before, have power and understanding, more, far more, than we, who are on this side of the veil, can comprehend.—I. H. N.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

WHIRLIGIG OF TIME

It Brings Many Strange Coincidences to the Life of True Man.

By WALTER JAMES DELANEY.

Coward! How that word rankled within the soul of Ralph Warden, and what a difference its utterance had made in his life! Looking back six months, it seemed to him as though that word had been the start of all his troubles—the evil star of his destiny.

He had lived at Junta, a frontier town and a military post, since boyhood. Just as he came of age his mother had died. Through her brief period of illness it had been the friendly visits and kind ministrations of Ethel Lynd that had made her serene and peaceful. Ralph had grown to love the beautiful daughter of Colonel Lynd. He had fancied that she somewhat encouraged him, when a rude circumstance had brought down into ruins all his fair air castles of hope.

He recalled the day when Miss Lynd, her girl cousin, Lieutenant Vanderloot and three visiting school friends of Ethel were strolling near the river, when a homeless drunkard known about the district as Pauper Joe, reeled across their path. He chanced to joggle against Ralph. In his maudlin fury called him a name that was always wiped out with blood in that primitive section, and struck him.

For a moment the fire of resentment and indignation sprang to the eyes of Ralph. Then, clinching his fists, holding his breath, his face grew ashen as he stood rigid as a statue.

He fancied he noted a look of contempt cross the face of Miss Lynd. He heard a word spoken—

"Coward!"

Then the group passed on, but not until Lieutenant Vanderloot had stepped forward, vaunting his chivalrous strength in some sneer at Ralph, and with a cruel blow sent the poor wreck, Pauper Joe, to the ground.

It might have been over-sensitiveness, but Ralph fancied that Ethel and her friends purposely hurried on. He lingered. The same influence that had held his hand back from resenting an insult, now drove him to the exercise of a further humanity. It was he who lifted the stranded wreck to his feet, led him to a lodging house, and left enough money with its proprietor to care for his pensioner till he recovered from the effects of drink and injury.

Two days later Ethel left Junta, and Ralph had not met her in the meantime. Ethel was going on a long visit to a distant point where her father was making his annual round of the military posts.

"I kept my promise," said Ralph to himself staunchly, as he thought of the blight that had come over his fair love dreams. "I have lost Ethel, the story of that blow has got around town, and some think me a mean spirited craven; but I promised mother, and I have kept my word!"

It was on her death bed that Mrs. Warden had drawn her son to the solemn pledge regarding two things—drink and fighting. Her own father had been a victim to the wine cup. Ralph's dead father had suffered death in a hot border fight brought about by a mere trifling remark. Mrs. Warden had died with a satisfied smile, when her loyal son had promised never to raise his hand against another in temper or hate.

And the whirling of time had gone on. Ralph had drifted to another town. He was not very successful in getting work. One day a sudden resolution came into his mind; he would join the regular army. Thus it was that one year after this last sight of the only woman he had ever loved, he was a sergeant at Fort Danger, under the orders of the man he had considered a rival—a rival no longer, however.

"I wronged you once, Warden," admitted the lieutenant voluntarily the day Ralph came to the fort. "I thought you a poltroon, and said so. Later it leaked out to all of us about your sacred promise to your mother. I respect you for it. I think that discovery made pretty Miss Lynd edge away from me. No hearts broken, though, for I am now engaged to a girl who owns three ranches, and when my term of service is out, I am going to settle down to an easy life."

The whirligig of time brought about another strange happening—Pauper Joe, no longer a drinker, the fond, fervent friend of the man who had been kind to him, was also stationed at Fort Danger.

The place had been truly named. Situated on the edge of an almost impassible desert, the nearest fort two hundred miles distant, it was isolated among Indians who had the habit of a periodical blood-thirsty outbreak.

Another strange coincidence in the whirligig of time was the fact that Ethel Lynd was now at Fort Blain, where her father was making a governmental inspection.

It was late of a blazing hot summer afternoon, when as she sat in a breezy corner of the fort scanning the broad plain with a field glass, Ethel made out a horseman in the distance, going at tearing speed. She informed the officer in charge. Twenty minutes later there dashed into the fort a reeking horse. In the saddle was a man, tattered, sun-blistered, with a gaping bullet wound in one arm, and propped up in front of him another man, seemingly dying.

The rider was Ralph Warden, his helpless burden Pauper Joe. The horse reeled and fell to its knees. The rider toppled in a dead faint into the arms of two soldiers. They lifted Pauper Joe gently to the ground.

"Water, for the love of heaven!" he pleaded. Then, when the cooling draught had passed his fevered lips: "Care for him, the sergeant—the hero! I must tell the story quick, for I'm done for."

What a story it was! Fort Danger, surrounded by Indians, cut off from civilization, with only a week's supplies, was hemmed in. Most of the soldiers, desperate, mad for fight, had got at the liquor stores. They would fight like demons, but when the food gave out they were doomed.

Ralph Warden, Pauper Joe and two others had made the only attempt possible for relief—a dash across the arid desert. One man had gone mad from thirst and had died in his tracks. Another, fancying he saw water at the bottom of a ravine, had plunged headlong to death in his delirium. Indians had attacked them. Ralph had shielded Joe, grabbed him up to his saddle at the risk of his life, and—

"He was my only friend—a hero, the sole survivor," breathed Joe. Heaven "Heaven bless him!" and died.

Fort Danger was relieved and saved. It was Ethel who nursed Ralph back to life. It was Ethel who contritely told how she had wronged him, and later how she regretted losing him, and now, when his eager lips questioned her, she told, too, how she loved him.

HAD INDIGESTION FOR OVER 10 YEARS.

ALMOST DESPAIRED OF EVER GETTING WELL.

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitating feeling in it. After a meal you feel that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, burning sensation. It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion if you will only try that old and well-known remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, which is a combination of nature's best known roots, herbs and barks for the cure of all stomach and blood troubles.

Mrs. Mary MacKay, Hunter's Mountain, N.S., writes: "I was troubled with indigestion for more than ten years. I tried several doctors' medicines claiming the power to cure, but all without success. Having heard of the many cures effected by Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to give it a trial. After taking two bottles I was completely cured. My appetite which was very poor is now good, and I can eat most everything without any disagreeable feelings.

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ANY DYSPEPTIC CAN GET WELL

By Taking "Fruit-a-tives" Says Capt. Swan

Life is very miserable to those who suffer with Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Sour Stomach and Biliousness. This letter from Captain Swan (one of the best known skippers on the Great Lakes) tells how to get quick relief from Stomach Trouble.

POINT EDWARD, Ont., May 8th, 1913.

"A man has a poor chance of living and enjoying life when he cannot eat. That was what was wrong with me. Loss of appetite and indigestion was brought on by Constipation. I have had trouble with these diseases for years. I lost a great deal of flesh and suffered constantly. For the last couple of years, I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" and have been so pleased with the results that I have recommended them on many occasions to friends and acquaintances. I am sure that "Fruit-a-tives" have helped me greatly. By following the diet rules and taking "Fruit-a-tives" according to directions, any person with Dyspepsia will get benefit".

ACCORDING TO BERLIN.

H. M. S. Lord Nelson Destroyed Says Sayville Wireless.

BERLIN, April 6.—(By wireless to Sayville.)—A report received in Berlin from Athens says the British battleship Lord Nelson, stranded inside the Dardanelles Straits, has been destroyed by the fire of the Turkish guns on shore. This information was given out yesterday by the Overseas News Agency.

A despatch from Constantinople says the following statement has been issued by the Turkish War Office:

"Our fleet yesterday sank two Russian ships, the Provident of 2,000 tons and the Vastochnaja of 1,500 tons at Odessa.

"Our batteries off Kum Kale sank an enemy mine sweeper which attempted to approach the entrance to the Dardanelles."

The Lord Nelson was built in 1906. She had a tonnage of 16,500, was 435 feet long, and 79.5 feet at her beam. She carried 865 men. She and the Agamemnon, sister ships, have both been engaged at the Dardanelles. The two are of a type dissimilar to any other British ships, and rather resemble French vessels.

CREAM FOR CATARRH OPENS UP NOSTRILS

Tells How To Get Quick Relief from Head-Colds. It's Splendid!

In one minute your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh will be gone.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh—Relief comes so quickly.

Strange Case.

Prof. C. J. Dillon of Manhattan tells of a farmer who met a doctor on the street. "Doc," said he, "if you're out our way this week you might's well come in and see m' wife."

"What ails her?" inquired the doctor.

"Dunno. After gettin' breakfast an' fixing the children for school an' churning' an' sloppin' the hogs an' doing a little washin'—they's only seven in the family, y'know she plumb declared she'd have to lay down before gettin' dinner! Says ah's tired out. Kicks about gettin' a Sunday dinner!"

"Yes," said the wise doctor. "I'll come out and see her. It's a strange case."—Kansas City Star.

MONOTONY REIGNS IN PARIS' SUBURBS

Gay Little Villas Closed up in Many Cases—Men at Front, Women Work Hard

Life in the suburbs of Paris in wartime is described by a correspondent of the London Times who usually writes on the fashions, but in this case finds another topic of timely interest.

The Paris suburbs are very melancholy just now, she says. All the young men have gone away and all gaiety is in abeyance. Many of the fantastic villas are closed. From each house one man has gone and from many several, for large families are not unusual in the suburbs. The women and children, left alone, have in some cases found life unendurable, and have put away their household goods, closed their shutters, and gone back to the mother's, or the father's home in the provinces.

The closed houses only accentuate the loneliness of those which remain open, and nowhere is there any air of normal life. The days pass in quiet monotony; all work and no play is the rule; and it is not unusual for the mistress of the house to find herself charged, not merely with the care of the family, but also with the responsibility of her husband's business. This, with the supervision of her children's education, is no mean task, and with the added anxiety for the men in danger or the cruel certainty that death has passed, the already serious middle-class Frenchwoman has become yet more serious.

In some of the suburbs the question of the household marketing has become quite a weighty one, for not only are things expensive, but they are more difficult to get than in the centre of the city. The butchers have been municipalised, and the cooks and housewives have to get the day's supplies before mid-day from the one and only authorised butcher. They are finding the prices very much higher.

The middle classes in the suburbs suffer much from the increased cost of living and the stagnation in business. Many of them have but few savings and some have none. Where the men of the family have gone and business has stopped, misery is left behind, and it is not easy for people of this class to join the working woman and apply for State grants and soup at the Mairie.

Even when there is no war, there is not much haphazard visiting in the Paris suburbs, for no class in France is less given to chance hospitality than the middle classes which inhabit those fantastic little villas. Neighbors have no claims on each other, and only kinship or very old friendship opens the front door. Each family, with its own particular little circle of friends, has no social ambitions beyond those to which it was born. The older women have renounced their shopping expeditions, their theatre parties followed by a little supper at a restaurant, the girls have given up their cinemas, their singing lessons and their finery, and all are knitting or crocheting as hard as they can. Even the children try to do something for the soldiers, and many of them have sent toys to the refugee children. Red Cross nurses come from many of these quaintly constructed houses, and boy scouts overrun them in the holidays.

TWICE BURIED ALIVE

Lancashire Man Had a Thrilling Experience Duplicated

Our regiment, the 2nd South Lancs., five hundred strong, was entrenched about 120 yards from the German lines. Almost as soon as dawn broke we were to have a foretaste of the strength of "Jack Johnson," related Private W. McClure to a correspondent.

We were lying in our trenches enjoying a cigarette, when the boom of a German howitzer broke on our ears. Someone passed the word, "Duck, boys, duck!"—and we ducked. Next moment there was a dull thud, the ground trembled, and the "dug-out" where I lay concealed caved inwards, burying a companion and myself alive.

When I recovered consciousness my comrades told me that but for the fact that my hand protruded from the mass of debris they would never have discovered me. My poor chum was never found.

My second experience of being buried alive occurred when we were told off to relieve the Gordon Highlanders, who, it appears were hard pressed. The odds against us were too heavy, and again an again we had to retire slowly. Time after time we advanced, driving the enemy back, and at last retaking the trenches. When the roll was called, out of 500 of my regiment only 150 answered the call.

Next morning all was quiet and still, and we could not see the slightest movement among the Germans. We were just congratulating ourselves on having a chance of a little rest, when "Jack Johnson" rang out his familiar warning.

Suddenly a dull thud shook the earth around us, and I remember no more. My comrades told me they dug me out from a living tomb.

Thus I was twice buried, but still alive.

When Poland Drank Hard

Poland was a great country for hard drinking in the olden days. Its last King, Stanislaus II., was solemnly warned by the Grand Hetman Branicki that he must never expect to become popular unless he got drunk at least twice a week. Pan Komarzewski, who could empty a bucketful of champagne at a draught without noticeable consequence, once in company with Pan Sosiejkowski, High Chamberlain of Volhynia, disposed of a whole butt of old Hungarian wine at a single sitting. One held his beaker under the bung hole until it was filled and then drank while the other filled his beaker; and so, turn and turn about, they achieved the feat.

ONE OF THE ALLIES

Some Extracts From a French Soldier's Letters to His English Wife

For the dead, we put their name on a piece of paper and put it in a bottle and place the bottle in the earth over the body, leaving just the neck out, so that after the war their relatives can find them.

There, of course, is often no time to do this, and in the forest, too, it would be almost impossible to find anybody.

The food still comes. We get more than ever. We get: at four o'clock in the morning, coffee; at eight o'clock, tea; at ten o'clock, soup, meat, vegetables, and coffee. At four o'clock in the afternoon, again soup, meat, vegetables; and at ten or eleven o'clock at night hot wine—often twice. So, you see, we get plenty.

To-night I am quite warm. We found a house. There is a little stove and some coal, and we can do our own cooking, so I am writing you to-night on a proper table. We have put some wood against the door and windows. I shut my eyes, and while I am sitting in a real chair I can almost imagine I am in our own dear little home. But the shells shake the place—it is not true, it is not true! But I am thankful for the comfort.

To-day we have fallen back for five days' rest, and I am cooking for my captain in a house.

I am very excited, because last night I slept in a real bed. Yes, yes; over four months I have not seen one. You can tell I was pleased. I may stay here in the house for a while, if only our captain can stay longer without getting wounded again.

This is the third time he is wounded. You know, all our officers are madly brave. They go forward always before us, so, of course, they are not long to fall.

I have been speaking to the woman who will not leave her house, and who is next door. She has her husband in hospital; he is going to have his leg off. But she is thankful that he is safe. She said she prefers it than to know he will go back in the trench again; she is now sure to have him back again with her.

I am still alive. Our last day of rest is gone, and with it the house I was telling you of. To-morrow at four o'clock I am back in the trenches again. I have been speaking with a commade next me. He sees the happiness your letters give me, and he feels ashamed. He says he used to grumble at his wife and even often hit her when he was drunk, so sometimes he says, "If only I had loved her like she deserved! I used not even to say 'thank you' to her when she did little things for me; but if I come back I will be a different man, I will show her how good I can be to her!"

Thank God, my dear wife, we were never like this, and I have only the happy recollections of our happiness and devotion to each other.

The Collision Mat

The collision mat, which is carried by all warships, is a very valuable part of the vessel's equipment and often prevents a ship sinking when she has been badly hit by the enemy.

The mat varies in size from 10 to 15 feet square and is made of sailcloth into which has been interwoven a number of "thrums," or pieces of tarry hemp, closely knit together.

In case of the vessel being damaged by shells or collision the mat is lowered and held over the hole by the ropes which are attached to it.

The pressure of the water forces the mat closely over the gap and thus temporarily stops the leak till it can be closed from within.

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GREY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restores its Thickness and Lustre at Once

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn grey, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant; remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, grey, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all grey hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.

Love.

Properly there is only one verb for love. It is not "amo." It is not "aimer." It is not the softest Italian verb. No printed language of man knows it. But the Coin knows it, and the wild bird knows it; even the sea knows it. The rose is it, and the moon is it, and the look of a man's eyes into a woman's is it, and the look of a woman's eyes back again is it. But no man or woman can say it in any language that endures. — "Love Letters of the King."

Dear Sirs:—

I take great pleasure in stating I am using your "Usit," and have found it perfectly satisfactory. It does all you claim for it. Surely is a good skin food, as it leaves the surface smooth and soft. When following your direction, rubbing it well in at night, I find in the morning my skin is soft, and the wrinkles disappear. After being out in the weather, when the skin becomes rough with the sun and wind, I find it a very useful article to use, as it takes away that burnt feeling. Yours respectfully. (Signed), A. D. Would Abdicate First.

PARIS, April 6.—According to a despatch to The Temps from Petrograd, the latest German attempts to induce the Austrian Emperor to make territorial concessions to Italy have been met with a declaration by Francis Joseph that he would rather abdicate than cede territory to his former ally. The aged Emperor's resolution seems unshakeable. Government circles in Vienna are awaiting the result of the present battle in the Carpathians, which will finally determine Austria's future attitude.

SICK, SOUR STOMACH, INDIGESTION OR GAS

"Pape's Diapepsin" Makes Upset Stomach Feel Fine in Five Minutes

Wonder what upset your stomach—which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is in a revolt; if sour, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stubborn lumps; head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food; breath foul, tongue coated—just take a little Pape's Diapepsin and in five minutes you wonder what became of the indigestion and distress.

Millions of men and women to-day know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favourite foods without fear.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion; if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember the quickest, surest, most harmless relief is Pape's Diapepsin which costs only fifty-cents for a large case at drug stores. It's truly wonderful—it digests food and sets things straight, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. Please, for your sake, don't go on and on with a weak, disordered stomach; it's so unnecessary.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

If preferred, binding of ribbon or bias satin may used for a finish, either with plain or figured material. The jacket is cut in one piece, unless a seam down centre back is required by the narrowness of the material, in which case there would be only two pieces, for the sleeve is on the kimono order. The cap, too, is in one piece and very easily put together as well as becoming. The pattern, No. 7,033, can be obtained in sizes 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Street of Peace; Centre of World's Fashions, Declares War on German Modes

PARIS (by mail to New York).—"Rue de la Paix" — "the street of Peace"—has just declared war. It is against the Germans.

This street, the creative centre of the world's fashions, the home of the world's most famous dressmakers, the throne from which the latest dictates of sartorial elegance are meted out to womankind at large, has just discovered like most of the Allies at the beginning of the war that its very existence was being threatened by the Germans.

Since the beginning of the war a minute investigation has been conducted in Paris to ascertain every business house and every line of industry in which Germans are interested. The most amazing result to date has been the discovery of the extent to which during the past few years Germans have come into control of Paris' most famous millinery houses.

Although Paris still boasted of telling the rest of the world what to wear, it was really Germans and not French who were doing the telling. Most of the Parisian millinery houses retained the French name under which they had become world-famous although it was German capital and brains that were running them. Only a few were known under the German name of their owners.

The sentiment aroused in all France against this German invasion of the field of Parisian fashion came to a climax with the Madame Bechoff scandal. Her house of Bechoff-David is in the Place Vendome which opens out in the centre of the Rue de la Paix. Having created for her shop a position almost without equal amongst the most exclusive and most elegant of the Parisian milliners she found it unnecessary to mask under a French name.

In addition, although German of the German, she had given repeated proofs of her loyalty to France. With the outbreak of the war her elegant establishment was one of the very first to be turned into a hospital for the French wounded.

All of this was forgotten and all of her position crumpled like a house of cards, however, with the arrest of France Desclaux, paymaster-treasurer of the entire French Army, and later with her own arrest. Desclanx, it is alleged, helped himself to the more appetizing viands of the food supplies of the French Army and sent them to Madame Bechoff in order that her larder might be well stocked against any possible food famine at Paris.

This was the last straw which brought about definite action by the syndicate of Parisian dressmakers—probably the wealthiest and most elegant syndicate in the world. All Germans who in the past have succeeded in getting into the organization are to be expelled at once, nor is it possible in the future for any German to secure the little trade-mark of the syndicate which alone can guarantee all that the word "Parisian" means in matters of dress.

To a correspondent, M. Aine-Montaille, president of the syndicate, has just detailed some of the havoc that is asserted to have been wrought in the dressmaking field in Paris by the German invasion.

"While the proprietors of these houses in Paris have as a rule in the past been naturalized French citizens, they have never felt that duty towards France which we native-born citizens naturally feel. They have never hesitated to take advantage of any privileges accorded to them by the fact that they were of German origin to the detriment not only of the Parisian houses owned by French proprietors, but even to the detriment of our national French industries.

"One such house, for example, made it a practice to copy all new silk designs, send them to Germany to be made up, and then bring them back into France and sell them as genuine French silks. Not only were they inferior in quality, but the prices at which they could be made in Germany from designs originated by us, enabled such houses to ruin all competition.

"Still another abuse which developed from German invasion of the Parisian millinery field has just been discovered. An immense German syndicate had planned to establish at Amsterdam a fashion centre which they hoped to make rival that of Paris. The managers of the houses to be opened there were to be selected from men who had served as managers in various Parisian houses. These houses were to be advertised as branches of the Paris house and the creations sold as though they were the real Parisian creations.

"These are only a few of the reasons why it has been necessary for our syndicate to begin open warfare on everything German that is in any way connected with the world of fashion and dress designing at Paris."

EXECUTION WAS TERRIBLE.

Bavarian Troops Were Decimated by French Artillery at Eparges.

PARIS, April 6.—Combats at the Eparges, in the Department of Meuse, on March 18, 19 and 20 were no less brilliant and successful than the preceding engagements, according to the French official Eye-witness, in a report giving further details of the battles on this part of the front.

"The most reckoning success," says the report, "was due to the intense artillery preparation, the very prompt assault and violent hand-to-hand fighting. In the trenches captured from the enemy, in which our heavy artillery fire caused great excavations, we found bodies cut up and half-buried in earth.

"Survivors who were captured declare that the French artillery fire was horrible. Others say that the Eighth Bavarian Regiment was decimated, having lost two thousand men and sixteen officers during February. One battalion was reduced to 87 men.

Heavy Indemnity Demanded.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—The note of the United States to the German Government, demanding indemnity for the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye, by the German raider Prinz Eitel Friedrich, given at the State Department yesterday, asks an indemnity of $228,059.54. The State Department's note to Ambassador Gerard at Berlin, also directs Gerard to request "that full reparation be made by the German Government for the destruction of the William P. Frye by the German cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

Eitel's Crew Recalled.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., April 6.—All the members of the crew of the Prinz Eitel who were on shore leave were suddenly recalled to the ship yesterday. At the same time Capt. Thierichens said to a group of newspaper men:

"You won't have me to worry you much longer."

TIRING, CEASELESS BACK-ACHE CAN BE RUBBED AWAY TO-NIGHT

Relief is Almost Unfailing from Even the First Application.

RUB ON NERVILINE

Cold has a vicious way of finding out aching muscles or weak joints. How often pain settles in the back, causing inflammation and excruciating soreness. Stiffness and aching all over follows.

An application of Nerviline at the start gives immediate relief and prevents worse trouble.

When the pain is very acute, Nerviline has a chance to show its wonderful penetrating and pain-subduing power. It strikes in deeply, and its strike-in-deep quality quickly proves its superiority to feebler remedies. Then this goodness is magnified by its strength, easily five times greater than most liniments.

Surely, so powerful and curative a liniment as Nerviline offers perfect security against pain.

Nerviline is the only guaranteed pain remedy sold in Canada. Forty years of success in many countries warrants its manufactures saying. If it does not relieve, get your money back.

No curable pain, even neuralgia, lumbago, sciatica, or rheumatism can resist the magic power of Nerviline. Try it to-day. Rub it on your tired back, let it ease your sore muscles, let it take the swelling and stiffness out of your joints. It's a marvel—thousands say so that use Nerviline.

The large 50c, family size bottle of Nerviline is more economical than the 25c trial size. Buy the larger size to-day. Sold by dealers everywhere, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

How Thin People Can Put On Flesh

A New Discovery

Thin men and women—that big, hearty filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

Cut out the foolish foods and fussy sawdust diets. Omit the flesh cream rub-ons. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of those a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, "stay there" fat should be the net result. Sargol charges your weak, stagnant blood with millions of fresh new red blood corpuscles—gives the blood the carrying power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of your body. Sargol, too, mixes with your food and prepares it for the blood in easily assimilated form. Thin people gain all the way from 10 to 25 pounds a month while taking Sargol, and the new flesh stays put. Sargol tablets are a scientific combination of six of the best flesh-producing elements known to chemistry. They come 60 tablets to a package, are pleasant, harmless and inexpensive, and all druggists in Peterborough and vicinity sell them subject to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back.

HUNGARY TO STAY IN.

Former Premier Denies Stories of Efforts For Separate Peace.

VIENNA, April 6.—"If our enemies set great hope that the internal dissension of Hungary will bring about a separate peace, their disappointment will be equally great," Count Julius Andrassy, former Premier of Hungary said yesterday, in reference to rumors that the Hungarian opposition desired to conclude peace.

"Certainly every one desires peace," he continued, "but only a peace calculated to end these evils we are fighting. The political differences now existing in Hungary probably will exist in the future, but there are no differences on the point that this war affects the foundations of the state and we must win it."

Airmen Did Huge Damage.

PARIS, April 6.—The French War Office yesterday gave out the following:

"The military authorities have received precise information concerning the result of the bombardment carried out by British aviators in Belgium on March 26th. The dirigible hangar at Berghen-Sle. Agathe was damaged as was the dirigible airship sheltered therein. At Hoboken the Antwerp naval construction shipyards were gutted, two German submarines were destroyed and a third damaged, while forty German workmen were killed and 82 wounded."

Troops Massing on Border.

CHIASSO, Switzerland, April 6.—The assembling of Italian troops on the Austrian frontier is continuing with the greatest activity. All houses of peasants in the districts bordering the confines affected have been occupied by soldiers.

This information reaches Chiasso from Italian sources. It is learned from the same sources that still more important military activity is under way. Information on this point is refused transmission by the Italian censors.

Allies of Germany Want Peace.

ROME, April 6.—In spite of various official denials from some of the belligerent nations that preliminary steps have been taken to conclude peace, especially by Austria and Turkey without consulting Germany, the report that Djavid Pasha, Turkish Minister of Finance, who is now in Switzerland, is on a mission of peace, finds credence here.

Ontario flour—Winter, 90 per cent. patents, $6.80 to $6.90; seconds, $6.30 to $6 Toronto freights, in bags.

Cornmeal—Yellow, 98-lb. sacks, in car lots, $2.20; small lots, $2.30 to $2.40.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, April 5.—Wheat futures opened ½c to ⅝c up, oats ⅝c up and flax ½c to 1½c higher. Following the opening further advances occurred on wheat, while oats and flax were fairly steady. Before noon wheat had sold at $1.18¾ for May, $1.13 for July and $1.17¾ for October. The volume of trading in futures was light.

The strength was attributed to reports of dry weather in certain portions of the winter wheat states, war news and heavy world's shipments were offset by the dry weather talk.

The demand for Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 northern wheat was good, but only a few cars were placed on the market. Oats of all grades were in fair demand, but only light offerings were on the market. While no new business on export sales was reported, exporting houses were buying futures freely.

Wheat futures closed ⅝c to 1⅛c up, oats 1⅛c to 1⅜c higher, oats ⅛c to ⅜c higher and flax ⅛c to ⅝c higher.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, April 5.—There was only a holiday business in grain today. No price changes occurred and the sales put through showed firmness.

Butter advanced about 2 cents per pound, but eggs were easier, chiefly owing to the falling off in demand and large receipts.

Flour was stationary.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, April 5.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 1393 cattle, 397 hogs, 77 sheep and 61 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice heavy steers sold at $7.75 to $8; choice butchers, $7.25 to $7.50; good, $7 to $7.35; medium, $6.60 to $6.85; common, $6.25 to $6.50; choice cows, $6.25 to $6.50; good cows, $5.75 to $6; medium cows, $5.25 to $5.60; canners and cutters, $4 to $4.50; choice bulls at $6 to $6.50; common bulls at $5 to $6.

Stockers and Feeders.

Steers of good quality, 900 to 900 lbs., sold at $6.40 to $6.75; stockers, 550 to 750 lbs., sold at $5 to $6.40.

Milkers and Springers.

Milkers and springers were none too plentiful, and prices were steady to firm at $65 to $90 each.

Veal Calves.

Choice calves sold at $10 per cwt.; good at $8 to $8.50; common to medium at $5.50 to $7.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes of light weight, sold at $7 to $8.50; heavy ewes and rams, $6 to $7.50; lambs at $10.50 to $11; spring lambs sold at $5 to $13 for the bulk, but there were some very small lambs sold at $5 each.

Hogs.

Selects, weighed off cars, sold at $8.15 to $8.25.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, April 5.—At the Montreal Stock yards, west end market, receipts of live stock for the week ending April 3 were 600 cattle, 150 sheep and lambs, 1800 hogs and 1400 calves. The offerings [illegible] 150 sheep and lambs, 1150 hogs and 250 calves.

Cattle were quiet and steady, milkers and peelers had ample supplies on hand for another week. Sheep and lambs were scarce and firm. Calves were quiet and steady.

Hogs were strong at an advance of between 50 and 60 cents per hundred pounds. The supply was small, but sales [illegible] at unchanged, and sales of selected lots were made at from $9.30 to $9.60. Stags sold at $7.50 to $7.60, and stags at from $4.50 to $6.00 per hundred pounds weighed off cars.

[illegible] $8 to $8.25; lo., medium, $7.50 to $7.75; do, bulls, $7 to $7.25; butchers' cattle, choice, $6.50 to $6.75; do, medium, $6 to $6.25

If Ruins Hair To Wash It With Soap

Soap should be used very sparingly, if at all, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), it's cheaper and better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

PEOPLE OFTEN SAY

"Who Are We To Know When The Kidneys Are Out Of Order?"

EASIEST THING IN THE WORLD!

The location of the kidneys, close to the small of the back, renders the detection of kidney trouble a simple matter. The note of warning comes from the back. The kidneys become overtaxed and fail to do their work at nature's call.

Backache is the signal sent out by the kidneys the minute they become overtaxed. Those who heed the warning when it first comes, usually have but little trouble.

The danger lies in delay. Doan's Kidney Pills stimulate the action of the kidneys, and enable them to perform their duty perfectly.

Mrs. Greig Murphy, Lower Ship Harbor East, N.S., writes: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills in my family with great success, and don't think there is a better pill for the kidneys. I was very miserable with my back, and could hardly get about. I got a box, and tried them, and found that they were really good, so I took in all about six boxes, and soon found my back cured, and my kidneys as well as ever."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; for sale at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

CANADIAN CASUALTIES.

OTTAWA, April 6. — The casualties among the Canadian Expeditionary Force issued this morning by the Militia Department are as follows:

First Battalion—Died of wounds, Pte. Eric Bain.

Fourteenth Battalion — Severely wounded, Sergt. Wm. W. C. Smith.

Divisional Engineers — Died of wounds, Sapper William Shaw.

Divisional Cavalry — Injured, Lc.-Sergt. Raymond Ralph Tooley.

Third Field Artillery Brigade—Death, Gunner George West.

Will Expect Damages.

LONDON, April 6.—It may be stated on good authority that the American note is an inquiry rather than a protest. It seeks further information in regard to the attitude of Great Britain and makes clear under what conditions the United States will expect damages for interference with shipping.

Although entirely friendly in tone the note definitely outlines the American conception of a legal blockade, departure from which it is contended, would entitle neutral shippers to reimbursment for losses.

Effect of Shells Trebled.

PARIS, April 6.—The army bulletin yesterday made the first official reference to the new powder which has been talked about mysteriously for months. The bulletin says that, without entering into details which cannot be divulged, it may be stated that the new explosive recently put into use doubles the explosive effects of the shells of the three-inch guns.

IF CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH AND SICK

Look, Mother! If tongue is Coated give "California Syrup of Figs".

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels so nicely.

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is, they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhoea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

SMASHING IN SIDES OF THE GERMAN WEDGE

ALLIES ALSO SCORE NEAR THE SEA COAST

GERMAN POSITIONS STORMED IN THE FACE OF MURDEROUS FIRE

Allies' Attack on Germans Between Meuse and Moselle is Increasing in Momentum----Important Engagements Between Verdun and Pont-A-Mousson.

BELGIANS VICTORIOUS ON THE YSER

Special to the Examiner.

PARIS, April 7.—(French official.)---With increased momentum the allies' army moving between the Meuse and the Moselle rivers, is smashing in the sides of the great German wedge, according to despatches from the battle front to-day. At the other end of the battle line, near the sea coast, the allies have scored a victory. They last night attacked and dislodged the German force which crossed the Yser last week and occupied portions of the village of Drei Grachten.

King Albert's troops captured three machine guns.

Near Etain, 13 miles northeast of Verdun, the French troops stormed and captured two German positions on the hills. The advance was made in the face of a murderous artillery fire that swept the wooded hillsides free of every vestige of foliage.

Important engagements are now being fought in the woods between Verdun and Pont-a-Mousson,it is known here, but the war office communique this afternoon was almost devoid of information of the fighting in this region.

The announcement of the Belgian success along the Yser, of French gains at Etain, and of slight French successes near Eparges, were the features of the official statement.

The German wedge slopes from near Elain, southwesterly to its apex at St. Mihiel, then south easterly again, Elain being at the north side of the thickest part of the wedge. A French advance near there, if made rapidly, would tend to cut off the whole "wedgeful" of Germans. Also it would imperil their communication to Metz. There are indications that the German wedge is being attacked from both sides.

AGREEMENT WITH SERBIA

ROME, April 7.---It is unofficially stated here that Italy and Serbia have made an agreement regarding the ports on the Adriatic, and that if this Italo-Serbian agreement is signed this week as expected, the entry of Italy into the European conflict may be considered imminent.

BATTALIONS ANNIHILATED, SAYS BERLIN

BERLIN, via wireless to London, April 7.---Two French battalions were annihilated in a fierce battle east and southeast of Verdun, according to the official announcement from the German war office to-day.

The statement also reported a victory over the Russians at Andrjevo, and a Russian battalion slaughtered ---the commander being among the captured.

The war office admitted that the German troops were compelled to evacuate the Belgian town of Drei Grachten, on the west bank of the Yser river.

LONDON, April 7.—Prohibition advocates lost all immediate hopes for a "dry" Britain when the British cabinet adjourned this afternoon without reaching a definite decision on the prohibition question.

It was given out that the Chancellor of Exchequer Lloyd George, will confer with representatives of the liquor interests to talk over a compromise. This was accepted as an admission of defeat by the prohibition forces.

LONDON, April 7.---The British admiralty refused to comment upon the rumour that the battleship Lord Nelson had been sunk in the Dardanelles, though persons close to the admiralty said the report was utterly without foundation.

WIND-BROKEN KNEE-SPRUNG AND SPAVINED

But Goverment Bought The Horses Just the Same—One Animal Purchased for War Purposes Was 20 Years Old

SOME MORE HORSE TALK

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, April 7—Spavins went for high prices in Nova Scotia.

The public accounts committee had some more horse talk this morning. The records were lost on horse purhase operations of A. Dewitt Foster, M.P., so the Libexals called up some of the vendors. A. B. Harvey, who sold horses to Whip Secretary McKay, who bought for A. Dewitt Foster, M.P., who bought for the Government, gave some evidence. He sold horses and made money. He sold quite a lot of horses to McKay, and made a good thing out of them for he bought most of them but a few hours before.

Some were spavined, some were knee sprung; some were wind broken; but they all went. One of the horses he bought fifteen minutes before he sold it to McKay for the Government, was twenty years old.

Harvey sold one of his horses to McKay for $130. He thought possibly the horse might have been worth about $75 but not more.

Work For The Unemployed

Representative of the Ontario Government Has Arrived in the City —Farmers in Need of Men

Mr. T. Howell, special representative of the Ontario Government, arrived in the city to-day. While here Mr. Howell will attempt to solve two questions, namely, the need of work in the city and help on the farms. Men who wish to take up farm work may obtain employment by applying to Mr. Howell who will remain in the city until Friday. His headquarters will be at Room 12, Bank of Commerce building, at the corner of Hunter and Water Streets. The farm labour problem is one of vital importance to every farmer. Many have already secured their help for the season, while others are contemplating such a course. Those who are in a position to know, state there will be a brisk demand for farm labour of all kinds, and both experienced and inexperienced men may obtain work of this kind, providing they are willing.

Mr. Howell's mission is for the purpose of bringing the farmer and the prospective employee together.

Japan Not Yet Satisfied.

PEKIN, China, April 7.—The expressions of satisfaction with the Chinese attitude in regard to the present negotiations with Japan, attributed to Count Okuma, the Japanese Premier, were not voiced at the conference yesterday by M. Hioki, the Japanese Minister here, who is conducting the case for his Government. On the contrary M. Hioki warned Lu Cheng Hsiang, the Chinese Foreign Minister, against continuing to refuse compliance with those demands against which China is holding out.

The questions of Manchurian immigration and the advancement of the interests of the Hanyehping Mining Co., together with the article in group five of the demands providing for China's purchase of arms from Japan, were again discussed at the conference yesterday, but no conclusion reached.

GERMANY HAS LOST DIRECTION OF THE STRUGGLE

French Official Review Says the Allies Dominate the Present Position of the German Army

FOE AT END OF RESOURCES

Examiner Special:

PARIS, France, April 7.—In another installment of the official review of the war situation the Government assures the people that while the allies have a great reserve of men, munitions, money and other necessary resources, Germany practically is at the end of those resources and is beaten as a result. It is stated that the German losses on the two fronts approximate at least one million, eight hundred thousand men.

Some statements from the French official review are:

"Our seventy-five" guns are in as perfect condition to-day as they were in the first day of the war.

The very large number of heavy guns at the front represents only part of the total number available for use. There is an abundant stock of projectiles for heavy artillery and the supply of machine guns is ample and growing.

The transport service has worked with remarkable precision since the beginning of the war.

The food supplies for the army are abundant.

The battles of Flanders, instead of being success for Germany was a marked defeat and it dominates the present position of the German army. Germany lost the initiative and the direction of the war and furthermore she was condemned to suffer counter effects of the enormous and precipitate effort which she had made in vain.

DEATH OF BROTHER OF ALD. G. W. GREEN

At His Home Near Chicago Yesterday Morning—A Western Ontario Man

A telegram to Ald. G. Walter Green on Monday evening informing him of the serious illness of his brother, Mr. John William Green in New Carlisle, Indiana and calling him to the bedside, was followed by another message to the effect that Mr. John W. Green had passed away yesterday morning. Ald. Green left yesterday for the home of his brother, but he would not be there before the death occurred.

The late Mr. Green was a Western Ontario man and has been in the State of Indiana since he was quite a young man, following the occupation of blacksmith

The survivors are his wife and one son, Mr. Edward Green of Chicago; also four brothers, Ald. G. Walter Green, Peterborough; Messrs. Joseph and Guy Green, Manitoba; and Robert Green, Cayuga; and two sister, Mrs. Bray, Peterborough, and Mrs. Stroll, Stratford.

There have not been any particulars of funeral arrangements received in this city up to the present.

ANOTHER VICTIM OF MENINGITIS AT BELLEVILLE

Private Driver Who Enlisted With Lindsay Detachment Passes Away—57th's Big Turnout

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

BELLEVILLE, April 7.—Private Driver, who enlisted with the 45th Regiment of Lindsay and came here a few days ago with the contingent of that town to mobilize with the 34th Battalion, died in the hospital here last evening. He was a young Englishman without relatives in this country. The remains will be interred here this afternoon with full military honours. This is the second death in the camp within a week.

A BIG TURNOUT.

Two hundred and fifty-four of all ranks were in attendance at the parade of the 57th Regiment last night, the first of the regular drill season. This is one of the largest initial turnouts in the history of the regment, and is most gratifying to all concerned. There was a large number of new recruits again last evening and some of the companies had a splendid turnout, C Company blazing the way with 43 men on parade. The evening was profitably spent in squad drill and physical exercise. There were no orders issued last night.

PRESENTATIONS MADE.

OTTAWA, April 7—Two generous presentations have been made to the 5th Canadian Mounted Rifles, one being a Colt automatic machine gun and the other a complete set of instruments for a regimental pipe band to be formed in connection with the unit. Both are gifts from patriotic citizens, whose names, Capt. W. Blue, adjutant of the regiment, states he is not at liberty to divulge.

There are numerous Scotsmen in the regiment, and among them are several first-class pipers and drummers. There are a bass drum, half a dozen small drums, four pipes and bugles and other instruments. In all there will be a band of about 15 pieces, which should add considerably to the entertainment of the men while in training.

The machine gun presented by a second wealthy Ottawa patriot has not arrived, but from the description received it is a splendid arm, firing 40 shots a minute, and the officers of the regiment are most grateful.

The machine gun section of 28 men has been training for some time under Lt. Fraser on a Colt gun received from the Department of Militia.

SELLING WAR TAX STAMPS

No Great Demand For New Issue as Yet

Post Office officials state that up to the present there had been no great demand for War Tax stamps, which which were placed on sale Saturday. As war stamps are not required to be used before April 15, those purchased so far have been more or less out of curiosity.

The stamp itself is simply the ordinary one-cent stamp with the words "war tax" printed across the breast of the figure of His Majesty, in rather heavy white letters.

At the post office it was said that the stamps were to be used only for war tax purposes. Two war tax stamps, for instance, instead of one regular one cent stamp and one war stamp would not carry a letter.

ACKNOWLEDGE THE RECEIPT OF FLOUR

From the Peterboro' Board of Trade For Belgian Relief

Mr. Basil Hall, President of the local Board of Trade, has received a letter from the Secretary of the Administration of Belgian relief, acknowledging the receipt of a bill of lading for a carload of flour shipped by the local Board of Trade to Mr. A. S. Barnstead, the Belgian Commissioner at Halifax. With the money raised in this city for Belgian relief the Board purchased 800 bags of flour from the Peterborough Cereal Co.

INVESTIGATION WAS APPROVED OF BY THE MILITARY OFFICERS

PROHIBITION QUESTION IS BEFORE CABINET

Ministers Wavering Between Lloyd George's Demand for Measures and the Pressure of Brewing Interests for "Hands Off"

KITCHENER AND CHURCHILL

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 7 — The British Cabinet this afternoon considered the prohibition question at a lengthy session.

The ministry, it was authoritatively reported, was wavering between Lloyd George's demand for drastic measures and the pressure on the part of the big distilling and brewing interests for "hands off."

There was a strong posibility that the ban would be placed on all distilled liquors but that the sale of beer and light wines would not be interfered with.

Lloyd George presented to the Cabinet results of various conferences with the interests most concerned in his proposal for absolute prohibition during the war period. He assured the ministry that despite objections from some quarters the majority of the labour leaders would back the Government in any action it might take, however drastic.

He urged very strongly that the gain to Britain through the shortening of the war would more than offset the loss in the revenue from the liquor business. Lord Kitchener and First Lord of the Admiralty Churchill were also heard from. They presented the views of the military and naval experts,b ut their personal recommendations to the Cabinet were not made public.

Cleaning Off The Streets

Board of Works is Prosecuting a Street Cleaning Campaign—Getting Ready for the Oil

The work of reclaiming some of the city's streets has begun in earnest. To-day a large gang of men was engaged in scraping George street, south of the C. P. R. tracks, where the asphalt ends. The mud is first scraped to one side and subsequently removed. The fine weather of the past few days has had the effect of drying up the roads, especially those that have been cleaned off. It is the intention of the Board of Works to prosecute the street cleaning campaign until the work is completed. This will give employment to a large number of men and at the same time put the streets in a presentable condition.

Absence of Frost.

It is interesting to note that the last two nights have been devoid of frost, which is a fair indication that Spring weather is in the offing. A few more days of dry weather and the dust will be on the move, likewise those who spend the greater part of the summer complaining of the dust evil.

In anticipation of this the Board of Works is rushing through to completion arrangements for a supply of asphaltic road oil with which to treat the macadam roads.

LIVE STOCK MARKET

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, April 7—Live stock receipts, fair; trade, steady; prices practically unchanged from yesterday.

Examiner's Visit Was Not in the Nature of a Muck-raking Expedition as the Review Goes Out of its Way to Say—Local and 39th Officers Were in Sympathy With Inquiry.

CLEARED THE AIR

The Review last evening stated that the Examiner tried to find something wrong at Belleville and failed, a statement that is just as ridiculous and untruthful as the Review's remark that the banks were open on Easter Monday — a bank holiday as one would have supposed even our contemporary would have known. The Examiner's visit to Belleville was not a muck-raking expedition; it was undertaken in a much different spirit and with a patriotic object. There were varied and confusing reports coming from Belleville, complaints of unsanitary quarters and poor food, exaggerated rumours of the meningitis outbreak, stories of a nature that not only caused worry and anxiety among the relatives and friends of the Peterborough boys in Belleville, but that, if persisted in, would have interfered materially in any further recruiting.

The Examiner recognized the harm that was being done by the reports that were being circulated around the streets, and decided to investigate the situation with a view of clearing the air. The subject was discussed with Lt.-Col. Walker, commanding officer of the 57th Regiment, who was in entire sympathy with the mission, and who furnished the reporter with a letter of introduction to Lt.-Col. Preston, officer commanding the 39th Battalion, in which the objects of the visit were clearly set forth and endorsed by Lt.-Col. Walker. The commanding officer of the 39th Battalion and his staff were found to be entirely of the same opinion. They realized that alarming stories had gone forth, and welcomed an opportunity of having the situation cleared up. In every respect they most cordially assisted the Examiner representative. The latter, who is personally acquainted with nearly every Peterborough member of the 39th Battalion, discussed all aspects of camp life with the men, got their views as well as those of the officers, went through the barracks twice himself, and from all these sources of information prepared the article which appeared in Monday's issue. He was glad to be able to report that many of the causes of complaint had been removed within the past few days, and that the building, in spite of a contrary opinion by some of the men, had been pronounced sanitary by medical experts.

He was not, however, convinced that the canning factory was the best available location in the third division for a barracks. In no respect can it be compared to the Cordage Company building in this city, which could have been secured and which might have been the home of 1,100 soldiers at the present time, if the intricacies of the political system had not made Belleville the choice. The Cordage building could have been converted into a much more comfortable barracks at less expense. The men could have been provided with sleeping accommodation on the ground floor, with lofty ceilings, admirable ventilation facilities, ample light, and no possible danger from fire. There would have been no necessity of having the lavatories over the kitchen or alongside the sleeping quarters. The office building would have made a splendid guard room, a much different proposition from the makeshift room built just inside the entrance of the Belleville barracks. There are other buildings which would have accommodated the quartermaster and his stores and the whole establishment of the battalion could have been stationed there.

But leaving all these considerations aside, why was it necessary to go to the expense of constructing barracks at all either in Belleville or Peterborough, seeing that in a very short time it will be possible to have the troops in camp. If the detachments had been outfitted and equipped at their recruiting centres, and drilled there until the weather was suitable for camp, it is a safe prediction that the 39th Battalion would have mobilized under more favourable conditions than exist at Belleville just now. The men would have been in better health and spirits, and better prepared for training than they are at the present time.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1915

OUR CIVILIZATION.

The instincts of savagery is not very deep below the surface of the human skin. When so much interest can be aroused in a bloodless fight between two burly blackguards, while twenty million men in Europe are slaughtering each other, it is to be doubted whether we take life seriously, and think, or, simply yield ourselves to the primitive emotions of a skin-clad humanity. A Toronto newspaper, strung a seven-column-long black heading across its front page with "extra" in flaring letters, and recorded the glorious and significant news that the "white hope" had won in the 26th round—as much display as would have been given the triumphant entry of the Allies into Berlin. It is unfortunate that the black man lost; for the credit of civilization a white man brings no glory to his race by winning and wearing the brutal trophy of the prize ring championship. On reflection it does not seem that the newspapers are to blame; if they alone shared the interests in such a degrading sport, it would not be so bad; but they print what they think their readers would like to read. So that we all share in the perverted taste and misdirected concern, that excites our interest in a prize fight above our interest in the titanic struggle for human liberty now raging in Europe, and above all the hundrum happenings that have to do with the welfare and betterment of humanity.

FINANCING COMPENSATION ACT.

It seems to be wise on the part of the Compensation Act Committee of the City Council to consider, with both deliberation and diligence, before adopting a final scheme. There is no urgent reason for haste, so it appears wise to consider the subject so maturely that whatever plan is adopted, may do full justice to the claims of possibly injured workingmen, and not be financially onerous to the city. Alderman Green's suggestion to employ $1,000 of the $2,000 available to insure a certain number of employees and have $1,000 as a nucleus of a fund to meet contingencies, is worth consideration. To put on wholesale insurance will involve positive and certain cost; while a fund like Alderman Green mentions might not be drawn upon to a tenth part of the extent of the cost of wholesale insurance. With reasonable care, there is not a probability of many accidents upon civic works. Deep trenching is perhaps the most dangerous; but with precautions in cribbing, such as considerations of ordinary humanity and good contracting procedure suggest, would eliminate a great deal of the danger and minimize the risk of accidents that would command compensation. With general insurance placed the expenditure would be certain as well as possible complications in obtaining settlements. The creation of a fund would not in itself represent any actual outlay, and judging from the past such a fund would not be extensively drawn upon. The Mayor pointed this out, and the fund seems to be the thing. Throughout the province the number of accidents of a fatal or seriously disabling character are comparatively few. It is wise in this connection to think twice over the matter of financing the Compensation Act, as it affects the corporation.

THE CITY GARDEN IDEA.

The idea of the city garden is arousing considerable interest, but not as much as its merits warrant. It is, however, to a certain extent, misunderstood. A day or two ago The Examiner published letters from two correspondents, both excellent in character, and written evidently by men who knew what they were talking about. One was inclined to be a little pessimistic in regard to the profits of the work, considering the amount that would have to be expended to secure results. Without canvassing this contention as a general truth, it may be submitted from the point of view of a layman, that the fertility of the average vacant lot is rather too much disparaged. Is it not a fact that many vacant lots have laid fallow for perhaps fifty years, resting so far as drafts upon their fertility are concerned, gathering fertility from decaying vegetation, and the nitrogenous elements suspended in rains and snows for half a century? So that, to a considerable extent, the soil of some vacant lots may be regarded as virgin soil, ready to respond plentifully in vigorous growth and good production, under proper cultivation and care. However this may be, the idea of the city garden is not one of direct profit. It is intended to supplement the table supply of the household, with fresh crisp, wholesome vegetables, thus supplementing the income and supplying, to a very important degree, an income or benefits of an income, that may be wanting through unemployment. Thus the city garden involves the idea of response to the injunction of the government, with the associated idea of patriotism and production. It also involves healthful and profitable employment of leisure time, a delightful relief from voluntary or enforced idleness. It also contributes to the beautification and improvement of the city, realizing the Scriptural idea of paradise—making the desert blossom as the rose—making the city a pleasanter city to live in, a more desirable place of residence, and more worthy of the pride of every citizen.

ONTARIO'S DISTINCTION.

Ontario is evidently aiming at distinction—the distinction of being the last in the adoption of a radical war measure—to prevent the demoralization of our enlisted soldiers, through easy access to strong drink. Russia, "benighted" Russia, has banished strong drink as a greater foe than the armies of Germany and Austria. France has as a war measure restricted the sale of absinthe; Great Britain, from King to costermonger, is seriously considering a similar step. Saskatchewan has fallen in line, and now we have New South Wales, which has decided to close all bars at six o'clock. But Ontario still has the distinction of being behind. Instead of taking some drastic steps to minimise at the most critical period in our life, the evils of strong drink, the dominant party in the Legislature trifles with the interests of temperance, and the interests of the people, and of our soldiers, by passing an abortive measure of "reform," that does not hurt the sensibility, nor injure the interests of the bar or the saloon or the shop. A "temperance" premier sits in his place and smiles bland approval of the jeers and sneers of his trafficked followers, at a proposal for early closing of bars—shortening the hours during which the ruin of our citizenship, our sons and fathers, is being wrought, as the gentle German pirates sneered at the fruitless efforts of the struggling victims of a torpedoed passenger steamer, to save their lives. Yet the open bar, especially after nightfall, is ruining every day in Ontario, more men; causing more human misery, blight of home, and ruin of manhood, than the sinking of a score of passenger steamers and the loss of all on board. Yet our Legislature, of a Christian province, with a "temperance" premier at its head, refuses to shorten by one brief hour the season of the sacrifice of our manhood. It is afraid to antagonize its alcoholic allies; and it is even patriotic in its obstinacy. By closing the bars for even an hour, the bar receipts would be lessened, and since this Christian province is a partner in the whisky business, and gets a share of the bar receipts—the Government does not wish to be unpatriotic by risking the loss of one dollar of bar revenue designed to supplement the revenue of thousands of dollars made necessary to reap the fruits of the bar—criminality, insanity, idiocy, and depravity. Verily Ontario has the distinction of occupying the rear of the procession.

Speaker's Sister Shares in Profits Of Drug Supplies

OTTAWA, April 6.—How a sister of Albert Sevigny, Deputy Speaker of the House and Nationalist-Conservative member for Dorchester, sold $23,495 worth of drug supplies for the troops at Valcartier was told to the Public Accounts committee this afternoon. Madame Plamondon keeps a small drug store in Quebec, with a normal stock of about $5,000. She got a contract in March of 1914 to supply drugs to the permanent force at Quebec. When the war broke out the medical officer at Valcartier was told to keep on buying from her at the original contract prices. Then Mme. Plamondon succeeded in getting the department to increase the price of drugs on account of the war. So far as the evidence this afternoon shows, no tenders were called for, and the department met Mme. Plamondon's requests for higher prices, except in a very few cases. She told the committee that she had to raise her price because she was buying from wholesale houses, and she believed the enhanced prices were fair and reasonable. One item—whiskey at $9 per gallon—was cited, but the explanation was "that druggists might charge that price." The committee will make a little further examination of the prices charged, as now filed on the records.

H. W. Brown, Director of Contracts, said that a board of officers under Colonel Jones, Director of Medical Services, had drawn up a schedule of prices for drugs for the permanent force in March of last year. Madame Plamondon had been given on March 31 a six months' contract to supply all drugs needed for the permanent force at Quebec. In September the medical officer in charge at Valcartier was instructed to purchase necessary drug supplies from Madame Plamondon at the contract price.

"Were the prices charged by Mme. Plamondon for the larger quantities supplied to Valcartier higher than the prices charged in her original contract?" asked Mr. Kyte.—"Yes," replied Mr. Brown. "On August 29 I received a memorandum from her objecting to the original prices on the ground that the cost of drugs had gone up since the contract was made."

Increased Prices Approved.

The witness noted that there were seventeen items on which increased price, aspirin 50 per cent., witch hazel stance, had gone up 25 per cent. in price, aspirin 50 per cent., with hazel 35 per cent., camphor 25 per cent. The request for increased prices was referred to the Director-General of Medical Services, who approved of the increases, excepting those asked on bismuth, salol and carbolic acid.

"Was any other drug concern approached and asked to furnish the drugs at the old prices?" asked Mr. Kyte.—"No, it was not customary to do so," replied Mr. Brown. He did not know if the prices charged by Mme. Plamondon were as low as those secured elsewhere in the Dominion. He added that there had been another request on October 19 for higher prices on account of the war. Mme. Plamondon had said that she had to pay higher prices to the wholesalers. These increases were also allowed.

War Advanced the Prices.

Major Potter of the Medical Services branch, the next witness, told the committee that prices for drugs had certainly gone up in consequence of the war. He had checked Mme. Plamondon's account, and the bills were produced.

"I see," said Mr. Kyte, "that you have passed an item of $9 for one gallon of whiskey."

SIR ROBERT BORDEN'S ATTITUDE TO PREVENTION OF ELECTORAL CORRUPTION

The Hon. Charles Marcil's suggestion in the House last night in connection with the Election Act amendments is one that certainly ought to be adopted. He said it had been a practice in election trials for the parties to make an admission when a certain amount of evidence had been put in. This brought about the unseating of the candidate, but did not disqualify him. In order that justice might not be defeated in this way, he suggested that a Public Prosecutor be appointed to see the trials through, and bring out all the evidence of corrupt practices.

This is exactly what is wanted. It will be remembered in the notorious Macdonald election case justice was defeated because there was no Public Prosecutor to push the case to an issue. When it was first brought to the courts on the charge that the election had been carried by the most shameful debauchery of the constituency, technical objections were raised and the case carried from court to court for a whole year. During that time the Conservative candidate sat as a member of Parliament, voted on public questions, and drew his sessional indemnity. At the end of a year all the objections had been over ruled, and the case sent back to the local court for trial.

Was it ever tried? Certainly not. An admission of a "technical" violation of the election laws was put in and thus the evidence was suppressed. The candidate was unseated. He went straight back to the constituency, posed as a man who had suffered martyrdom at the hands of jealous Liberals, and carried the constituency on that cry. Back he went to Ottawa, and was received with great joy by the Conservatives of the House.

As long as this kind of thing is allowed under the law it is useless to expect clean elections. We confess to keen disappointment at the airy manner in which Sir Robert Borden dismissed Mr. Marcil's suggestion. In his famous Halifax programme, when he told the electors what he would do if ever he got into power, the present Premier was fiery in his denunciation of election corruption, and declared that one of the first things he would attend to would be to make such laws as would purge elections and punish the guilty. He made special reference to the appointment of a public officer to prosecute wherever there was evidence of corruption. Four years of power finds his Government, however, only in the discussion stage in this matter. It also finds Sir Robert Borden "regretting" that a Public Prosecutor had not been found practicable, and talking in a general way about "educating" public opinion.

From which we gather that although the man who is now Premier promised to stamp out election corruption, for one reason or another he had dropped his leadership on this question, and will have nothing really effective along the line of reform put down to his credit in history. And we wonder, why?

Rather unusual, you say, in these days of moratoria and extended credits. Not at all. That's the way such claims are always paid. The promptness with which life assurance companies meet their policy obligations is one of their distinguishing features.

The Imperial Life stood ready at any time, from the day the policy was issued, to pay over immediately this $100,000 had death deprived The Wm. Davies Company of the services of the official upon whose life the assurance was effected.

If commercial life assurance is desirable for such a well-managed and successful concern as The Wm. Davies Company, is it not possible it would be of value to you?

The Imperial Life makes a specialty of life assurance for business purposes. May we send a competent advisor to discuss with you in confidence how an Imperial Life Policy would help in your business? He'll tell you frankly if we cannot serve you to your advantage.

WAR MAKES INROADS INTO BEET SUGAR PRODUCTION

WASHINGTON, D.., April 6—The effect of the present war in Europe on the geography of the world's sugar production is strikingly shown in a statement just issued by the National Geographic Society. The statement follows:

Fifty-three out of every hundred pounds of sugar produced in the world are grown in the countries now at war and their colonies. The total production of the world is estimated at approximately 18,000,000 tons. This production is made up of cane sugar and beet sugar, the total yield of cane sugar having been 9,545,000 tons, and of beet sugar, 8,438,000 tons in 1913.

"One of the peculiar facts connected with the sugar make of the world is that while Europe produces more than ninety-three out of every one hundred pounds of beet sugar grown, it yields only one pound out of every six hundred of can sugar. Of Europe's total production of beet sugar, amounting to 7,808,000 tons, 5,666,000 tons grew in belligerent territory in 1913. Nearly all of this product is now entirely located from the outside world, being grown mainly in Germany, Austria-Hungary and Russia. What this means to the world is revealed by the fact that more than two-thirds of the world's sugar is not consumed in the country of its origin, this condition arising from the fact that the great sugar using nations are principally outside of the belts of sugar production.

"Any scarcity of sugar growing out of the war will affect the United States more seriously than any other country, for the reason that American people are, per capita, the heaviest users of sugar in the world. With one-sixteenth of the world's population, the United States consumes more than one-fifth of its sugar. How rapidly this country is becoming a nation of sugar eaters is revealed by a reference to the tables of sugar consumption of the last half century. Fifty years ago the people of the United States ate eighteen pounds of sugar per capita. Five years later, in 1870, they were using thirty-three pounds per capita. In 1880 the per capita consumption had gone up to forty pounds. Twenty-five years ago it had risen to fifty-one pounds. In 1900 it had climbed still higher, to fifty-nine pounds. By 1910 the sugar consumption reached 80 pounds. To-day the per capita consumption exceeds eighty-five pounds.

"It appears that the cane sugar industry will suffer very little in the matter of the total crop yield as a result of the war. On the other hand, the beet sugar business will suffer very heavily. The present Russian crop has been almost entirey tied up by inability to get exports out of the countr, while next year's crop is threatened with a shortage resulting fromthe destruction of the industry in Poland, where so much of Russia's sugar is produced. The reports from France indicate that the rich sugar beet lands of the northern section were harvested late season under the direction of the Germtns, and that most of theaugar factories in this territory have been dismantled to get their copper for the manufacture of war munitions.

"Information from Germany indicates that the Empire will plant only three-fourths of its normal area in sugar beets this year. This would resultin cutting down German's sugar yield by more than 60,000 tons.

"Of course the prospective shortage in beet sugar production will be somewhat offset by the falling off in sugar consumption incident to the financial stringency of the world, caused by the war. Great Britain, annually buying nearly 4,000,00 tons of sugar, and probably cut down her consumption as much as Germany will cut down her production."

Voice of The People

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—It is always interesting to hear subjects of vital importance discussed in the public press by those who are qualified, but when it assumes a cowardly, if not a mendacious attempt to ridicule a man's religion, if not to vilify him character, then it becomes abominable.

A writer in yesterday's Examiner under the nom de plume of "Speaker," seems to fill the bill of such a character. I am not an adherent of either his narrow creed or a member of the International Bible Association, of which Pastor Russell is a member, which I gather from the press, and so I am imprejudiced and impartial between them. It appears that one, L. S. Ward, is a newspaper called The Watchtower, gave utterance to his sentiments on Pastor Russell's books, as he has a perfect right to do, at which "Speaker" forthwith takes umbrage, and seeks by immendo to hold Pastor Russell responsible for the sentiments of another. Being fully inflated with venom he then commences beating the air with incoherent criticisms of Pastor Russell on general principles, judging by the public press Pastor Russell needs no one to defend him or his doctrine, but is quite qualified for the work himself. A man who can draw an audience of ten thousand could swamp a puny antagonist who could scarcely muster ten dozen. Pastor Russell's "Bible Studies," like any concodance or encyclopaedia issued by member of the various church, is intended, no doubt, as a help, to elucidate the Scriptures, all of which such works should be welcomed by the seekers after truth. Of course they are nutter pills to the narrow-minded creeds. "Speaker" goes far afield to seek out other texts than those used by Pastor Russell, instead of meeting squarely those used by him, but he is as elusive as was DeWet on the South African veldt. Now you see him, now you don't see him.

The only thing "Reader" finds fault with apparently, notwithstanding all his fuss, is that Pastor Russell believes in the resurrection of the dead at the ushering in of the Millenium, while he, himself, claims that the "picked will not live again till the thousand years are finished," so he is kind enough to spare them from the torments of hell in the meantime. He does admit though that the wicked shall not be utterly distroyed or receive the same treatment, for he quotes CChrist as saying "behold I come quickly and my reward is with men to give every man according as his work shall be."

"Reader's" concluding remarks are a tissue of misrepresentations and blasphemy. He insinuates that Pastor Russell thinks that his writings are better than God's word, and that he is Christ himself, and then he irreverently asks where are Christ's headquarters—whether in Brooklyn, New York, or elsewhere, and repeats the question, and speaks of it as a secret. If he had an ounce of religion in his make-up he would know that Christ was everywhere, and takes cognizance of his sacrilege. If he has faith and will deligently seek Him, he will find Him, but he will have to repent of the enormity of his sins.

If "Reader" is honest and has any pretensions for the faith that is in him, he can readily avail himself the opportunity of making mincemeat of Pastor Russell and his doctrine by meeting him on the public platform and discuss the same fairly and squarely, for I believe Pastor Russell is willing and ready to meet his critics at any time or place for such a discussion.

Yours truly,
CASUAL OBSERVER.

Pat applies' at the wharf for work as a stevedore. He was only four and a half feet in height, and the boss was dubious. "We're loading 400-lb. anvils into that steamer," said he, "and a little runt like yourself couldn't handle 'em." "Try me," said Pat. And the boss put him to work. Pat hustled the anvils about all right. The cargo was nearly all stowed in the hold when the boss heard a splash. He ran to the rail, and looking over, saw Pat struggling in the water. "Throw me a rope," he yelled, as he went under. He came up, called for a rope and went under again. Again he rose to the surface. "If you don't throw me a rope," he spluttered angrily, "I'm going to drop this anvil."

UNTRIMMED MILLINERY AND TRIMMINGS IN A VERY ATTRACTIVE SPRING DISPLAY

HUNDREDS of Untrimmed Hats, in all the new spring styles, materials and colours; hundreds of flowers; great quantities of ribbons, and almost every kind of fashionable feather, fancy and novelty, are gathered here in this great Spring Display—the most comprehensive assortment we have ever had. Many of the hats are imported and many of the trimmings come from abroad and used exclusively by us.

If it's an untrimmed inexpensive shape and a pretty odd ornament you're looking for we have something in this assortment to please you. Call and see the display.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

Assistant City Engineer Hay has sufficiently recovered from his recent operation to enable him to return to his duties at the city hall. Mr. T. Q. Quartermaine of the same department, is still on the sick list.

At the Fire Hall.

The hook and ladder truck belonging to the central fire station has been equipped with a new set of wheels of a greater width than the old ones. The truck has also been repainted.

New Milk Vehicles.

Sanitary Inspector Spence states that a number of the milkmen of the city have purchased new milk vehicles. He also claims to have less difficulty with milk vendors than any other people whom he has to come in contact with.

From the Front.

Ex-Firemen Munden and Clancy, who were presented with Morris chairs by the members of the central fire station, have promised to forward Fire Chief Howard a photograph of themselves seated in the chairs at the firing line. The chairs have been fitted with a rack to hold the gun when not in action.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

The Mayor of London, Ont., is making a move to dress the police of that city in khaki instead of the regulation blue uniforms.

The Town "Jug".

The town hall at East Tilton, N.H., was sold for $37 to be turned into a henhouse.

Dr. Dakin Elected.

The Salary Question.

After a warm discussion the Stratford City Council adopted the finding of a special committee on salaries and duties of all civic officials, making no cuts in any case.

Favour Radial Subsidy.

Following up the appeal of the big Provincial Hydro-radial deputation to Toronto, recently, the London Board of Control adopted a resolution asking the Ontario Government to assist the scheme by granting a subsidy of $3,500 a mile.

Galt's Rate 28 Mills.

The Town Council of Galt fixed the tax rate for 1915 at 28 mills. The report of the Finance Chairman, A. M. Edwards, showed that the total amount to be raised is $192,038.59. This is $11,000 in excess of last year.

Field Kitchen for 18th Battalion.

The London Board of Control voted $1,300 for the purchase of a portable field kitchen for the 18th Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force.

The sum of over $26,000 has been raised in Brockville in the two days campaign for the Patriotic Fund.

Montreal Mayor Fined.

Mederic Martin, M.P., Mayor of Montreal, was fined $10 and costs for driving in an automobile in Mount Royal Park. Mayor Martin said he would appeal against the fine.

Patriotic Fund.

The Preston Patriotic Committee in its canvass of the town to raise funds collected $3,000 on Tuesday and Wednesday. From Preston over one hundred recruits have been resolved by the contingents.

Money for Relief.

The City Council of Hamilton has voted $5,000 more towards the United Relief Association and $1,000 to the Soldiers' Emergency Fund.

Curfew in Belleville.

The Belleville City Council has passed a resolution "That the city clock bell be rung every night at 9 o'clock for the purpose of warning children to be off the streets and public places.

GOVERNMENT PREPARED TO PAY MORE FOR HORSES

Premier Borden Says That For Certain Reasons He Cannot Disclose Why British and French Buyers of Remounts Were Asked to Withdraw—Farmers Get Seed for Forty Acres.

OTTAWA, April 7.—At yesterday's sitting in the House, respecting the policy pursued by the Government in the purchase of horses for military purposes. It was charged that the British and French Governments had been requested to purchase their horses in the United States, so as to time the exportation of horses to the Dominion Government. At the same time the exportation of horses to the United States had been forbidden.

The Prime Minister said in reply that for certain reasons he could not disclose, it had been deemed best for the British and French buyers to withdraw from Canada, but he was in hopes that in the near future the British and French Governments would re-enter the market. Meanwhile, in view of the fact that the Canadian farmers had been holding their horses over winter at a heavy expense, the Dominion Government would be inclined to pay higher prices.

Several members objected to federal inspection of meats being restricted to abattoirs engaged in export and interprovincial trade, insisting that some efficient system of inspection should be established to safeguard all the consumers of Canada. Mr. W. F. Maclean of South York, in this connection, said that the municipal abattoir of Toronto might suggest a solution for the problem with which many localities were confronted.

The House put through committee stage yesterday morning the bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court of Canada to entertain appeals in controverted election cases arising out of provincial elections in the Province of Manitoba.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said he would not oppose the bill, although he thought it was wrong in principle. Provincial matters, he said, should be decided by provincial courts.

Hon. J. C. Doherty said he questioned the wisdom of the Manitoba legislation, but as that province had seen fit to provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Dominion Government had no choice but to implement such legislation by conferring jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court. The bill did not create any new right of appeal, but merely permitted the Federal court to decide ultimately provincial cases so far as Manitoba was concerned at the request of that province.

The estimates of the Department of Agriculture were then taken up, and Hon. Mr. Burrell explained the demonstration farm scheme now being inaugurated. That scheme provided for a farmer cultivating forty acres of land with seed furnished by the Department and under the expert direction of the Department. All the farmers in the neighborhood could then see for themselves the advantages of scientific farming.

Epworth League Elect Officers

Illustrated Lecture in Presbyterian Church on Evening of Good Friday

HASTINGS, April 6.—The result of the ballots for election of officers in the Epworth League last week was as follows:

Pres.—Miss Ethel Collins.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mrs. D. Scriver.
2nd Vice-Pres—Miss Mae Beavis.
3rd Vice-Pres.—Miss Myrtle Hess.
4th Vice-Pres.—Mr. V. German.
Sec.—Mr. J. Parsons.
Treas.—Miss E. Tate.

The Daughters of the Empire held an Easter tea on Monday evening in their rooms, the proceeds to be devoted to buying material to make clothing for our boys at the front.

Schools are closed for the Easter vacation and the teachers have gone to their respective homes.

Mr. Walter Carter gave an illustrated lecture in the Presbyterian church on the evening of Good Friday, which was very well attended and proved quite interesting. Mr. Carter is a grandson of Mrs. J. Carter, town.

Special Services.

Sunday being Easter, the services in the local churches were in keeping with the occasion.

The annual Easter Thank offering of the W. M. S. of the Methodist church was taken up in the evening, the meeting being addressed by Mrs. R. G. Lawlor of Norwood, her subject being, "Our Responsibility to Missions in the Present War Crisis." Mrs. Lawlor is a talented lady and showed herself mistress of her subject, which was ably dealt with. The morning service was in the interest of the Mission Band, which contributed the music for the occasion. The members of the Band reflected great credit both on themselves and those who had charge of their training. The Band was addressed by Rev. Anderson, pastor of the church.

Mr. Wm. Warner has purchased an auto and is learning to drive it.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Scott have been visiting in Campbellford.

Mrs. J. Stevenson went to Norwood for Easter Sunday and spent the day with her mother.

Mr. Julian Carter of Havelock, called on friendes here on Thursday.

Miss J. Collins of Peterborough, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Armstrong of Havelock, attended the funeral of the late Mrs. J. Collins on Friay.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Lynn of Peterborough, spent a few days during the week with friends here.

We are pleased to report a little improvement in the condition of Mrs. H. Collins, and here many friends wish for her speedy recovery.

Mrs. Hayden and children of Port Hope, are visiting her sisters here, Mrs. G. Hormel and Mrs. A. E. Doxsee.

Little Miss Mary Tate of Toronto, is visiting her sister, Miss Ella Tate.

Mr. Preston Armstrong of Otonabee, has been visiting friends in this vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Rev. Anderson left on Monday for a holiday trip to Toronto.

We are pleased to report improvement in the condition of Mrs. Wm. Tate's health.

SIR WILFRID AND GEN. SAM HAVE A CLASH

OTTAWA, Ont., April 7.—The morning sitting of the Commons opened with an interchange between Sir Wilfrid and Major General Sam Hughes in reference to a report in the morning papers stating that the guard at Cornwall had fired on, and injured a child.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier in bringing the matter up remarked that "another case of the shooting of the innocent" had been reported.

Major General Sam Hughes remarked with some heat that it would be as well to wait for official reports.

The Minister admitted that the people had been warned in all the towns and cities where guards were placed that they must speak when challenged.

Sentries have been instructed that if attacked, or if an attempt is made to disarm them they are not to shoot to miss.

"In this case it was a woman and three children who attacked the soldier" retorted Sir Wilfrid and the incident closed.

WILL SUPPLY THE LABOUR

New Committee Has Task of Ensuring Plenty of Munitions

LONDON, April 7.—The War Office announced last night that Lord Kitchener had appointed a committee to take necessary steps to provide such additional labor as may be required to make it certain that the supplies of munitions of war shall be sufficient to meet all requirements.

Lord Kitchener has appointed Geo. Macaulay Booth, son of the Right Hon. Charles Booth, to take charge of his munitions committee. Mr. Booth is a partner in the big shipping firm of A. Booth & Co., a director in the Booth Steamship and other companies. According to rumor Mr. Booth is likely to be elected a director of the Bank of England, to replace the late Charles Herman Goschen.

Although Mr. Booth has not been appointed to the actual chairmanship of the committee, it is presumed that he will occupy that position. The Times and other newspapers assume that he is the "strong business man" whom David Lloyd George, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, foreshadowed in the Government scheme to mobilise the industrial resources of the country.

In an interview granted The Daily Mail, Mr. Booth modestly disavowed these assumptions. He expressed the view that the committee is a special one and was concerned with munitions alone and that Mr. Lloyd George had in view a larger scheme. Therefore, he thought it wrong to describe him as the "strong business man."

OFFICERS HAVE LOST HEAVILY

Britain Has Had 5,377 Casualties While Germany Has Had 31,376

LONDON, April 7.—An officers' casualty list for the fortnight ended March 23 shows that the British army since the beginning of the war has had 1,844 officers killed and 3,301 wounded, while 732 have been reported missing. This is a total of 5,877.

During the fortnight in question 391 officers were killed and 468 wounded, while 27 were reported missing.

In some regiments the casualties were particularly heavy. For instance the Cameron Highlanders had 16 officers killed and 17 wounded; the Gordon Highlanders, 9 killed and 33 wounded; the Northampton Regiment, 11 killed and 10 wounded; the Rifle Brigade, 10 killed and 14 wounded; the Royal Irish Rifles, 9 killed and 11 wounded, and the Worcester Regiment, 13 killed and 11 wounded.

An official compilation of the losses of the German officers corps since the beginning of the war to March 15, taken from German official lists, gives a grand total of 31,376 men in killed, wounded and missing. Of these 9,925 were killed. The lead include 43 generals.

Murray Carlisle Off For Front

Has Enlisted With No. 5 Field Ambulance, Second Contingent

ing to the front. Mr. A. Murray Carlisle, son of Mr. John Carlisle, who is a third-year student in medicine at Toronto University, has enlisted in No. 5 Field Ambulance, and will sail with the Second Contingent. He was here to-day to say good-bye to his relatives. Murray Carlisle is a graduate of the Collegiate Institute here, and figured on the Rugby team for several years.

Electors Will Meet To-morrow

For the Nomination of Candidates to Fill the Aldermanic Vacancy in the North Ward—List of Polling Places.

To-morrow will be nomination day in the North Ward. Between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock a meeting of the electors will be held in Mrs. William Lee's house, 710 George Street, for the nomination of candidates for the office of alderman. In case a poll is required a vote will be taken on Thursday, April 15th, at the following polling sub-divisions:

No. 15—Mrs. Wm. Lee's house, 710 George Street.
No. 16—J. J. Cooks' store, 153 Dublin Street.
No. 17—J. Deody's shop, 631 Park Street.
No. 18—T. H. Hooper's shop, 601 George Street.
No. 19—J. T. Braund's store, 730 George Street.

A BIG WARD.

There will likely be three, or perhaps four, nominations. Whoever enters the running may figure on putting up a hard battle, as the North Ward was never known to throw anything away in the shape of a municipal election. It is a large ward, and boasts of five polling sub-divisions. Besides the electors in the ward have an uncanny way of reviewing the qualifications of municipal gladiators.

Mr. W. S. Dodd informed the Examiner yesterday that he will be a candidate.

Does Mr. Burnham Want to Help the Law or the Farmers

Peterborough, Ont., April 7, 1915.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Mr. Burnham has written several letters to the papers suggesting that the farmers having claims for damages for flooding of their lands by high water in the canal, put their claims into the Exchequer Court, and if they win the Government will pay the cost of the evidence.

Mr. Burnham cannot get from the fact that he is a lawyer, and he is doing a very kind work for the lawyers in urging people having claims for flooded lands to start lawsuits against the Department if they are not settled. Mr. Burnham knows the Government has a whole raft of inspectors and surveyors, and that a poor man stands no chance of winning his case against a rich Government. It is alright for the lawyers, but where does the poor man come in who has a mortgage on his farm and cannot stand a big lawsuit against the Government.

If these people have suffered damage to their farms the Government has a right to pay them for the damage without any lawsuits or anything else, and they should not be asked to fight the Government to get their money. Mr. Stratton had a great many claims settled, and it seems to me Mr. Burnham should try to do as much, and not go so far out of his way to help his fellow-lawyer friends. Of course we know the lawyers need the money, but I do not intend to help make any of them rich of I can help it. My experience has been to keep out of a law suit unless you want the lawyer to own your farm.

If Mr. Buhnham would spend half the time he is spending urging people to have lawsuits against the Government, in helping the factories get Government contracts to help the workingman he would be doing more good than asking people to fight lawsuits. I intend to wait till there is a change of Government to bring my claim out because I want to have a chance of getting it settled without a lawsuit.

Yours truly,
FARMER JOHN.

Reception Given Last Evening

To Rev. Mr. and Mrs. White by Congregation of St. Luke's—Miscellaneous Shower for Mrs. White

The Sunday school hall of St. Luke's church was filled to overflowing last evening on the occasion of a congregational reception to the new rector, Rev. W. H. White and his wife. The affair was one of the happiest of its kind that has ever been held in connection with St. Luke's. Everyone seemed bent on making Mr. and Mrs. White feel perfectly at home among their new people and the word "Welcome" on a banner that hung conspicuously across the hall, was given expression to in the hearty handshake of all present, and in the splendid address of the chairman, Mr. E. A. Peck. The hall looked very pretty in its gay decorations of flags and bunting, and was in keeping with the good spirits of the assembly.

In view of the fact that Mr. and Mrs. White are taking up housekeeping in Peterborough after their sojourn in England, the ladies of the congregation last evening presented Mrs. White with a miscellaneous shower. At the opportune moment, in the course of the chairman's remarks, Mrs. W. H. Pretty drew back a screen, revealing a splendid display of useful household articles.

Rev. Mr. White in replying on behalf of his wife, thanked the ladies for their splendid gifts. He assured the people of the pleasure his wife and he felt in coming to St. Luke's, and trusted that the years they would spend together would be very happy ones.

During the evening a splendid musical programme was given. Mrs. Greenslade and Miss Alberta Rehill contributed a well rendered pianoforte duet, while Miss Phyllis Dawson's beautiful soprano voice was heard in two numbers. A duet by Mr. W. A. Greenslade and Mr. Tom Warde was well received and an encore demanded. A solo by Mr. Warde was also much enjoyed.

Dainty refreshments were served, and altogether a very happy time was brought to a conclusion by the singing of the National Anthem.

Contrasts and Inconsistencies

Special to the Examiner.

TORONTO, April 6—Government votes down Liberal proposals aiming for social betterment both in industrial centres and in the country, but at the same time, in spite of vigorous opposition protest, re-voted a grant of 1,000,000 acres of land to a railway company which has proved itself unworthy of the responsibility.

Refuses to ear-mark the war tax for war purposes only and at the same time makes County Councils ear-mark the grant for good roads and disqualifies for two years any councillor who fails to ear-mark such a fund, and says that members who vote for application of the fund for other purposes shall be personally liable for the amount so applied.

"DUGOUT" VIEW, A LAKE, A TREE AND A BREWERY

LONDON, April 7.—That Canadians at the front just now are having a quiet time is shown by a letter received yesterday from Sergt. Hugh Lindsay of the first brigade, who says: "A few sandbags and the gleaming white wire of entanglements of the German trenches—that is all there is to see. Put your head up to take in a larger view and bang, whiz. "Keep your head down,' sings out some Tommy to you. You keep it down.

"Friz over the way saw something looking remarkably British and pulled a trigger. Then you put your head down and Friz retires to his sausage. It's a great game, but you can only afford to look once.

"I have a dug-out, an excellent one, as far as dug-outs go. True, it is that dignity is lost, the mode of entrance being on all fours and getting out is just a case of backing out with an inward prayer that none of our comrades are strolling round, as they never look where they put their feet. This dug-out has a commanding appearance, as a real estate agent would say. By poking out my head I can see a lake 30 feet across, a lone tree, some grass, and a brewery. Alas! My brewery! I look upon it as 'my' brewery as my dug-out commands the best view. Now it is no longer bubbling and foaming for King and country, but full of queer holes and cuts.

"There is a little trestle bridge over the lake. I call it the Bridge of Sighs. Many a good man has stood on this bridge and sighed at the brewery so near and not working. Should you care to visit us, the countryside will be searched to give you a good feed. After passing the church — or what was a church; it is now just a steeple — take the second turning to the right. Don't take the first, which is shrapnel alley. Walk straight on, but not too far, else you will walk into German trenches. If you get a searchlight turned on you, imagine yourself a turnip or something in the vegetable line, and lie still. Then resume when the searchlight has flitted away. When you fall over barbed wire, you will know you have arrived at your destination."

Three Ways.

Grateful Patient—Doctor, how can I ever repay you for your kindness to me?

Doctor—Doesn't matter, old man—Check, money order or cash.

A LETTER FROM A MINNESOTA SUBSCRIBER

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—As I have been receiving your valuable paper here for some time, and as I always feel anxious to get the local news from around Peterborough. It is home-like to me and I will continue to receive your paper as long as circumstances will permit. But I must say that times are real bad here at present and labour scarce for the working class. There are just a few remarks I wish to make in regard to other matters. There is one item which appears weekly in your paper under the heading, "Pastor Russell's Lecture Bureau." I object to his sayings, as I class him as one of those who parade in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves. He is not the pastor of Brooklyn Tabernacle as he claims. In regard to this present war there are few personal views of my own which I wish to call to your attention, as I was born and raised in Ontario, Canada; born in Northumberland county in June, 1862, and came over to this state of Minnesota in June, 1899 and have resided here since, with the exception of a visit back to see the old homestead in Dummer, County of Peterborough, last summer, where I was brought up. I wish to say that I hesitated to take out citizen papers in this country until now. The war has rather changed my views. I would be opposed to sending troops out of Canada to wars fought on foreign soil. I consider this American continent is big enough and large enough to take care of itself against any and all enemies who might care to invade any part of it, which occasion I think is not likely to arise. The Monroe doctrine, an old and settled policy of the United States, is a guarantee against any absorbing of territory on any part of the American continent by any European power or any of their Asiatic allies, so we should let those European powers fight out their own battles on their own soil. England comes now as the champion of small nations and has much to say about the integrity of Belgium. I wish to ask what has she ever done for Ireland, a small nation, unless to misgovern her people and to drive them by famine and starvation and religious persecution to the four corners of the globe. What about the violated treaty of Limerick or any other promise or agreement made with the Irish people when it suited her purpose to deny them justice, from her earliest history in Ireland up to the present day. The Home Rule bill as passed by the Asquith government can not, or will not satisfy the aspirations of the Irish people, if any county or counties are left out from coming under the provisions of the bill, if the bill is ever enforced or a parliament of Irish members ever assembles in Dublin.

Yours truly,
William Dalton,
460 Mesaba Avenue,
Duluth, Minnesota

Note.—Our correspondent's possibly pro-German environment may have been too much for him. Canada cannot trust too much to the Munroe doctrine. With her army and navy the United States as now, would find her work cut out to protect even herself from the attacks of a first rate power like, say, Germany, if she should be victorious in this war. Anyway, Canada does not feel like trusting to any over-lordship or Monroe doctrine. Our correspondent does not seem to realize that Canada has become a nation in the Empire, and prefers to fight her own battles and do her share as a partner in the Empire. Very few in Canada, even Irishmen, can be found to share a sentiment of antagonism to Great Britain, or depreciate the Home Rule Bill as a matter of right and a reparation for wrong.

SUGGESTS A TABLET TO CHAMPLAIN

Samuel de Champlain, the great French explorer, was the first white man, of whom history speaks, to visit this section of the country. He passed through here about the middle of September, 1615, when he led the Huron and Algonquins in their foray against the Iroquois.

It is almost three hundred years since he and his party bivouacked on "The Plains" over night after their six mile portage from Mud Lake to avoid the mighty rapids intervening. Would it not be the most fitting, therefore, that his advent to this locality, being the first white man to set foot on the site of our city, should be recognized in some tangible manner and thus do honour to a man who helped to lay the foundation of Christian civilization upon the northern half of this continent?

Champlain stands easily first among the great explorers who opened up to the astonished eyes of the old world the wonders of this western hemisphere. Especially in following to their sources the great waterways did this noted Frenchman earn undying distinction. Indeed, he was the first to discover the importance of our famous Trent Valley Canal, and the beauty of our national birthright, the Kawartha Lakes.

These he describes as follows: "This river is very beautiful, and passes through a number of beautiful lakes and meadows, with which it is bordered, many islands of various dimensions abounding in deed and other wild animals, very good fishing spots of excellent fish, and a great deal of very good cleared land, which has been abandoned by the Indians on account of their wars. The river empties into Lake St. Louis (Ontario), and many tribes go to these regions to hunt for their winter supply."

This matter of commemorating in some way this great event was mentioned first about three years ago by Dr. Cameron during an address at the Canadian Club, but nothing seems to have been done. It is now only six months till the three hundredth anniversary of Champlain's visit, and the Doctor's suggestion to erect a tablet in the Public Library should merit the attention of every loyal and patriotic citizen.

WAS ONLY PUPPET OF HUSBAND SAYS BRIDE

Turned Over Large Sums of Money to Him Because She Loved Him

DIVORCE ANNULLED

NEW YORK, April 6.—Describing herself as a puppet in her husband's hands, Mrs. Dorothy M. Kehoe says she wishes to have set aside the divorce decree she obtained, although she asserts he has made way with the greater part of her fortune of $500,000. Charles F. Kehoe, now living in Pasadena, Cal., has just been made defendant in his wife's action in the Supreme Court to annul the divorce decree on the ground of collusion.

Mrs. Kehoe, who lives at the McAlpin Hotel, was the widow of William F. Palmenberg, of J. R. Palmenberg's Sons, from whom she inherited a large estate. She married Kehoe on September 30, 1908, in Hoboken, N.J., breaking her engagement with another man to do so. At that time he was head of a woman's tailoring establishment in Fifth avenue.

According to her complaint, to be filed to-day by Harry N. Steinfield, of No. 27 Cedar street, she was fascinated by Kehoe and could not resist him, although she knew her money was an attraction. Justice Bijur has signed an order permitting service of the papers on Kehoe by publication.

Had Control of $500,000.

The story as told by the wife dates back to 1908, not long after the death of her first husband. She was executrix and sole legatee of property worth about $500,000, under the provisions of Mr. Palmenberg's will. Kehoe met her about that time and made love to her, she says, when he learned she was the sole legatee. She says in her complaint he made "vehement love." Mrs. Kehoe says she knew why he loved her, but that she so worshipped him that she readily consented before they were engaged to give him $50,000 for investment in stocks through the brokerage firm of Solomon & Co.

He put the money in his name, she asserts, and although she "had no business sense," she understood that he had not acted correctly with the investment. Her complaint says that she knew "her power of resistance was being gradually undermined by the defendant and that she was becoming a puppet in his hands."

Because the only safety she could find was in running away from Kehoe, she did so, and became engaged to another, she declare. The wedding invitations were engraved before Kehoe found her again, she says, and then his influence was so strong that she abandoned her arrangements, going at once to Hoboken and marrying Kehoe.

Not long after they were married he asked her for money, she says, and the other chapters of their married life continued on such a theme until they parted. In 1909 she wanted to have a home of their own in New Rochelle, N.Y. She left the matter with her husband, and told Kehoe, she says, to purchase the ground, build the house and continue to pay all household expenses.

Cost Her $50,000.

She alleges that he placed all titles in his own name, saying that he did it to have "standing in the business community." The venture cost her about $50,000, Mrs. Kehoe says.

In 1910 Mr. Kehoe went to Europe without her, and when he returned after an expensive tour he gained control of nearly all her assets, says the complaint. Then, says Mrs. Kehoe, he told her he desired to live a single life for a while and suggested that he supply evidence for a divorce in her favour. Mrs. Kehoe asserts that she was so terrified at the thought of losing him forever that she even agreed to his scheme on his agreement to return to her. They could be married again, she says he told her.

The divorce decree was signed in Westchester county February 4, 1910. Mrs. Kehoe says that immediately following the trial she and her husband returned to their home and continued to live together as if nothing had happened. In a few weeks he left for the west and has not returned. The wife asks that the marriage be continued in full force because of the collusion in the divorce.

BLOOD WILL TELL

LONDON, April 7. — Many young men have been lost in France by the fact that their blood was out of order and impure when they started out in this campaign as soldiers at the front. Many of them never reached the battle line because they were taken sick in camp, due to stomach and bowel troubles, and with blood powerless to resist. Young men and old men in Canada should be just as watchful of their blood to see that it is pure, that their stomach is acting well and the liver active.

It takes lots of vitality, nervous force and strength to win a race. Blood must be pure and good.

Keep the nerves nourished, the heart strong, the head cool, the stomach vigorous, the liver active with a tonic which has stood the test of time and has a wide reputation, such as Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the world's great Blood Purifier; it enters joints, dissolves the impure deposits and carries them out, as it does all impurities, through the Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Skin.

If you have indigestion, sluggish liver, backache over the kidneys, nasal or other Catarrh, unsteady nerves or unsightly skin, get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery today and start at once to replace your impure blood with the kind that puts energy and ambition into you and bring back youth and vigorous action. —Advt.

Germans Cowards When Caught Alone

Wife of French Officer Tells Story of German Atrocities Committed in Belgium

ILL-TREAT OLD MAN

TORONTO, April 7.—A Toronto woman has received a letter from the wife of a French officer, giving detailed accounts of the terrible atrocities committed by the Germans in Belgium and Northern France. Extracts from the letter are as follows:

"The old men from Vareddes, a parish about 50 kilometres from Paris, were taken to Germany in captivity. Half the parish, nearly, had to go on foot to Germany, being flogged when tired, and not able to walk any more, and fed only once in four days. Some managed to escape and came back to Vareddes. They said that one night they were placed against a wall with arms uplifted, as if on a cross, and had to witness the Germans getting their guns ready to shoot them. They were fortunately delivered.

"They tell me one cannot imagine the sufferings of those left behind. In Luneville the rabbi and his daughter were burnt alive in the cellar of their home whilst the wife was kept close by to hear their cries.

Liars and Thieves.

"The Germans do not know what honour means. My husband, who captured many prisoners, says he never met with such liars and thieves. They are so proud when in numbers and so cowardly when alone. I wonder what would happen to Europe and the world at large if they should be victorious, but fortunately the allies are sure of putting them down. The end of it will bring a grand victory for us all.

"My husband is quite deaf since he returned from the front. A German shell burst a few yards ahead of him and he was thrown violently to the ground. Everybody thought he was killed, but he was not even wounded. The noise was such, however, that from that time he has not been able to hear a sound. He does not mind that much. He is merry as ever, saying he is glad to have lost the use of his ears for the sake of the fight for civilization. The last three months he has been superintending the drilling of 19-year-old men, who are now about to start for the front. About a fortnight ago several hundred of these went away to the front and you cant imagine how enthusiastic they all were. They adorned their rifles and guns with bouquets, French, English, Belgian, Russian and Serbian flags. Just before they got into the train they sang Le Masellaise, and one of them who knew English sang God Save the King.

Frenchwomen Work Hard.

"Down there every Frenchwoman has been on the go since the war started. There is so much to do in the way of relief work. The ladies of the French aristocracy are all nursing the wounded soldiers and are doing grand work. In the country women are knitting warm socs and underclothes. Others work for the refugees and make clothes for them. Some have adopted refugees. A friend of mine has taken two little Belgian children who lost their father and mother when the Germans swept into their town."

Shower to be at the House of Mrs. Barrie

The Canadian Kitchener League requests all the ladies who are knitting to kindly turn in all completed work by next Monday or Tuesday as the League is sending a box to the boys overseas Friday, April 9th, 1915.

The League is holding a sock shower at the home of Mrs. Thos. Barrie, George Street north, from 3 to 10 p.m. on Friday evening next. The ladies and gentlemen of the city are requested to attend. The members of the organization are eager to have the shower a success, as the boys in the trenches need socks.

A good programme is promised.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE CADETS NEED UNIFORMS

Thirty New Outfits Are Required—Routine Business of the Board of Education at its Regular Meeting Last Night.

Outside the action on supervised playgrounds, which is reported in another column, routine business occupied the attention of the Board of Education in regular session last evening.

Cadet Uniforms.

Mr. H. R. H. Kenner addressed a letter to the Board, enclosing a communication from the Cadet Instructor at the local Collegiate Institute, Capt. C. E. Jamieson, who pointed out the need of at least thirty uniforms for the coming spring drills. Many of the uniforms have shrunk badly in washing.

The Cadet Corps have also increased in numbers this year.

The supervision committee was given power to act.

Attendance Reports.

The total number of students on the roll at the Collegiate Institute was 332 and the average attendance for the month of March was 314.

The average daily attendance at the Public Schools during the month was 2,213 pupils. There were 2,418 on the roll.

Accounts to be Paid.

The recommendation of the Finance Committee that the following accounts be paid, was adopted:

Fire Drill.

Mr. Smith brought up a suggestion that fire drill be practiced at the Collegiate Institute. When the subject had been brought up on former occasions it was sidetracked with the answer that the pupils had been so thoroughly drilled in the Public Schools that any further drill was quite unnecessary. He found that about one-third of the pupils at the local Collegiate came from schools where it was not practiced. The Supervision committee will have power to act.

New Hymnal Approved Of

By the Presbytery—Some Hymns Omitted Which it Asks Shall be Retained—Number the Book From the Beginning.

The Toronto Presbytery approved finally of the report of the committee on revision of the Book of Praise at the monthly meeting in St. James' Square Presbyterian Church. It was decided to send the report to the committee of the General Assembly for consideration.

The committee have taken special steps to provide, in the proposed new hymnal, "music of a pure quality and great variety, music that is fitted to be even more popular than that in our present book." They also regard the improvement in the music of the draft revision to be greater than the improvement in the words.

It approves of the continuous numbering from the beginning of the Psalter to the end of the Hymnal.

The Hymnal.

"It is recommended that there be appended to each division a list of other hymns (and psalms) closely related in thought and spirit.

Hymns Recommended.

It is recommended that the following hymns be included in the hymnal:

"O come, o come, Emmanuel."

"Come my soul, thou must be waking."

"Sleep on, beloved, sleep and take thy rest."

"O thou that makest souls to shine."

It is recommended that hymns for special occasions (including Christmas and Easter hymns) be set to tunes that will be in common use.

City to Have Supervised Playground

For the Children During Vacation—Central School Property to be Utilized With Capable Supervisor

For the first time in the history of the city, Peterborough will this summer have supervised playground, the consent of the Board of Education having been secured by the Local Council of Women, to the use of the Central school grounds during the holidays. A committee from the Local Council of Women, led by Mrs. Mowat, convenor, Mrs. (Dr.) Neal and Mrs. W. R. Morris, waited on the Board of Education, which was in regular session last night, and asked for the co-operation of the Board in the work they proposed to undertake.

Mrs. Mowat was the first speaker, and she ably pointed out that the Local Council of Women had been advocating a system of supervised playgrounds for the city for some time, with very little success so far. They had been looping about the city for a suitable place and after receiving the opinion of an expert they had decided that the Central school grounds offered the most favourable site. There were shade trees as well as numerous other advantages. The park was near where the children could be taken during the heat of the day if under proper supervision. The Young Men's Christian Association was in close proximity and the Local Council of Women hoped in time to get the use of the swimming pools to train the boys to swim. Under proper supervision children might also be taken to the river. They felt this undertaking was in line with the work of the Board of Education as the play of the children should always be considered in their education.

Moral Support.

The ladies were not asking for money, but they wanted the moral support of the Board of Education as a body and the co-operation of its members as prominent citizens. If the Board of Education would supply the grounds the Local Council of Women would undertake to look after the supervision.

Mrs. W. R. Morris, who has looked into other places where the system was in vogue, had some remarks in line with the previous speaker. She said they did not propose to go to any city body to ask for funds and would be disappointed if they found it necessary to do so, but they wished to make it co-ordinate with the system of Education.

Mrs. Neal, President of the Local Council of Women, thanked the members for the hearing. She believed the forming of supervised playgrounds in the city would be a patriotic act.

Before the ladies left the Board room they had the assurance of the support of the members as individuals, and in a motion fathered by Mr. G. N. Gordon, seconded by Col. Miller, it was resolve that the Board of Education should permit and allow the use of the Central school grounds during the vacation, as a supervised playground, under the supervision of the Local Council of Women and in conjunction with the Public Schools Inspector, with the proviso that this permission may be rescinded at any time.

May Open Grounds.

During the remainder of the meeting another subject came up, which is along the same lines as that represented by the delegation. It was the feeling of several members that the school grounds should not be altogether closed to the public during the holiday season or evenings. There was large grounds in different parts of the city and it seemed a pity that they could not be utilized for a ball game occasionally. Heretofore the grounds have been closed to the public and there have often been fellows who would enjoy a ball game who had no place near enough to go to.

TOO SLOW DISEMBARKING.

Germany Says Falaba's Passengers Had Lots of Time To Escape.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Government officials took under consideration yesterday a statement from the German embassy, quoting official messages from the Berlin Foreign Office, in which responsibility was disclaimed for the loss of any neutral lives on board the British steamer Falaba, recently sunk by a German submarine.

The claim is set up by Germany that the Falaba, as well as other British merchantmen, was armed, and that military necessity made it impossible for the submarine to give any longer time than was allowed for the passengers to escape.

State Department officials say that the death of Leon C. Thresher, an American, lost with the Falaba, constitutes a complicated case.

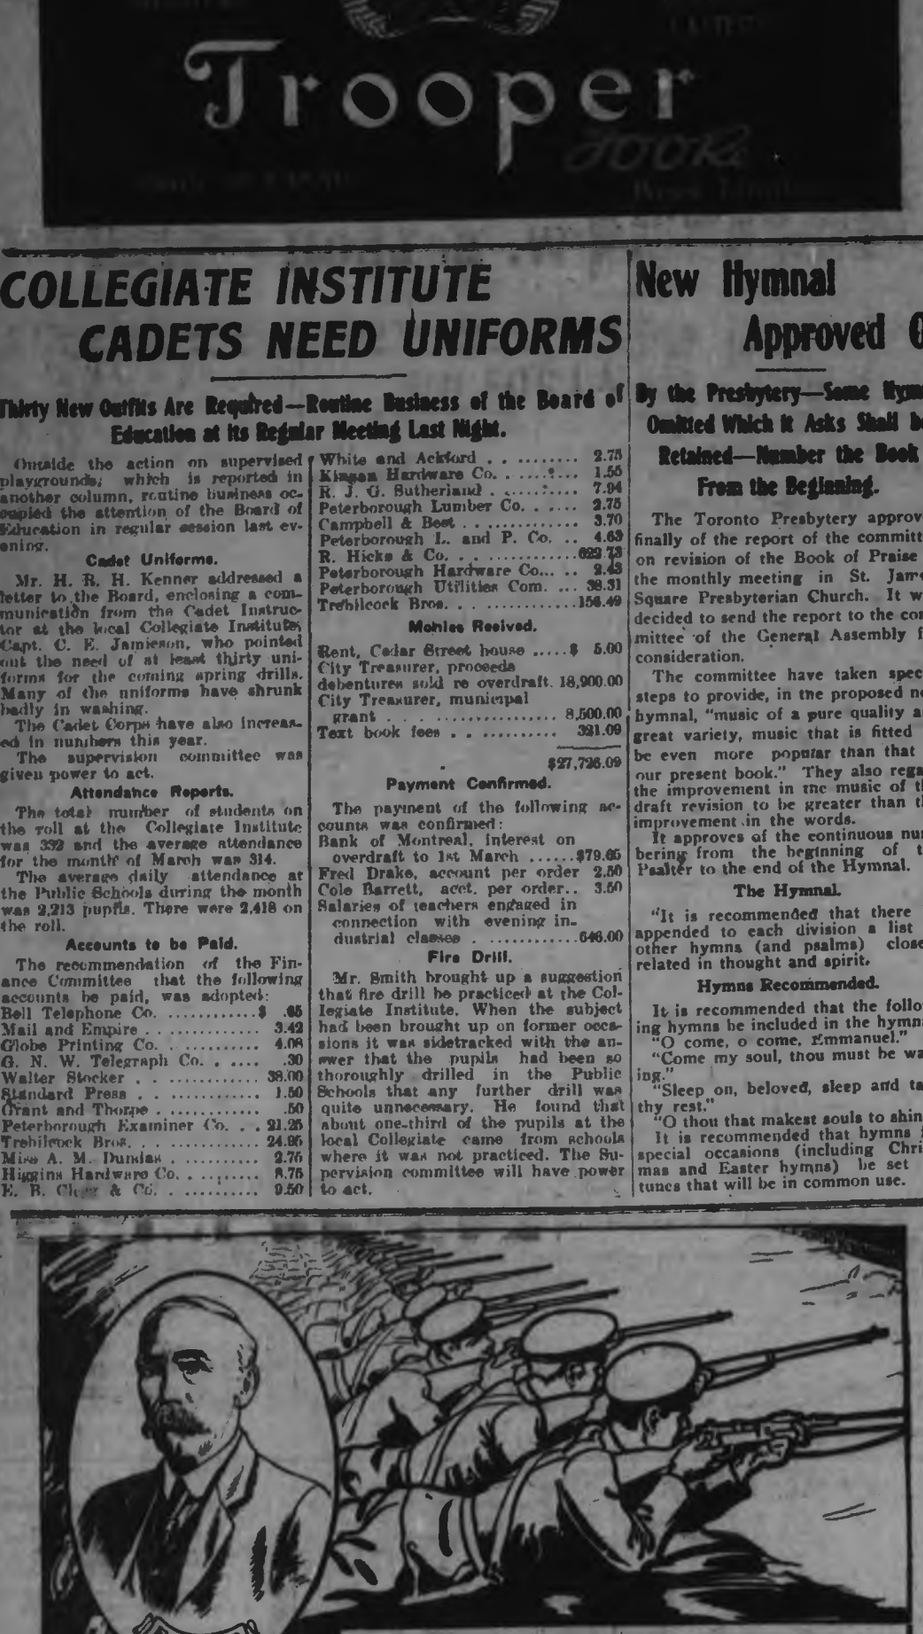
If the view that all merchantmen are armed is accepted, the rights of neutrals to travel aboard belligerent craft of any kind would be circumscribed.

Dirigible Dipsied Not To.

DUNKIRK, France, April 7. — A Zeppelin dirigible balloon appeared over Dunkirk Monday night, coming in the direction of the sea. The dirigible apparently intended to bombard the shipping in the harbor, but on being sighted by the torpedo boats patrolling there, turned and retreated to the German lines.

Swedish Queen To Go To Germany.

LONDON, April 7—Queen Victoria of Sweden will start for Germany next week, according to a Copenhagen despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. She will reside with her mother at Karlsruhe.



Mr. F. T. Carr, familiarly known as Capt. Carr, Stoughton, Sask., writes:—"I have Dr. Chase's Almanac of several years back on file in my home, and prize them highly. I can recommend Dr. Chase's Medicines, and particularly the Nerve Food, because it completely restored me to health and nerve strength when I was suffering from an attack of nervous prostration, sleeplessness and neuralgic pains through the head—almost unbearable pain and misery. My sickness resulted from overwork and worry—utterly exhausting my whole nervous system. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me completely, so that I felt like a new man, and fit to tackle anything. This experience happened eight years ago, and I have been a well man ever since. I hereby affirm that this statement is true and correct in every particular."

Fenian Raid Veteran Had Nervous Prostration

Nervous troubles are so little understood that many people who could easily be cured in a few weeks by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food allow their nervous systems to become completely run down. Cure is then most difficult, and at best is a slow, tedious process.

You find yourself not feeling first-class, you do not sleep well at nights, your digestive system fails in its work, you have headaches, it may be, and are irritable and easily annoyed. Possibly you have not recognized these as the warning symptoms which indicate exhaustion of the nervous system, but such they are, and in nervous troubles, as in many others, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

There can be no doubt in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a restorative of the nervous system. Particularly at this season of the year, when the changing temperature is so trying on the human body, people everywhere are proving the wonderful revitalizing influence of this great food cure. Just read what Mr. Carr says about it.

Ford Automobile Pictures At The Duffus Garage

The innovation of Moving Pictures at the Duffus Garage, showing the construction of the Ford Car, proved very interesting to a large crowd of citizens last night.

Mr. Duffus feels well repaid for the trouble and expense which has been incurred to show these to the Citizens of Peterborough. His show room which consists of Samples of Ford Cars, supplies and accessories has been beautifully decorated for the occasion. The garage in the rear of the show room, where the pictures are being put on, has been cleared of all Cars, etc., and comfortably seated, and during the next three evenings a large crowd is expected to take advantage of seeing these interesting pictures.

While all are welcome at any time, To-morrow, Thursday evening, is specially reserved for all automobile owners and their friends.

Very many Ladies attended, which shows the deep interest they are taking in motoring.

Mr. Smith, the travelling representative for the Ford Motor Company is present and making acquaintances with many owners in the City.

The Pictures will be put on each evening until Friday evening, and it is expected that in the mean time Mr. Fox, Manager for the Ford Motor Company, Toronto, will spend a day in the City.

"Who is the happiest of men?
He who values the merits of others,
And in their pleasure takes joy e'en
As it 'twere his own."

Won't you join this Happy Man's Club and make the children of Peterborough happy by helping to give them supervised playgrounds.

The proposal to loan vacant lots throughout the city, to those willing and anxious to lessen the cost of living by growing vegetables, etc., during the summer months, is most commendable, and we hope to see the movement become a big thing. We must remember though, that even in this movement for good we are lessening the play area at present open to our children. One has only to stroll by a few vacant lots during the summer days and evenings to see how they are appropriated by the young people from the smallest children to youths of sixteen or eighteen. But is it not quite possible to protect the interests of the children and young people, while also helping their elders to provide for the material needs of old and young?

Play is natural instinct with all young things, and the enthusiasm and energy displayed in all forms of play should be regarded as too valuable qualities of youth.

Herein lies the great value of supervised playgrounds and recreation centres. On a supervised playground our children, under sympathetic and trained leadership, will develop physically, mentally and morally. Let us by all means investigate the benefits of supervised playgrounds, and do it soon.

An Ottawa branch of the Ontario Association for the Care of the Feeble Minded children, has been formed by the Local Council of Women of that city. If Peterborough doing anything for the mentally deficient in our midst. These people are the children of the world and must be cared for.

Life Insurance In a Crisis

Every time a great Crisis occurs LIFE INSURANCE has an opportunity to show what a giant of trength it is. Tremendous burdens are placed upon its shoulders, but it never shirks, never hesitates or groans.

When the Titanic took its awful plunge, carrying 1500 human souls into the deep, thousands of widows and orphans were left throughout the world. LIFE INSURANCE accepted the burden without the quiver of a muscle, and spread its protection around the Globe.

When seven years ago the financial world was labouring under an attack of indigestion due to undigested securities, and people could not get even their own money out of the Savings Banks, LIFE INSURANCE furnished spot cash to its policy holders upon application.

To-day when a gigantic struggle wages across the Seas and it is difficult to get loans from banks or money lenders, they find the solution again in LIFE INSURANCE.

It is to-day saving thousands of men all over the world, not only embarrassment but actual failure.

LIFE INSURANCE protects your wife and family.
" " will meet their needs when you are gone.
" " is always a resource.
" " contributes to your estate.
" " increases your savings.
" " increases the savings habit.

Money invested in LIFE INSURANCE is sure to come back to you or your family.

Your credit is made better by the amount of LIFE INSURANCE you carry.

The need for LIFE INSURANCE to every man with a family is as fixed as the daily need for bread, and that need is well met by a policy in THE SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

LONDON DOESN'T WANT THE ERIE PLAYERS

LONDON, April 6—"You can say for me that the wail about the wholesale handling of players to the London club by me emanating from Hamilton is entirely uncalled for," said George O'Neil of the London Baseball Club. "Especially since it appeared from the pen of E. Robinson, who at one time owned some stock in the Hamilton club."

There is quite some history connected with the Ambitious City sport writer and baseball in London since he fought tooth and nail against the present directors on the London club and to top it all Mr. O'Neil was the magnate who made it possible for the present baseball regime in Hamilton and, perhaps, the fact that Robinson disposed of his stock cheaper than did Messrs. Burns and Lee undoubtedly made Bobby hot under the collar, especially when O'Neil engineered the deal.

London Doesn't Want 'Em.

As far as the deal which involves any Erie players, it is hardly likely that the London club will accept any of these, as Mr. O'Neil has disposed of the two players, who would have strengthened the Tecumsehs to any extent.

There is a salary limit in the Canadian league which will be enforced this year of all times and it will not be the Hamilton club to do the detective work for the other five teams, as each and every club is subject to the same stringent enforcement of the limit.

The deal was closed whereby Gyzli becomes the property of the Erie Central club, while Schaeffer, the heavy-hitting outfielder, will be sent to the Youngstown club of the same league.

Receives Congratulations.

Feeling content that all circuit difficulties were ended when Mr. O'Neil sold his holdings to the Guelph club, President Fitzgerald of the Canadian Baseball League, left for Durham, N. C., as correspondent for the Canadian Press Association, on Saturday, but not before congratulating Mr. O'Neil by letter on his successful handling of the Erie and Guelph territorial rights.

Mr. O'Neil was of the opinion that the schedule meeting of the Canadian League will be deferred until the first week in May since President Fitzgerald would be away for the next three weeks. But it behooves the six clubs on the circuit to map out proposed schedules for themselves regarding Saturday and holiday dates in order to be able to determine definitely just what each club desires.

JESS WILLARD LEAVES FOR THE UNITED STATES

Special to The Examiner.

HAVANA, April 7.— Jess Willard, the new world's heavyweight champion, sailed for Keywest to-day, accompanied by a retinue of trainers, movie-men and plain hangers-on that filled his chartered boat. Several hundred Cuban hero worshippers trailed his taxi to the dock and said laudatory things in Spanish.

From Keywest Willard will go to Jamiesonville for his first vaudeville appearance in the United States since he grabbed the crown. New Orleans will get a look at him before he goes on to New York to begin stacking up the dollars in earnest.

CITY LEAGUE WILL ORGANIZE ON FRIDAY

A meeting will be held in the Orient Hotel on Friday night of this week at 8 o'clock for the purpose of organizing a City Baseball League. All clubs in the city wishing to enter should be on hand for this meeting. Four City League clubs, the East City team, Classics, Thistles and Louis Yeates' team are already in the field.

BIG GAME IN THE "Y" LEAGUE

All the lovers of the indoor sport will be out to-night to see one of the most important basketball games of the season. When Cressman's, runners-up to "A" division, clash with the Excelsiors, who are heading the league. If Cressman's win it will mean a play-off between the Unknowns, Cressman's and Excelsiors; if the Excelsiors win they have the championship of "A" division and will play off for the championship of the league. The game starts at 8.15.

HUGH JENNINGS DISCOVERS NEW DISEASE OF PLAYERS

MOBILE, Ala., April 6.—Hugh Jennings is the inventor of a new disease, or ailment, or affliction, whichever it may be termed. It is called "handball hands," and affects those who like to bat the little ball around the courts, though it does little to hamper any save persons who also dabble in some other forms of athletics.

Until within the last few days Jennings has been content to stand by and watch infield practice, allowing Jimmie Burke to hit the ball to the men. This is so unusual — Hughie being rather proud of his ability to drive infielders to unexpected spots—that after several days it attracted attention.

Thereupon Mr. Jennings displayed his handball hands. The palms of both members were bruised and sore from hitting the ball without a protection by gloves. These sores come just where the gripping of a bat and the smocks of impact would make them constant reminders. So Hughie had to lay off both baseball and handball until he got the palms into shape again.

HER NUMBER TWO SHOES ROUTED BIG ROBBER

NEW YORK, April 6—After a fight in which she severely wounded a giant red-haired robber, Mrs. Wm. A. Young was receiving the congratulations of her friends yesterday in her home at King's Highway and East Fifteenth street, Brooklyn.

The fact that Mrs. Young, who is about twenty-five years old, wears a No. 2 shoe and is quite small and slight, did not prevent her from putting the thief to flight, with at least seven cuts on the head. Her husband, who is manager of a chair manufacturing company and a staff officer in the Forty-seventh Regiment National Guard, said he never had suspected that Mrs. Young possessed such battling powers.

Mrs. Young was dusting furniture in her home Saturday when the red-haired man, full six feet in height, and weighing more than two hundred pounds, rang the door bell. She opened the door and he said he had come to collect the insurance. She asked him what insurance and then he forced his way into the hall and tried to seize Mrs. Young by the throat, demanding her money.

It was then that Mrs. Young elevated one of her No. 2 shoes with such speed that the toe lauded in the pit of his stomach. It was a solar plexus blow that doubled the big fellow up for a few seconds. Taking advantage of his condition, Mrs. Young kicked him again and again in the stomach, using one foot as readily as the other. She did not let her skirts handicap her.

In trying to turn back to the door the man stumbled and fell, and then Mrs. Young used her small but energetic feet on his face, cutting it several times. He scrambled to his feet, and then she attacked him with her dusting brush, striking his red head repeatedly.

When he finally got the door open and started down through the yard she said she was certain there were at least seven cuts on his head. She followed him, shouting for somebody to stop him. But he was a fast runner and got away.

Mrs. Wm. Boylan, living opposite, said that a few minutes before the man went to the Young home he had knocked at her door and said he had called for the insurance money. She slammed the door in his face. Numerous robberies have been reported in that neighbourhood recently, but no arrests have been made.

TINKER BOOSTS MANAGER M'GRAW

Chicago Fed. Director Says "Muggsy" Is Greatest of Team Leaders

NEW YORK, April 6—Joseph Faversham Tinker is a Federal leaguer first, last, and all the time. From a playing standpoint Tinker made the outlaw league a reality. But Joe Tinker is first of all a man in every sense of the word, and in speaking of his former associates in organized baseball he never stoops to the petty knocking that a few of the men in the Fed league are at times guilty of.

Joe recently got talking of the great managers of the game. Tinker, of course, was Chance's lieutenant in the palmy days of Frank's Cub regime, and spoke glowingly of his former mentor. However, to every one's surprise, the Chifed leader waxed the most enthusiastic over none other than John J. McGraw.

"All things considered," said Tinker, "I regard McGraw as the greatest of baseball managers. He has done more with inferior material than any man in baseball.

McGraw "Makes" New York.

"He went to New York when that city was the joke of the National league and made it the strongest link in the circuit. He did it by winning five pennants with second rate ball players.

"I like a man who fights the hardest when the odds are all against him. That is McGraw. He is always confident, ready to take a chance on anything and go through with it to a finish.

"Look what he did with Merkle. He made him a very valuable ball player, when naturally Fred was one of the worst that ever came up to the big show. He has done the same thing with countless other men.

"I figure him 50 per cent. better than the average big league leader, and even a shade beyond the great Connie Mack. He has no weakness as a manager.

"The trouble with a lot of people in New York who do not appreciate Mac is that they are too close to him to get the right viewpoint. I have played against him for years and know just what he is capable of accomplishing.

Ranks "Muggsy" at Top.

"Of course there have been a number of great managers in baseball and their rank is purely a matter of opinion. Personally I rank McGraw at the top. Others may think differently, but no one can dispute his greatness and value to the game.

"He has accomplished things. That after all, is the only test of greatness. Not what you might have done, could have done or may do, but what you have done. McGraw's record is baseball history. In the face of his achievements all arguments as to his ability must cease."

TY COBB'S RELATIVE TO FIGHT FOR BRITAIN

Southern U. S. Member of the 18th Learns This From Home.

A member of the 18th Battalion at London, Ont., who comes from the Southern States, received word from his home in Georgia to-day, that his chum, Lieut. O. C. Cobb, a cousin of Ty Cobb, the famous ball player, has resigned his commission in the American army, and has left for England with the intention of enlisting in the English army. Lieut. Cobb is a college graduate.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, April 6.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 941 cattle, 792 hogs, 25 sheep and 401 calves.

A few odd cattle of choice quality and several loads of good steers and heifers were on sale, but the bulk of those offered as fat were common and medium. Trade was fairly active at Monday's values. Nearly everything was cleaned up before noon.

Heavy cattle, that is steers and heifers, 1200 to 1400 lbs., are slow sale between $7.75 and $8, and it looks as tho the farmer will have to take lower prices for this class of cattle, as buyers are slow at purchasing them after the $7.80 mark is passed; in fact, this price is hard to reach, and the cattle that bring it have to be extra choice.

Milkers and springers sold readily at prices ranging from $50 to $85 each.

Veal calves were more plentiful and values were lower in all classes of them.

Sheep and lambs were very scarce and values as high as the public are prepared to go.

Hogs were firm at Monday's values.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice heavy steers, $7.50 to $7.75; good to choice butchers, $7.25 to $7.50; good, $7 to $7.25; medium, $6.50 to $6.90; common, $6.25 to $6.50; choice cows, $6.25 to $6.50; good cows, $6 to $6.35; medium, $5.50 to $5.75; common, $4.75 to $5.25; canners and cutters, $4 to $4.75; bulls, $5.25 to $6.75.

Stockers and Feeders.

Steers, 800 to 900 lbs., sold at $6.50 to $6.85, and in one instance $7 was paid; steers, 650 to 750 lbs., sold at $6 to $6.35; stockers, $5.50 to $5.75.

Milkers and Springers.

There was a better demand for milkers and springers and prices, while no higher, were very firm. Values ranged from $50 to $85.

Veal Calves.

Choice veal calves sold at $9 to $10; good at $8 to $9; medium at $6.50 to $7, and common at $4.50 to $6.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes of light weight, sold at $7 to $8.50; heavy ewes and rams, $6 to $7.50; lambs at $12.50 to $13; spring lambs sold at $8 to $13 for the bulk, but there were some very small lambs sold at $5 each.

Hogs.

Selects sold at $9.15 to $9.25 weighed off cars.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, April 6.—Cattle—Receipts, 2000; market, firm; beeves, $6 to $8.85; cows and heifers, $3.30 to $7.50; calves, $6 to $9.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 15,000; market, weak; light, $8.65 to $8.95; mixed, $8.60 to $8.95; heavy, $8.45 to $8.90; rough, $8.40 to $8.55; pigs, $8.50 to $8.80; bulk of sales, $8.60 to $8.90.

Sheep—Receipts, 2000; market, firm; native, $7.40 to $8.50; lambs, native, $7.85 to $10.45.

Girl Shot By Bridge Guard.

CORNWALL, April 7. — Because none of the party answered the challenge of a guard on the Ottawa and New York Railway bridge and the guard fired in the darkness, Sarah Oke, aged 13, who was on her way home from a visit to Cornwall Island with her mother, Mrs. Mitchell Oke, a sister and a baby brother, was shot in the thigh. The guard then investigated and hurried the girl to the General Hospital, where the wound was dressed. Mrs. Oke said that they did not hear the voice of the guard, and that the first thing she knew of his presence was the flash of the rifle.

King Albert's Son Enlists.

DUNKIRK, April 7.—The Duke of Brabant, eldest son of King Albert of Belgium, although only fourteen years of age, has enlisted in the 12th Infantry. He was marching in the ranks with a rifle on his shoulder when the regiment was review by his father and the Queen at Brequeville.

RURAL WORK THEIR THEME.

Teachers Agree That Country Child Must Be Educated to the Land.

TORONTO, April 7.—The 54th annual meeting of the Ontario Educational Association opened yesterday at the University of Toronto with about 1,000 members in attendance. This attendance is larger than usual, and the meetings yesterday were marked by bright papers and spirited discussions. Especially is this so of the public school teachers' section. About a dozen meetings are held simultaneously concerning the various departments of school work.

Rural school work received much attention yesterday, and it is evident from the addresses that much progress has been made in the rural sections. The main point brought home by the speakers was the necessity of teaching the country boy and girl for the country and not for those vocations that take them from the land.

CANADIAN CASUALTIES.

OTTAWA, April 7.—The following casualties were given out by the Militia Department:

Fifth Battalion—Reported wounded, Pte. John A. Luton.

Tenth Battalion — Wounded, Pte. James McWhirter.

Fourteenth Battalion — Reported wounded, Stretcher Bearer Reginald H. Drake.

Casualties announced yesterday afternoon were:

Fourteenth Battalion — Seriously wounded, Pte. Edward J. Coombes. Wounded, Pte. Michael Gould.

Fifteenth Battalion — Wounded, Le.-Corpl. William Matches.

Germany Asks Inquiry.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Investigation of the circumstances under which the American forts at San Juan, Porto Rico, opened fire on the German steamer Odenwald, and alleged undue detention of the vessel by the port authorities, has been requested of the State Department by the German embassy here.

The embassy yesterday issued a statement charging that no warning shot was fired as a signal for the vessel to heave to, as is customary in such cases. A report to the Treasury Department from the collector of customs directly contradicts this, saying a warning shot was fired and was unheeded. Secretary Bryan said yesterday that an investigation began when the incident was first reported, but was not completed.

INCITING RACE WAR.

Germans Are Spending Money to Rouse Kurds on Persian Border.

JULFA, Province of Erivan, Transcaucasia, Russia, April 7.—After several days of investigation in the Urumiah district of northwestern Persia, a correspondent of the Associated Press made his way to Julfa, over the frontier in Russia, to file this despatch.

It is the opinion of well-informed observers that the situation of Christians in Urumiah especially will become more dangerous in a fortnight or so. When the rainy season comes to an end, in about two weeks, large numbers of wandering tribes of Kurds will pour down into the valleys to the west of Lake Urumiah.

Already there have been some collisions between Kurds and Christians at a point near Kotur, which is to the west of the river. It is currently reported that Turco-German emissaries have been active in rousing the Kurds. One rich Urumiah land owner has received $90,000 for his work in organizing the natives.

OBITUARY

MRS. MARGARET BURSTOW.

Mrs. Margaret Burstow passed away yesterday afternoon at the Nicholls Hospital, at the age of 78 years. She was born at Bala, Wales.

The funeral will take place from the late residence, Prince Street, on Thursday afternoon, at 3.30 o'clock. Interment will take place in Little Lake Cemetery.

MRS. MICHAEL CAIN.

The death occurred on Monday, April 5th, in Galway, of Mrs. Michael Cain, relict of Michael Cain. The late Mrs. Cain was one of the earliest pioneers of Galway, having settled there 53 years ago, coming from Douro Township. She was born on the vessel that brought her to Canada from Ireland in 1825. Her husband predeceased her twenty-two years ago. She was a consistent member of the Roman Catholic Church, and will be greatly missed in the locality in which she resided. She leaves to mourn her loss four sons living, Messrs. Edward, Michael, Robert and Thomas, the oldest, John, having died some years ago. Five daughters are living, namely, Mrs. Thomas Flaherty, Mrs. George Long, Peterborough, Mrs. Owens, Mrs. D. Curtain and Mrs. D. Pearson. The funeral will take place on Wednesday, April 7th, from the family residence, Lot. 13, Concession 10, Galway, and interment will be made in the Roman Catholic Cemetery.

MR. MICHAEL HAYES.

Relatives of Mr. Michael Hayes, of Otonabee, have received the sad news of his death which occurred in Rochester, N.Y., on Monday night last.

The late Mr. Hayes was a native of Otonabee Township, where he followed the occupation of farmer. He has been ailing for some time, and last August was induced by his brother, Mr. Richard Hayes, of Rochester, to visit there with him and consult a specialist. It was while on this visit that his death occurred.

Three brothers are the only surviving members of his family. The brothers are Mr. Richard Hayes, Rochester, N.Y.; Messrs. John and James Hayes, both of Otonabee, the former on the old homestead.

It is expected that the remains will arrive on the C.P.R. midnight to-night. The funeral will take place at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning from Messrs. Lane and Kane's undertaking parlours to Sacred Heart Church, and thence to St. Peter's Cemetery for interment.

MISS MENCKE.

Very many of the citizens will learn with great sorrow of the death of Miss A. E. ("Nellie") Mencke, which took place at Bridgeburg yesterday afternoon after an illness of about three weeks. About that length of time ago Miss Mencke went to visit an aunt in Cayuga, but on her arrival was so ill, that she at once went on to her brother, Dr. Mencke, Bridgeburg, where her illness—typhoid fever— terminated in death.

Miss Mencke was well known in the city, where she has lived for many years, and until within a short time, with her aunt, Mrs. J. G. Stevenson, widow of the late Judge Stevenson, of Cayuga. She was also a cousin of Rev. E. Vickers Stevenson at present rector of Plainfield, New Jersey, and formerly curate of St. John's. Miss Menke was prominently associated in membership and active work with St. John's church, being a member of the Chancel Guild and other organizations and was also actvely connected with the work of the Y.W.C.A., where she lived during heulast weeks of residence in the city. She was very highly esteemed in social circles and her death will arouse a keen sense of grief to her many friends and acquaintances in Peterborough.

There are five persons to each house on an average in Ireland.

NEW SLAV STATE ON ADRIATIC SEA SEEN BY CONSUL

Montenegrin Says Serbia and Austrian Provinces Will Unite His Country.

ROME (by mail to New York) — "The uniting of Montenegro with Serbia under one king, the formation of a greater Serbian kingdom, including the countries as well as Hersegovina, Bosnit, Dalmatia, the southern portion of Hungary peopled by Slavs, will be the outcome of the war so far as it affects us Slavs and an established commerce with America."

Eugenic Popovich, consul general for Montenegro at Rome, did not make the statement in the form of a hope, but as a nassurance of a fact.

"The interest of America is the only doubtful part," he continued, "but with our virgin country only waiting to be developed we are hoping that America, where already we have over 36,000 Montenegrins will be the nation to accept our offers for development options."

His excellency indignantly denied the "trumped up stories" of Montenegrin cruelty to captured Austrian soldiers. He dwelt upon the suffering in his native land which had called forth the letter from the bishop of Antivari to Americans in Rome and other European cities, asking for help for the "storving, suffering mountaineers". That Montenegro is fighting for nothing more than her life—her salvation from Austrian oppression—was his assertion.

Have No Political Greed.

"We have no political or terirtorial greed to be satisfied." he outlined. "We prove this when we are willing to merge ourselves in Serbia. We are all of the same race, we Montenegrins and Serbians; our two kingdoms are descended from the same family. The daughter of King Nicholas is the present queen of Serbia, and our future will be united. This will be after the death of the two present kings of Serbia and Montenegro, respectively. A single king will then rule us all under the name of Serbia. This war has made blood speak louder than ever and we Slavs realize that our own development depends upon union."

The Montenegrin legation at Rome unlike the embassies of other countries, tells of the sacrifices every individual of that mountaineus realm is making in the present war.

Anti-suffragists, with their arguments that if women would vote they should be ready to accept military military duty and the repeated assertion that usurpation of masculine vocations unfits women for motherhood, would be enlightened to look into the self-sacrificing lives of those "primitive" Montenegrin women. Woman's first duty in Montenegro is motherhood—indeed, the supplying of sons as the country's soldiers is her sacred mission. That woman who bears the most sons is the most highly respected, says his excellency, and Montengerin families run as high as fifteen and twenty children.

1,000 Women Die in Battle.

"In the last two wars and the present one we have lost 1,000 women who fell on the battlefield fighting with cold steel as soldiers," said Consul General Popovich. "While less active as soldiers in the present war, due to the fact that battles have not been carried into our own country, the women are constantly on the firing lines."

A Gran' Thing For Him.

An amusing story was told in connection with the appointment of the Emperor of Russia as Colonel-in-Chief of the Scots Greys, who, it may be mentioned, fought in the Crimea during the war. After the appointment had been duly promulgated an enthusiastic subaltern of the regiment communicated the information to his soldier servant.

"Donald," he said, "have you heard that the Emperor of Russia has been appointed Colonel of the regiment?"

"Indeed, sir," said Donald, "It's a verra gran' thing for him."

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. and Mrs. H. Brooks, of 104 Gladstone avenue, spent the Easter holidays with their cousins, Mr. and Mrs. A. Pardoe, 110 Barrie street, Kingston. Mr. Brooks also spent a faw hours while at Kingston with Corporal Fred Thomas and Private Robert Gifford, of the 21st Battalion, Second Contingent.

FUNERAL OF LATE MRS. BEST TO-DAY

The funeral of the late Mrs. James Best, who passed away at an early hour on the morning of April 6th, took place this afternoon at 2 o'clock, from the late residence, 501 Water Street, proceeding to St. John's Church for the funeral service. In the absence of Rev. Canon Davidson, who is ill, Rev. James Price conducted the service, which was a very impressive one.

During the progress of the funeral cortege the following hymns were played on the himes: "On the Resurrection Morning," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," "Peace, Perfect Peace." and "Rock of Ages." During the service, "On the Resurrection Morning" and "Nunc Dimittis" were tolled.

The pall-bearers were: Messrs. H. Rush, G. A. Smith, Herb. Morphet, J. J. Howden, W. W. Coulthard and W. H. Walkey. Interment took place in Little Lake Cemetery.

RECTOR'S MESSAGE.

Words fail to express my sense of loss sustained by St. John's congregation in the passing from us of Mrs. James Best. For over 25 years Mrs. Best has been a central figure in the congregation, and one of the leading and most faithful workers. An earnest Sunday School teacher for many years, a leading worker and officer in the Women's Auxiliary, a most helpful member of the Chancel Guild, and for many years the faithful choir mother —such are a few of Mrs. Best's gentle activities.

But quite as much shall we always think of her as a bright centre of cheer and kindness.

It is a great grief to me not to be able to be present to do honour to my old friend, and most loyal parishioner. I am glad indeed to know that Mrs. Best has received constant strength, refreshment and spiritual training in the church which she served so well.

J. C. DAVIDSON.

Drum Major Was Repeated Last Night

The Drum Major was very successfully repeated last night at the Opera House, and as was to be expected, to a large audience, though the attendance on both nights was far short of the merits of the production.

The following were members of the cast and chorus, who contributed to two nights of delightful entertainment:

Dramatis Personae.

Clarice, the Prettiest Woman in Paris—Miss Lettie Drope.
Sergeant Leroux, of the French Army—Mr. Harold Lee.
Jean, the Village Musical Genius—Mr. Ed. Hanrahan.
Babette, His Adoring Sweetheart—Mrs. A. A. Perrin.
Julien—F. Hartshorn.
Gaspard—P. Naish.
Pierre—Norman Laing.
Antoinette—Mrs. J. Lock.
Suzanne—Miss Ruby Quartermaine.
Jacqueline—Miss Helen Lytle.
Victor, a Boy of the Village—Mr. Fred Jamieson.
Marcel, an "Orator of the Day"—Mr. Donald Shook.

Chorus of Villagers, Recruits, Girls, Etc.—Misses A. Bickersteth, H. Black, E. Derrick, R. Derry, A. Graham, B. Heard, A. Heron, E. Jubb, M. Lyle, B. M. Lytle, G. Montgomery, V. Neill, A. Pollard, L. Rippingale, M. Richardson, Helen Rush, M. Smith, Ida Wesley, Shirley Wesley; Mrs. J. A. Morgan, Mrs. R. W. Davidson, Mrs. Tucker.

Messrs. A. B. Burrows, W. Derry, J. Howland, C. Lapp, A. Lee, H. M. Marshall, S. J. Ridyard, C. Walton, T. Hamel, H. Shuttleworth.

Dances directed by Miss A. Bickersteth; stage manager, Mr. A. B. Burrows; the opera rehearsed and produced by J. Edward Fisher.

BERLIN, via wireless, April 7.— The British Admiralty early on the morning announced that it had good reason to believe that the German submarine U29 had been sunk with its crew.

No other statement came from the Admiralty, though there were rumours that the U29 had been trapped by British nets and that the Admiralty was keeping the fact a secret from Germany until the end of the war.
